There spring, therefore, out of the death of Jesus, as flowers out of the dark soil which covers the seed, hope and courage and peace. In that sense Jesus died for us, to prove that death hath no longer any dominion over us. It is not easy to understand the terror and bewilderment and numbness of faculty which the experience of death cast upon the entire universe before Christ came. His death was so triumphant in its results that it has robbed the grave of its terror, and the atonement in this sense is the most magnificent exhibition of the power of God that the universe has ever witnessed. If Christ had no other contribution to make to a sinful world, this one fact of his laying down his life would be the most marked evidence of his love, for he was full of life himself.

Responsibility of Rejection

What will you do with the Christ, you who have not yet put him in the throne place of your lives? "He that rejecteth me rejecteth him that sent me," he himself said, meaning that he who, after all the evidence, thrusts Christ aside and refuses to call him Master, shuts God himself out of his heart. The centuries have majestically added to the weight of evidence. The testing of the atonement has been the severest that men could apply. No experiment in the physical laboratory was ever oftener proved than the fact that Christ is the Saviour of the world. Come and say to him, "My Lord, my God. You are a guilty soul, a transgressor against the laws of God and man combined, but believe on him, for he came to call the sinners to repentance. You have selfishly tried to make bargains with your Heavenly Father and keep all you could yourself, and get into heaven, as you call it, on a margin, after enjoying the pleasures of sin for a season. Nevertheless his mercy will not ask questions. He freely forgives, and his memory is divinely short on the side of your forgetfulness of him when you were young. You are full of excuses and criticisms, and you have lived a life of foolish comparison of your life with poor church members, instead of holding up the sinless one as your example. Nevertheless come and believe. He will not upbraid. All he wants is your allegiance.

The Only Condition

There is a native Philippine officer in Hawaii who has been in prison since the war because he will not take the oath of allegiance to the United States. The minute he will take this oath, he will be released and allowed to go home to his family, a free man. My brother or sister, you are a prisoner to some selfish habit. You do not wish to give it up. You think the government of God is tyrannical, or that you will be deprived of some pleasure if you take the oath of allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ. Poor prisoner! Do you not know that the government of God is the freest, the happiest, the kindest in the world? Come out of your prison house and be at liberty with the children of God. The only perfect freedom is with those who are not living unto themselves but unto him who called them into his life of liberty.

Wars and rumors of wars shake the earth. The heathen rage, the kingdoms are moved, but his Kingdom moves on in undisturbed majesty, and the ages add culminating trophies to his chariot. "There is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved" except his. Let us return thanks to God for a Saviour mighty to save, to save to the uttermost, to save all mankind, to bring the nations at last into accord, to set up his own standard of righteousness, and in the end draw all men unto himself. "After these things I saw and beheld a great multitude, which no man could number, out of every nation, and of all tribes and peoples and tongues, standing before the throne and before the Lamb, arrayed in white robes and palms in their hands, and they cry with a great voice saying, 'Salvation unto our God which sitteth on the throne and unto the Lamb.'"

THE QUIET QUAKER DRESS

The Friends in "Yearly Meeting"

CHAS. WAGNER, the famous mission pastor of Paris, has unconsciously become the strongest exponent of Quakerism in a century, and his teachings will doubtless revive greater interest in the Society of Friends.

It is astonishing that many intellectual people know so little about the Society. It seems the very simplicity of the Quaker is sometimes misunderstood. But the Quaker has given us a high standard for daily living, to which the whole world has acceded. Emerson expresses the basis of this practical purity and moderation of Quakerism in these notable words: "As a man begins to live more seriously within, he begins to live more simply without." It is this very atmosphere of truthfulness surrounding the true Quaker which reveals to us the spirit within and the simplicity of his life.

In the midst of the gayety and bustle of New York City life, the quiet Quakers lately held their "Yearly Meeting" in the old Meeting House of the Society of Friends, on Rutherford Place and Fifteenth Street. It has a setting of lawn and fine shade trees, and is opposite Stuyvesant Park, one of the beautiful landmarks of old New York, and one of the few localities that has retained their original character throughout the transformation of surrounding neighborhoods. At this "Meeting for worship" a large audience assembled. It included representatives of the Quarterly Meetings at Westbury, L. I., and Purchase, Westchester County, and the half-yearly meetings of Granville, Washington County, and Nine Partners, and also of Plainfield and Shrewsbury, New Jersey.

To look at that gathering, one could not but believe that the reports are exaggerated about the Society becoming extinct. To be sure, the modest Quaker garb is fast disappearing, and this modern audience showed few of the old-time Quaker dress. The sons and daughters, however, even in their "worldly attire," retain much of their Friendly simplicity and manner, and the youngest members still use the plain language "thee" and "thou"—speaking with musically sweet, Quaker-like gentleness of tone.

The original bonnet worn by the women Friends, which was of the color of soft "ashes of rose," has been gradually discontinued. It was adopted about the year 1650, by the ladies of "high degree and extravagance," of that period, who trimmed them elaborately with feathers and flowers. Ornaments of this class, however, the Quakers rejected; but they retained the shape of the bonnet and have clung to it for the past 200 years.

Within, the Meeting House is severe in the extreme. There are no pictures, no inscriptions, ornaments, or colorings to distract the eye, or divert the attention from the secret influences of the Spirit. Bare walls and benches are painted a soft, warm gray, and this is the prevailing tone everywhere. Seated in the "Gallery," as the Friends call the platform, facing the audience, were the ministers and elders of the Society. They were there by invitation, the men and women alike in reverential silence, "looking tranquility" until the "Spirit moved them" to speak. A few old-time Quakers were in friendly garb, the plain bonnets standing out in bold relief and denoting constancy to early principles, yet not hiding the placid faces, unruffled by the world's distresses.

While sitting in this "sympathetic silence," a young man—Rufus M. Jones, Professor of the Quaker College, Haverford, Pa. — arose to speak on Quakerism and the Simple Life. He brought out clearly the fact that Charles Wagner's teachings of the present day and the phrase, "Simple Life," expressed the fundamental idea which had characterized Quakerism for over two hundred years; that the simple life is not a matter of coats and hats or of language; not of garb or personal mannerisms; it is a quality of the soul. Its antonym is duplicity.

There cannot be a simple life without honesty of purpose and heart, and the man who would lead that life will prefer not to have any victories at all, unless they can be achieved without bartering his own soul. It is in this spirit that the wrongs and evils of life can best be met, and the simple life be lived in a way that will add to the joy of existence, and the good of humanity.

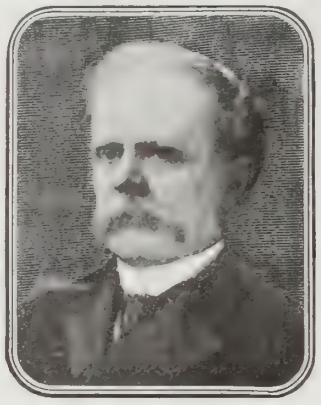
RUBY CARLTON JOHNSON.

THE FRIENDS' MEETING HOUSE IN NEW YORK

The Sunday Recreation Problem

The Fourth Commandment and its Relation to Sabbath Amusements Frankly Discussed by Bishops, Ministers, Authors, College Presidents and Heads of Religious Organizations

REV. CORTLAND MYERS, D.D



REV. AMORY BRADFORD, D.D.

DR. W. H. MAXWELL, Supt. Schools, N.Y.

EDMUND P. PLATT

REV. J. D. BURRELL

Which forms of Sunday Recreation should be Discouraged, and which Encouraged

THIS perplexing question was submitted by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to a number of divines, leading clerical and lay workers, College Presidents, and other educators, economists and authors, and the heads of various reform and philanthropic organizations. The question was designed to ascertain which forms of recreation "break the Sabbath," and which do not. Among the popular Sunday recreations that have been discouraged by law, are baseball, football, golf, theatrical performances and the opening of saloons. Other forms of Sunday recreation indulged in various communities, are yachting, rowing and canoeing, tennis and other "country club" games; bicycling, horseback riding, and automobiling; Sunday newspaper reading, excursions and picnics to summer resorts; so-called "sacred concerts" in theatres,and the opening of beer-gardens and pavilions for dancing. There are left, driving, walking, reading, band concerts in public places, etc.

Will the discouragement of any of these recreations secure larger church congregations, or increase Sunday School attendance? Which of these recreations may be classed as innocent Sunday amusements? And which are inconsistent with Christian observance of the Sabbath?

Many earnest young men and women are perplexed as to the right and wrong of the many forms of recreation open to them on Sunday. Confronted by the numerous outdoor amusements of summer and vacation time, they now seek to know which they may engage in, without breaking the Commandment as to remembering the Sabbath. These as well as others may be helped, therefore, by the letters printed below:

Recast Our Sunday Legislation

By Bishop C. Whitehead, of Pa.

We cannot force people to be religious, and, in a Republic, the rights of all must be conserved. Consequently there should be reasonable and equitable compromise, the morning hours undisturbed for worship, on the part of those who observe the day religiously; stringent laws, strictly enforced, that not until 1 P.M. shall any place of recreation or amusement be opened; no band playing, no newspaper crying, no games engaged in, but that due regard be paid to the rights of those who keep the Lord's Day. After 1 P.M. any amusement lawful on any day, might be permitted on Sunday, provided, that there be no disturbance of the community, rendering impossible the teaching of Sunday School or other instrumentalities of that sort.

In a word, it seems to me, that in this twentieth century, with our very much changed circumstances and conditions of life, with the influx of so many hundreds of thousands of foreigners, and the cosmopolitan character of our population, we should recast our Sunday legislation, and not attempt to compel people in any direction, but adopt as our principle the absolute necessity of everyone's respecting his neighbor's natural and civic rights.

CORTLAND WHITEHEAD,
(Episcopal) Bishop of Pittsburg.

. . .

Recreate, but do not Desecrate

By Bishop John H. Vincent, of Indiana

We have six evenings and Saturday afternoons for "amusements." True recreation—re-creation—implies rest from physical activities; rest of mind by thinking and reading and hearing of the great ethical and spiritual verities, rest of heart in quiet, social fellowship with father, mother,wife, brothers, sisters, children; the recreative influence of good music in God's house, and helpful fellowship and counsel in Sunday School. Nobody need desecrate the Sabbath in order to build up the body. The old way of observing the Sabbath is the best way truly to re-create. Even the excessive rigidity of the Puritans put iron into character and made home a hundred times more blessed than the laxities of our times are likely to do. Give us the Sabbath of fifty years ago.

JOHN H. VINCENT, D.D.
(Methodist) Bishop of Indiana.

. . .

Do No Violence to Your Conscience

By Dr. Webster Merrifield, President University of North Dakota

Having been brought up on a New England hill farm to observe Sunday according to the most puritanical notions, and having spent of late years much time in continental Europe, where very different notions of Sunday observance prevail, I find it by no means easy to decide for my own guidance what are and what are not harmless Sunday amusements or recreations. I have, however, found a practical solution of the difficulty in the determination to do nothing myself on Sunday which does violence to my own conscience, or which would do violence to the average public sentiment of the community.

Under the rule thus adopted, I should place on the proscribed list all forms of golf, theatrical performances and the open saloon; tennis and other "country club" games; excursions and picnics to summer resorts; "sacred concerts" at theatres; open beer gardens and pavilions for dancing. I do not hesitate, in my own case, to seek recreation on Sunday by walking, driving, reading the newspapers, band concerts in public places, and bicycling. In the doubtful list I should include yachting, rowing, canoeing, horseback riding and automobiling, though just why these are wrong or of doubtful propriety, and some of the others named are right and of unquestioned propriety, I am unable to say. With the general introduction of automobiles, I believe we shall very soon recognize the propriety of placing automobiling for pleasure in the same list with driving for pleasure on the Sabbath. If so, it will be because automobiling on the Sabbath ceases to do violence to our convictions and ingrained sentiments or prejudices, as well as to public sentiment.

WEBSTER MERRIFIELD,
President University of North Dakota.

. . .

Spend the day in Worship

By Rev. Dr. David Gregg, President Western Theological Seminary

I look upon the Sabbath as a Holy Day, not a holiday. I therefore hold to the teaching of the Westminster Divines, as presented in the Shorter Catechism. "How is the Sabbath to be sanctified?" "By a holy resting all that day from such employments and recreations as are lawful on other days. Spending the whole time in the exercise of public and private worship, except so much as may be taken for works of necessity and mercy." This teaching covers the whole ground, and is Scriptural and safe.

DAVID GREGG, D.D.
President, Western Theological Seminary.

. . .

A Day to Develop Faith, Love and Hope

By Bishop E. G. Andrews, of Brooklyn

The New Testament does not enact specific and minute rules for the observance of the Lord's Day. It is the aim of the day which gives the law for its use. Sincere Christians will discern its spiritual opportunities and its corresponding obligations. Those who are aware of the spiritual perils that encompass them in this world of eager toil, ambition and pleasure, feeling for themselves and others the need of light and love and strength, will rejoice in the weekly return of the Sabbath, They will turn themselves Godward; will reverently study the divine Word; will join the multitude that keep holy day in the house of God; and will in manifold ways seek the physical and spiritual welfare of their fellow-men. Only such recreation as is compatible with the holy aims of the day is admissible.

Whoever is willing to put character above pleasure, usefulness above self-indulgence, will not go astray.

EDWARD G. ANDREWS,
(Methodist) Bishop of Brooklyn.

. . .

Make It a Day of Rest for All

By Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald, of Tenn.

If we had in the United States a theocracy, I should heartily favor the Mosaic law of the Sabbath. But as we have not a theocracy, but a democracy, where to draw the line in this matter of legislation concerning the Sabbath, is a question demanding exercise of the greatest judgment of our people. The Sabbath was made for man. The greatest good may be got from it by making it a day of rest. Sabbath rest interferes with no privileges religious worship, nor with works of mer Make the Sabbath a day of rest for yo selves and your families. Plan for th Include in your plans your servants. I Christian people thus observe the Sabba and more and more will society at lar be influenced by their example. The re reations of the Sabbath will take form a cordingly.

O. P. FITZGERALD
(Methodist Church South) Bishop of Tenness

. . .

The Sunday Rest Indispensable to Man

By Bishop Thos. F. Gailor, of Tenness

Christians keep Sunday because G has commanded us to give him a certa portion of our time, and has revealed us that man is so constituted that he nee for his spiritual life just this weekly oppo tunity. In order to do the best work w need stated times to do it in. The ma who prays in no particular place and at n particular time, will end by praying n where and not at all. The Christian ma who deliberately refuses to keep Sunda by an act of worship is setting himself a an enemy to the recognition of man spiritual nature and immortal life.

Whatever recreations you may indulg in, be sure that they do not encourag anyone to neglect worship, and that the give no cause or excuse to the enemy t blaspheme. Conscience is a safe guide i it be scrupulously observed. A wise states man, even though he be a Christian, wil not attempt to impose the loftiest Chris tian practice upon a non-Christian com munity. Many things will have to b allowed in a mixed population, which a ideal Christian community would disap prove.

THOS. F. GAILOR,
Bishop of Tennessee.

. . .

Ask: "Lord, What Wilt Thou?"

By Bishop J. S. Johnston, of Texas

Let all Christians who want to stand well with their Saviour, ask him in all sincerity: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" and "whatsoever he says, do it." As regards our attitude toward others, the fourteenth chapter of Romans is good reading.

J. S. JOHNSTON,
(Episcopal) Bishop of Texas.

. . .

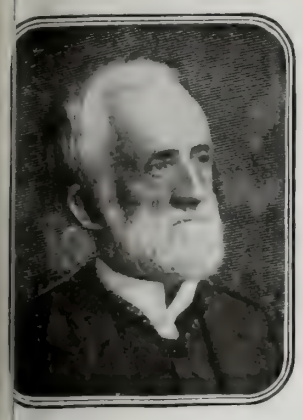
Conform to the Original Sabbath Law

By Rev. Dr. David J. Burrell, Pastor, Marble Collegiate Church, New York

What pleasures are we permitted to indulge in on Sunday? Only such as conform to the original Sabbath law and are consistent with the general principles which furnish the foundation of it.

What shall you read? Not light fiction; not such secular literature as will distract your heart from the just consideration of spiritual things. Not the Sunday news-

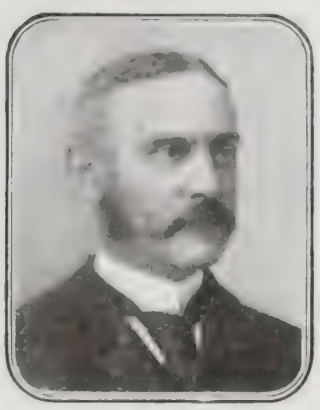
THE SUNDAY RECREATION PROBLEM — CONTINUED



BISHOP O. P. FITZGERALD (Tenn.)

REV. DAVID GREGG, D.D.

MARY J. HOLMES



REV. HENRY A. STIMSON

REV. E. O. GUERRANT

pers; for apart from the fact that you deliberately break the Sabbath in purchasing one, but you know furthermore that the contents of that Sunday newspaper will not make for truth and righteousness in the education of your soul and in preparation for an eternity with God.

But what about golf? And what about the Sunday spin? I know the specious arguments which young people are accustomed to offer in defence of it. In point of fact, the great multitude of those who are seen spinning along the boulevards on the Sabbath, are not the busy, thrifty handicraftsmen at all. A casual glance is enough to reveal that fact. But suppose that all these Sunday pleasurers could cry with a single voice, "We have no other day for our recreations." One word would answer them:—"You have no other day for the culture of your souls."

DAVID J. BURRELL.

. . .

Use Sunday to Develop the Spiritual Life

By Rev. Amory H. Bradford, Pastor First Cong. Church, Montclair, N. J.

It is impossible for me to draw any hard and fast line. What would be best for some, would not be best for others. Every man should put the needs of the spiritual life at the forefront and keep them there. Nothing should be encouraged which tends to lower ethical ideals, or to destroy the supremacy of spiritual motives. Sometimes it may be necessary for a man to give all his time, for awhile, to recreation, but for most men, that necessity does not long exist. Sunday morning ought to be jealously guarded, and used as a means of developing the spiritual life, and no form of recreation should be encouraged which tends so to absorb the attention as to make a man careless concerning the highest privileges and duties. I am strongly in favor of such an observance of the Lord's Day as will best promote spiritual growth, and guard against the tendencies toward carelessness and irreligion. AMORY H. BRADFORD,

Pstor First Congregat. Church, Montclair, N. J.

. . .

Abolish Sunday Funerals

By Bishop Edward Fawcett, of Illinois

I enter a plea for the abolition of that particular form of Lord's Day desecration which goes under the name of Sunday funerals. The Lord's Day is the least appropriate of any in the week for burials. The choice of this day as the popular burial day robs great multitudes of their rest-day, to say nothing of their worship. Motives of vanity—big crowds at a funeral—are often back of the choice of this day. If we must have one particular day, it should be any day save Sunday on which to lay away our dead.

EDWARD FAWCETT,

(Episcopal) Bishop of Quincy, Ills.

. . .

Recreations that Wreck Manhood

By Rev. Cortland Myers, Pastor Baptist Temple, Brooklyn

Our strenuous American life has increased the demand for relaxation in amusement, and the result is to seek the lower and forget the higher, to starve the soul-life, and leave God and his service in neglect. Any Sunday amusement which has this result is ruinous. Theatres or their counterpart, called "Sacred Concerts," dancing, football, and baseball, are all with open saloons in demoralizing the Sabbath, and in wrecking manhood and womanhood. Excursions and picnics, and riding (bicycling or automobiling), yachting, etc., need a righteous discrimination. If they thrust God out of life, and leave no place for his worship on Sunday, there is no place in the Christian life for them.

CORTLAND MYERS,

Pastor, Baptist Temple, Brooklyn.

. . .

Avoid Causing Others to Labor

By Edmund P. Platt, Chairman Executive Committee Y.M.C.A., N. Y.

The sacredness of the Sabbath should be observed, and we should do nothing to annoy or disturb our neighbors, or deprive them of the rest to which they are entitled, as well as ourselves. Many things should be discouraged which, while not themselves harmful, may cause discomfort, or violation of Sabbath principles in others. In everything due regard should be had for the thoughts and feelings of those who do not agree with us, or whose circumstances may be entirely different from ours. We should avoid those recreations which require the employment of others for our amusement or convenience, and thus compel them to secularize the day, and to give up its rest and worship.

EDMUND P. PLATT.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

. . .

Don't Deprive Others of Sunday Rest

By Rev. H. A. Stimson, Pastor Manhattan Congregational Church, New York

The Church has always disapproved unnecessary Sunday work. The Christian ought to be careful not to deprive others, if he can help it, of the privilege he himself holds dear. The Christian will not do business on Sunday, and will try not to talk business. He ought to keep the Sunday newspapers out of his house.

The Christian will do nothing that will keep him away from church on Sunday. For Christian people, Sunday excursions, picnics, yachting, the frequenting of country clubs, etc., are manifestly harmful. On the other hand, such recreation as can be taken without interfering with one's church-going, or with the Sunday rest of others, may be desirable.

The Christian may wisely restrict himself, while he mentally allows latitude to others. The great mass of wage-earners live under very different conditions from the men and women who belong to country clubs and own yachts and automobiles. They are largely deprived of all recreation during the week, and have a more varied need on Sunday; but even for them the Sunday theatre under any name can hardly be a necessity, while to the community it is a positive evil. The same is true of Sunday baseball, horse races, and games that draw similar gatherings.

HENRY A. STIMSON,

Pastor Manhattan Congregational Church, N. Y.

. . .

An Enlightened Conscience the Guide

By Mary J. Holmes, Author of Tempest and Sunshine, etc.

If I were to enumerate all the Sunday amusements which I think should be discouraged, I should be stamped a Puritan. I was brought up in what is called the Orthodox church, and taught that nearly everything was wrong to do on Sunday; while cards, and dancing, and theatre-going were wicked at any time. My views have been greatly changed with regard to many things, and modified with regard to others.

That I should disapprove of the recreations discouraged by law goes without saying. I am sorry when I hear of excursions, and picnics, and dinner parties, and starting on journeys "to save a day," on Sunday, unless it is necessary. I do not think children should be altogether restrained in their play on Sunday, nor do I think a walk or a call upon a friend is out of place, nor do I feel competent to say what others shall do or not do. Circumstances and environment make so much difference. An enlightened conscience, if not morbid, is a safe guide. MARY J. HOLMES,

Brockport, N. Y.

. . .

Live Near to God

By Mrs. Sarah J. Bird, Mother of the Gospel Settlement

If a friend should ask me my opinion as regards the right or wrong of any special amusement or recreation on the Sabbath, I should have but one answer: Live near to your God and in his companionship. He will make known to you the path of duty as no other can. SARAH J. BIRD,

Mother of "The Gospel Settlement," N. Y. City.

. . .

Obey God's Laws Concerning the Sabbath

By Rev. Dr. L. W. Munhall

"If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, and the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor it, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will make thee to ride upon the high places of the earth; and I will feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Isa. 58:13, 14.

Therefore, according to the Word of the Lord, we may not indulge in any pastimes and recreations that are for our own pleasure. Jesus said, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath," and according to his interpretation of this saying (see Mark 2:23-26; Luke 13:15, 14:1-6), we may do any work of mercy and things indispensible to our health of body and soul; but this does not in any sense do away with what the Lord said in Isa. 58:13, 14. It is always better to obey God.

L. W. MUNHALL, M.A., D.D.

Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.

. . .

Innocent Recreation Always in Order

By Robert Hunter, Economist

It seems to me that almost any kind of recreation which is innocent on any day, is innocent for the masses on Sunday. It is their only time for recreation, and I feel very glad to see them making the most of it. On the other hand, people who have leisure during the week, should observe the Sabbath far more strictly.

ROBERT HUNTER,

Norotom Heights, Conn.

. . .

The Merits of Church Attendance

By Dr. William H. Maxwell, Superintendent, New York Schools

I hesitate to express a condemnation of orderly Sunday amusements, where the use of liquor is not a factor, for the reason that my experience has shown me that frequently these outdoor activities are substitutes for lounging about undesirable places in the city. The issue does not seem to me to be one of "Outdoor Amusements versus Church," for I fear that many of those who now follow these outdoor activities on Sunday would not go to church if these activities were barred to them. I fear that many men who now go for a day's picnicking on the trolley cars with their families would, instead of this, leave their families at home, and spend most of Sunday at the corner saloon. But I raise no issue as to the merits of attendance upon Divine service as compared with playing games. I do not feel that the abolishment of Sunday sport would tend to church-going on the part of those who need it most.

WILLIAM H. MAXWELL,

N. Y. City. City Superintendent of Schools.

. . .

Avoid Whatever Profanes the Day

By Edward O. Guerrant, President America Inland Mission

God's law does not change to "suit the times," and the fourth commandment is in the very heart of his moral law, twice written by his finger on tables of stone. Whatever therefore profanes the Sabbath, is disobedience to his law. It especially prohibits all kinds of labor. Human laws have prohibited most Sunday recreations; others are tolerated. In all questions of casuistry, it is wisest to take the safe side, but in all, God's will must be the law, and God's pleasure the chief object.

EDWARD O. GUERRANT.

Wilmore, Ky.

. . .

Amusement and Recreation Distinct

By Susanna M. D. Fry, Cor. Secretary, Nat. Women's C. T. U.

It is my belief that all Sabbath amusements should be discouraged, but that an individual or family may partake of certain forms of recreation and yet keep the Sabbath holy. To take a quiet walk, a ride in one's own carriage, or boat, for the sake of the sunshine, or the shade, or the breeze, is one thing; to make the Sabbath a holiday for hilarious and indiscriminate pleasures with crowds of godless people is another thing. Under the first condition named, the spirit may be reverential, but I cannot conceive of honoring God at a Sunday baseball game, a theatre performance, or at a beer-garden, or a saloon. A bookkeeper, or others confined in offices all the week, can, in my estimation, spend a part of the Sabbath in the woods, or the sunshine, and still maintain a proper frame of mind, but I cannot conceive of this being done at a baseball game or a theatrical performance, even though labelled "sacred." Excursions, picnics, beer-garden and saloon entertainment, football, golf, etc., are purely secular. They are generally money-making schemes, involving the labor of many. A sacred concert in a church, and connected with other religious services, is calculated to do good. A sacred band concert in a theatre is questionable for a number of reasons. Its aim is not religious, the performers are hired, the object is mercenary, the environments are not conducive to reverential thought.

SUSANNA M. D. FRY,

Cor. Sec. Nat. W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill.

. . .

Answers have also been received from Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Superintendent International Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C.; Bishop T. Sabine (Reformed Episcopal) of N. Y., F. S. Luther, President, Trinity College; Bishop P. F. Stevens (Reformed Episcopal), S.C., and others.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Sunday Recreations

IN the letters from eminent divines, college professors and others, which we publish to-day, there is much that is both instructive and suggestive. Representing many shades of religious opinion, these contributions, as a whole, must be regarded as indicative of the growing tendency to relaxation in the good, old-fashioned methods of Sunday observance.

It is undeniable that the term, "Sunday recreation," has to-day a totally different meaning from that which it conveyed in the time of our fathers and grandfathers, when Sunday was conscientiously devoted to worship, bodily rest and spiritual refreshment. We have grown more latitudinarian. The "European Sabbath," which our ancestors regarded as profanation, has invaded our soil, and we are becoming accustomed to view with toleration the social gatherings, the pleasurings and junketings, the concerts and the feastings which are rapidly transforming the Lord's Day into a week-end round of secular enjoyment.

To thoughtful Christian people everywhere, this "lowering of the bars" must cause sincere sorrow. It proves that our modern high-pressure civilization, with all its multiplied advantages, has brought with it drawbacks that are dangerously opposed to spirituality. It marks a distinct deterioration in the religious tone of the nation. Men do not openly question the potency of the Gospel to draw the people, but we find them asking, "Has the Church lost its influence, that its services no longer attract the multitudes as in the earlier days?" Everywhere the fact confronts us that the increasing secularization of the Lord's Day constitutes a problem which the Church must face boldly. God's people must set their faces against Sabbath desecration and the love of worldly pleasure, and by influence and example must show to the world the beauty and desirability of the day of rest and worship, and the blessing that surely comes to those who respect it.

We are glad to note that there is at the present time a very promising movement for better Sunday observance in the direction of greater effort in Gospel presentation and reaching out with the message in a way that could not be attempted in earlier times. We must meet the world's allurements by bringing the Gospel to those who do not come to the churches. By redoubled spiritual activities; by work outside of the churches; by open-air preaching; by personal contact with the multitudes that are led aside by the voice of pleasure; by going out into the highways and byways, the churchless as well as those who have strayed away from the fold, may be effectively reached. Open-air tent meetings are but one method of reaching the people, and the good results already produced by those gatherings should serve to stimulate the workers to still further efforts and more extended plans. There is probably not a park or pleasure-ground, mountain or seashore resort, where a Sabbath Gospel gathering would not be cordially welcomed and largely attended.

We should be glad to see our churches take up this task in earnest this summer and make the season a memorable one. Let them go to the people wherever they are to be found. Let zealous workers be delegated to preach the message of salvation at every popular resort. Wherever the bane is, there take the antidote. And let them be fearless and outspoken in giving the message. If every summer Sunday be made a Gospel field-day, the work will surely prosper and will be acknowledged with blessing.

The Women's Opportunity

To the Editor of "The Christian Herald": I have been very greatly interested in the crusade lately begun by the women of America against the Mormon evil. But I wish to ask you why the women have been so complacent these many years, allowing this cancerous growth to spread, until drastic measures must now be employed to eradicate it. EDWARD DAILEY.

Buffalo, N. Y.

To the reader who puts the foregoing inquiry, we would reply: The women have been inactive heretofore, because they did not understand the power that was in their hands for good, in helping to bring about the overthrow of the Mormon evil. There is not a woman in the land, no matter how obscure she may be, nor how humble a place she may occupy, who does not possess some influence which she can use to advantage in this campaign. Ours is not a country for men alone; it is for women also—a government, as Lincoln described it, for "the whole people." It is, therefore, woman's duty, as well as her privilege, to demand that measures be taken by the Government under which she lives, to protect her and her children, and the united mothers and daughters of the whole nation, against the plottings of the rich, powerful and unscrupulous Mormon hierarchy. It has corrupted the politics and throttled the liberties of half a dozen States, and now it has invaded the national Senate. When Brigham H. Roberts, the polygamist, was elected to the House of Representatives, that body, in obedience to the demand of the women of America, expelled him. Shall the Senate do less, when the women unitedly demand the expulsion of Reed Smoot, the Mormon Apostle? Is the one any better qualified than the other to make laws for the American people?

The Eye of Faith

A MAN stood upon a lofty height overlooking an estuary of the sea. On the opposite shore was a bold headland. Wishing to cross thither, he cast about to find a way, but the abyss of waters lay between.

Then One who stood beside him said: "The bridge is safe; advance, and fear not." "But I see no bridge," said the traveler. "Take this glass and look," said the One who stood at his side. And the man took it and looked, and lo! a bridge spanning the great gulf of waters. Yet he saw but a small part of that end which was nearest.

He went forward courageously, and as he advanced the bridge stretched out before him, though the farther end was still obscured. He marveled much at this wonder, and inquired the reason. "This glass is the sixth sense," explained the One who had led him to look. "It imparts the spiritual vision, and reveals that which is hid from the eye of flesh."

Advancing confidently, he now saw the bridge more clearly, as its proportions were gradually disclosed. He went on his way singing and rejoicing, for he was glad at heart.

Among the Workers

—W. R. Moody has issued a "call" to the general public, inviting its attendance at the Twenty-third Christian Workers' Conference at Northfield, Aug. 4-20.

—THE EVANGELISTIC COMMITTEE of Greater New York has now five large Gospel tents in commission, and expects to have three more in use within a few weeks. "At the open-air meetings," writes Rev. John Bulnes, "it is nothing unusual to see from 500 to 1,000 men standing from 7 till 9 P.M., listening eagerly to the Gospel."

—THE SIXTH SEASON of the park services in the Pittsburgh region, under the direction of Rev. Dr. S. Edward Young, Pastor Second Presbyterian Church, began Sunday evening June 4th, and will be continued all summer. It is estimated that the total attendance of the park meetings in the Pittsburgh region has passed the million mark.

The Drums are Beating

From the Salt Lake Tribune

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New York, and the National League of Women's Organizations, have undertaken a labor in behalf of the integrity of government which will find ready response in every circle within the United States, except the Mormon Church.

It is the securing of individual petition by the women of the country to the Senate of the United States, asking that Reed Smoot be deprived of his seat in that body, for sufficient reasons carefully stated in the petition.

This movement is likely to have a very large effect, not only upon the fortunes of Smoot, but upon the Mormon Church in its entirety. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is the most popular and widely circulated religious publication in this country. The women's organizations reach every city and hamlet in the land and almost every home. Not only is their work likely to show a popular disapproval of Reed Smoot as a lawmaker, but it is certain to create a sentiment against the Mormon Church which will be far-reaching in its effects. This work will be of the highest importance, in conveying to the minds of eighty-two millions of our fellow-citizens the fact that Reed Smoot is not first a citizen of the United States, but first a citizen of the so-called kingdom of God, ruled by an earthly hierarch; that Smoot would not, in case of any question, give his first devotion to the country, but to his church; that Smoot is not a qualified lawmaker for the people of this nation, because, like the hierarch, he regards the Government and the citizenship of the United States as enemies of the prophets, seers and revelators, of whom Smoot is one, and among whom he entertains the hope to be the chief.

The beating of the drums is heard at last; and the beleaguered Americans of Utah may know that a mighty army is on the way to redress their wrongs.

Signing the Women's Memorial

SIGNATURES to the Memorial for the removal Smoot, the Mormon apostle, from the United Sta Senate, are now pouring into THE CHRISTIAN HERA office by every mail. When the Memorial is in full cir lation throughout the country, and the mothers a daughters of America are thoroughly aroused to th opportunity, and realize the tremendous importance the work, they should be able daily to add ma thousands of names to the mighty roll that will presented to the Senate.

During the week, many letters and postals have be received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from women different States, requesting that Memorials be forwar ed for signature, and these have been promptly su plied. It is extremely gratifying to note the ener and enthusiasm with which the work of securing sign tures is being pushed by these ladies. All, or near all, should be in by the end of August. Postal car requesting Memorials will receive immediate attentio

Many of the letters are full of encouragement for tl management of the Women's Campaign. "May tl Lord bless the work in the defeat of the Mormons, writes Mrs. Geo. O. F., West Orange, N. J. "It shou appeal to every woman's heart," is the declaration Lydia A., Ashland, Mass. "I am glad to learn, writes Mrs. C. L. H., of Claremont, N. H., "that tl women of our land have begun to make war on Mo monism." "It is a grand thing that the Women National League has undertaken," writes Miss M.A.B of Honeybrook, Pa. "Every loyal woman should r spond," writes Mrs. J. C. Van H., Amsterdam, N. Y "I will see to it that at least one hundred names a handed in by me from a State lying so close to the ho bed of Mormonism," writes C. V. K., Pueblo, Col "More than once, when in foreign lands, I have bee questioned about polygamy in America and been force to acknowledge the blot upon my country," write Evelyn C. M., Washington, D. C. "Please send m ten or twelve Memorials for signatures," writes G.W.L Newark, N. J. "I will add to their length and pu them in good hands to push Smoot out." "I trust tha great victory will follow your efforts," writes M. M. F. North Woburn, Mass. "I will canvass our town," writes Mrs. Lucy W. D., of Canadice, N. Y. "If th women can help to stamp out Mormonism, I think the ought to do their best." "There are some 750 Chap ters in our National Society," (D.A.R.), writes Regen H. B. Huey, Philadelphia, Pa., "and I am sure tha the Declaration of Independence Chapter would con sider it an honor to send one of these petitions to th Regent of each of these Chapters."

Among the Women's Organizations there is everywhere unwonted activity. In many cases, calls have been issued for special meetings to make plans for the further ance of the Anti-Mormon Campaign. Secretaries o other officers of such organizations, are requested to send to this journal a brief account of any action taken.

. . .

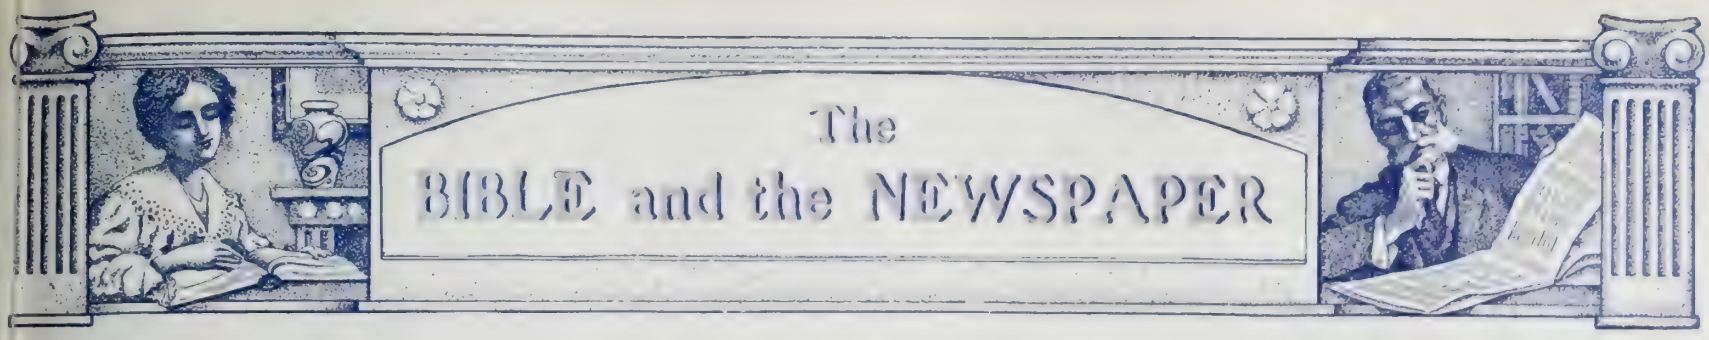
Mrs. J. B. H., Miss M. L., J. N. V., Ida K., Lonnie DeB., and several others. You can procure THE CHRISTIAN HERALD regularly every week for a year, with all the news of the Women's Campaign, by sending $1.50 to 92 Bible House, New York City. This journal has undertaken the work in behalf of the United Women's Organizations, and of the women of the nation generally, and with their energetic co-operation, means to carry it forward to the end. We cannot undertake to send the paper free.

. . .

The following contributions in aid of the Women's Anti-Mormon Campaign have been received:

Mrs. M. E. Sangster	$2 50
Mrs. M. S. Hopkins	2 00
A Public School Teacher	1 00
N. E. M.	1 00
A Friend	1 00
An Interested Woman	1 00

All contributions toward defraying the actual expenses of the campaign will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is essential that the Memorial should be circulated as widely as possible, and that other necessary campaign literature should find its way into every American home. Aid in this important work will be cordially welcomed.



Morocco in Dispute

HOW near Europe has been to a great war during the past few weeks, will perhaps never be known, except to the chief statesmen of three countries. When the Emperor of Germany vited Morocco recently, a cloud appeared on the ptical horizon which was distinctly electric. France, breason of her possession of the neighboring country oAlgeria, claimed "a supervisory and tutelary relatii" to Morocco, for which she sought European recoition. The only Governments having important intests in that region were England and Spain. France, therefore, made treaties with these Powers, in which her elms were acknowledged. She made the mistake o ignoring Germany, which was a signatory of the Cvention of 1880. Emperor William was incensed at Fnce for supposing that there was no need to consult hi in the matter, and was besides irritated at the new fondliness which had sprung up between France and Geat Britain. He therefore proposed that a European Cference be called, to take the affairs of Morocco in consideration. This proposal placed France in a dficulty, because such a Conference might revise the taties she had made, and might refuse to recognize h claims in Morocco. Deprived of the help of Russ, which at this juncture has all the troubles she can aend to, France was inclined to yield to the demands oGermany, knowing well that she was not strong eough alone to contend with that Power. England, however, encouraged her to resist, and, it is rumored, pmised help in the event of a conflict. France, thus eouraged, sent a long reply to Germany, saying she cild not enter a Conference that might disturb existing taties, and Germany retorted that the Conference rist not be limited. Thus a deadlock was produced which semed for some days to have no possible outcome tt war. Later reports, however, ilicate that Germany has now aumed a more conciliatory attitle. France is not so friendless the Emperor supposed. He ight fight her alone and crush her, lt victory would not be so certain i England should be allied with lr. This consideration, and probly others, appear to have relieved te tension, but the situation is still licate. The incident, disquieting it was for a time, may have a cificatory result. The long anpathy of France toward England, nich has often had a disturbing fect on European relations, will obably disappear, now that in r extremity England came to her pport. She will realize how that ctor strengthened her position, as ie ancient preacher said:

Two are better than one: for if they fall, e one will lift up his fellow, but woe to m that is alone when he falleth: for he ath not another to lift him up (Eccles. 9, 10).

oland in Revolt

Social discontent in Poland, hich has long been simmering, st week assumed the proportions f revolution. A beginning was ade when the workingmen in he cotton mills of Lodz struck or more pay and shorter hours. The contagion soon spread to other industries. Poland as always been a thorn in the side of Russia, and the ope of independence has never been entirely abanloned. Men who longed for insurrection on political grounds, took advantage of the social disturbances, nd urged the strikers to fight for freedom. It was easy to incite the ignorant masses to deeds of vioence. They were reminded that the time for a ising was propitious. The military power of Russia was crippled by the war with Japan. The generals were effete and incapable. The whole government was disorganized. With such incentives the strikers turned to rioting. Russian troops were hurried to the scenes of disturbance. They had an easier task in fighting an unarmed mob than in fighting the Japanese and they took advantage of it. It is reported that not less than two thousand rioters were killed by the troops. Sympathy with the fallen was general throughout Poland. In Warsaw, the capital, a general strike took place as a mark of indignation, and at Odessa a still more alarming outbreak occurred. There, a huge mob burst through the troops, seized the custom-house and set fire to warehouses and stores and to the shipping in the harbor. The soldiers fought desperately and martial law was proclaimed. A new development was added to the disturbing situation, by mutiny on board one of Russia's few remaining battleships. The crew of the Knlaz Potemkin Tavritchisky, in the harbor of Odessa, rose, killed their officers and threatened to bombard the city. A torpedo boat soon joined the battleship, and it is reported that other crews are following the example. Rumors are current that similar risings have occurred at other ports. There are reports, too, of disloyalty among the troops. Many sympathize with their colleagues in the navy and refuse to fire on the mutineers. If it is really true that disaffection has infected the army, the end of the Russian dynasty is at hand. Russia has absorbed so many nations, which she has misgoverned and has not assimilated, that the fate threatened by the ancient prophet against the spoilers of to-day seems to be impending:

THE SULTAN OF MOROCCO AND HIS SECRETARY

Because thou hast spoiled many nations, the remnant of the people shall spoil thee, because of men's blood, and for the violence of the land, and of all that dwell therein (Hab. 2: 8).

THE GERMAN AMBASSADOR SETTING OUT FROM TANGIER, THE CAPITAL OF MOROCCO

Has Two Hearts

An extraordinary physical peculiarity was recently discovered by a physician at New Rochelle, N. Y. He was called to attend a citizen of that town, for a slight ailment. In examining him, he was puzzled by hearing a double beating of the heart. A more minute scrutiny revealed the presence of two hearts, each having the usual functions. The man himself was quite unaware of the peculiarity. He is a carpenter, thirty-five years of age, and has always enjoyed excellent health. Since the discovery, eminent specialists from far and near have been to see him. One of them was anxious to remove one of the hearts, and offered a large sum of money for the privilege. The owner, however, objected, not knowing what effect the operation might have on his health. But the idea of making money by the strange freak of nature has affected him, and he has inserted an advertisement in the press, offering, for a sum of money paid now, to dispose of his hearts after his death. By that time he will have no further use for them. All his concern will then be whether he has complied with the invitation of his Maker.

My son, give me thine heart (Prov. 23: 26).

A Church 1,600 Years in Building

Great interest is excited in France by the consecration of a church at Troyes. It was begun in the third century of the Christian era, under the command of Pope Urban, who assumed the tiara in 223. It was built on the site of his birthplace and was to commemorate his birth. Only the foundations were laid during Urban's lifetime, and afterwards the building made but slow progress. During long periods nothing at all was done toward the completion of the church. Again the work was resumed only to be discontinued after a short time. Finally it was taken up vigorously, and this year the last few stones are being laid. Great preparations are being made for the imposing ceremony of dedication. So has it been with the real church of Christ. At times it has appeared to slumber, as if it would become extinct; but God has revived his work, and we have the assurance that it shall yet be completed to his glory.

Ye also as living stones, shall be built up a spiritual house (I. Peter 2: 5).

BRIEF NOTES

An invitation has been sent to Dr J. Wilbur Chapman to hold services in Boston, Mass.

The fourteenth International Peace Congress will convene at Lucerne, Switzerland, Sept. 19, and continue for a week.

An Iowa Protestant woman declines to become a Roman Catholic in order to accept a bequest of $30,000, conditioned on her change of faith.

The Torrey-Alexander Mission is still holding its meetings in the Great Hall, Strand, London, two meetings each day. There is a choir of 1,000 voices.

It is proposed to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary, next February, of the founding of the Christian Endeavor Society, by raising funds for the erection and endowment of a headquarters building, in honor of Dr. F. E. Clark, its originator and president.

A simultaneous evangelistic mission throughout South Africa is being carried on by the Free Church Councils from June 1 to 11, combining the Baptist, Congregational, Dutch Reformed, Presbyterian, and Wesleyan Unions.

The famous Mr. F. N. Charrington, who has built and supports mission halls in various districts of London, refused to pay the iniquitous education tax. His goods were seized and sold at auction, and if he persists in his refusal, he will be sent to prison.

The Congregational Year-Book, just issued, gives statistics for 1904. It has a list of 5,919 churches, 124 having been added during the year, 105 dropped. The net gain of churches is 19. The total membership is 673,721, a net gain of 14,321, the largest increase in any one year since 1895. The number of ministers is 6,237.

THE LATE SECRETARY OF STATE

ON the morning of July 1, the American public was shocked by the announcement that on the previous evening, at his country home in New Hampshire, Secretary of State John Hay had forever laid down the cares of office.

Mr. Hay had been seriously ill, but recent reports from his physicians had been more favorable, and the country had hoped that a summer in the mountains would result in permanent benefit. He went abroad for his health last spring. On his return he was taken suddenly ill. Specialists were called, but their efforts were in vain.

On the night of June 30 he seemed to show some slight improvement. All day his condition had given satisfaction to his physicians, Dr. Charles L. Scudder and Dr. Fred T. Murphy. A few minutes before midnight he became suddenly worse. He passed away at 12.25 A.M. The two doctors and Mrs. Hay were at his bedside when he died. The signs immediately preceding death were those of pulmonary embolism.

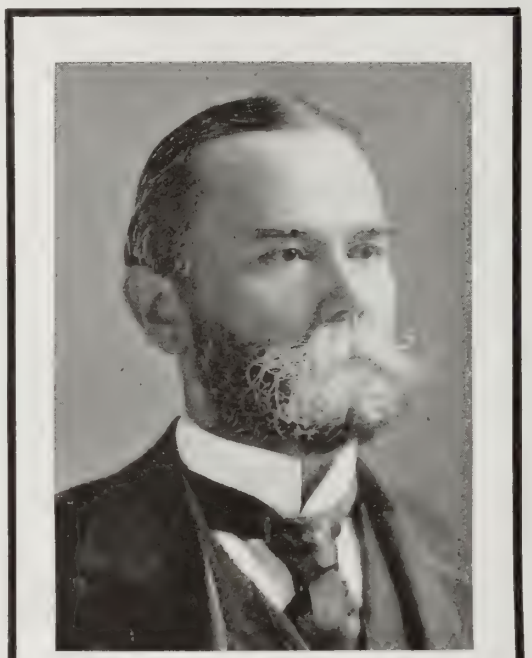
. . .

Under the masterly hand of Secretary of State John Hay, the diplomacy of the United States has led that of the world toward peace and justice among the nations. Our foreign policy since the Spanish-American war, has caused first the astonishment and then the admiration of the Powers. This admiration was in great part for Mr. Hay himself, with whom our whole foreign policy was so closely bound up. This feeling was especially cordial in France and England, and most respectful in Germany and Russia. There is little doubt but that for him China would have become a prey to the Powers, and the result might have been a war of such magnitude as to make the present conflict between Russia and Japan look small by comparison. Among his other recent triumphs were the open door in China, and various regulations in regard to what should be considered contraband of war.

Mr. Hay's success as Secretary of State was due not only to his own great personality, but also to the years of hard training that preceded his appointment to his exalted position. He was descended from an ancient Scotch family, that made its mark in the land of the thistle as far back as the days of Bruce. Many of them won their spurs on hard-fought fields, that are famous in history.

From these sturdy ancestors Mr. Hay inherited that love of a soldier's life that was so predominant in the days of the Civil War, and also his hatred of sham and oppression in dealing with weaker nations. Shortly after his graduation from Browne University, he went to Washington as one of the secretaries of President Lincoln; and his personal relations with Mr. Lincoln were so close, and the mutual regard so strong, that they have been compared by one historical writer to Washington and Hamilton at the time when the latter was serving on Washington's staff. Toward the end of the war Mr. Hay's longing for service was not to be denied, and he joined the army. For meritorious service he reached the rank of major before the close of the conflict.

The assassination of President Abraham Lincoln was



THE LATE JOHN HAY, Secretary of State

Born October 8, 1838. Died July 1, 1905

a terrible blow to Mr. Hay, and he gladly accepted an appointment in the diplomatic service that took him away from scenes filled with painful recollections. He was made Secretary of the Legation at Paris, where he could study the drift of European policies and diplomacy, in the last days of the Empire. Later, he served at Madrid, where he gathered the material for one of his most charming books, Castilian Days. He also ser this country at Vienna. Such training in Europ diplomacy was the finest preparatory course for American Secretary of State, as he was able work from a first-hand knowledge of European co tions, something that has not always been possible the conduct of our foreign affairs.

Mr. Hay, on his return to America, made his hc in Cleveland, but later he moved to Washington. was called for a time to the editorship of the New Y Tribune, where his sharp and pungent style soon m itself felt in the discussion of the political questions the day. In fact, it is stated that many a corrupt p tician breathed easier when Mr. Hay was called to ot fields. The death of his talented son some years a was a great blow to the Secretary and his wife. Th are two beautiful daughters, one the wife of Pay Whitney, son of the former Secretary of the Navy; t other, the wife of Mr. Wadsworth, who is starting o political career in New York State, his father havi been a Member of Congress from Genessee Valley a great many years. The eldest daughter has inherit much of her distinguished father's literary talent. S published a few years ago a volume of poems that tracted favorable attention.

Next to his reputation as a great Secretary of Sta he will probably be remembered for his literary abili His early poems were immensely popular, and he w often referred to as the author of "Little Breeches one of his most widely read poems. He has shown fine capacity for more serious work. His Castilli Days, already referred to, and his great work on L coln, written in conjunction with Nicolay, another the martyred President's secretaries, place him in t front rank of American writers.

Mr. Hay's appointment as Ambassador to the Co of St. James marked a new era in our relations wi Great Britain. Mr. Hay had already an internation reputation, and his years of service in London great endeared him to the British people. His recall w much regretted, although his appointment to the st higher honor of Secretary of State of the sister nati was felt to strengthen the bonds of blood and spee that already united them. Mr. Hay's successor England, Mr. Choate, carried on the good work alrea begun by Mr. Hay abroad. As Secretary of State I was of as much interest to Europe as was t President himself. Peace or war among the natio waited to see what this Secretary of State wou say or do. The way in which they all came into a agreement, defining the limits of the present war ne the Chinese frontier, was a great tribute to him as we as to President Roosevelt.

THE MISSIONARY'S VISIT

THE day was extremely hot and most uncomfortable, and the editor who has charge of the Children's Home department while striving in vain to keep cool, in a breezy corner of the Bible House, was thinking of the little tenement children, and how infinitely more uncomfortable they were in their crowded, stuffy rooms, where ventilation is unknown. Out in the square, a cloudless sky looked down upon blistering pavements which gave back a radiation scorching to the pedestrian's feet. It was hot in the morning, hotter at noon, and at 3 P.M., not a breath of air was stirring to relieve the almost exhausted city toilers.

But what of the little children? In miserable alleys and hemmed-in courtyards they might be seen by the thousands, sitting upon doorsteps, and lying almost exhausted upon hard stone flagging, where there was a bit of refuge from the sun's cruel rays.

As visions of these suffering little ones came between the eyes of the writer and her paper, a cheerful voice cried:

"Good afternoon! I thought you might like to hear something about my little kindergartners over in Eleventh Street. I have been to see a number of them in their homes, and it makes me so happy to be able to tell the poor, tired mothers about Mont-Lawn. Oh, if you could see how their eyes brighten as I talk to them! The little ones gather around and chatter delightedly, and even the solemn-eyed baby (and there is most always a baby), seems to know there is something unusual going on. I brought you the picture of one little darling—now, isn't she a beauty? Too bad that I had to have my picture taken with her; but she was shy and insisted, and so here it is. But Nina's face is far more lovely than the picture shows."

LITTLE NINA AND THE MISSIONARY

And so the missionary chattered on of the calls she had made that day among the poor in her district. There was no complaint about the hot weather, or the long, weary flights she was obliged to climb in search of a poor, sick woman; only thankfulness that the good readers of The Christian Herald had made it possible for her to carry comfort to a slender, delicate mother, and to promise that the children should go to Mont-Lawn, and thus afford her an opportunity for a long-needed rest.

Somehow, after the little missionary's visit, the weather did not appear so unbearable.

. . .

It costs but $21 to endow a bed for the season at Mont-Lawn, thus ensuring a ten days' vacation to seven children. $3 will give one little one a joyous vacation.

[Send address, and an illustrated booklet descriptive of Mont-Lawn, will be mailed free.]

A Devoted Life

ALL friends of Sunday School work will be interested to learn of the long and faithful service of Mrs. J. E. Campbell, of White Plains, N. Y., who, for thirty-two consecutive years, was Superintendent of the Primary Department of the Sunday School of the Memorial M. E. Church of that village. During her long service she was a devoted friend of the children, and was always to be found at her post, unle detained by sickness, ever watching ov her flock of little ones, all of whom love her dearly. She has seen the second gen eration pass through her school, retain ing their love and respect for the moth erly Superintendent who endeavored t start their young and tender feet in th right path. She seemed to have befor her Christ's injunction to Peter, "feed m lambs," and her spiritual and materia ministrations were only limited by he physical endurance. Mrs. Campbell to day, notwithstanding her long service, stil continues active in the various othe branches of church work, being identifie with many of the working committees o the church societies. She believes in th very practical rule that it is far better t "wear out" than "rust out," and, because she has remained young at heart, by keep ing abreast with the times, she is to-day a companion to all classes—kind and for bearing, cheerful, sweet-faced—she greets one with delightful cordiality.

The place she has won in the hearts of the young people of the last two generations must be a source of much gratification to her, and it is their prayer that she may long live to gladden the heart and ornament the cause to which she has given so much. Those who have been refreshed by her life of sacrifice and devotion, feel sure that her example will be a source of inspiration to many engaged in Sunday School work.

ORIENTAL WATER VENDER

Everyone is Cordially Invited

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS*

HO, every one that thirsteth come ye to the waters . . . without money and without price. When the writer was in Alexandria, Egypt, seeing chapters of the Bible step out alive to ew every hour, an old water-seller was seen in the eet with a goatskin "bottle" of water on his back, om which he was pouring water into a cup, which he ssed to one and another of numerous poor people—en, women and children—that had gathered in response this loud call. A Mohammedan dragoman was asked at the man was shouting that brought such eager owds, and why he was not taking money as usual, om those who drank from his cup. The answer was: 'He is crying, 'Come everybody that is thirsty and ink free.'" He added: "That rich man, in fine othes, that stands beside him, has paid for the whole sinful of water, that it may be given to the poor as a arity, and that each of the poor may put up a prayer God for him in return." At once I saw one important uth in the 55th chapter of Isaiah that would not otherse have been clear, namely, that while new spiritual e and joy, delicious as cool water to a thirsty soul, is ered to us all freely, it has been paid for. "Jesus id it all" in the red coin of his own precious blood, d salvation is free to us, because "He who was h," the millionaire of stars, for our sakes became or, in paying the price of our salvation.

The most perfect Bible parallel to this invitan to drink at such a cost, is the story of David, o exclaimed when battling with the Philistines: O that one would give me to drink from the well Bethlehem!" The well was then within the emy's lines, but three of his brave companions rked their lives to get the cool drink desired from shepherd's well, from which in youth David had often slaked his thirst. Profoundly touched by eir loving loyalty, stronger than death, David ured out the water as a thank-offering to God, too recious to drink, exclaiming: "God forbid that I ould drink the blood of these men, for with the ppardy of their lives they brought it!" (I Chron. : 15-19). Christ has brought to us from the heaven- well of Bethlehem, the water of life at the cost his life, but he would have us drink deeply of it, the full satisfaction of the cravings of the soul.

We may well recall here the story of Hagar and e child Ishmael, when they seemed to be doomed die of thirst in the wilderness. "God opened her es, and she saw a well of water, and she went and lled the bottle with water, and gave the lad drink. d God was with the lad and he grew" (Gen. 21: : 21). O that every mother might open her eyes behold the fountain of true life God has opened r her child, which is better than money, or social sition, or fame! Nothing she can give her child n be so precious a gift. And may the children all ve open eyes, in any case, to see the fountain of hristian life, which alone can make life other than living death of selfishness and sin. "Whosever will, him take the water of life freely" (Rev. 22: 17).

All through the Bible the joy of the Christian life ming into the soul, is symbolized by water that tisfies thirst, a powerful picture in hot Oriental untries, where water is most needed and hard to t; but impressive also in our own country, especily in these summer days. And, therefore, it is ting to describe here the ceremony in the Feast of abernacles, known as "the joy of drawing water" sa. 12: 3), in which Christ uttered a great word at shows its meaning. On each day of the seven, d possibly on the eighth, there was a significant and yous ceremony. At early morning the people repaired the Temple, and when the morning sacrifice had been id on the altar, one of the priests went down with a lden ewer to the Pool of Siloam, not far from the foot Mount Zion. There, with great solemnity, he drew ree measures of water, which were then carried in iumphant procession through the gates of the Temple. s he entered the Temple courts, the sacred trumpets reathed out a joyous blast, which continued until he eached the top of the altar slope, and there poured the ater into a silver basin on the western side, while wine as poured into another silver basin on the eastern side. hen the great Hallel was sung (Psalms 113 to 118), and hen they came to the verse, "O give thanks unto the ord, for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever;" ach of the gaily-clad worshipers, as he stood beside the ltar, shook his palm branch in triumph. In the evenng they abandoned themselves to such rejoicing, that he rabbis say that the man who has not seen this "joy of rawing water" does not know what joy means.

In evident allusion to this glad custom—perhaps in ympathy with the sense of something missing which succeeded the disuse of it on the eighth day of the feast—Jesus pointed the yearnings of the festal crowd in the Temple, as he had done those of the Samaritan woman at the lonely well (John 4), to a new truth, and to one which more than fulfilled alike the spiritual (Isa. 12: 3), and the historical meaning (I Cor. 10: 4), of the scenes which they had witnessed. He "stood and cried, If any man thirst, let him 'come unto Me and drink'" (John 7: 37). Every soul in thoughtful moments, thirsts for fuller, deeper, truer life than the life of the flesh. Only the divine life of God, imparted to the soul, can satisfy that thirst. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." The whole message of Isaiah may be condensed in this one sentence: How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation—from sin, for all, from God, by sacrifice, with service, unto pleasures forevermore?

In the life of James Chalmers, the brave Scotch missionary to New Guinea, there is an exciting and instructive water story, that may be used to illustrate the missionary aspect of God's invitation to thirsty souls. Chalmers was working in the Suau tribe of cannibals, and proposed to go to the Tepauri tribe, with which they had a feud, which was so manifestly perilous that Christian natives of the tribe where he was, urgently sought to dissuade him. But he insisted on following the path of duty, however dangerous, and Beni, of the rival tribe he was leaving, bravely decided to go with him. Now we will let Chalmers complete the story:

BEARING THE GOLDEN EWER OF WATER TO THE TEMPLE

"We anchored well off, and then Beni and I pulled in the dingey to the reef, where we got out in three feet of water. There was a noisy crowd of natives ashore, and I feared that they might seize the dingey, so I sent her back with the man to the vessel. The natives, armed with clubs and spears, danced around us shouting all the time. Then we were seized by the hand and hurried along the beach, I protesting all the way, but to no purpose. Beni was just behind me, and around us the crowd kept up a singing dance, using their spears and clubs, pretending to throw them, or strike a blow at an enemy. One word we thought we could make out: 'Goira, goira.' This, from its likeness to a word in Raratonga, we thought meant 'Spear them, spear them.' We came to a dry watercourse, and up that they made us go. Getting my heel against a stone, I protested, and Beni did the same. But it was no use, we were just lifted over. Turning to Beni, I asked what he thought of it. 'Oh, they are taking us to the Marai (the sacred place where the gods are supposed to live) to kill us,' he answered. The bush was dense. I turned to Beni and said: 'No use, Beni, God is with us, so let us go quietly.' We reached the hill, and near a large rock, with moss ferns and lichen in abundance, there was a pool, refreshing and lovely. Full of wonder, I was made to stand on a stone near the pool, and Beni on another, and the crowd all round us, when the man who held my hand spoke." It was not death, as they thought, but life. Their word for water was "goira," and they had brought Chalmers and Beni there to beg them to come and settle among them, to build a house, to take all the land, they said, and as they had heard that good water was the first requirement of a white man when he wanted to build his house, they had brought them up to show them the pool which should be theirs!

How many hold back as if they were invited to something dread, when we would bring them to the very fountain of life! Christianity proves such a fountain in every individual life, and in every community where it is planted. Without it we can no more live in the true sense of the word than we can live where there is no good water. Miss Mary S. Morrell, teacher in the Chinese Sunday School, connected with the Second Parish Church of Portland, Maine, one day tried to impress the mind of her pupil with the love of Jesus as Saviour of the world. The Chinese lad looked up and said: "I wish some woman would go to China to tell my mother that; she never know it unless some woman go." She had intended to be a missionary, but the way had not opened. These words caused her to offer herself at once to the American Board. She sealed her testimony with her blood, being one of the missionaries martyred at Paoting-Fu. That story of the Chinese boy and his mother, and the previous story of Hagar and Ishmael, recall the beautiful verse:

Hundreds of stars in the pretty sky,
Hundreds of shells on the shore together,
Hundreds of birds that go singing by,
Hundreds of bees in the sunny weather;
Hundreds of dewdrops to greet the morn,
Hundreds of lambs in the crimson clover,
Hundreds of butterflies on the lawn,
But only one mother, the wide world over.

There is nothing that would give such joy to most of our mothers as to know their children had opened their hearts to be fountains of Christian life.

The press dispatches last winter gave an account of a pathetic incident which occurred in New York State. It happened in the first severe cold snap of the season. A boy of five years of age was sent by his parents on an errand to a neighbor's, not far distant. Hours passed, and he failed to return. In the twilight, and far into the darkness of night, they called and searched for him, but all in vain. With the coming of dawn, however, they found him, frozen to death, on the neighbor's porch. He had gone to a door which was seldom used, and, though he had knocked and called with all his feeble strength, he had not been able to make himself heard. At last he had sunk into the sleep of death, and, when discovered, the tears of despair were seen frozen on his little face. There are no bolted or unused doors to the Kingdom of God. "Knock and it shall be opened unto you."

Eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. The joys of a Christian life are not sufficiently pictured by the deep satisfaction of cool water to a thirsty soul. More substantial food must be added to the picture to show the blessedness of those who "hunger and thirst after righteousness," to whom is fulfilled the promise, "they shall be filled." Religion takes no joy out of life that is not really sorrow in disguise. "Self-denial is only self-love living for the future," and only such self-denial for our own good does religion require. The man who sees the great meaning of life, however, cannot make pleasure the chief aim in life.

Behold I have given him for a Leader and Commander to the people. We have seen that it is the thirsty and the hungry who are invited.

All the fitness He requireth, is to feel your need of Him.

Now we are told in two verses to whom we are invited. The invitation is to our "Leader and Commander," to "the Lord thy God," the King of kings. Never in all our lives shall any invitation come to us from one so great. And he invites us that he may be our "Leader."

Seek ye the Lord while he may be found. This is the when of our coming, the time for our invitation to be accepted. Nothing is sadder than the story of missed opportunities, due to man's propensity to postpone duty.

In an old Greek city there was a curious statue which long since disappeared, but a story about it has come down to us. It is in the form of a dialogue.

What is thy name, O Statue? I am called Opportunity.
Why art thou standing on thy toes? To show that I stay but a moment.
Why hast thou wings on thy feet? To show how quickly I pass by.
But why is thy hair so long on thy forehead, covering thy face? Because men seldom know me when I come to them, and that men may seize me when they meet me.
Why, then, is thy head so bald behind? To show that when I have once passed I cannot be caught.

I knock unbidden once at every gate.
If sleeping, wake; if feasting, rise before
I turn away. It is the hour of fate,
And they who follow me reach every state
Mortals desire and conquer every foe
Save death; but those who doubt or hesitate,
Condemned to failure, penury and woe
Seek me in vain, and uselessly implore,
I answer not and I return no more.

*International Sunday School Lesson for July 23, The Gracious Invitation. Isaiah 55: 1-13. Golden Text: "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found," Isaiah 55: 6.

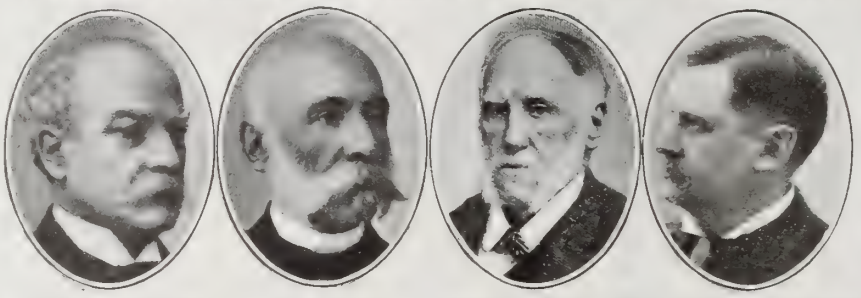
PROMINENT MEN OF THE HOUR

HON. GEO. H. WILLIAMS, of Portland, Ore., has given a bad blow to the Osler old-age theory, by becoming mayor of his city, after he had passed the eightieth milestone. Mr. Williams served in Grant's Cabinet as Attorney-General. He was chosen as Portland's most distinguished citizen to represent her during the great Exposition year.

M. DELYANNIS, Premier of Greece, has been assassinated by a gambler, who objected to the reforms that the prime minister had enforced. M. Delyannis was premier over twenty times.

SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE HENDRICKS of New York State, investigated the Equitable Life Assurance Society. His report advocates many very radical changes.

SECRETARY HITCHCOCK has been investigating for the government, the great public land frauds in the Northwest.



SECRETARY HITCHCOCK — M. DELYANNIS — MAYOR WILLIAMS — SUP'T OF INSURANCE HENDRICKS

THE LATE REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR

SEE PORTRAIT ON FIRST PAGE

ONE of the greatest, because one of the most useful, of God's servants in this generation, passed from the earth when J. Hudson Taylor, the founder of the China Inland Mission, breathed his last on June 3. It is melancholy news for the whole Christian world, that would fain keep such men ever in their place, but for the tired worker who has fought the good fight and has finished his course, it is a welcome summons that calls them to their reward.

> Thanks be to God that such have been,
> Although they are no more.

Mr. Taylor had gone back to the land he loved so well, after several years spent in Europe in the service of his mission. His health had been very broken during those years. He had toiled uninterruptedly; he was seventy-three years of age; he had just lost his beloved wife, the helper and companion of his trials and successes, and it seemed as if the time for departure for himself had come. "You are too feeble to make the journey," he was told before he started from his retreat in Switzerland. But he yearned to return to China, the land to which he had devoted his life. He could not rest, and declared that, even if he died on the way, he must go. His friends ceased urging when he said that, and were willing that his earnest wish should be gratified.

In February last he set out, accompanied by his son Howard Taylor and his daughter-in-law, They spent ten days in Philadelphia, Pa., for the aged traveler to recuperate, and then crossed to San Francisco, from which port they sailed to Honolulu. Thence they proceeded to Japan, where they visited the hospitals, full of wounded soldiers and sailors. Mr. Taylor was deeply moved by the opportunity for service there, and begged his daughter-in-law to send home an appeal for Christian literature and workers. On April 17 the party reached Shanghai, and Mr. Taylor's ardent wish was fulfilled. He was once more among familiar scenes, and his soul was filled with delight. Thence they went to Changsha, in Hunan, where Mr. Taylor died.

Mr. Taylor was a native of Barnsley, England. His father, a successful business man, was a devoted Christian, and his mother was a beautiful, saintly lady. When their son was born, in 1832, the opening in China had just been laid with new force on the conscience of the Christian church. It seemed that an opportunity had occurred for reaching the teeming millions of that land with the Gospel. The newly-made father pondered over it deeply and talked of it with his wife. Together they pleaded with God that their infant son might be led to devote himself to missionary work in China. It was not for many years, and after he had consecrated his life to service in that land, that Mr. Hudson Taylor learned that these prayers had been offered by his parents. They had determined not to influence him in his choice of a career, by telling him of their desire. They trusted God, and he gave them the desire of their hearts. It was, however, a source of strength and encouragement to the missionary to know that God had been leading him in answer to prayer.

It appeared, at first, that there was but little prospect of such an answer. The boy's health broke down, and it was thought he could not live to maturity. There was also a spiritual obstacle. To the grief of his parents, the son became a sceptic. It was, for the young man, a period of doubt and darkness. The way he came out of it was a lesson for godly parents. His mother was paying a visit to friends some eighty miles away from home. His father also was away, and the young man, alone at home, spent most of his time in his father's library. One day the mother was kept, by some slight indisposition, from joining a party of friends, and was alone. Her thoughts were with her beloved son; she wondered what he was doing in her absence. She went to her room and gave herself up to pleading with God for his conversion. It was a long, earnest prayer, in which she poured out her soul to God, for him. After a time, it changed its note to one of joy and praise. She rose from her knees in confident assurance that her prayer was answered. So it proved. At the very moment that she was praying, her son was on his knees in his father's library, consecrating himself to Christ.

Hudson Taylor was not the kind of nature that could be content with nominal, idle Christianity. Like the Apostle Paul, he was constrained to service. To be a preacher, further still to be a missionary, became his desire. The subject of China was in the air. The fact that there were vast provinces containing many millions of people in which the Gospel had never been preached, and that even in the provinces on the coast, the missionaries numbered scarcely one to a million, made a deep impression on him. To China he resolved to go, but first, realizing the help that medical knowledge would be to him, he took a course of study in the London hospitals. At its conclusion, he offered himself to the Chinese Evangelization Society and was accepted. In September, 1853, he being then twenty-one years old, he sailed for China.

When Mr. Taylor landed at Shanghai, he found the country torn with the struggle of a native rebellion. Dangers were on every hand from the fanatical soldiery and from the excited people; but the young missionary, strong in his faith, went on fearlessly and was marvelously preserved from harm. With his friend, William C. Burns, of the Presbyterian Mission, to whose companionship Mr, Taylor used to refer, to the end of his life. as a source of help and cheer, he labored energetically. But he was convinced that a mission directed from the homeland, and controlled by men who could not see for themselves the difficulties and needs of the field, would not meet the exigency. Accordingly, after three years' devoted work, he severed his connection with the Society and returned home. A new revision of the Chinese Bible was in progress and in this he rendered valuable assistance. In this work he gained new light. He wrote:

> In the study of that Divine Word I learned that, to obtain successful laborers, not elaborate appeals for help were needed, but, first, earnest prayer to God to thrust forth laborers: and, second, the deepening of the spiritual life of the churches, so that men should be unable to stay at home. I saw that the apostolic plan was, not to raise ways and means, but to go and do the work, trusting in his sure word, who has said: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Acting on this new light, he wrote, China's Spiritual Needs and Claims, in which he temperately described the situation and his own plans for dealing with it. He asked for volunteers who believed with him, and who would be prepared to go out, trusting in God to supply the means for their support. Responses soon came in of men and money. In 1865, the China Inland Mission was organized. Seventeen workers were accepted, and they were told that such funds as might be contributed, should be fairly divided, but no definite promise was made. At that time there were eleven inland provinces, in which there was not one Christian, and of the other seven provinces, the number of converts was small. The little party was divided among the heathen provinces, Mr. Taylor taking the most difficult and dangerous post.

From that time to this, the work has gone on with marvelous success. Fresh calls for volunteers were sent home, and were abundantly answered. Money too, came as the need arose, in increasing amounts. At the present time the China Inland Mission has over two hundred central stations; over four hundred out stations, and 828 missionaries in the field. The income has kept pace with the need, and the latest annual report acknowledges $252,220. The results of the work have been astonishing. Since the year 1900, in which the terrible massacre occurred, more than fifty thousand converts have been won from heathenism, through God's blessing on the labors of the China Inland Mission's missionaries.

It was no wonder that the devoted servant of God was thankful for this harvest. It is a cause for rejoicing that he lived to see it. So earnestly, and so patiently and persistently had he striven, that his whole life had gone into the work. We can imagine how, even in weakness, bereavement and old age, he longed to go back to the scene of his labors. God rewarded him in love, and gave him the desire of his heart. He saw of the travail of his soul and was satisfied.

ROYAL
Baking Powder
Most healthful leavener in the world. Goes farther.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Let the Baby Look Like a Baby
Don't powder him up like some old-time belle. Commence on the velvety skin with SPIM SOAP And SPIM OINTMENT-CREAM.
Later in life baby will not have to use powder to fill up the pores in his skin, which you started to do in fancy by covering the little tender body with powder. Put powder on yourself if you wish, but keep it off the baby. Thousands of mothers endorse SPIM SOAP and SPIM OINTMENT-CREAM. Your grocer or druggist should be able to supply you with both. If not, send 25c for SPIM SOAP and 50c for SPIM OINTMENT-CREAM (stamps taken), and I will send it to you direct from here.
SPIM CO., 55 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N. Y.
Charles B. Knox, manufacturer of the celebrated KNOX'S GELATINE, sole proprietor.
Drop us a postal for "Watch the Baby" booklet. It tells how your baby may win a prize of from $5 to $100—Free.

Why let Baby cry
this hot weather, when it can be kept cool, comfortable and well in a
Glascock's Baby-jumper
ROCKING CHAIR, BED, HIGH CHAIR AND GO-CART COMBINED.
Splendid for "the new baby" and adjustable for it as it grows older. Designed on special hygienic lines beautifully made, very strong. Babies love the gentle motion. A wonderful help in the healthful care of your child. Physicians urge the use of Glascock's Jumper—the standard. Sold with or without Go-Cart attachment. Buy of your dealer, or of us direct, if he hasn't Glascock's Jumper. 30 Days' FREE Trial. Write for catalogue and mother's manual, "The 20th Century Baby" FREE.

Glascock Bros. Mfg. Co.
Box 347, Muncie, Ind.

Learn to Knit
Any one can easily learn by following the clear instructions given in the new Columbia Book of Yarns (6th edition). Begins with the simplest stitches and winds up by telling how to make many beautiful articles shown by photographs of 106 of them. A dollar book, 160 pages, but sold for 15 cents, at dealers' or by mail, to advertise the soft, fine even, elastic COLUMBIA YARNS—the best and cheapest in the world.
Look for the Columbia trade-mark on the label around every skein.
Write to Columbia Yarns, Phila.

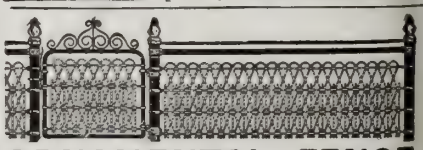
LE PAGE'S GLUE STRONGEST IN THE WORLD
Does not set quickly like the old style glue, and has four times the strength (Official test, 1 in. sq. hard pine butted, registered 1620 lbs. before parting). Used by the best mechanics and mfrs. the world over. Invaluable in household use, for Furniture, China, Ivory, Books, Leather, and wherever a strong adhesive is desired. 1 oz. bottle or collapsible self-sealing tube (retails 10c.) mailed for 12c. if your dealer hasn't our line.
None genuine without This Label.
LE PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE, 2 oz. size retails 5c.; by mail, 10c.
LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE, 2 oz. size retails 5c.; by mail, 10c.
RUSSIA CEMENT CO., 154 Essex Ave., Gloucester, Mass.

THE "BEST" LIGHT
is a portable 100 candle power light, costing only 2cts per week. Makes and burns its own gas. Brighter than electricity or acetyline, and cheaper than kerosene. No Dirt. No Grease. No Odor. Over 100 styles. Lighted instantly with a match. Every lamp warranted.
Agents Wanted Everywhere.
THE BEST LIGHT CO.,
3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, Ohio.



ORNAMENTAL FENCE
Cleverly combining Grace, Strength, and Durability. Moderate in cost. Sold direct to you. Catalogue Free.
Box 302 KITSELMAN BROS., Muncie, Ind.

OUR FREE BOOKLET ON MUSIC LEARNING AT HOME FOR PIANO, ORGAN, VIOLIN, GUITAR, BANJO, CORNET & MANDOLIN.
Tells how you can learn to play any instrument at small expense and without leaving your home. It is free and will interest you. Send your name to
U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 7-E, 19 Union Square, New York

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY
Has just issued these New Editions of the
AMERICAN STANDARD REVISED BIBLE
Send for Illustrated Price-list
Minion Bible, 24mo. . . 22c. 25c. 50c.
Minion New Testament, 32mo. . 8c. 12c.
Minion Testament and Psalms, 32mo. 15c.
Minion Psalms, 32mo. . . . . 5c.
Pulpit Bible, Quarto $8.75
Bibles at Cost for Missionary & Sunday School Work
BIBLE HOUSE, ASTOR PLACE, NEW YORK

LOANED FREE
32 page pamphlets of new and suitable Sacred Songs for Camp Meetings and Evangelistic Services.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

MELLIN'S
For the Baby
FOOD

Many of your neighbors have used Mellin's Food for their children. Ask them what they think of it; look at their children and see the result of using a proper food. Mellin's Food will give the same good results if you will use it with your baby.

Send for a sample, we will send it free of charge.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Banking by Mail
4 per cent interest

When hard-headed, conservative business men send money by mail clear across the continent, and even from the Philippines, Hawaii and Japan, for deposit in this bank, there must be convincing reasons for it. As a matter of fact, we are getting accounts from these far-off places almost daily.

Our booklet F describes our methods and management, and explains the advantage of our simple banking-by-mail system. Write for booklet F to-day.

Assets: Twenty-six million dollars.
49,000 depositors.
Small accounts welcome.

The Cleveland
Trust Company

CLEVELAND OHIO

Thousands of Dollars

have been wasted in Marble headstones now lying flat and overgrown with weeds. Thousands more are being wasted for cleaning, refinishing and repairing Granite monuments. Every stone gets moss-grown, cracks and crumbles.

White Bronze

is good for all time. Moss-growth, cracking and crumbling are impossible.

GOLD AND SILVER MEDALS at the Universal Exposition, St. Louis, 1904.

If interested give approximate sum you can spend and we will send a variety of prices and full information. No obligation to buy. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

Beautiful Designs,

AGENTS WANTED

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

DON'T SHOUT!
"The Morley"

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials.

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E,
34 South 16th St., Philadelphia

STARK FRUIT BOOK
shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's. Louisiana Mo

CLEAN CUT CAKE TIN
FREE TO AGENTS
Flat thin knife cuts loose a perfect cake. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T.
HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

$75 MONTH & EXPENSES POSITION PERMANENT; NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED. SELF SELLER.
PEASE MFG. CO. STA. E CIN. O.

THE RESURRECTION OF MISS CYNTHIA

By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

CHAPTER XIX.—Continued

"You didn't want to see me," suggested Mr. Guffey, showing his white, even teeth in an amused smile. "Well, I am not always preaching, you see. And now won't you tell me how you came to find the heart of Christ's religion? for you have found it. It is to find love and happiness and peace and life, and, having found it, to love one another and be kind. How did you discover this?"

"The doctor told me that I am going to die—soon—next April." Miss Cynthia spoke in a hushed voice, which yet sounded like a cry in her listener's ears. "I had to find—something—I had to! I found—that."

Then, having uncovered her terrible little secret before this stranger, who was still regarding her more kindly and tranquilly than ever, Miss Cynthia burst into tears. "I don't know why I have told you this," she faltered. "I had told no one—I meant to tell no one."

Mr. Guffey made no attempt to stay her weeping. He was wonted to woman's tears. But something in his strong silence presently quieted Miss Cynthia's low sobbing.

She looked up with a wistful smile. "What do you want me to do?" she asked him like a child.

"Would you like to visit the families on the east side of the river, and tell them what you have found, and ask them to come to the meetings? They will need, perhaps, to kneel in those front pews and do those simple, concrete things which help to wake a soul out of its deadening lethargy. Mind you, I do not think these things are religion in themselves; but they sometimes help dull souls to awaken out of sleep. And anything to wake them up, even if it be the brazen blast of a sermon like the one I preached last night. Do you understand me?"

Miss Cynthia was looking sweetly mystified. "I'm afraid I don't—altogether," she said. "But I'm so glad you came to see me. I know most of the women in those houses already. I will go to them right away."

She was searching the evangelist's worn face with anxious eyes. "Do you think—do you believe God will let me live—if I want to very much? Mrs. Pettibone told me——" She stopped short in wordless confusion.

"Christ was the Healer. He is with us always, and always the same, yesterday, to-day and forever," said the evangelist. "I know this much. I can say no more. I wish——" He paused abruptly, his strong features working with some unexplained emotion. "Good-bye," he said gently, "I shall, perhaps, not see you again."

CHAPTER XX.

"WELL, an' what'd that man hev to offer?" demanded Abby Whiton, hastily selecting a hot flat-iron from among the huddled group over the range fire. She faced about with dramatic suddenness and fixed searching eyes upon her mistress.

Miss Cynthia had appeared in the door of the kitchen, dressed for walking. She was paler than her wont, but Abby could detect no evidences of her late disquieting interview with Mr. Guffey upon her placid face.

"I mus' say, I kind o' liked his looks," Miss Whiton added grudgingly. "But you can't never tell about a man, minister er no minister. They're all alike to me, anyhow!" She clashed her iron defiantly, as she eyed the small figure in the doorway.

"He wanted I should go and see the people down by the river," said Miss Cynthia. "I am going now. I came to tell you that I may be late to dinner."

"I heerd him a-tellin' ye that much," Miss Whiton said, unblushingly. "I couldn't reelly make out all that was goin' on betwixt you; you didn't speak loud enough fer me to gether it all. I do b'lieve I'm gittin' deef in m' right ear."

"Oh, Abbey, were you listening?"

"Well, I guess! D'ye s'pose I'm a-goin' to let a strange man int' the house—to pester ye, like es not—an' me out in the kitchen. I'll bet I know which way my dooty lays, es Mis' Buckthorn says. Where'd you fetched up, I'd like to know, f'I hadn't a-be'n right on hand with the camphire when she was lettin' out her spite an' meanness on ye? She calls it the work of the Sperit! It's more like bein' possessed, I sh'd say."

Miss Whiton was evidently laboring under some strong mental excitement, for she set down the over-heated iron in the middle of a damask napkin with an emphasis which left a faint brown print on its snowy surface.

"Well, I guess mebbe it 'll do ye good to git out in th' air," she went on; "it's come off a nice day in spite of everythin'." She proceeded to fold and crease the napkin with scrupulous care, leaving a brown mark on every burnished square. The smell of scorching linen pervaded the air.

"Did—you—hear everything that I—said to Mr. Guffey?" asked Miss Cynthia, with an involuntary shiver of apprehension. "Did you?"

"I didn't hear nothin' 'cept what I told ye jus' now," said Abby gruffly. "I mus' say I think 'twas kind of nervy of him to expect you to go trampin' 'round in the slush after them poor folks. Why in creation don't he go himself, I'd like to know?"

Miss Cynthia drew a deep sigh of relief. "Seems to me I smell something burning," she said hurriedly. "I'm afraid your iron is too hot. I must hurry right along now. Have dinner at two, please. I shan't be hungry before then. Good-bye, Abby."

Abby Whiton continued her work in stony silence till she heard the front door close after her mistress. Then she sank into a chair and threw her apron over her head. "Oh—Lord!" she groaned, "I told her a wicked lie right out. I hed to. I did hear what she told him 'bout dyin' in April. Oh—Lord! what shall I do. Seems 's 'o I couldn't stan' it nohow! 'Tain't right to let her die right now, jus' when everythin' 's comin' her way, an' Jim Blake ready an' anxious to keep stidy comp'ny. What 's the use of it, oh—Lord?"

She sprang up and replenished her fire with a sort of frantic energy. "I've jus' gotta do somethin'!" she cried aloud. "I ain't a-goin' to hev it so. Seems 's 'o' there ought to be some way out of it. The' 's the' promises, an' they're plain readin' right out an' out, with no if's ner but's about 'em." She snatched a worn Bible from its nook on the top pantry shelf and hastily turned over the leaves with moistened thumb.

"There! I don't see how the's any gettin' out o' this. 'Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name; ask and receive that your joy may be full'."

She sank on her knees beside the flour-barrel, spreading the open Bible on top of the pastry-board which covered it. "Now, here I be, an' I'm a-goin' to take ye at your own word,

Copyright, 1905, by Florence Morse Kingsley

CONTINUED ON PAGE 606

SIRE TO SON

Boy Can Sometimes Learn From His Father.

When you catch them young enough you can usually make your sons profit by your own experience.

Afterwards, its different. A lady tells how her son was made to profit by what his father had learned:

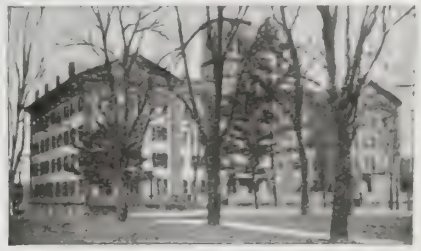
"My husband was always fond of coffee, and after his business took him frequently into a German community he drank it more with the result that his kidneys became affected, and he suffered greatly with pains and despondency, till, as he says, 'coffee nearly killed me.' So he stopped using it, and began to drink Postum Coffee. It relieved him; and in a very short time his kidneys resumed their normal functions, his pains were allayed, and the despondency which had nearly driven him crazy ceased to trouble him.

"My little boy, a year old, had suffered ever since he was weaned, from stomach and bowel troubles. He could not properly digest the milk he drank. It passed out of his bowels in hard lumps, sometimes large and again like small pellets, frequently producing diarrhœa, and then we would have to call in the doctor. But the trouble returned, again and again.

"We used to give him a taste of Postum Coffee occasionally, and as I saw that he relished it and realized how much good it had done his father, I began to put a little in his bottle of milk. The effect was so salutary that I gradually increased the quantity, till at last I used only enough milk to give it color. He thrived wonderfully on it. He is over two years old now, and his digestion is all right. Postum has made him uncommonly large and strong and healthy. I give him a bottle full four times a day." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Read the little book "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.



For Sale at a Great Bargain
At Claverack, near Hudson, N. Y.

The property known as HUDSON RIVER INSTITUTE. It consists of 20 acres of land and two large buildings, containing about 300 rooms. Suitable for Summer Boarding House, School, Sanitarium; or might be used for light manufacturing. Very healthy; good spring water, small lake and gymnasium on premises. Original cost over $75,000; offered for less than $18,000. Terms reasonable. Address John C. Havemeyer, Yonkers, N. Y., or J. F. Havemeyer, 100 Broadway, New York City.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief For
PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all affections of the skin.
Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.
GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

BICYCLES ON TRIAL
for 10 days. We ship on approval to anyone without a cent deposit. Finest guaranteed 1905 Models $10 to $24 with Coaster Brakes & Puncture Proof Tires. 1903 & 1904 Models of best makes $7 to $12
500 Second-Hand Wheels All makes & Models good as new $3 to $8
RIDER AGENTS WANTED in each town at good pay. Write at once for Special Offer on sample bicycle.
TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H-71 CHICAGO

STATE MANAGERS WANTED
By an established Ohio corporation; good salary, office expenses and commissions paid to men of character and ability. References required and given. Address, MANAGER, 176 Ontario Bld'g, Toledo, Ohio.

Four Little Bee Books FREE
All intensely interesting and helpful. Full of new ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them today.
A. I. ROOT COMPANY. Medina, Ohio

MUSIC LESSONS Send for our booklet, it is FREE
It tells how to learn to play any musical instrument, Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, etc. Write today. U. S. School of Music, 19 Manhattan Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 605

O Lord—jus' as I see it set down in this 'ere Bible, right in these two verses of the Gospil 'cordin' to John. I ain't be'n in the habit of pesterin' ye much fer myself. I c'n gen'lly git what I want, 'f I work hard 'nuff, but here 's somethin' I can't do, not ef I was to work my fingers to the bone. I want you should let Miss Cynthy live. I've spoke 'bout it before! but I didn't know then as the' was any danger of her goin' immej'ate. O—Lord, let her live! I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ, I'm a-leanin' hard on this p'ticlar promise," she said. "I c'n see it wouldn't be right fer me to fret an' worry 'bout her after this, an' I ain't a-goin' to—not a minute. I'm a-goin' to begin to fill up on joy. Amen!"

And Miss Cynthia, picking her way daintily along the wet and icy street felt the mighty lift and impulse of this rude petition in an unreasoning gladness which seemed to enfold her like the warm, sweet breath of summer. She even found herself humming a gay little tune as she knocked at the door of one of the shabby little houses which huddled squalidly about the ugly structure known as the tin-can factory.

A sullen-faced woman with a crying baby in her arms opened to her summons. Miss Cynthia, obeying her ungracious gesture of invitation entered the room; a damp, evil-smelling atmosphere charged with boiling soap-suds and sodden food, greeted her on the threshold like the spirit of poverty.

"We're all about done fer here," droned the woman, jerking forward a rickety wooden chair with her one free hand. "This 'ere pesky young'n's cried every minute fer a week; I can't git no rest with him night er day. An' Tim, he's be'n off on one of 'is sprees an' guzzled down every cent of his wages, an' the rent due an' everythin' goin' to the bad. I wish't I was dead an' done with it."

The words flowed from the woman's mouth in a turgid torrent, like the utterances of an insane person. Her thin, bent figure wavered weakly, and her knotted fingers clutched despairingly at the wailing child's dingy clothing.

"Let me take the baby," entreated Miss Cynthia.

The woman dropped her burden with a long breath of relief. "I don' know why he ever was born to be the plague of my life an' his own," she muttered. "I didn't want 'im. The's five more of 'em to feed."

Her glassy eyes filled with sudden tears at sight of Miss Cynthia as she smoothed down the huddled flannels about the infant's red neck. The little creature's wailing cries softened to a fretful murmur under the awkward touch of the gentle hand. "He's just tired, I guess," cooed Miss Cynthia, stroking the downy head. "Poor baby, and you're tired, too, Mrs. Flannery. I'm so sorry."

The woman drew a long, sobbing breath. "I never expect to be anythin' else but tired," she said. "Never anythin' else till I'm a-layin' in m' coffin. That's the on'y place I know of to fin' rest. I wish't to God I was there now!"

"There's one other," Miss Cynthia breathed. "I—I've found it. I had to find it. Will you let me tell you?"

"The's no use in talkin' r'ligion to me—if that's what you mean," the woman said sullenly. "I hate an' d'spise all that pious rot rich folks talk when they comes to see folks in my fix. It makes 'em feel so mighty snug an' comf'table to set in their silk clo'es an' jaw 'bout church-goin' an' prayin'. It makes me sick, I tell ye! Kin God make my husban' quit drinkin', I'd like to know? Kin he give me a decent place to live in, an' decent vic'als to eat, an' any peace to m' life? You know r'ligion ain't any good fer real trouble like mine! It's jest lies!"

The woman's voice rose to a frenzied shriek with the last words. She shook her thin hands above her head with a hoarse, inarticulate cry like that of a suffering animal.

"Could you give me a cup of tea, Mrs. Flannery?" asked Miss Cynthia unexpectedly. "I should like it very much, if it isn't too much trouble. I've had a long walk, and I didn't eat much breakfast."

The woman stared at her in puzzled silence for an instant. Then she rose stiffly and set the kettle over the fire. Two or three untidy children scattered in obvious fright at her approach.

"I don' know as you'll like the kin' of tea I hev to put up with," said the woman, as she set a cracked cup full of steaming liquid on the table. "I ain't got no sugar."

"Thank you, it's very nice," Miss Cynthia told her, as she began sipping the hot tea from the discolored spoon. "Won't you have some, too?"

The tired baby had fallen asleep, and Miss Cynthia had laid him in his cradle. Seeing this a faint glimmer of something like a smile flitted over the woman's worn face, as she poured a second cup of tea.

"I d'clare to goodness, you'd ought to be merried an' hev young'n's of yer own; you've got sech a way with 'em."

"I—I hope I believe God will give me a—baby to take care of some day. I should dearly love it." Miss Cynthia's face burned with desperate blushes, but she looked bravely into the startled eyes which stared into her's.

"You b'lieve God 'll give it to ye?"

"Yes!" said Miss Cynthia firmly. "God wants to give us what we want—He wants to!"

"He don't want to give me nothin'. I don't git nothin', anyhow."

"Did you ever ask God for anything, and—and expect it?"

The woman was silent for a full minute. "I don' know as I ever did," she admitted sullenly. "But if I was God I wouldn't wait fer folks to ask. I'd give 'em what I see they needed—an' a plenty of it."

"I asked you for the tea; should you have given it to me if I hadn't asked you?"

The woman threw up her hands. "God ain't like me!" she shrilled.

TO BE CONTINUED

The Heavenly Home*

WHEN a person intends changing his place of abode, he gathers his effects together in a shape convenient for moving. He sells, or gives away, articles he will not be likely to need in his new home. He discontinues adding this or that arrangement for his comfort, and does not devise new methods of increasing his conveniences. He is going away, and it is not worth while making provision for his ease in the home he is quitting. It will be a new life under new conditions, and it will call for new apparatus. If it is in a cold climate, he gets ready his furs and warm clothing; if it is in the tropics, he procures light clothing, and means of protection from the sun. If in a foreign country, he learns the language of the inhabitants. If he will have to perform new duties, he tries to familiarize himself with them before he undertakes them. It is a break in life, old things are passing away and all will be new. How helpful in such circumstances is a talk with someone who has lived there, or to read a book describing that new life on which he is about to enter. There is more hope of future comfort and happiness, if he knows beforehand what he will need, and what are to be the conditions of his life. All the more important is this knowledge if his stay is likely to be permanent; if he is never to return to his present life, but to live always in the home to which he is going. The interval before his departure may be uncomfortable, or the reverse; but it does not weigh with him; it will soon be over. The thing that does concern him is, that he may be well prepared for the new home and for his life there. If that interval is of uncertain duration, if he is to depart on the receipt of a summons that may come at any moment, he will take care, if he is a prudent man, to be always in a state of readiness, and that he makes no engagements that he may not be able to keep. He will make up all quarrels, settle all obligations, and arrange all his affairs.

That is the course of the prudent man, liable to quit his old home for a new one; yet how few make that preparation for leaving this life for an eternal home! Christ tells us all that we can know about that home, but we do not study his words; the Bible is the chart of the way, but we do not seek to understand it. We are immersed in business; our thoughts are occupied with profits and losses; we are worried and distressed about the concerns of our present life; we fret and mourn over disappointments and annoyances, and seldom give a thought to the home to which we are going. We forget that the concerns of this life are ephemeral, while the concerns of that life are eternal.

It is not the details of that life that we need speculate upon. We shall be satisfied, and that is all that we need know. But how to be prepared for it is the all important question. The rule is simple and plain. To do well, and as in God's sight, the duties of this life, is the one all-embracing direction. He that used the five talents wisely, was rewarded with the rule of five cities. The life there must be very different from the life here, but the connecting link is the fulfilment of responsibility here, being rewarded by honor there. It is not by service, nor by labor, that entrance to that heavenly abode is won. The only door is Christ himself. Not by anything we have done, can we claim to enter there; but the portal once passed, the lives we have lived here, become the gauge of our position. "In my Father's house are many mansions," said Christ, and we may be sure that one star will differ from another star in glory. He that has had most of the spirit of Christ, he that has filled well the opportunities of his position, he that has been the most forgiving, the most patient, helpful, merciful, kind and pure, will shine with a lustre that men who have held conspicuous positions cannot attain. It is character that tells and character only. Our Model is before us; to be like him, to be ever striving to attain that eminence is the way to honor in heaven.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for July 23. Preparation for the heavenly home. Phil. 3: 20-21. Heb. 11: 8-16.

WANTED TO SLEEP

Curious That a Tired Preacher Shou Have Such Desire.

A minister speaks of the curious effect Grape-Nuts food on him and how it h relieved him.

"You will doubtless understand how t suffering with indigestion with which I us to be troubled made my work an alm unendurable burden, and why it was that af my Sabbath duties had been performed, sle was a stranger to my pillow till nearly da light.

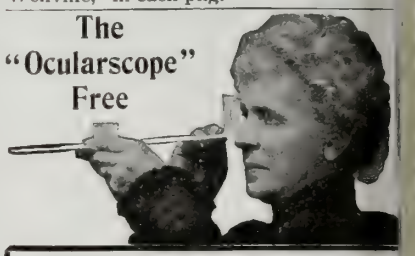
"I had to be very careful as to what I a and even with all my care I experienc poignant physical distress after meals, a my food never satisfied me.

"Six months have elapsed since I began use Grape-Nuts food, and the benefits I ha derived from it are very definite. I no long suffer from indigestion, and I began to i prove from the time Grape-Nuts appeared our table. I find that by eating a dish of after my Sabbath work is done (and I alwa do so now), my nerves are quieted and r and refreshing sleep are ensured me. I f that I could not possibly do without Gra Nuts food, now that I know its value. It invariably on our table—we feel that we ne it to complete the meal—and our childr will eat Grape-Nuts when they cannot persuaded to touch anything else." Na given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Read the famous little book, "The Road Wellville," in each pkg.

The "Ocularscope" Free



Get Your Glasses at Wholesale

Examine your own eyes without an oculist Send for our "Ocularscope," the latest inven tion of the 20th century. Sent Free, with our beautiful Illustrated Catalogue of spectacles and eye glasses. Mail order only. Send to-day.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS
402 Houseman Building, Grand Rapids, Mich.

FENCE Stronges Made

See how closely it is woven. Sol direct to the farmer at factor prices, on 30 Days Free Tria Your money back if not satisfie Write today for free Catalogu

COILED SPRING FENCE COMPAN
Box 47, Winchester, Indian

St. Paul Minneapolis Duluth

There are four magnificent fast daily trains via the Chicago & North-Western Railway from Chicago to St. Paul and Minneapolis and two to Superior and Duluth, including the famous electric-lighted North-Western Limited to St. Paul and Minneapolis, and the electric-lighted Duluth-Superior Limited to the Head-of-the-Lakes.

$16.00

Round-trip summer tourist tickets on sale daily from Chicago at the rate of $16.00 round trip to St. Paul and Minneapolis, and $20.00 round trip to Superior and Duluth, with correspondingly low rates from all points.

All agents sell tickets via this line.

W. B. KNISKERN,
Passenger Traffic Manager,
CHICAGO.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

NW846

UNIVERSAL INVITATION

By MRS. M. BAXTER

"HO, everyone that thirsteth come ye." It is when men see, and feel, and he something of the love and joy and puty of heaven in God's children, that the grow thirsty. Thirst is not the only condition on which the living water may be iven. He who would receive it must no only bring no price with him; he must be benniless. "He that hath no money alce may come, buy and eat; yea, come, bu wine and milk, without money, and wi out price." This is the great stumblig-block with so many. "I have been tryg so hard to please God; I have pred so much, have been a regular atterant at my church so many years, I ha taught in the school," etc., etc. All thigoes for nothing as purchase money. Th cannot put away sin, and cannot recmmend us to God. The gift he has to ive is of such priceless worth, that the wle wealth of the world would not buy it. Therefore it is an insult to offer unto Go any payment for it. "I am a great Kig, saith the Lord of hosts" (Mal. 1:14). Su a King can give, but cannot sell: the who have to do with him must learn to ccept what he gives gratuitously, and remain under eternal obligation to him.

"Wherefore do ye spend money for that wh is not bread? and your labor for th which satisfieth not?" How many the are who pride themselves on their hosty and truthfulness, their benevolece and their attention to religious duti Nothing can make these people see thr need until the Spirit of God awakens thh, when they see him in the lives and wds and presence of those whom he fills an dwells in (John 16:7-8). All the efts to commend ourselves to God; all th time, strength, money, thus spent, is spding money for that which is not brad, and our labor for that which satisfth not. Nothing that we can do can uo one sin of the past; nothing that we can do can make us to be born again. Our labor can never satisfy God, and self-satisfaction must break down at the awful judgment throne which demands: "Is this name written in the Lamb's book of life?"

What shall we do, then? Simply give up and listen. "Hearken diligently unto me," says one who points to him who has undertaken the case of all who come to the end of their own efforts, and their own hopes. "Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good; and let your soul delight itself in fatness." It is a call to the weary, helpless, hopeless sinner, to let himself go, just as he is, into the hands of one who guarantees to carry his case through, right up to the judgment seat. But he requires an eye steadily fixed on him, and an ear attentive to him. "Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live." Drop all conceit in your own attempts to be good; they have not answered; not one sin has been thus forgiven, not one answer to prayer has come out of all this. It has been a religion all on one side—your side; and God has had nothing to do with it. "I kept silence," he says (Ps. 1:21). You have no proof that God has accepted anything at your hand. He cannot until you drop your self-dependence and set a value upon him, God's own Son, who has suffered the penalty for you. Listen to Jesus; look, believe. "Behold, I have given him that you may not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:6).

There are special times of God's mercy. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call upon him while he is near." It is true, indeed, that God is always "nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as are of a contrite spirit" (Ps. 34:18). And just now there is a special softening of hearts, like the soil when the frosts break up, and the moisture has not dried in the summer sun.

A Visit to the Garden of Eden

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 595

resters more than 120 degrees in the shde, the people, dressed in almost the pmitive costume of Adam and Eve, loiter th days away in the perpetual deep shlow. There, too, bananas, figs, oranges ar grapes grow, the castor oil plant flrishes, and if nature had not so bountilly provided for the needs of the peopl the vegetable seed which they might so would yield abundantly. Herodotus, th Greek historian, fearing that his reader would not believe him, refused to spak of the fertility of Babylonia. Only thse who live among the date groves can abreciate the appropriateness of the spot fo primitive, unprotected man.

The occupations of the inhabitants of Kurna do not show a great advancement in civilization. Most of them live by gthering the food which nature has proved; some, more industrious, fish in the rers, but according to the law, the fish wich their nets most frequently enclose isforbidden them as food; a few still more industrious, evaporate the salt from the wter of the great marshes to the north, all sell it to the merchants who pass up all down the river, and a few others are owners of the small sailing boats which bng the licorice and the wool from the dert to the ocean-going boats at Busreh.

About thirty feet from the eastern shore of the Tigris, stands a rapidly-growing lust tree. Its trunk is now about two fet in diameter, and its height about tirty-five feet. The people of Kourna state that a few years ago, a large, holly tree of the same variety stood at the dry edge of the water, and as the river bore away the dirt from its roots it fell into the stream and disappeared. No sooner had it gone, than from the place where it stood another tree sprang up. When the young tree shall be old, it, too, will suddenly renew its youth, as others have always done since Adam and Eve were in the Garden. This, so the Arabs say, is the Tree of Knowledge of good and evil, the tree about whose trunk the serpent coiled when it beguiled the mother of mankind to eat its fruit.

I sent one of the soldiers of my guard up the tree to pick me some leaves. They resemble those of the ordinary locust; its fruit is the usual bean, encased in the long, broad pod.

Before leaving the Garden of Eden, it seemed proper to pay my respects to the Kaimakam, the chief of the local authorities. Although it was late at night, I found him seated with his companions about a table, freely imbibing from a bottle of arrack before him. The arrack, he explained, was made from the dates of the village, and during the dinner, its effects upon the Turk showed it to be almost as poisonous as the fruit which the serpent gave Eve.

At midnight I stood for a few moments beneath the Tree of Knowledge, while the men were preparing the boat. In the bright moonlight, the view of the tall palms overtowering the luxuriant vegetation, and casting their shadows upon the huts of the sleeping Arabs, was enchanting. The waters of the Tigris to the left, and of the Euphrates to the right, were flowing silently down and, mingling together, disappeared in the broader river below.

The boat was ready, and, stepping into it, we floated down the moon-lit Shatt el-Arab, still pondering over the old, old question of the Garden of Eden.

AN UNUSUAL BOND

with Federal and State Supervision, and Corporate Responsibility

We own and offer $300,000 First Mortgage Bonds, paying 6% interest.

The denominations are $100, $500 and $1,000. Principal and semi-annual interest January and July payable at the American Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago, and the First National Bank, Boston.

The maturities are $30,000 a year, beginning July 1, 1907, to July 1, 1916.

The character and business standing of the issuing corporation is of the highest.

Upon each bond is printed a copy of the Certificate of legality of the Attorney General of the State in which it is issued.

The conservatively appraised value of the property securing the mortgage-liens deposited with the Trustee to secure this issue, is three-and-three-fourths times the amount of the bonds.

The Trust-Deed requires that the ratio of deposit of mortgage liens of one-and-one-half times the amount of the bonds shall be maintained with the Trustee until all of the bonds mature.

This is a desirable investment bond for executors and trustees of estates who desire the largest income consistent with absolute safety

SIX PER CENT BONDS AT PAR

The American Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago, as Trustee, holds $1,500 of security for every $1,000 of bonds in this issue.

An exceptional opportunity for Savings Bank depositors to exchange a portion of their 3% and 4% savings into a conservative 6% bond, as $15,000 of the bonds maturing in 1915 are $100 denomination.

Prospectus and full information will be forwarded upon application to our nearest office.

Trowbridge & Niver Co.

Municipal and Corporation BONDS

First National Bank Bldg., CHICAGO — 60 State Street, BOSTON

References. Dun's or Bradstreet's Commercial Agencies, or to any Chicago Bank

PLEASE RETURN THIS COUPON TO-DAY. PROPERLY FILLED

C. H. COUPON

TROWBRIDGE & NIVER CO.

First Nat Bank Bldg., Chicago. or, 60 State Street, Boston. Please send circulars describing Six Per Cent Bonds at Par, to NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

BARRELS OF AIR BURNED

For Cooking and Heating. New Wonderful Stove.

HARRISON'S VALVELESS, WICKLESS, AUTOMATIC AIR AND OIL-GAS BURNER.

395 barrels of air consumed with one gallon of kerosene oil. Wood and coal cost money—air costs nothing. You can't burn air alone, but with a large spoon full of oil we use about a barrel of air.

Turn knob, touch match, fire's on. Turn again, fire's off. That's all.

Cheap, simple, easily operated, economical, absolutely safe.

BIG MONEY MAKER

$125 to $250 per month. Want Agents, Salesmen, Managers in every State and county. Men or women at home or traveling, all or part time, showing, taking orders, appointing agents. Enormous demand the year round. Customers delighted. Everybody buys. Taking the place of all other stoves. New, patented, just out. Nothing else like it. Write today for Catalogue, Special Offer, and our New Plan.

NO WICK, VALVES, DIRT, ASHES, SMOKE, HOT OR FIERY KITCHENS. Summer Kitchen Work A Pleasure. Splendid for baking, roasting, cooking, froning, fruit canning, picnics, camping, and for heating houses, stores, rooms, etc., with Radiating Attachment. No dangerous Gasoline—no wood and coal bills. Will not explode. Lasts ten years. Handsomely made. All sizes, prices $3.00 and up. Write for free Catalogue and Special Offer. Write today for New Plan.

WORLD MANUFACTURING CO., 6013 World Building, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

POND'S EXTRACT

THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR

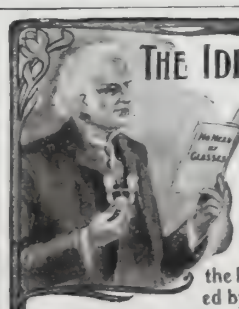
INFLAMMATION

is quickly reduced by applying cloths wet with hot Pond's Extract to the inflamed parts.

Witch Hazel is not the same thing. On analysis of seventy samples of Witch Hazel—so often offered as "just as good"—fifty two were found to contain wood alcohol or formaldehyde or both. To avoid danger of poisoning insist on having

THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR

POND'S EXTRACT



THE IDEAL SIGHT RESTORER

Is Your Sight Failing?

All refractive errors, muscular trouble and chronic diseases of the Eye successfully treated by scientific MASSAGE.

Illustrated treatise with affidavit testimonials free. Address

THE IDEAL COMPANY, 239 Broadway, New York.

SUMMER HOMES IN GREEN HILLS OF Vermont and Lake Champlain

Terms, $4 to $10 per week.

New trains between Boston, New York, Springfield and Vermont points. As good as any on the continent. 150-page illustrated brochure mailed free on receipt of 6c. in stamps or postage.

Address A. W. ECCLESTONE, So. Pass. Agent, 385 Broadway, New York City.

BOMOSA COFFEE

BIG INCOMES

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK

... Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. ... Mr. P. B., care of

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO

P. O. Box 289 31-33 Vesey St., New York

Libby's

(Natural Flavor)

Food Products

Celebrated for Goodness, Wholesomeness and Purity

Libby's (Natural Flavor) Food Products are used with constantly increasing favor at home and abroad. The whole world appreciates the great merits of Libby's products. Made by expert chefs in Libby's famous kitchens.

Potted Ham	Lunch Tongues	Ham Loaf
Boneless Chicken	Pork and Beans	Ox Tongues
Vienna Sausage	Veal Loaf	Peerless Dried Beef

At all Grocer's. Insist upon Libby's.

Our booklet "Good Things to Eat" sent free upon request. Send five 2-cent stamps for Libby's Big Atlas of the World

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago

CHRISTIAN HERALD

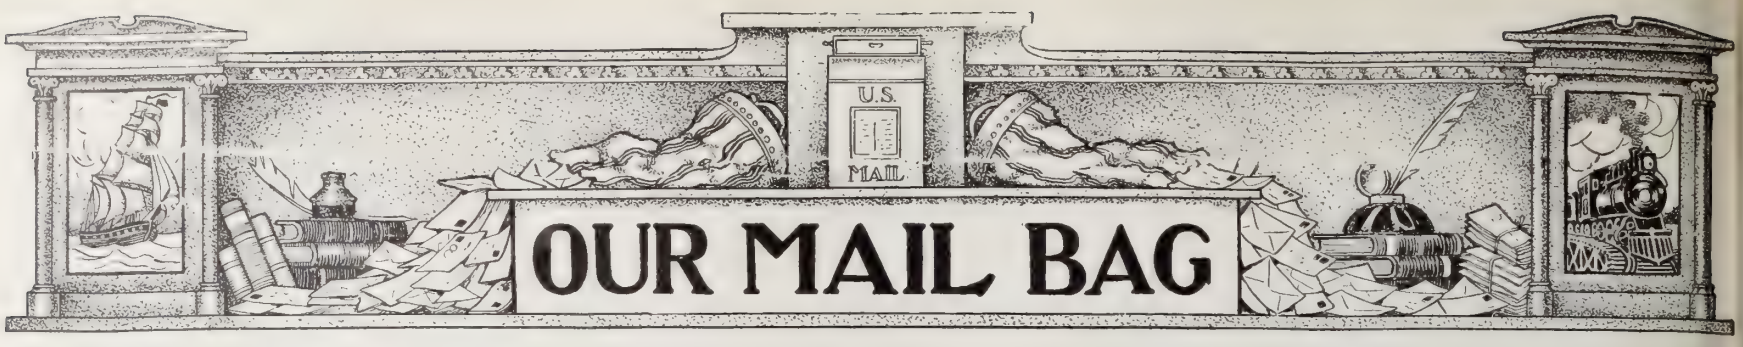
SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, JULY 19, 1905

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH
VOL. 28—NO. 29. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

The "Fourth" at Mont-Lawn---Hon. Jacob Riis Addressing the Gathering on the Lawn

On the same day the Children's Temple was Dedicated—The upper photograph shows the procession marching to the Temple



OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

A. M., Lockport, Ont., Can. Why is the Lord's Supper called "Communion"?

The word "Communion" is applied to the celebration of the Lord's Supper as an act of fellowship among Christians (see I. Cor. 10: 16). It means the joint participation, in a spiritual sense, of the holy sacrament. The word "excommunication," which means exclusion from Christian fellowship and its privileges, specially refers to exclusion from the highest of all privileges, i.e., the Lord's Supper. "Close" or "strict communion" is where only members of the same denomination are admitted to the table; "open communion," where all who apply are welcomed.

A. S., Salem, N. J. I have read about Mr. Jacob Riis and his philanthropic work. Is he a native of New York?

Mr. Jacob Riis was born in Ribe, Denmark, May 3, 1849. His father's name was Niels Edward Riis. Jacob came to New York, soon after joining the staff of a newspaper as a reporter. In a series of vivid and impressive articles, he called attention to the needs and struggles of the poor in America's metropolis. His best known book, How the Other Half Lives, was received with much interest, awakening philanthropy to a sense of its duty to the poor and unfortunate in great cities.

Wm. W. K., Glendale, Mass. Can you give me the meaning of the word "Peschito," as relating to an ancient version of the Bible?

Peschito, or peshito, is the old Syriac version of the Scriptures made about 200 A.D.

This is an echo—a type of many others now coming to hand—of the "Fourth" at Mont-Lawn, when our Children's Temple was dedicated. As many of our readers are contributors to the Fresh-Air work, we feel justified in printing the extract, to show how others regard the benevolence in which those readers are engaged:

Just a line or two to thank you again for urging me to be at Mont-Lawn on the "Fourth." I cannot recall a Fourth of July when I enjoyed myself as much. What a blessed work Dr. Klopsch, yourself, and all your coadjutors and contributors in that work are doing. I shall hereafter sound the praises of Mont-Lawn wherever I go. No wonder that all of you are so happy. You have learned the secret of real happiness, viz., in doing good to others, especially Christ's little needy ones. And what a glorious reward awaits you all hereafter, when he shall say unto you, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto these my little ones, you have done it unto me." WILLIAM JAMES.

South Norwalk, Conn.

Stephen G., Albany, N. Y. Can you give me the name of the author of a book called "Ida May"?

Ida May was written by Mrs. Mary Hayden Pike, of Eastport, Me. You would be likely to find the book in a second-hand store, as it was published long ago.

Schoolgirl, Chicago, Ill. What plant is called "The Shepherd's Weather Glass," and why?

A beautiful field annual, the pimpernel, is called the shepherd's or poor man's weather-glass, from the fact that its flowers do not open in rainy weather.

Mrs. S. P. W., Calif. Please tell me by what denomination is THE CHRISTIAN HERALD published?

It is an interdenominational religious family weekly, and has on its editorial staff members who are Methodist, Baptist, Episcopalian and Presbyterian, and among its regular contributors are writers who represent practically every denomination and branch of the great Protestant Church.

T. O., Orange. Is the East Indian cheetah a member of the leopard family?

Cheetah is the East Indian name for both the ordinary leopard and the hunting leopard.

A reader sends to THE MAIL-BAG the "two sides" of a bit of proverbial philosophy that is becoming very well known. He writes:

PRECEPT VERSUS PRACTICE:

There is so much that is bad in the best of us,
And so much good in the worst of us,
It hardly behooves any of us
To talk about the rest of us.

This is very good in theory; now let us look at our practice:

Seek out all the bad in the best of us,
Take no note of the good in the worst of us,
And make it the duty of all of us
To make public the bad in the best of us.

Ivar Moltke-Hansen, sends us a Norwegian view of the Swedish-Norwegian crisis:

Prominent students of international law uphold that Norway as a sovereign State must demand an established influence in foreign affairs—diplomatic and consular—relating to the (formerly) united kingdoms of Norway and Sweden. Norway has never been Danish territory, but all Danish-Norwegian kings claimed Norway as their kingdom by birthright, while, on the other hand, Denmark elected its king among the royal princes and was not necessarily bound to the king's oldest son. Norway and Sweden were never "united under one crown," but under one king, who was twice crowned in Sweden as Swedish king, and in the old cathedral of Trondhjem, as king of Norway. Norway never asked for a separate minister of foreign affairs for Norway, leaving the arrangement of diplomatic matters to future negotiations between the two governments, the unsatisfactory existing conditions being admitted by Swedes as well as Norwegians. It is generally known that King Oscar, in vetoing the Norwegian consular bill, was strongly influenced by Crown Prince Gustaf. There seems room for doubting the wisdom of this advice, introducing as the veto did, czardom for constitutional government, violating the spirit, if not the letter, of the government of the Norwegian people in Norway. As Russia governed Finland, thus would Swedish bureaucrats govern Norway, much against Abraham Lincoln's great doctrine: "No man is good enough to rule or govern another man against his will." Norway never wished to intrude on Swedish self-government, but as a sovereign State Norway desired to take full responsibility for, as she shared in the expenses of, the management of the foreign affairs of the United kingdoms.

Norway never had any secret arrangements with Russia, but the house of Bernadotte on the Swedish throne is greatly indebted to the Romanoffs for their being maintained and tolerated on the throne of Sweden. And Norway never voluntarily gives up any harbor, nor even one square foot of Norwegian territory, either to Russia, nor to Sweden.

With Prince Waldemar of Denmark as Norwegian king, Norway would be as closely allied with Russia and England as is Sweden, as the Bernadottes are twice intermarried with the Danish royal family, with their Russian and British family connections.

Norway was never conquered in war, neither by Sweden in 1814, nor at any other time. Norway prefers to live in peace and good understanding with her neighbors.

At this season of outings and of great teachers' gatherings, where all sorts of schools are represented, it may interest many to know that the highest school in the country (according to a letter just received from E. O. Guerrant, of Wilmore, Ky.) is a day school and Sunday School, situated right under the nose of Old Smoky Peak, on the Cooke County, Tenn., 4,000 feet above sea level. Lowry Davis, Tampa, Tenn., will answer all inquiries concerning this school, which is a pioneer institution and in need of help.

C. H., Sebaka, Minn. What is the origin of the term, "Yankee"?

It is a corruption of the word "English." The Indians called the English Anglais, Yengees, Yenghis, and Yanghis (Yankees).

J. E. W., Denning, Ark. 1. Please give the vowel sound in "Smoot"? 2. How many members of Congress from Utah? 3. Will action against Smoot affect any other member?

1. It is pronounced long "oo" as in good. 2. Utah is entitled to two Senators and one Representative-at-large. 3. Not if he is a non-Mormon or independent. If an avowed Mormon, he would very likely be affected by Smoot's expulsion.

S. B. E., Hamilton, Ont., Can. Would you kindly tell me if the works of Scott, Dickens, Ballantyne and Henty exert a harmful influence over young people? A friend informs me that they are all nonsense and are not worth reading.

On the contrary, the first two, at least, are standard literature. There is nothing hurtful in any of the four, but much that is delightful and inspiring, and the general influence is unquestionably good. The man who would exclude from our general literature all works of the imagination is a very doubtful judge.

Mrs. J. W. Reid, Somerset, Nova Scotia, sends us these appreciative verses:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD comes to me,
A welcome guest from o'er the sea;
Sent by a generous, Christian friend.
Its weekly visits do not end,
As many Christmas presents do,
But just keep on the whole year through,
To pass the resting hours away,
And cheer our toil from day to day
With messages both good and true,
With some things old and some things new,
With news of other land and clime,
And thoughts and messages sublime,
And books, whose gems and words, if told,
Were more than worth their weight in gold.
From authors old and authors new,
From authors dead and living too.

Corona, L. I. When and where was Rev. William Henry Milburn, the blind chaplain of the Senate, born, and when did he die?

He was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 26, 1823. He died April 11, 1903.

R. D., Reading, Mass. What is the meaning of the expression "John o' Groat's house"?

John o' Groat's house was in Caithness, Scotland, and, the legend says, had eight doors and windows, and an eight-sided table, to prevent trouble among the eight members of the family. It is often used to designate the northern point of Great Britain, as, "From Land's End to John o' Groat's."

THE "CHILDREN'S TEMPLE" AT MONT-LAWN, NYACK, N. Y.

Foundation-stone laid July 4, 1904; Building dedicated July 4, 1905. For full account of the Dedication Ceremonies, see pages 618, 619 and 620 of this issue.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. R. W. H. By-sickle (accent on "by").

David J., Aurora, Can. Thanks for good wishes.

Mark B., East Palestine, O. The 20th of October, 1867, was a Sunday.

Mrs. N. H., Willow, Okla. Write to Tiffany & Co., jewelers, New York.

C. M. M., Bridgeport, Conn. Thanks for your kind and appreciative letter.

Reader, Seattle, Wash. Write to Matron, Old Ladies' Home, Wissinoming, Philadelphia.

Reader, Jersey City, N. J. The Gould essay prizes, we believe, were awarded several months ago.

Walter E. P., Havelock, Neb. The popular national air is "The Star Spangled Banner"; the national hymn is "America."

Reader, W. Charleston, Vt. We have no means of answering your question; besides, it has no special bearing upon the particular subject at issue.

Inquirer, Pittsburg, Pa. Rev. J. B. Ely is Superintendent of the Evangelistic Committee of Greater New York. Address him at No. 541 Lexington Avenue, New York.

Reader. You can send the Gospels to the soldiers in the armies of Russia and Japan, through the International Y. M. C. A., New York City, which is conducting that work at the present time.

Reader, Chester, Conn. You should call, by all means. You are not responsible for unfounded gossip, and should not give it even the color of truth by staying away. Act as if nothing had happened.

Mrs. E. A. W., of Cheney, Minn., the sender of six coupon subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is an old subscriber of this paper. She is now in her eighty-sixth year, and for the last five months has been confined to her room.

C. W., Sanford, Me. The principal agencies that lead to the downfall of the class in question are: 1. Bad companions; 2. Vicious amusements (especially dancing) and late hours; 3. Love of dress; 4. Lack of proper fundamental religious training in the home. Poverty may sometimes be a cause but not often.

George W., Baltimore. It is not a religion but a "cult," and its subtle sophistries are appreciated most by the educated class. The fact of cures being accomplished is not necessarily a test of religion. Cures are wrought by mental science, auto-suggestion, hypnotism, etc., and there is no pretence of religion in these.

The Women's Campaign

(From The Salt Lake Tribune)

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD continues its magnificent labor among the women of this country, to secure from them an appeal to the Senate of the United States, to declare vacant the seat in the Senate, of Reed Smoot, Apostle of the Mormon Church.

In its issue of June 28th, it gives the portraits of leaders of the movement, accompanied by an article descriptive of their work. The women most prominent are Mrs. Frederic Schoff, Mrs. Darwin R. James, Mrs. Thomas W. Birney, Mrs. Elizabeth Dye Ellis, and Mrs. David O. Mears. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD promises to give the latest information from week to week concerning the progress of this woman's campaign.

The women of the United States are growing to thoroughly understand the issue which is involved. They are not signing this Memorial ignorantly; they are not actuated by prejudice; there is no animation of hate in their labor. They base their petition to the Senate upon well-defined grounds:

Reed Smoot, as an apostle to the Mormon Church (under the present teaching of the hierarchy, of which he is a voting part), can not give, and does not give, his first earthly allegiance to the United States Government.

Reed Smoot, as an apostle of the Mormon Church (under the present practices of the hierarchy, of which he is a voting part), sustains the restoration of polygamy as a cardinal tenet to be observed in fact. He thereby joins in violation of the law and the Constitution of the State of Utah, and in the violation of the compact by which Utah was admitted to the Union.

His case is in no essential respect different from that of B. H. Roberts, who was expelled from the United States House of Representatives, without being permitted to take the oath. B. H. Roberts himself practised polygamy. Reed Smoot is accessory to the practice of polygamy by others; he votes to sustain as rulers of the community the men who live in polygamy; he votes to pay salaries to them; he makes no effort to purge the hierarchy of the crime. He is the ecclesiastical superior of Roberts; and he maintains Roberts in power. To the full extent that Mr. Roberts was a party to treasonable teaching in the church, Mr. Smoot is also a party.

If Smoot is entitled to retain his seat in the Senate, then any man who may be openly plotting for a destruction of the United States Government, if elected by secessionists or anarchists, would be equally entitled to hold his place, and from that position of power, make his attacks upon the sacred institutions of freedom.

NEW YORK, JULY 19, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

A FARMHOUSE IN LADAK, TIBET (PRAYER FLAGS ON THE ROOF)

A LHA TO (ALTAR) ERECTED TO SOME PETTY LOCAL DIVINITY

AMONG TIBET'S DEMON-WORSHIPERS

A Glimpse of Social and Religious Life and Customs in the "Roof of the World"

HOW can I describe this country—a kind of "dormer-window," as it were, in the roof of the world? A country of high, bare mountains and narrow valleys; mountains running up to 18,000 and 20,000 feet or more; valleys, the lowest of which is 8,000 or 9,000 feet above sea level; valleys through which the upper waters of great rivers—the Indus, the Chenab, the Sutlej—have for countless ages been slowly cutting their way, till now they lie in gorges hundreds of feet below the level of the valley itself.

Here, in Ladak, both mountains and valleys are bare, except where they have been artificially watered in the neighborhood of villages. Very little rain falls here, so we are entirely dependent on the melting snow for water supply and, strange as it may sound, though high up in the world, our snowfall is comparatively slight.

The lower slopes of the Western Himalayas seem to catch nearly all the clouds and very few reach us "window in the roof." This clear air has its powerful influence on the temperature, too. The thermometer in the sun in summer may register 150 degrees or more, whilst in the winter nights there may be nearly 50 degrees of frost, that is to say, the difference between our extremes of temperature may be greater than that between boiling and ice-cold water. It is common within twelve hours to see the thermometer in the open drop 100 degrees. This, added to the height (Leh is 11,600 feet high), naturally has an effect the reverse of healthful on the constitution of Europeans who live here for any length of time.

Hard toil was necessary to win these poor fields from the hill slope; constant labor is needed to make them productive. To each field a little water-course is led, and these all join the main water-course, sometimes brought for miles round precipices and over gullies, in channels which are in themselves no small feats of engineering.

Each farmer cannot get as much water as he would like—there is seldom enough for that—but each gets it in turn, sometimes once a week, or once a fortnight, or even more seldom. In some villages the fields can only get water three or four times from seed time to harvest. And when the farmer gets the water from his field he must carefully conduct it all over, so that each tiny blade of corn gets its share. Truly, farming in Ladak is not easy work.

What about the people? As a rule, they are a good-natured, light-hearted folk, making the most of their few pleasures and always ready for a good laugh. They are dirty—very dirty—and it is generally asserted by travelers that the Tibetan never washes himself. This is not strictly correct, but still ablutions are few and far between. The religion of the country is generally said to be Buddhism or "Lamaistic Buddhism." This is little more than a name, for though the ritual is largely Buddhist, the people know little or nothing of Gautama the Buddha, and are demon-worshipers pure and simple. In their idea there are demons everywhere—in wood and plain, in the valley and on top of the hill, and these must all be propitiated by erecting altars and saying charms. The lamas or priests are verily blind leaders of the blind, for in many respects they are more degraded than the laity. They are generally very ignorant, and many cannot even read and write. Others know enough to be able to gabble over the sacred books; but the vast majority of these have very little idea of the meaning of what they read, and a really educated, intelligent lama is a rarity. The lamas form a very considerable part of the population, for, as a rule, from each house one man becomes a lama, and as they seldom do much manual work, they must be supported entirely by the faithful, and so form a great burden on the country. Many of these lamas are terribly licentious, and many of the monasteries are simply hotbeds of immorality and wickedness of all kinds.

A LAMA, OR PRIEST, OF WESTERN TIBET

(This, with the other photographs, was specially taken for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD)

In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for June 8, 1904, I already have given a short account of the Moravian Mission in Western Tibet. To those who look only at the statistics of Missions, the work of the last half century will appear to have been largely in vain; for the total number of native Christians in this field is only about 140. But we believe that God, who looks beneath the surface and who counts hearts and lives, not heads alone, knows of a much greater harvest from the seed sown than we have any idea of. When one hears of a man dying still a Buddhist in name, but desiring his son to be brought up a Christian, of a Mussulman wishing the doctor to pray by his deathbed, it is evident that the above figures do not represent the full effect of the work.

Jesus died for the Tibetans, too. Who will help us to tell them so?

DR. E. SHAWE.

Missionary, Leh, Tibet.

A LADAK VILLAGE

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY

Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

THE COMING CHRIST

TEXT: MATT. 24: 27

"As the lightning cometh out of the east"

THE misfortune of being terrorized by the lightnings has never come to me. Some of the bravest and noblest men and women tremble like an aspen leaf shaken in the rough grasp of the wind whenever the lightnings flash and the thunders growl, because, years ago, they have lived through some awful horror of an electric storm. They can never come out from under the shadow of that danger. Like Paul on the road to Damascus, blinded and dazed they were flung into the dirt by an electric thunderbolt, or by it they had their homes shattered and burned, or they had a dear loved one killed by their side. To be frightened by a storm under such circumstances, is not necessarily to be cowardly.

Yes, the lightning is glorious if you have never never been frightened by the touch of its fingers of fire. It has always been to me a glorious spectacle. I am thrilled by its grandeur as I draw for you the symbol of "The Coming Christ" in "the lightning which cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west."

A Glorious Spectacle

Christ's second advent, in the first place, shall be a glorious spectacle. He shall come, not as a babe, to be born in a stable and cradled in a stone crib. He shall come, not as a fugitive in his mother's arms upon the back of an humble beast of burden, fleeing into Egypt. He shall come, not as a carpenter, with the soiled garments of toil. He shall come, not as an outcast, a condemned culprit, staggering towards Calvary's heights, under the oppressive weight of the cross upon which he has to be crucified. But he shall come in all the splendor of the kings of old. The glittering spears shall be by his side. The burnished helmets and the flashing shields and the waving swords shall be reflecting the lights of his millennial approach. The white steeds of victory then shall be champing their bits and stamping their golden hoofs. The rumbling wheels of myriads of chariots and the vociferating cheers of the charioteers and horsemen shall be making the welkin ring with their hallelujahs of joy. The clouds shall be his chariots. The white horse of victory shall be his brightly caparisoned charger. The armies of the heavens shall follow him clothed in fine linen. And on his thigh shall be written, "King of kings, and Lord of lords." The sublime panorama of the flashing lightnings of my text symbolize it.

An Experience in a Storm

Could we find a more resplendent pageantry for the second coming of Christ, than in the chariots of clouds, with the flashlights of dazzling lightnings? "Gird the sword upon thy thigh, O most mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty," cries the Psalmist. Yes, we have seen Christ in symbol, girding on his sword, and clothing himself in the glory and in the majesty of the storm. Some years ago, we took a long drive of some fifty miles over the Michigan hills. Before we got back to our summer cottage, an awful storm overtook us. The night settled in. The black clouds eclipsed for us the light of every star. It was as black as the plague of darkness in Egypt. From an adjacent farmhouse we borrowed a lantern. The way became so black, that even the horses could not see the road. The little children in the stage crept up close to their mothers in fear. The silence became as still as the famous half-hour of silence in heaven, when the celestial hosts, horror-struck, could not utter a whisper immediately after the dying agony of Calvary's tragedy was ended. Then came the rushing of mighty winds. It seemed as though all the spirits demoniac, as well as celestial, were sweeping past me and meeting in mighty conflict. Then the whole heavens became sheets of fire. North, east, south and west, everywhere the heavens were ablaze. Ahead of the horses I walked with the lantern to show the way. Now I could see the big stage following after me. Now, after the thunders had rolled and swelled and died away, I could hear the faint cry of a child, or the soothing tones of a mother trying to quiet her babe, she, the mother, just as frightened as the child. Then, suddenly, every tree, every rock, every hillside, would come out as clear in outline as during the day. Then midnoon, in an instant, would be changed into midnight. Power, power, omnipotent, infinite power! Do you wonder that the glory and the majesty of the coming Christ was symbolized by Jesus himself, in the sublime scenic effects of "the lightnings coming out of the east and shining even unto the west?"

The Eternal Christ

I fear that our artists and poets and religious teachers have too often dwelt upon the humanity and the humility and the helplessness of Christ, and have not emphasized enough his glory and majesty and power as symbolized in the lightnings and the chariot clouds of his second coming. It is right and just that we should impress upon our hearers and scholars the helplessness of Christ incarnated in the flesh of a little child. The master-artist drew a true lesson for us when he made Mary and the Divine Infant sleep between the great paws of the old Egyptian statue. There was the moon hovering over the silent, bleak desert, as the omniscient eye of God the Father watching his only begotten Son. There was Joseph the carpenter, grim and silent as a sentinel, keeping guard. There in the background rises the huge statue, half man, half beast, chiseled and anchored to its foundations thousands of years before Christ was born, and still there watching, watching, waiting, waiting thousands of years after Christ is dead. Christ, the helpless Christ there, became helpless in sympathy with us. But older than the oldest rocks of the Pyramids was the same life of that divine Christ. Longer than those rocks shall ever exist, shall the eternal existence of Christ endure. Greater than the powers of Herod, who made Bethlehem a slaughterhouse of innocent blood, and greater than the splendors of Rameses II, whose palace grounds were once lapped by the waters of the River Nile, and whose workmen made the desert blossom as the rose, are the strength and the power and splendor of that sleeping child. Christ's second advent shall reveal him an omnipotent, an omniscient, and an omnipresent God. Christ's next coming shall be visible to all people, as he is girded with glory and majesty. By the flaming swords of the lightnings, my text in symbol pictures a glorious, a sublime, a resplendent, a celestial panorama. Let me repeat for you the glorious message of my text. Hear how the sublimity of that millennial day echoes down the halls of time: "As the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth into the west, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be."

But the glory of the lightning does not impress me any more than the suddenness of its appearance. One moment it is here, the next it is gone. One moment it seems to be far away; the next it seems to be blazing at your feet. One moment it seems to be starting a forest fire in yonder mountain, away above the snowline; the next it seems to be ploughing up the ground near your chicken-coop, in the backyard. You cannot flee it, if you would. You cannot seek it, if you would. It comes and goes in a flash.

Lightning travels swifter than the bird's wing, swifter than a rifle's bullet, swifter than a hunter's halloo, swifter than any other agency of life or death in the world. Within a few seconds it can belt the whole globe and come back to the place from which it started. It is so swift in its motions, that the swiftest moving objects on earth, seen by the gleam of the blazing lightnings, always appear to be standing still. For the light that you see flashing across the heavens, only appears before your eyes in the smallest part of a second. Yes, the lightning has speed swifter than any seven-leagued boots. It goes so fast, that it seems to go everywhere at once, and then it is gone.

Seen by the World

When Christ shall come to earth the second time, he will not only come with the glory of the lightning, but with the velocity of the lightning. He will come quicker than the winds, quicker than the gasp of your breath. He will not come as an ordinary human visitor. He will flash before you as an electric spark. Could the suddenness of Christ's coming be pictured more vividly? The lightning comes in a flash. In a flash "shall the second coming of the Son of Man be."

The glory of the lightning is overpowering. The suddenness of its appearance is startling. But the universality of the electric atmospheric forces and curre is just as suggestive in its divine significance. H this electric power gets into the atmosphere no scien has ever yet been able to explain. There are m theories, but theories are not necessarily facts. scientists cannot positively tell us why the electric s stances are in the atmosphere, any more than they positively state what causes an earthquake, or w Mount Vesuvius, or why gigantic Kilauea, the great of all volcanoes, have their vomiting spells. But t fact we do know: everywhere in the atmosphere these electric forces Thus, when two mighty stc clouds drift toward one another, one seems to be fil with the positive forces of electricity, and the ot seems to be filled with the negative forces of electrici Then these two forces leap together on account of th affinities. Then there is a flash, and the explosion sc follows. Thus, we find the causes of electricity eve where. When the divine lightning shall appear at t second advent, it will not be Christ coming to any c place, or to any one people. It will be a universal pearance of Christ. The second advent shall be se everywhere at once.

Certain Coming

Away up in the Arctics, among the polar bears a the spouting whales and the obelisks of ice, the Es mo, in the untanned skins, shall see Him. Do among the beautiful flowers of the tropics, amid t scented air, within sound of the prima-donnas of t woods, the black man of the African forests shall Him. In the temperate zone, the king shall see H at his palace door and the poor man in his hut. Th "the glory of the Lord shall cover the earth, even the waters cover the seas." Yes, yes; the second co ing of Jesus Christ shall not be hemmed in by any c race or by any one people, or by any one clime. Chri like the electric forces in the air, shall be seen eve where at once. Christ shall come as a universal mast for God has "given him a name, which is above eve name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should b of things in heaven and things on earth and things unc the earth, that every tongue should confess that Je Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."

Christ will come to earth. No doubt is there abc the second advent. But why is Christ to come earth? Let us ask the lightning and ask Christ th missions. I look up and cry, "Oh, lightning, what thy mission?" I hear it say, "My mission is to emp yonder clouds of their moisture. See me strike. S the rain beating down into the valleys below. See h I am purifying and clarifying the atmosphere." when I cry, "Oh, Christ, for what purpose art th coming to earth?" I hear Jesus say, "I am coming claim my own. Yes, as the lightning shines out of t darkness of the night and the black cloud of the day, out of the blackness of your sins, oh, man, I am co ing to bring salvation and eternal life." "What," say, "can Christ save me out of the darkness of n sins?" Yes, he can; he will, if we will only let hi save us.

His Purpose

Cannot you and I take Christ at his word and pr pare to let him save us. Are we going to sneer at a ridicule his statements and divine authority, as Frede ick the Great and all his Prussian court and the Roy Society of London at first ridiculed and buffooned t statements of the great sage of Philadelphia, wh Benjamin Franklin claimed that with a kite-string had drawn electricity out of a storm-cloud? Are going to flee the miraculous and divine saving power Jesus Christ, the power to save us from sin, as t Bedouin guides fled from the side of the scientist, He Werner Siemen, when they were caught in a thunde storm, upon the top of the Egyptian pyramids? Ther in the midst of that storm, Siemen drew forth electr sparks from his metallic water gourd. The sight these sparks so terrorized the Bedouin guides that awa they ran and never came back. Ah, no, let us n deride nor flee Christ's salvation. Let us take Chri at his word. In the Gospel of John, he distinct states that he is going to heaven for a little while prepare a place for us. Then what does he say?

wi come again and receive you unto myself, that whre I am there ye may be also." Will you believe tha he is coming?

rist never breaks his word. He would no more brok it with us, than you would intentionally break a promise made with your little child. He is coming. His surely coming. He has promised that he will cor to claim his own. "As the lightning cometh out of e east and shineth even unto the west, so shall the co ng of the Son of Man be."

ut as I see Christ coming to claim his own by the fla of the lightning, I know he is also coming on that da to separate the goats from the sheep. I know that as he electricity of the atmosphere is an agency of life, so is also an agency of death and of destruction. Did you know that in the year 1900, nearly eight hundred people were killed by lightning in the United States alone? One of my brother ministers of Chicago had a son struck down in that year, just a few miles from his home Did you know in the United States in the seven years between 1885 and 1892, from known records, there were at least 3,516 fires from lightning and nearly $1000,000 worth of property was thereby destroyed? I see Christ in the symbol of the lightning coming to save. I also see Christ in the symbol of the lightning coming to destroy.

nd the saddest part about this symbol is the lightning of God's wrath, as his second coming will not separate nations, but communities and families and closest friends and business associates. Listen to the record. Two parents shall be bending over the crib, the one shall be taken and the other left. "There shall be two in the field, the one shall be taken and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill, the one shall be taken and the other left." Oh, man, is your mother, or your wife, or your daughter, or your son, or your loved one, to be taken and you to be left? Families split. Homes split. Marriage altars split. One shall be taken and the other left.

Christ will surely come: There is no doubt about that. He may come any minute of any hour of any day. There is also no doubt about that. Christ said it. He is not only coming suddenly, but also at the most unexpected time. In Matthew, we read Christ's own words, "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." For "as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Therefore, this is the great practical application of this sermon: when Christ shall come shall we be prepared to meet him? When he does come, where do you think Christ wants to find us? The Millerites went forth to greet Christ some years ago. They were clothed in white linen, and stood upon the mountain tops when they expected him to come. Shall we go forth like the Millerites? Hundreds of people have crossed the seas, and are now living near the city of Jerusalem, because there, as the American Consul, Doctor Edwin S. Wallace, told me, "they expected Christ first to appear." Shall we hie to the Jerusalem hills? I do not believe Christ, at his coming, wants to find you and me on the hilltop in white linen, or on Mount Olivet, or near to the Beautiful Gate. When Christ comes, as come he may at any minute, I think he would like to find us in our ordinary working apparel, doing the Christian work he has given us to do. He wants to find us earnestly, prayerfully, faithfully doing the work of Christian mothers, Christian fathers, Christian business men and Christian church members. Christ was not ashamed to work in a carpenter shop. Should we be ashamed to meet Christ as common Christian workmen and workwomen?

Would that we were as faithful in the tasks Christ has given to us as was that noble Christian statesman of many years ago. It was during the time when many men were prophesying the speedy termination of the world. The Connecticut Legislature was in session, of which this Christian was a member. Suddenly, in the broad daylight, the sun became overcast, and there was darkness upon the face of the earth, like that awful Black Friday when Christ was crucified. Some of the members were greatly alarmed, and moved to adjourn. With that, this noble Puritan arose, and spoke as follows: "Mr. Chairman, we are told that our duties are always imminent and obligatory. Some in this House are afraid that the last day of the world is come. It may be they are right. But as our duties never cease, instead of moving that we adjourn, I move that the candles be brought in and that we proceed with the order of the day. If Christ is to come to-day, I want him to find me at my post of duty." If Christ comes to-day, will he find us at our post of duty? Are we faithful Christian disciples of many homes? Are we true Christian business men and true Christian church members? Oh, friend, if Christ comes to-day, he wants to find us doing the Christian work for which we were sent. Are we at our posts of Christian duty, and prepared to answer "Here am I, Lord," when he comes?

THE OCEAN GROVE MEETINGS

It is hard to define the secret of the wonderful success of Ocean Grove, unless we adopt the motto written upon the walls of the great Auditorium, "Holiness to the Lord." Ocean Grove has opened to the Christian world an opportunity to enjoy the simple pleasures of life under religious influences. The President, Bishop Fitzgerald, is following closely in the footsteps of the late Rev. J. Stokes, to whom belongs the credit of keeping this beautiful seaside resort sacred to Christian worship.

The sea and sky never looked more beautiful than they do this summer, and the bathers seem to enjoy a dip in old ocean. The great rolling sea seems to speak of eternity. The character of this place is unchanged, and the services began with brightest prospects. June 25th was opening Sunday. The sermons were preached by Bishop Mallalieu, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to large congregations. His subjects were: "The Conquest of the World by Christ," and "Personal Evangelization." Mr. Yatman's meeting in the Temple was crowded. It was estimated that twenty-five hundred people were present. A Scripture souvenir of the fifty-second birthday of the leader of the Young People's Meetings was distributed. July 2 was called "Patriotic" Sunday. Rev. Dr. Hillis, of Brooklyn, preaching the morning sermon, and Rev. Dr. Conwell, of the Baptist Church of Philadelphia, occupying the pulpit in the evening.

Monday, July 3, was the great gathering of the National Educational Association; William H. Maxwell, City Superintendent of Schools, New York City, presiding. Music by the Ocean Grove Festival Chorus and Orchestra, conducted by Tali Essen Morgan. There were addresses by eminent speakers.

The Fourth of July National Celebration was a great occasion of interest, Mayor George B. McClellan of New York City, the chief speaker. Also, Andrew Draper, State Commissioner of Education for New York, and Edwin A. Alderman, President of the University of Virginia; Livingston C. Lord, Illinois, and James A. Forsha, California. On July 6th, The National Educational Society was addressed by William A. Barclay Parsons, former Chief Engineer, New York City Rapid Transit Commission, followed by Frank Vanderslip, President of the National City Bank. Friday, the great day of the Society, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, spoke at two o'clock in the immense auditorium on the subject of National Education. A chorus of five hundred voices, with orchestra and soloists, under the leadership of Professor Tali Essen Morgan, greeted him, singing the National anthem.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT SPEAKING IN THE OCEAN GROVE AUDITORIUM

President Roosevelt said in his speech to the teachers: "It is not too much to say that the most characteristic work of the Republic is that done by our educators, for whatever our shortcomings as a nation may be, we have at last grasped the fact, that we cannot do our part in the difficult and all-important work of self-government, that we cannot govern ourselves, unless we approach the task with developed minds, and what counts for more trained characters."

July 31st is the anniversary of the founding of Ocean Grove, when the monument erected to the memory of Rev. Dr. Stokes will be dedicated. This is a just tribute to the one who did more than any other member of the Association to make Ocean Grove one of the greatest Christian enterprises of the age.

In August come the meetings of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missions. The missionary sermon will be by Rev. E. M. Jones. August 5th, the musical festival, which has become a feature of Ocean Grove, will take place, combining the New York Festival Chorus and Ocean Grove Chorus, led by Prof. Morgan. The Summer School of Theology opens Monday, 7th, to continue ten days. Dr. Wheeler, Dr. Munhall, Dr. Stanley, Dr. Charles E. Mead, Judge Lowe, and Professor R. W. Rodger, of Drew Theological Seminary, taking part. Dr. Munhall will have charge of the Bible Class during the season. August 10th and 12th, are the dates set for the Children's Musical Festival and Musical Carnival; decorations and electrical effects to surpass all previous years, Maurice Warner, the wonderful boy violinist, to take part; Professor Morgan leader. August 14th, Rev. C. H. Yatman celebrates the twenty-fifth anniversary of his work as leader of the young people's meetings at Ocean Grove. The first hour is known as "Sixty Minutes of Sunshine." Anniversary motto:

"A Spirit-form life. A Spirit-filled life. A Spirit-led life."

A wonderful service will be held in the Temple, and a tableau called, "Peace Enthroned," given. Graft, greed, intemperance, impurity, will be personified. While on the other side: Justice, church, piety, and purity, in the form of a lovely young girl, dressed in a flowing white garment and crowned with "a crown of peace," stands to introduce President Roosevelt, also personified as the "Peace Maker of the World."

August 19th the regular Camp Meeting services will commence, continuing ten days. Rev. Dr. George, E. Eckman, D.D., and Rev. Dr. Cook, managing editor of the Methodist publications, will have charge of the Sunday services. Monday, August 28th, closing exercises of the Camp Meeting, and Mrs. Osborn's Training School will end the programme for the summer of 1905. The religious life of Ocean Grove has been much increased by the efficiency of Rev. Dr. James W. Marshall, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. Church. He holds fifteen cottage prayer meetings monthly, and great good has been accomplished. May the spiritual influences continue to be received by the thousands of Christian people who come up to this place of God's appointment, and may they carry the results to the cities, towns and villages, which they call home.

MARY BARTON COOKMAN.

NATIVE GIRLS MAKING FUR RUGS

AN ESKIMO PICK-A-BACK

NATIVE MISSIONARIES ON NOTAK RIVER

IN THE LAND OF THE TWILIGHT

BY DANA AND OTHA THOMAS

WE now have continuous light or twilight, and very soon we can see the "midnight sun," and so we know that summer is once more upon the earth. Yet a blizzard is blowing from the north and the thermometer registers below zero to-day. However, the winter has been a mild one for this region, and the season is farther advanced than usual at this date. Early in July, we hope to have vessels reach us from the south—this letter being carried out by our last winter "dog-team mail."

At present most of our Eskimo are out on the ice, about forty miles distant, hunting seal. They will remain there for several weeks. Successful hunters sometimes kill as many as sixty or seventy seals and sea lions in a season. Without these animals, these people could hardly live. The meat serves as food; the blubber is placed in skin sacks, and rendered out in the sunshine, furnishing them with oil, which is used in the winter for food, and as illuminating oil for their lamps. The skin is utilized in many ways. Native clothing, from sole of foot to crown of head, is fashioned from the same. Their boats, the native "kyak," and "umiak," are made by covering a framework of wood with sea-lion or walrus skins, very similar to the Indian canoe further south, save that skins are substituted for the birch bark. Some of these boats are quite large, carrying burdens of four and five tons, and are very necessary to the Eskimos, as they are great "gadabouts." Indeed, it cannot be otherwise, as they must oftimes travel hundreds of miles to trade for the few things they need, and for which they usually exchange furs, baskets, or carvings made from walrus tusk ivory, or the fossil ivory of the mastodon, many of which are found in this region.

The people are Prohibitionists. We have 850 odd members—Eskimos—at this Mission, and we have only had to discipline one during the past year, for touching intoxicants. This man took a single drink of whisky while at a mining camp, a hundred miles south of here, and felt so badly about his sin, that he quickly came to the Mission and confessed the act. Only about five per cent. use tobacco; these are old people who have used it for years. We do not know of any young persons who use it in any form. For the most part, they are anxiously willing to do what the missionary tells them is "God's will," or what "Jesus would do;" and about the first question asked a native when he travels to some distant point, is "What new thing does the missionary say?" Sometimes our words are misunderstood—and the "new thing" is surprisingly "new" to us as well.

Sometime ago, a girl living in the Mission Home was very anxious to complete a certain garment one Sa- day evening; but as only sufficient time remained take her bath before midnight, she was cautic against working after bathing. This was someth "new." It did not occur to her that it was becaus the Sabbath, but she informed others, and doubtl hundreds now believe that it is "wrong to work a bathing on Saturday."

It may surprise many, who have always believed t the Eskimo is undersized, to know that their aver height—at least these in this region—is about four seven inches, or what it is in the United States. S are six feet tall—possibly those in Greenland and gions farther north, are short; but these about Ko bue are strong and husky men. They are industri and exceedingly honest; and this is one of the foreign missions that is self-supporting.

A baby boy came to us on the 2d of present month (girl babies are below with the Eskimos). This, the first boy b to white parents in a region several h dred miles square in extent, is an objec much admiration and interest upon part of the natives. Children have cr who could not come to see the "Miss baby"; and since he was two days o every man and woman about has wanted shake hands upon every possible opp tunity with the new arrival.

Our reindeer herd is doing nicely. now have several hundred head, and ab fifty fawns have arrived in a very c world, during the past few days. Faw have been born here during a blizza with the temperature twenty degrees l low zero, and have survived. This, too, the open air, upon the tundra, without tree even to protect them. They are c tainly the only domestic animal that G intended to live in this arctic region.

Praying God's richest blessings up his church everywhere.

Friends' Mission, Kotzebue, Alaska.

A CLASS OF ESKIMO GIRLS AT THE FRIENDS' MISSION

THOUSANDS SIGN THE WOMEN'S MEMORIAL

SIGNATURES to the Women's Memorial, to be presented to the United States Senate, continue to come by hundreds and thousands to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. With these names come many letters of commendation of the movement, and expressions of an earnest desire to help in the campaign.

From cities, towns and hamlets, come letters asking "What can we do? We want to help!" We answer, "Send for Memorials and get all the signatures possible; Send us addresses, so that we may forward blanks to those who may not as yet have heard of the movement. Do not delay, for the women are fighting for the right, in defense of home and fireside, as much as our forefathers ever did battle for them."

Mary S. L., writes from Idaho: "I wish to get all the signatures possible in this good work. I have children in Idaho. I pray the Lord to overrule the fearful curse of Mormonism in our dear land." Mrs. Ione F., writes: "I will try to reach every woman in our town, getting several hundred signatures. One of our local papers asked for an article on the subject." Dr. Harriette A. How, resident physician of a Foundling's Home in a western city, writes: "No one feels more earnestly than one who has spent twenty years in this work, the need to guard the purity of the home, and give a nobler ideal to both men and women. . . . What I can do to help in a good cause, I shall be glad to do. I am yours in the work for the good of the nation and its homes."

From Coal Valley, Ills., comes this word: "I do not think there is a lady in the land who will refuse her signature to this Memorial." A reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at Fort Wayne, Me., writes: "I will do all in my power to secure as many signatures as possible, and pray for the success of the movement." Mrs. Rowena S., says: "This is a matter in which all true women should be interested." These sentiments are echoed in hundreds of other letters received.

. . .

"A Work for Righteousness"

NO reform in any direction is ever effected without work. There are numerous individuals, who, in the midst of a campaign for the establishment of some great principle, soothe their consciences by saying, "I'm sure I wish the movement the greatest success, but I cannot possibly do anything."

I care not who you are, where you are, or what you are, you can work for righteousness; and so I ask you on behalf of those ideals of family and home which are cherished by every true-hearted man and woman, not only to sign your own name to this Memorial but to secure the signatures of all other women in your community: Nor need you stop there; letters or postals writt in a spirit of deep conviction, and sent to distant frien and acquaintances, in nine cases out of ten will rou them to similar action. Such an impulse acted upo widens into a circle of blessing which merges into eternit

But remember, in order to attain this blessed resul the good deed must succeed the good thought!

ALICE MCL. BIRNEY.

. . .

Helping the Campaign

To Mrs. J.H., Ashland, Mass.; Mrs. Thomas A., Charl City, Iowa, and many other correspondents, we woul explain that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gives, from week t week, the latest news of the women's campaign again Mormonism. By sending $1.50 to 92 Bible House, Ne York, the paper will be sent every week for one yea The following contributions have been received to date

Mrs. M. E. Sangster	$2.50	An Interested Woman	$1.0
Mrs. M. S. Hopkins	2.00	Subscriber, Mass	1.0
A Public School Teacher	1.00	Mrs. L. A., Brooklyn	5
N. E. M.	1.00	A Shut-In, Covington, Ky.	5
A Friend	1.00	A. R.	5

All contributions towards defraying the actual expens of the campaign will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIA HERALD. Aid in this important work will be cordiall welcomed.

THE LIBRARY, WHERE MANY STATE QUESTIONS WERE DECIDED

THE SECRETARY'S LATE HOME IN WASHINGTON

A NATION MOURNS JOHN HAY

NEVER before in the history of the United States have such honors been paid a deceased citizen, who had not occupied the Presidential chair, as those for John Hay on July 5, at Cleveland, O. Never has there been such a gathering of prominent men to do honor to one of their associates. President Roosevelt came from his home at Oyster Bay, and members of the Cabinet, senators and representatives, foreign ambassadors and men of letters, were there to pay their last tribute. Not only was the feeling of great loss noticeable in Mr. Hay's home city of Cleveland, but throughout the land memorial services were held; flags drooped at half mast from thousands of public buildings and private dwellings. The people of the country indeed felt that the Ship of State had lost forever one of her greatest pilots.

The body of the Secretary was brought from his home, the picturesque "Fells," at Sunapee Lake, New Hampshire, where he died. It was taken to the special train at Newbury by carriage, and was accompanied to the town by only two men, one being the Secretary's faithful coachman. It had been storming for some time, but as the little cortege reached the crest of a long hill, the sun broke through the dark masses of drifting clouds, and sent one golden ray of light that rested a moment on the draped casket. It was gone in an instant, and the rain came down harder than ever. It seemed to bid farewell of the beautiful mountain country that Mr. Hay loved so much. At Newbury a special train was waiting. As the funeral car passed through the country towns, those on board could see the people standing at the stations with heads uncovered, unmindful of the rain that came down unceasingly. At Northfield, the students of the Moody School assembled at the station, and lifted their hats as the train swept slowly by.

On its arrival in Cleveland, the body was taken to the Chamber of Commerce Building, where it was guarded by Troop A, of the Ohio National Guard, of which Mr. Hay had been a charter member, and in which he had never ceased to take interest.

President Roosevelt arrived on the morning of the fifth. He was accompanied by five members of the Cabinet and a large delegation from Washington. Vice-President Fairbanks had come earlier. The streets were filled with thousands of spectators, who kept absolute silence, out of respect to the solemnity of the occasion. The entire party proceeded to the Chamber of Commerce, where they were joined by Sir Mortimer Durand, the British Ambassador, and Iki Hioki, who laid a wreath on the coffin, in the name of the Mikado.

JOHN HAY IN HIS OFFICE

Shortly after, the line of march was taken up for Lakeview Cemetery, six miles distant. The way led along Euclid Avenue, that had been decorated with flags caught up with crape. As the line neared Lakeview, the light summer wind brought from time to time the distant tolling of the bells.

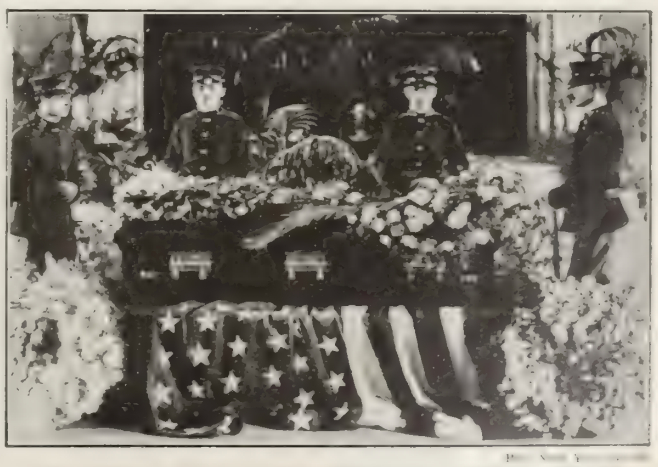
The funeral service was held in Wade Memorial Chapel. The cavalry sergeants set the casket before the altar, and placed across it the American flag. Around it were thousands of beautiful blossoms. In front six candles burned. Mrs. Hay and her family sat at the left, and the Presidential party to the right. Over two hundred people were in the chapel. The venerable Dr. H. C. Haydn, and Dr. Meldrum, pastor of the Old Stone Church, conducted the brief but most touching service. Dr. Haydn was so affected, that several times while speaking his voice broke from emotion. Besides offering prayer, Dr. Haydn read a poem of Whittier on "Consolation." At noon the party proceeded a short distance to the grove, near the tomb of ex-President Garfield, where the Hay family plot is situated. It was a most impressive scene. The sun shone brightly down on the green lawn. A slight breeze barely stirred the robes of the clergymen. The voices of the choir rose in the last hymn; and Dr. Haydn read the service as the casket was lowered in the grave. The President and ex-Secretary Root were deeply affected, in fact, the entire party wept.

In Washington, all business in the city had been suspended for the day, and the government buildings were closed. Mr. Hay had been very popular in the District, and claimed it as his residence on his return from England. He had been appointed to the office of Secretary of State from the District of Columbia. The service was held at eleven o'clock in the Church of the Covenant. Every embassy and legation in Washington was represented, among those in attendance being the Russian Ambassador, Count Cassini, an old friend of the deceased Secretary. Officers of the army and navy attended in full uniform. The church was hung with black, and on each side of the pulpit were floral wreaths. Every pew was occupied. Dr. Teunis Hamlin delivered an eloquent eulogy on the life and services of the late Secretary. Dr. Hamlin said that the late Secretary of State had raised diplomacy to a higher plane than it had hitherto occupied. Before his advent it had meant deception, insincerity, and mutual distrust. Under Mr. Hay's firm policy, he declared, diplomacy now means candor and frankness. As at the memorial services, the choir sang "Lead, Kindly Light."

While the impressive services were going on at Washington and among the trees at Lakeview, one no less

CONTINUED ON PAGE 626

THE "FELLS," SUNAPEE, N. H., WHERE MR. HAY DIED



THE BODY OF THE LATE SECRETARY, LYING IN STATE

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

The Mormon Issue

OUR contemporary, the Salt Lake Tribune, has a habit of pointed utterance. It puts the Mormon issue in a nutshell, when it says:

> Constitution and law are dead letters in Utah. The Mormon Church rules by its alleged right divine. The Gentiles demand the supremacy of Constitution and law and American sentiment in Utah. . . . Will our fellow-citizens of this country sustain us in this demand? Or will they join with the Mormon Church, and cry that our battle for the Constitution and the law is persecution?

We believe that the American people will unite heart and soul with the people of Utah in the effort to rid that State of the notorious political hierarchy which now holds it in an oppressive bondage and which is fast reaching out to other States, which it desires to similarly enslave.

We believe the American people, when the Memorial of the Women of America is presented to the United States Senate, will unite with those noble women in the demand that the sworn Mormon Apostle, Reed Smoot, be no longer permitted to retain his seat in the Senate and to have a voice or vote in framing laws for the government of this nation. We want no oath-bound enemy of our government and institutions, no servant of the treasonable and polygamous Mormon hierarchy, to make our laws.

We believe the American people cannot forget, nor will they allow the Senate to forget, that the leader of the Mormon hierarchy confessed in his sworn testimony before the Senate Investigating Committee, that he was living "in defiance of the laws of God and man," and had no intention of changing his mode of life, and that certain apostles gave similar testimony. Reed Smoot is a member of the Mormon Apostolate.

We believe it to be absolutely true that secret polygamy prevails in Utah and in all the States tainted by Mormonism, to a greater extent at the present time than ever before, and we believe this is clearly understood by the American people.

We believe that the Senate of the United States, when the matter is squarely and fairly presented, will justify before the whole nation its reputation for wisdom and patriotism, by compelling the Mormon Church to retire from the field of national politics, and will take such measures as will effectually wipe out polygamy in Utah and other Mormon-ridden States of the Union.

The women of America believe these things and this belief is the groundwork of their Memorial, which is now being signed by hundreds of thousands of their sex in all the States. Let the good work go on. It will yet bear fruit in a glorious triumph and will bring to these noble women besides, the enduring gratitude of the entire nation.

Hot Weather

WHEN hot weather descends upon us we promptly forget that a few months ago it was inconveniently cold, and that in a few months hence we shall be needing fires again. Most of us behave as if we were martyrs in a furnace. The humidity is distressing. The fierce rays of the sun are intolerable. As for the nights, they are simply purgatorial experiences that try our souls.

Yet hot weather we must have. We long for the ripened fruits and the golden harvests. We cannot have them unless we have summer. It brings us the pomp and splendor of its long days and the delicious languor of its twilights. It brings to thousands of weary workers their annual vacation.

Keep the house closed and dark during the daylight hours. Go on with necessary work quietly. Do not fret or fume. Do not fan violently. The exertion of fanning makes one warm, not cool. Drink lemonade freely, but avoid copious draughts of iced water when you are very hot. Drink in sips, not by goblets full. Simplify the table. Fruits and cereals, fish and vegetables are better than meat in hot weather. Iced tea, coffee and chocolate are better than the same beverages served from a steaming pot. Dress lightly. Avoid the sun as much as possible. Rise early in the morning and get much of the day's work done before nine o'clock. Then at midday, if you are at home, and can manage it, rest awhile.

Of course, there are many to whom some of these suggestions may be impracticable. The business man, the tradesman and artisan, the one who toils at hard manual labor, feels the burden of the midsummer heat to a greater extent than the home folks. Yet it is true of all of us alike that simple diet, seasonable dress, moderation in work and recreation, a clear conscience, and a daily measure of strength through prayer, will enable us to weather the heat of the day and to enjoy sound, restorative sleep at night.

A Life Well Lived

IT has often been stated that no one could say whether a man is truly great in his generation until long years have elapsed since he passed onward to his fathers and his deeds could be seen in an historical perspective. While this may be true in many cases, and men who stood for a moment in the limelight of publicity have faded into the shadow of history, we would claim an exception in the late great Secretary of State, John Hay. He had been from his youth to a great extent a public character, and his association with the martyred Lincoln, whom he served as private secretary, had great influence on his life. In many ways they bore a strong resemblance to each other. Both hated sham and pretense in dealing with public questions, and they did not believe that matters of state should be dealt with in "ways that were dark" in order to reach a successful conclusion. Mr. Hay's life was always marked by an American straightforwardness that brought him hosts of friends and the admiration of the nations.

One of the finest acts of John Hay, and one giving a good index to the character of the man, was the case of the Chinese indemnity money. After the recent Boxer troubles in China, this country, along with several others which had interests there, received a large sum of money as an indemnity for the lives and losses of American residents during the insurrection. Mr. Hay found that the sum allotted to this country was far more than was needed to cover all demands made by Americans. Legally, China had no more claim upon the money and the surplus could have been placed in the treasury of this country without causing any comment. It would have been done by any other country, and by almost any other premier; but Mr. Hay quietly, and with no blare of trumpets, as if he were doing no unusual thing, paid back to China several millions of dollars. That one magnanimous deed, that act of friendliness to a nation in distress, that act of simple honesty, did more to exalt the name of this nation as a country of fair dealing than almost any other thing we can remember for a decade. It was an unprecedented rebate in international business. This was but one of many similar occasions on which Mr. Hay took a stand publicly for righteousness in national and international affairs. Our State Department has become so respected that the nations have looked to it before declaring war or peace. When the President recently stepped in and asked that Russia and Japan try to settle their differences without further bloodshed, it was the city of Washington that was instantly chosen for the peace conference.

John Hay was the first premier who has actively worked for arbitration among all peoples, and he has been most successful. The cause of international arbitration has received such an impetus from his work and life that it seems destined, though the guiding hand has slipped from the tiller, to go onward growing ever in strength until war will only be resorted to when all other expedients have failed. Mr. Hay set his face like flint against the exploitation of the weaker countries by the stronger. But for him China would now be a bone of contention to be broken to pieces and snarled over by the dogs of war. When the contending armies in the Far East drifted toward the Chinese frontier, Europe thought that the moment had come when it would step in, and, on the claims of broken neutrality, add thousands of miles to their territorial concessions in China. Mr. Hay, by his tact and skill, succeeded in getting a promise that the integrity of China would be respected, and the crafty premiers could not fall into line soon enough behind his leadership.

A man of the most lofty and unstained character in his private and public life, a friend of the oppressed, a successful advocate of the world's peace, a [illegible] who will stand, for all generations of Americans, a[illegible] example of what a Secretary of State should be. W[illegible] a record to leave for a life that was not yet old in y[illegible]s!

The Temple Dedication

THE grandest and most beautiful day our Fresh[illegible] work at Mont-Lawn has ever known, has c[illegible]e and gone. The glory of that day, the completed w[illegible]k of the Children's Temple, the solemn and impre[illegible]e service which dedicated it to the service of God anc[illegible]e little children, will never be forgotten by the m[illegible]y hundreds who were present upon that occasion. [illegible]e broad waters of the historic Tappan Zee reflected [illegible]e beauty of cloudless summer skies, and the rocky [illegible]l-sides gave back the sound of happy, childish voice[illegible]s they rose in a song of praise in honor of the Ter[illegible]e dedication.

It was a day of gladness not only for those who w[illegible]e present, but for all who are associated in this humar[illegible]n-rian work, however remotely, for the Temple is [illegible]e crown of eleven years of consecrated effort among [illegible]e children of the poor. In those years, thousands of [illegible]r-ing hearts have remembered Mont-Lawn and h[illegible]e helped it by their gifts and their prayers. To this g[illegible]st circle of friends throughout the Union, no less than [illegible]o the Founder of the Home, there comes a deep sense [illegible]f thankfulness and sincere gratification for the unin[illegible]r-rupted progress of the work, the great moral and ph[illegible]-ical good it has accomplished among its twenty-[illegible]ir thousand little beneficiaries, and lastly, for the Ten[illegible]e dedication, which gives the stamp and seal of spiritu[illegible]l character to the whole.

Let us hope and trust that long after our own [illegible]y and generation have passed, the Children's Temple [illegible]l stand as a living memorial of the work, a centre [illegible]f spiritual activity, a house of God, within whose g[illegible]s the little folks of a future time may love to assem[illegible]e for praise and worship. And even when the grai[illegible]e which forms its walls shall have crumbled to dust, [illegible]d when the joyous peal of its bell shall have been fore[illegible]r silenced, the influence of the Christ-like work for wh[illegible] the Children's Temple now stands, will still be march[illegible] on in the hearts of our children's children, down to [illegible] distant generations.

Among the Workers

—Rev. Charles Ferris & Mrs. Ferris, 1 Chesti[illegible] Hill Avenue, White Plains, N. Y., will open their ho[illegible] as a Free Fresh-Air Sanitarium for women and girls w[illegible] would be benefited by two weeks of rest and recuperati[illegible]

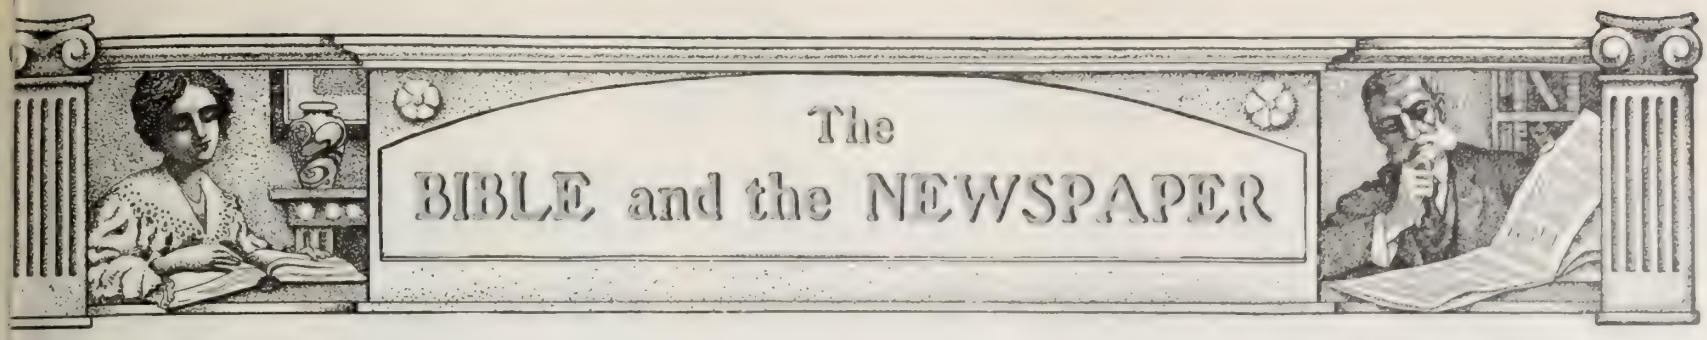
—Evangelist W. A. Sunday, in co-operation with fi[illegible] local pastors—Revs. Thos. Doney, F. A. Ernst, G. [illegible] Buckner, R. B. Fisher, and W. J. Holtzclaw—has be[illegible] conducting a most successful revival at Macomb, Il[illegible] Over 1,600 have confessed Christ as the result of the[illegible] meetings.

—The Whosoever Will Mission, 406 Pacific stre[illegible] San Francisco, is expanding. It has just occupied wh[illegible] was formerly a notorious dive, and transformed it into[illegible] live, earnest Gospel Mission. Its basement has shelter[illegible] thousands of homeless men during the past winter nigh[illegible] J. C. Westenberg is Superintendent.

—Rev. Albert Sidney Gregg, of Conway, Mass., member of the New England Conference, has been a[illegible] pointed Field Secretary of the International Refor[illegible] Bureau, of Washington, D. C., to succeed Rev. O. [illegible] Miller, resigned, who becomes the legislative superi[illegible] tendent of the National Temperance Society.

—A remarkable series of Bible and Gospel meetin[illegible] closed at Sea Cliff, Long Island, lately. Six denomin[illegible] tions were represented; among the speakers being Ge[illegible] Ballington Booth, Dr. Robert Mackenzie, Rev. David [illegible] Burrell, Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, Rev. Robert S. M[illegible] Arthur, Rev. S. P. Cadman, Rev. Dr. James M. Buc[illegible] ley, Rev. Dr. D. G. Downey, Rev. Dr. Edgar W. Wor[illegible] and others. These meetings were held in the M. [illegible] Church, Rev. Dr. George William Carter, pastor.

—About four years ago Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, Supe[illegible] intendent New York Anti-Saloon League, went to tak[illegible] up work in Great Britain, in connection with the N[illegible] tianal Free Church Council, which was endeavoring t[illegible] secure 1,000,000 new total abstinence pledges during th[illegible] first year of the century. The campaign resulted in ove[illegible] 600,000 pledges. In Dr. Henry's own meetings in Brit[illegible] ain, more than 125,000 people have signed the pledge.



FATAL FLOOD IN MEXICO

OSS of life, which is known to be two hundred, and may prove to be fully a thousand, has occurred in the beautiful city of Guanajuato in Mexico. Telegraphic communication has been interrupted, so that the full extent of the disaster is not yet known. The city is built in a great ravine, with high mountains on both sides. On July 1, heavy rains fell, flooding the lower part of the city. On the following day, a mighty stream descended from the mountains, rushing through the upper streets. At the same time, a part of the river which was built over with masonry burst through, and augmented the flood. The lightly-built houses were quickly swept away at the first rush, and soon the foundations of substantial mansions and public buildings were undermined. As the flood rose, people retended to the roofs of the houses, where they were drenched by the downpour of rain. Soon the torrent rushing down the mountain struck the walls, and the houses began to sway. The people were terror-sicken. It was death to stay, and death to descend. One after another the buildings collapsed, carrying with them the shrieking occupants. Some had fled to the church of San Diego, but even its solidly built walls could not resist the mighty impact of the flood. It shook and shivered under the enormous weight of water, and at last it fell, burying great numbers in the ruins. Four hotels, several large business houses, and whole streets of handsome mansions were destroyed. It is feared that the hospital in which Dr. Levi Salmons carried on his beneficent work, must have been swept away, but as it is not mentioned in the reports hitherto received, there is yet hope that it may have escaped. As the waters subsided, the survivors began the sad task of collecting the bodies of the dead. Two hundred corpses were found, but many more must have been carried away by the flood and many others must be under the ruins of the wrecked buildings. It is a story of death and desolation such as the patriarch depicted in his time.

Terrors take hold on him as waters, a tempest stealeth him away in the night, and as a storm hurleth him out of his place (Job 27: 20-21).

Russian Disturbances

Mutiny in the Russian fleet appears to be spreading. So dangerous did it become last week that the Admiral in command resolved to take his few vessels into harbor, remove essential parts of the machinery, and disband the crews. He obviously feared that the men on other ships would follow the example of their comrades on the Kniaz Potemkin, which at that time was still unsubdued. One of the battleships, Catherine II., succeeded in evading the order, and, running up the red flag, sailed away to join the mutineers. The boldness of the men culminated in the issue of a manifesto to the foreign Powers, in which they declared "that the decisive struggle has begun against the Russian Government. We consider it to be our duty to declare that we guarantee the complete inviolability of foreign ships navigating the Black Sea, as well as the inviolability of foreign ports." They are apparently well supplied with money, and are confident of receiving sympathy and support from both the army and the navy. They are taking the vessel to Batoum, where, it is believed, there exists extensive disaffection. Their object probably is to seize the arsenal, and so replenish their stock of ammunition. The Czar has issued orders for the destruction of the ship at any cost, but in addition to the reluctance to sink so splendid and powerful a vessel at this time, when the Russian navy is so depleted, there is doubt whether the men could be relied on to fire upon her. Rumors are current that in the army also there is a strong rebellious spirit. A petition representing the grievances of the men is being signed and is shortly to be presented to the Czar. Besides these evidences of disaffection, there are, in many industrial centres, strikes of workmen, so violent as to demand the presence of strong military bodies to keep order. The riots are suppressed so savagely that the people cherish implacable resentment against the authorities, which may at any moment culminate in revolution. The peasantry are noted for their patience, but even they are disaffected by the slaughter of so many of their number in the field and at home.

Surely oppression maketh a wise man mad (Eccles 7: 7).

SCENE IN GUANAJUATO, MEXICO, RECENTLY DESOLATED BY A FLOOD

A Clock on a Gravestone

In a description of the Indians of Pala, Calif., in the current number of a scientific magazine, a curious superstition is mentioned. They have a firm faith in the resurrection of the dead, but believe that a certain period, proportioned to the kind of life they have lived, must elapse before they are raised. They accordingly note precisely the time of death and record the exact day, hour and minute of the event, on the rude cross that they set up at the head of the grave. Some of them take other means to insure awakening. A traveler found in some of the graveyards alarm-clocks attached to the crosses, the time of the alarm set exactly at the minute when the person who is interred in the grave passed away. The belief evidently was that at the appointed time the summons would be issued and the clock would sound the alarm, and awake the sleeper. It was evidence of a simple, childlike faith that proceeded from half-truths. Had they known more, they would have understood that no mechanical means are required to awaken those who sleep in Jesus.

All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth (John 5: 28).

Missed the Ship

A traveler who had taken passage to Europe by the St. Paul on her last voyage, missed the ship by a singular accident. He went on board with his sister and her three children, who were going to Europe with him. Shortly before the vessel started, the youngest child expressed a desire for an orange. There were none at hand, and the child cried with disappointment. The man was fond of his niece, and, snatching her in his arms, he ran down the gangplank to a fruit stand he could see at the end of the pier. He left his ticket and purse with his sister. He soon returned with the little girl holding her treasure, but the gangplank had been raised. He pleaded to be taken on board, but as he could not show his ticket, the dockmen would not listen to him. He stood on the dock, with the child in his arms, and saw the St. Paul sail away without him. The child was crying for her mother, and the man was almost ready to cry with vexation. Better for him, and the child, too, if he had not heeded her whim. It proved a mistaken kindness, which both regretted in the end. It is well for us that our Heavenly Father often does not give us the things we crave at his hands, otherwise we, too, might be sorry that he had yielded to us.

He gave them their own desire and they were not estranged from their lust (Ps. 78: 29).

To be Secretary of State

The difficult problem of finding a successor to the late Mr. John Hay has been solved to the satisfaction of the whole country, by the appointment of Elihu Root. It was the general opinion that if Mr. Root could be induced to accept the office, there was no man so competent to perform its duties. President Roosevelt made him the offer and it may be supposed urged its acceptance with arguments that could not be resisted. That it involves a pecuniary sacrifice is well known. The salary attached to the office of Secretary of State is probably not a tenth of the income Mr. Root earns as head of the New York bar. It is an evidence of his patriotism that he surrenders it to serve his country. Mr. Root is in his sixty-first year. He is a graduate of Hamilton College. He has already been a member of the Cabinet. He succeeded Gen. Alger as Secretary of War and made an excellent record. In 1904 he resigned that office, much to the President's regret. He now assumes more important duties, for which he is eminently fitted. The work he will have to perform will be arduous and the responsibility it will entail will be heavy. It is not now, as in the early history of our country, that a policy of isolation is desirable or even possible. The United States have come into the front rank of nations and must exercise a potent influence the world over. What John Hay did on behalf of China after the Boxer troubles and what President Roosevelt has done in bringing Russia and Japan into conference, shows how much our Government may do for the benefit of the nations. There are many problems waiting for solution and others of immense difficulty are likely to arise. It will give the nation a feeling of security to know that in dealing with them our policy will be guided by a man so able, sagacious and conservative as Elihu Root. His sound judgment and strong common sense will also make him a valuable accession to the Cabinet, as an adviser in matters outside his own department. It is well that the nation, like Israel of old, has such men, who are willing to sacrifice their own interests in the service of their country.

THE HON. ELIHU ROOT
Secretary of State

Men that had understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do (1 Chron. 12: 32).

BRIEF NOTES

One result of the Torrey-Alexander mission in London is that a revival has taken place among the clerks at the War Office, where a class for Bible study has been established.

The Bible Society's agent in Japan reports that the circulation of the Scriptures in that country last year far exceeded all previous records. In addition to the 235,000 copies given to the Japanese troops, the actual sales by the British Bible Societies amounted to no fewer than 102,8[illegible] an increase of 12,48[illegible] the previous year.

Mr. E. Tennyson Smith, the Eagles' [illegible] took part in the opening meetings of the Chautauqua at Ocean Grove. He [illegible] Christian Endeavor Convention at Baltimore [illegible] has promised to speak at the First Baptist Chautauqua at Old Orchard, Me. His address [illegible] his American tour is 1[illegible] Tremont Street, Boston.

Dedication of Our Children'

REV. R. A. HUME

REV. C. H. MEAD

HON. JACOB A. RIIS

REV. CYRUS MCPHERSON

REV. FERDINAND C. IGLEHART

UNDER smiling skies of a lovely summer's day, and in the presence of a thousand spectators, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Temple, at Mont-Lawn, Nyack-on-Hudson, was dedicated on July 4. One year ago on the same day, was laid the corner-stone of what is now a most beautiful and impressive structure. Without and within, the Temple is unique in architecture, and it stands alone as the first building of the kind ever erected and dedicated in any land.

The ceremonies were most impressive. A little before three o'clock, a procession of nearly three hundred children formed in front of the main building of the Home group, at signal from the Temple's bell. Down the graveled walk marched the little ones with their teachers, followed by a group of visiting pastors and other distinguished guests who were to take part in the exercises. Then came THE CHRISTIAN HERALD contingent from editorial and business offices, composing and press rooms. These were followed by a throng of visitors who had arrived from New York and other places, on special cars. Stage load after stage load came up the winding hill road from the village of Nyack, whose townspeople were also well represented. Including children, guests, speakers and others, the entire number present was in the neighborhood of one thousand people.

Seated in the Temple, the children, joined by adult guests grouped about, sang with spirit, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," after which the little ones marched out upon the green, where their fresh young voices helped to swell the chorus of happiness with which the very air seemed replete.

When all the guests and visitors were seated, there were still hundreds who filled the long porch or ambulatory, and who stood during the dedicatory service. The large platform was devoted to speakers exclusively. In the picturesque gallery at the north end of the Temple sat a line of ladies overlooking the brilliant audience below. After the opening hymn, Dr. Louis Klopsch began the formal service by reading the One Hundred and Twenty-second Psalm, with responses by the congregation. The Bible used in this first service at the Children's Temple was a gift, contributed in memory of a mother and brother by a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in Ashland, O. It is a large and beautifully bound volume, and bore on the fly-leaf an artistic inscription which told the origin of the gift. After the ninth response the "Gloria" was sung with organ accompaniment. The Twenty-fourth Psalm was then read by G. H. Sandison, Ph.D. (one of the editors of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD), with responses by the audience. Following this reading came the hy

Enter thy temple, glorious King, and write thy name upon its shrine.

The Invocation was given by Rev. Cyrus McPherson, of New York. Next came lesson from the Old Testament Chron. 1, 2: 18-21, 40-42; 7: 1 which was read by the Rev. Fe nand C. Iglehart, of Peekskill, Y. Another hymn followed, a which the lesson from the New T tament (Hebrews 10: 19-26) was r by the Rev. J. G. Hallimond, Su intendent of the Bowery Mission.

We rear not a temple like Judah's of o was sung by the congregation, sta ing.

Presentation of the Temple bu ing to the Board of Directors of Children's Home was then made Dr. Klopsch as follows:

"I now present unto THE CHRIST HERALD Children's Home, thro Mr. G. Holmes Crawford, one of directors, this building, about to dedicated as a Children's Temple the service and worship of God Father, God the Saviour, and the Holy Spirit."

The acceptance of the trust in half of the Board was voiced by Crawford, one of the Directors, these words:

"The Directors of THE CHRIST HERALD Children's Home have quested me to accept from you, their name, this beautiful buildi Under other circumstances someth might well be said of your caree a practical philanthropist of wo wide fame; but on this occasion enumeration of your good de would be distasteful to a man your character. Something mi also be said of the good taste, arti beauty and practical intelligence played in the construction of this C dren's Temple, but it is unnecessa Res ipsa loquitur. Let every one lo about and see for himself. We acc the trust with best wishes for y happiness, and with high hopes the future of the Home."

The Rev. Stephen Merritt of N ack, then read impressively this p lic "Act of Dedication," to which congregation responded:

"To the glory of God our Father, God over all, blessed forever; To the honor Jesus Christ, Lord and Saviour, Son of the Living God, revealing the Father;

"To the praise of the Holy Spirit, Source of life and light, taking of the things of Chr and showing them unto

"We dedicate this hou

"For worship in pra and song; for the minis of the Word, and for t free gift of life and sal tion to all men,

"We dedicate this hou

"For instruction in rig eousness, for the sanctifi tion of learning and the guidance of youth;

"For the fostering patriotism, for the traini of conscience, and for gression against evil; F childhood's everlasti good, and for religion th glowsin the heart a shines in the life,

We dedicate this hou

THE DEDICATION CEREMONY IN THE CHILDREN'S TEMPLE

A MERRY ROMP ON THE HOME PLAYGROUNDS

LINING UP FOR THE PROCESSION

Temple at Mont-Lawn, Nyack

Blessed be thy name, O Lord, that it hath pleased thee to put it into the heart of thy servant to appropriate and devote this house to thy honor and worship; and grant that all who shall enjoy the benefit of this pious work may show forth their thankfulness, by making a right use thereof, to the glory of thy blessed name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. AMEN."

After the singing of an appropriate hymn by the entire congregation, Rev. R. A. Hume, of Ahmednagar, India, read the Declaration as follows:

Dearly beloved, it is meet and right, as we learn from the Holy Scriptures, that houses erected for the public worship of God, should be especially set apart and dedicated to religious uses. For such a dedication we are now assembled. With gratitude, therefore, to Almighty God, who has signally blessed his servant in his holy enterprise of erecting this Children's Temple, we dedicate it to the worship of God; to the cause of patriotism; to childhood's everlasting good, and to Religion that glows in the heart and shines in the life, also to the exercises of religious worship and service, according to the usages of the Christian Church. And, as the dedication of the Temple is vain without the solemn consecration of the worshipers also, I call upon you to now dedicate yourselves anew to the service of God. To him let our souls be dedicated, that they may be renewed after the image of Christ. To him let your bodies be dedicated that they may be his temples for the indwelling of the Holy Ghost. To him may our labors and business be dedicated, that their fruit may tend to the glory of his great name, and to the advancement of his Kingdom. And that he may graciously accept this solemn act, let us pray.

THE BEAUTIFUL STAINED-GLASS WINDOW, "CHRIST AND THE CHILDREN," IN THE CHILDREN'S TEMPLE

The following prayer was offered by Rev. Chas. H. Mead, D.D., of New York City:

Most Glorious Lord, we acknowledge that we are not worthy to offer unto thee anything belonging unto us; yet we beseech thee, in thy great goodness, graciously to accept the dedication of this Children's Temple to thy service, and to prosper this, our undertaking: receive the prayers and confessions of all those, thy servants, who shall call upon thee in this house; and give them grace to prepare their hearts to serve thee with reverence and godly fear; that approaching thy sanctuary, they may come before thee with clean thoughts and pure hearts, with bodies undefiled, and minds sanctified, and may always perform a service acceptable to thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. AMEN.

Grant, O Lord, that by thy Holy Word which shall be read and preached in this place, and by thy Holy Spirit lifting it inwardly in the heart, the hearers thereof may both perceive and know what things they ought to do, and may have power and strength to perform the same. AMEN.

And may we all, with thy people everywhere, grow up into a holy temple in the Lord, and be at last received into the glorious temple above; the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. And to the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, be glory and praise, world without end. AMEN.

The indoor exercises concluded with the doxology and benediction, the latter being invoked by Rev. Mr. James of Brooklyn.

While the people are wending their way over the green to the lawn in front of the main building (where the addresses were to be given), we may take a look at the interior of this most beautiful Temple, just consecrated to God and the little children. The most conspicuous feature is the series of stained-glass windows on the southern end. Here, in three magnificent windows (the trio forming one picture), is represented the Saviour surrounded by the little children and blessing them. At the extreme left is a "glory" window, which shows a beautiful cross set about with marvelously brilliant tints, its companion "glory" window upon the extreme right revealing a crown. All of these windows glow as if jewel-set, as the sunlight shining through illumines the whole.

The interior trim of the Temple is finished in dark hardwood, with open arches to the roof, the beams polished and extremely simple, but rich in effect. Pews, pulpit, and altar furnishings are of dark quartered oak. Administration offices and two guest or teachers' rooms, occupy the remainder of the ground floor, while above, at the north end, there is a dormitory, where twenty-five little white beds emphasize the fact that Mont-Lawn is for the children first and last, from the very top of this beautiful structure to the tiniest blade of grass in the wide green fields, or the tenderest leaf upon the shelterng trees.

Upon the smooth and spacious lawn, under the speading branches of the great pines and hemlocks, the children and visitors now gathered to listen to the inspiring addresses, which are always a feature of the Fourth at Mont-Lawn. Three hundred children sat in a great semicircle in front of the speakers' stand, the "grown-ups" forming still a larger outer semicircle. The porches and piazzas of the main building were also crowded, and even the doorway was packed with the largest audience ever known at Mont-Lawn. A remarkable feature of this part of the programme was the quiet and interested attention given to the speakers by the children. The Hon. Jacob A. Riis, the well-known author, sociologist and student of child life in the New York tenements, was the first speaker. He took his tiny hearers into his confidence at once, as he told them of the love that lay dormant in the hearts of the "toughest boys" he had met in his long life in the lower part of New York. He spoke as follows:

THE CHILDREN MARCHING TO DINNER UNDER THE GREAT MARQUEE TENT

SPEECH-MAKING ON THE LAWN, AFTER THE DEDICATION

As I was coming across the city on the way up here to you, a band came up the street playing "The Red, White and Blue," and behind it marched a lot of boys, keeping step with the music, and beating time with their fire-crackers, big and little. I thought when I saw them that if they had been big enough, and if the drum had been calling for volunteers to go out and fight for our country, they would have gone along, every man Jack of them. Not one would have stayed behind. And so I think would every boy here, if the drum came this way on that errand, as please God it never may. If there was one who did not want to go, the girls would make him; wouldn't you, girls? Of course you would. They went, the boys who lived a hundred and thirty years ago, when the drum beat in earnest, and some of them never came back to their homes. But because of what they did then, we to-day are happy and free.

DEDICATION OF OUR CHILDREN'S TEMPLE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 619

And now we have grown to be such a big and strong nation that no one wants to fight us, and that we can make others stop, and we do not have to go to war and die for our country. We can live in peace now. But because that peace was bought with the lives of our fathers, it is our duty to live for our country as they died for it, and to live right; else we are not true Americans.

How are you going to live for your country, you who are yet children? Let me tell you of some I have known—children just like yourselves, only they did not have nearly so good a time. There were Jim, and Chris, and Pat, and the boy they called Mike "the rat," and their little companions, a whole bunch of them in the back alley behind my newspaper office in Mulberry Street. They were an unruly lot, because they were penned up in the alley where there was neither sunlight nor grass, nor trees, and they felt that they were not having a square deal, and they were right about that. Sometimes they made a bonfire in the street at night, and the police chased them and kicked it out, and that didn't make it any better. It was in early summer, and good people sent me ever so many flowers from the fields for the poor tenements thereabouts—whole wagon-loads—and I was glad to bring the country to the poor in a bunch of daisies, since they could not go there. One day my little friends from the back alley came in asking for "posies," and looking very grave! They wanted them "for the lady in the basement," they said, and departed with big armfuls of flowers.

There was something about their way that made me follow them to the back-basement to see what they were up to, and there I found "the lady," an old crippled scrub-woman, lying dead in a rough pine coffin, waiting for the city's hearse to take her to the Potter's Field. She had no kin and no friends, except the children who were sorry for her. They decked her coffin with the daisies, until no royal funeral seemed grander than the poor old scrub-woman's. And when the dead-wagon came and took her away, they stood at the mouth of the alley and gave her a departing cheer. You see, they did her all the honor they knew how to do.

There was "Fighting Mary," in the industrial school on Seventh Avenue. Her reputation was bad, but then that of the neighborhood was no better. She was a fighter beyond a doubt. The gang on the avenue knew it to its cost, and so did the gang in Thirty-second Street. She had been such a persistent fighter that, as a punishment, the ladies who ran the school would not have her in to the Thanksgiving dinner, when it came along. But at the last moment they relented, and when all the other children had eaten their mince pies, as quick as they could, hoping that another hunk might turn up, and Mary, after gloating over her's as only a child can who has never had a whole little pie all to herself, was painfully trying to cram it into her dress-pocket—meeting the astonished looks of the other children with a defiant "for mother"—the ladies saw a big light. They told me that they wept over "Fighting Mary" out in the schoolroom, and so did I when I heard. Then and there they passed a resolution that has been the rule in all the Children's Aid Society's Industrial Schools ever since, that occasions of mince pie shall always carry double rations—one for Mary and one for mother.

These children were ragged; they were poor; but that does not matter. They were true little Americans, and they lived for their day and for their country, because they were not selfish. They were doing something for others. They followed the right idea without knowing it—this: that God has put us into the world to help Him make it better.

Once a lot of little boys and girls who went to vacation school in New York were asked to write down what they expected to be when they grew up. I took notice of the answers, for you could tell from them who in that lot were going to be of use in the world, and who were just going to make a living out of it while they were in it. Those latter ones wanted to be rich and powerful. This was the way one of them put it, a little girl who had imagination:

"I would like to be a queen and sit in my palace with diamonds all around me, and own the city."

She may have been kin to a boss. It sounds like it. But there were others with different ambitions.

"I would like to be a brave woman," wrote one ten-year-old, "and help people all I can." And another: "I think there is nothing so nice as to help the poor. If you do you will always be happy." And still another: "I would like to be myself when I am big, and be honored by all who knew me by doing good for my country, and help the sick and the poor."

I do not think if you asked all the professors in Columbia University they could give you a better prescription than that, for being what I call a true American. Then it does not matter in the least how much money you have, or whether your clothes are fine or not. The man whom this world wants more than any other to-day is not the one who can make a fine speech, or wear a proud uniform, but the young chap who is not afraid to wear a patch on his trousers when he can't afford a new pair, rather than ask someone to trust him for the price.

On the train to-day I heard a man say, speaking of the great inventions made since the first Fourth of July: "In fifty years from now what may not our children see."

They will see that, children, which you have made of the world. As you and your time are, so it will be then. Fill it with envy, with meanness and selfishness, and all the inventions in the world won't help it forward. Fill it with love for one another, with helpfulness, with the honest desire to do the right thing, and all the coming centuries will be proud of you, for you will have brought us so much nearer the Kingdom. This is your task true Americans.

And now, on our national holiday let me set up t prescription for you in the man whom every one of y knows and is proud of, the President of our great Repu lic. Theodore Roosevelt is the fair type of the man w knows, because he has learned; who thinks there is no ing worth doing that is not worth doing just as well you can; who believes in God and in his fellow-ma These are the elements in his great and splendid succe And here are some rules of his that you can practic If they don't bring you to the White House, they w make good Americans of you anyway.

1. The way to do a thing is to do it, and do it now.

2. The only man who makes no mistakes is the m who never does anything. Make as many mistakes you have to, no more, and learn from them. Do t thing you deem right, and don't hold back merely f fear you may err. That is unmanly.

3. Have all the honest fun you can; it is your rigl He has himself the best time I ever knew a man to hav and that is because he works first, plays afterward. I one thing at a time, and for all you are worth. So y will always have a good time.

4. And finally, know that it is "better to be faithf than to be famous." If you are that, perhaps you w find yourself famous in the end, too. But, whether not, stick to the things that are good and honest. Th you will be following the flag quite as effectually on th Fourth of July and in the days that come after as tl boys of 1776 did, and you will have earned the prou title of True Americans.

Rev. F. C. Iglehart followed in an eloquent addres in which he spoke of the influence of America upon th progress of the world toward liberty and happines Then the children listened with keenly eager faces as th Rev. R. A. Hume told of the native children of faraw India. Rev. Cyrus McPherson followed in an addres in which he spoke enthusiastically of the work of th Children's Home, and the purpose of its founder. Th open-air exercises closed with a very brief and chara teristic address by Dr. Klopsch, who paid a glowin tribute to the kind-hearted friends of the work all ov the land, and acknowledged, above all, the goodness God, whose approval and blessing had made the wor at Mont-Lawn one of far-reaching influence and wid beneficence.

The band played "My Country 'Tis of Thee," as th gathering on the big lawn dispersed. Previous to th dedication programme, a bountiful dinner was served i the great marquee tent, first to the children, and then t the hundreds of guests. When evening drew on, a fin display of fireworks ended the children's joyful day, an they sat in a wide circle, eating ice cream, with exclan ations of delight between mouthfuls as each partic larly brilliant bit of "Fourth of July" pyrotechnics clov the sky.

As the guests took their way to the stages waiting t convey them to the trains, the Temple, now brilliantl lighted, sent forth a luminous benediction to al Standing as it does, this structure is a complete epitom of the highest human impulses—love to God, and it divine concomitant, love for little children.

THE PEACE ENVOYS

AFTER many delays, the peace envoys of Japan and Russia are on their way to this country, and before long it would seem that the conflict in Manchuria will be at an end. So many reports have been sent out from both Russia and Tokio in regard to the Conference, that the American public began to have grave doubts whether the efforts of our Government to bring peace would be crowned with success. Both the Czar and the Mikado have given their final instructions to their respective delegations. The exact date of the meeting in Washington has not been set, but in all probability the first meeting will take place within the next six weeks.

The Mikado, in his address to the envoys representing Japan, said in part: "The President of the United States, being grieved to find that the war between Japan and Russia had not been brought to a close after a lapse of more than a year, and being impressed with the urgent need, in the interest of peace and humanity, of terminating the conflict, has suggested that the two governments appoint plenipotentiaries and cause them to negotiate peace. We were compelled to resort to arms despite our constant wish for peace. You should devote yourselves with all your power to discharge your mission, and make every effort to secure the re-establishment of peace on a durable basis." The Czar gave his commands personally to Muravieff.

The four men selected to arrange the terms of peace represent the best diplomacy of their respective countries, and it is interesting to note that three of them have been at some time accredited to this country in an official capacity.

Copyrighted, 1901, by J. E. Purdy.

MINISTER TAKAHIRA — BARON KOMURA — M. MURAVIEFF — BARON ROSEN

Baron Rosen is regarded as one of the foremost of Russia's diplomatists, and his rise in the diplomatic branch of his country's service has been most rapid. Fifteen years ago he was Consul-General of the port of New York. Then he became charge-d'affairs at Washington, and while there made many friends among our public men who are still in active political life at the capital. This cannot fail to be of great assistance to Baron Rosen at the present time. He was also Minister to Mexico. Before the outbreak of the Russian-Japanese War he had been serving in Tokio as Russian Ambassador. As the relations of Russia with the Mikado's government became more strained the position of Ambassador from a hostile country was one requiring rare tact. Baron Rosen acquitted himself well, and retired with honor at the outbreak of hostilities. He has now been appointed to succeed Count Cassini, as Ambassador to the United States. His former experience in Japanese affairs will be of the greatest assistance to him and M. Muravieff at the present time.

M. Muravieff, the other Russian envoy, is a man with a most distinguished reputation, both in his own country and abroad. From his youth he has been connected with affairs of state, on account of the high position of his family. He is a nephew of Russia's great general, Coun Muravieff-Amurski, the hero of the bloody Russo-Turkish war of 1828-9. He wa born in 1850, and he has been Secretary o State and Minister of Justice of Russia He was president of the arbitration tri bunal at the Hague in 1904, and was also one of the arbitrators in the famous Vene zuelan case. For some time past he ha been stationed in Rome.

Mr. Takahira is the present Japanese Minister in Washington. A great portion of his diplomatic career had connected him with the United States. He was first stationed in Washington, thirty years ago, as an attache of the Japanese legation. Later he was appointed to the position of Consul-General at the port of New York. After leaving that post, his duties took him pretty much over the world. He was plenipotentiary at the Hague, Rome, and Vienna. He was recalled to act as Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs at Tokio. His work was so greatly appreciated, that he was sent to this country as Japanese Minister. His high attainments were recognized by Tufts College, which conferred on him the title of Doctor of Laws.

Baron Komura, of Japan, is a graduate of Harvard. He was Minister to China when the China-Japan war broke out. He has also been minister to the United States and to Russia.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS IN CONVENTION

THE Triennial Sunday School Convention was held in Toronto, Canada, June 23-27. Americans found the place of welcome a model city, which sells its Sunday newspapers on Saturday nhts, and not at all on the Sabbath. It has only one hdred and fifty saloons, which are called "hotels," al the churches largely outnumber them.

The Mayor, Mr. Thos. Urquhart, who has been elted three successive terms, in his address of welcome tthe Convention, remarked that when he was first elted Mayor, some one said: "You will now have to rign your position as Sunday School Superintendent." Hs reply was: "I would rather give up my position as Myor." He has been superintendent of the Walmer Rad Sunday School for twenty years, and addressed th members of the Convention as "fellow workers." Te Convention was also welcomed by the Lieut.-Govelor of the Province of Ontario, Honorable William Mortimer Clark, LL.D., who is also a Sunday School Sperintendent. Sunday School politics is popular in tt region.

The preliminary session of the Convention was held inthe Metropolitan Methodist Church, which was profely decorated with the "Stars and Stripes" and the "Jnion Jack," beautifully intertwined. The great aliphonal organs pealed forth "Star Spangled Banner," ad "God Save the King." The church was crowded tits utmost capacity, with delegates alone. In his oening address, President Rev. B. B. Tyler, D.D., said: 'Ve have not come for loaves and fishes, nor for prefiment, but to advance the interests of this great Snday School work." As to the denominations represented he said: "Isn't it good enough in this place to bsimply a Christian? We are spiritual kinspeople."

A Preparation Service was conducted by Rev. Floyd W Tompkins, D.D., of Philadelphia. From his peaceful face and gentle, but strong voice, the grace of God smed to be distilled as dew upon the vast throng of vrkers, who sometimes listened in hushed silence to te words of the speaker, and then sang in earnest undertone as in prayer:

> Take time to be holy,
> Speak oft with thy Lord;
> Abide in Him always,
> And feed on his word.

Other songs were similarly sung. It was the functin of Dr. Tompkins to conduct daily a "Quiet Hour Srvice." Among the helpful things said by him are te following:

can understand God's love, but I cannot understand his rience.
Our sin is so great, that only God could take it away; that is ny God came.
esus did not die of crucifixion; he died of a broken heart.
Ve are like Ananias and Sapphira: we keep something back nen we say to God, "Here am I, send me."
Blessed be God when we are tired, because we have been serving d.

The preliminary session proved that the Metropolitan Church would not hold the Convention, so it was decidd to occupy Massey Hall, twice the size, while the etropolitan Church was retained for "Twin Meetings" the evenings, and for the office work of the Conntion, still another hall being occupied for registran of delegates and assignment for entertainment in e hospitable homes of Toronto—Albert Hall, which minded one of Castle Garden, or Ellis Island, with s throng of people with baggage in hand.

Delegates came from all of the provinces of Canada, en from far-off Saskatchewan, from all the States of e Union, and from Indian Territory. Dr. Sheldon ckson was there to represent our faraway Alaska. he sixty colored delegates from the Southern States ere rather a new element in the Convention, of pecuar interest to the Canadians These were entertained uring the whole time of the Convention in the home f Mayor Urquhart and his friends. Two foreign visors were present—Rev. Carey Bonner, Secretary of he London Sunday School Union, and the Rev. Archbald Forder of Jerusalem, a missionary to the Arabs.

A chorus of several hundred voices, composed entirely f young men and women of high school age, rose, tier pon tier, at the back of the great platform. They had een trained by Mr. M. H. Fletcher, the distinguished horal leader of Canada, and their singing was greatly ppreciated.

In lower Massey Hall there was a Sunday School Exosition, under the direction of Dr. C. R. Blackall, of Philadelphia. In it were to be found the most up-toate books, pictures and appliances for Sunday School ork, also an interesting Jerusalem bazaar.

The Convention elected a Chairman, the Hon. Justice J. J. Maclaren of Toronto, who has been a member of he Sunday School since six years of age, and one of ts most earnest teachers and active promoters during ll of his adult life. The Toronto Globe says of him: 'During his incumbency, the Chair of the Association rill lose nothing in either efficiency or dignity."

The Convention affirmed the excellency of the International Lesson System, even while conceding to the minority the selection by the Lesson Committee of a series of so-called "Advanced Lessons" for adult classes, stipulating that they should be designated "optional," in order to distinguish them as something apart from the regular system. Strong testimony was given in favor of the uniform lessons.

The whole subject was opened by Bishop John H. Vincent, who was introduced as the man who conceived the idea of the uniform lesson. He generously stated that while the idea had originated with him, it was Mr. B. F. Jacobs who had developed it into an international system. He spoke of the "Advance Lesson" as a peril, and said: "Whatever may happen immediately, in the end there will be uniformity." He based this assertion upon the desirability of unity in Bible study in the home, in teachers' meetings, in Sunday School Conferences, etc. He advocated that the present lessons should be studied in advanced fashion, that gradation is not the need, but adaptation. He said: "Good people must become interesting." "Whatever fires a heart, makes a teacher."

When this question was subsequently discussed, Prof. Hamill said, from his experience and observation as a General Secretary of Sunday School work in all parts of the United States and Canada, he knew that one per cent of Sunday Schools want an Advance Course. He thought the evangelical, and not the academical standard, is best adapted to the Sunday School.

Dr. John Potts, Chairman of the Lesson Committee, stated that the English contingent of the Lesson Committee were not in favor of the Advanced Course. (Three years when a "Beginner's Course" was outlined by the Committee, the English part of the Committee requested the statement be published at the head of the official list: "Issued nnder the authority of American Section of the Committee, Optional." They will probably make the same request in regard to the Advanced Course). Dr. Potts spoke of the Uniform System as having been so blessed of God, that the Sunday School had become the great Evangelical Alliance of the Christian Church.

Rev. A. F. Schauffler, D.D., Secretary of the Lesson Committee, said, although he thought it might be best to provide an Advanced Course for those who desired to use it, he should continue the uniform system in his own Sunday School.

While little was said by platform speakers in advocacy of the Advanced Course, there was an aggressive element among the delegates which made itself so strongly felt that the matter was at last conceded, in the interest of harmony and good feeling.

The Convention emphasized teacher training. Two notable addresses were made on this subject; one by Rev. Wm. Douglas McKenzie, D.D., President of Hartford Theological Seminary, and of Hartford School of Religious Pedagogy. The other address was by Principal Falconer of the Presbyterian College, Halifax, Nova Scotia. Dr. McKenzie said, in part, that he hoped from this Convention would go back many leaders determined to lift up the Sunday School into the conscious possession and conscious and deliberate exercise of the sublime art of teaching. When men and women multiplied who would apply themselves to the close study of the Bible and the Gospel of Christ, we might hope to see generations of children saved from doubt, rebellion and sin, brought as naturally in early life to the faith of Jesus Christ as flowers in springtime from the seed into the sunlight.

Preceding the Convention several most helpful conferences were held under the direction of Mr. W. C. Pierce, Secretary of the International Teacher Training Department. In Mr. Pierce's report to the Convention he said that forty-three States and provinces are sustaining teacher training departments, in which twenty-two thousand eight hundred and forty teachers are enrolled.

The Convention recognized the importance of Sunday School training departments in theological seminaries. This subject was presented by Rev. George B. Stewart, D.D., President of Auburn Theological Seminary. He said in brief: There should be an increased endowment of the seminary to carry on a Sunday School training department, and that students should be instructed first in the history of the Sunday School, its ideals, its management and its curricula; second, to know the place of the pastor in the Sunday School, as the head of the pedagogical influence of the church; third, to know the whole of educational psychology; fourth, to know pedagogy in its relation to the Sunday School.

The Convention stood for the Bible in the public schools. It was the keynote of the address made on this subject by Pres. A. P. Taylor, Ph.D., of the James Milliken University, that as the secular school originated in the church, it should be held by it, and that the Bible should have its place there.

The Convention also declared for the enlistment of the home in Bible study. The so-called "Home Department" of the Sunday School was organized by Wm H. Duncan, Ph.D., and endorsed by the International Convention in 1881. There are now 403,960 members. Many Sunday School leaders have done well, but it might be conceded that Dr. Duncan has exceeded them all, as the home is the divinely appointed agency for evangelizing the world.

The Convention recognized the importance of reaching the negro race through the Sunday School. It gave emphasis to temperance teaching in the Sunday School. It recognized the relation of the Sunday School to Missions. Illuminating addresses were made upon this subject by Rev. E. E. Chivers, New York; Rev. Chauncey Murch, of Tuxor, Egypt; Rev. M. B. C. Mason. D.D., of Cincinnati, and Mr. Robert E. E. Speer and Rev. Archibald Forder, of Jerusalem.

Finally, the Convention recognized its great opportunity in subscribing upwards of seventy-five thousand dollars for use during the next triennium, 1905-1908. It will be used to forward Sunday School evangelism in Japan, Mexico, and among the colored people of the South in the United States.

Three places invited the next Convention in 1908—San Francisco; Hot Springs, Ark.; Louisville, Ky., and Winona, Ind. The strains of "My Old Kentucky Home," floating out over the Convention when the vote was being taken, won the day.

MRS. W. F. CRAFTS.

Endeavorers at Baltimore

HUGE Conventions are becoming an old story in the annals of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. Year after year thousands of young people from all sections of the country, have made pilgrimage to the city chosen for the year, as the meeting place of the delegates. This year, Baltimore, Md., enjoyed the honor of being the host, and on July 5th, fully ten thousand delegates arrived there, to take part in the proceedings. It was evident from the beginning, that there was no lack of enthusiasm. The novelty of the movement has worn off, but the sound, strong earnestness is maintained. The boys and girls who joined the Society at fifteen years of age, are now mature men and women of forty, but their love for the Institution has not decreased, and thousands who are younger than the organization, have entered it, and are gaining in it the help that their fathers enjoyed.

Only one sad note was sounded in the great Convention this year. The father and founder of the Society was absent through illness. Dr. F. E. Clark was sorely missed. It must have been a bitter disappointment to him not to be there to witness the field-day of the Institution that he started. Many were the prayers offered that God would be with him in his sickness, and comfort him in his sorrow.

It had been hoped that President Roosevelt would have been able to attend and address the Convention. His interest in the Society has been manifested on many occasions, and much was expected from his ringing utterances. The death of Mr. Hay, however, and the urgency of public business prevented his coming. But he sent a cordial letter of greeting, in the course of which he said:

"The work of your Society during the quarter of a century of its existence has been far reaching in its effect for good. To make better citizens, to lift up the standard of American manhood and womanhood, is to do the greatest service to the country. The stability of this government depends upon the individual character of its citizenship. No more important work can be done, important to the cause of Christianity as well as to our national life and greatness."

The progress of the Society was vividly set forth in the report of the General Secretary, Van Ogden Vogt. He said: "There are to-day 66,772 societies of Christian Endeavor; 49,339 are in the United States and Canada, and 17,433 in other lands. The ten denominations of the United States which have the largest numbers in the order named, are Presbyterian, Congregational, Disciples of Christ, Baptist, Cumberland Presbyterian, Methodist Protestant, Lutheran, Dutch Reformed, Methodist Episcopal and United Brethren. In Canada the Methodists lead, followed by the Presbyterians. The Young People's societies number 46,859, Junior, 17,838, and Intermediate 1,956. After removing from the lists the many societies in neglected districts that for any cause have been disbanded or withdrawn from our interdenominational fellowship, the net gain for the year has been 2,014." The international extent of the Society was shown by the following list of foreign countries with the number of societies organized in each: Africa, 224; Brazil, 62; Bulgaria, 15; China, 350; Finland, 19; Hungary, 13; Russia, 10; Sweden, 148; Great Britain and Ireland, 10,480; Hawaii, 54; India, 567.

THE BAD SON OF A GOOD FATHER

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS*

WE can imagine Manasseh writing some such statement as this: "When my father, King Hezekiah, died, I was twelve years of age. Grave duties awaited me as his successor, which, however, I would not be expected to assume until eighteen years of age. In the meantime, national affairs were administered by priests and elders, and I was left to ripen in wisdom and judgment, and in all kingliness. My boyhood's training under my father, always zealous for the right, left me no excuse for not knowing the path of virtue. But alas! I did not walk therein. At eighteen years of age I ascended the throne. I shudder at what I was then, as I now look backward upon my career. In no sense did I resemble my honored father. I was fully ripe for all sorts of iniquity. Nothing was sacred to me, not even the name and the Temple of God.

"Everywhere I had altars set up for the worship of Baal, and in the Temple court I erected two altars, one to Baal and the other to Astarte, as rivals to the great altars of sacrifices to the living God, and the sacred vessels of the Temple I had brought out, and dedicated to their divinities. I insulted God by having a statue of the licentious heathen goddess set up in his Temple. I so misled the people, that on nearly every house-top might be seen altars with smoking incense arising to false Gods. And the children of Jerusalem were sent out to gather sticks that their mothers might bake cakes to be offered to those same idols. The most fiendish act of mine was the setting up of that great image of Molech in the valley of Hinnom, on which I sacrificed my own children, burning them to death. That deed of mine resulted in the sacrifice of hundreds, if not thousands of children by their parents. Alas! alas!

"But a sudden check was brought upon my evil course. The Assyrian king swept down upon my kingdom, and with hooks in my jaws, and with fetters of brass upon my feet and hands, I was brought as a captive to Babylon. As I see it now, God in his mercy permitted that evil to befall me, for not only was I thus removed from further corrupting God's chosen people, but at Babylon I saw idolatry at its worst, and I came to loathe it. And I began to feel after God, if haply I might find him. I determined to lift my prayer to him, and look up for forgiveness and guidance. His ear was open to my cry. And the Spirit of God was upon the king to set me free, and so I returned to Jerusalem.

"The years that remain to me I propose to spend in trying to undo, as far as I may, the evil I have wrought, and in leading the people to worship the true and living God. I have already removed the abominable altars and images from God's Temple. The image of Molech has been cut down and broken in pieces at my command. The incense burning on the house-tops is growing less and less, and the children are no longer allowed to gather sticks for idolatrous use. My father's godly example is ever before me, and my prayer is: 'Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his.'"

Illustration and Application

1. How a Young Man's Sin Insulted God. The very worst thing about the sin of this young man, Manasseh, is expressed in the words, "he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord." That was even worse than dishonoring his good father. We can do nothing behind God's back. He never needs to say, "Show it to me." "All things are naked and open to the eye of him with whom we have to do." He exalted licentiousness into religion, as Mormonism and many other religions have done, notwithstanding he knew it was for that very sin the Canaanites had been driven out of Palestine. Sin is always as foolish as it is wicked, and this king was his own fool. No doubt he began in boyhood to indulge in the sins he did as king at eighteen, similar to the sacrilege of young Belshazzar, another crowned fool, who indulged in the sports that kill.

Harry de Courcy, visiting a zoological garden, saw with delight that the lion family had two cunning cubs, mouse colored, not larger than terrier dogs, with square, grave little faces, and bright, innocent blue eyes. Harry eagerly asked his father to buy him one for a pet. "But Harry," said his father, "those dear wee cubs will grow into ravening lions, like their big father, sleeping there in the next cage." "He is quiet enough," said Harry, pointing to the sleeping lion, "and when mine got big I would have him chained of course." To teach his boy a lesson, the father asked the keeper if he would sell one of the cubs to Harry. With a twinkle in his eye, he told Harry he could have one free if he would only take it away. Harry eagerly approached nearer to the cage to make a choice, at which the father lion, Prince Charlie, opened his eyes and leaped up with an awful roar, that it seemed would raise the roof. "Your cub would soon be as fierce as that," said the father to the boy, who was clinging to his father in terror, suddenly cured of all desire for a lion pet. The sins of boyhood that look so small and harmless are young lions that will grow to wild beasts in us if we take them to our hearts. How small and harmless a cigarette, a glass of beer, an oath, a foul story seem to be! But they will grow to be mighty habits that will hold us under their beastly paws.

A boy walked into a house-painter's shop one day and stood looking at the different colors. The painter had gone out for something, and the boy thought he would investigate a little. On the floor stood a keg containing fifty pounds of thick white lead, and close beside it was a small one filled with Indian red, all ready for the brush. In each was a wooden paddle for stirring up the paint. The boy took hold of the paddle in the smaller keg and held it up, watching the thin red stream which flowed from the end. Something startled him, and he turned quickly and let a single drop fall into the white lead. There it lay, one little red spot in the white mass. The boy was frightened and wanted to repair the mischief which he had done, but he went at it the wrong way. The red paint had not mixed with the white, for the white was too stiff. If he had taken a little stick or the point of his pocket-knife, he might easily have lifted it out, and there would have been no harm done. Instead, he tried to hide it by stirring it in. At first a little red streak followed the paddle round and round; soon it disappeared, but some of the lead was stained a very light pink. The boy stirred deeper and deeper, and at last he thought that the red drop was completely hidden. Every spot and streak was gone, and it seemed to him that it was all as clean and pure as ever. But the first thing that the painter said when he came in and looked at it was, "That keg of white lead isn't very white. I wonder what's the matter with it?" "Be sure your sins will find you out."

Seldom can a sin be long hidden even from our neighbors, and nowhere in God's universe can we hide a sin from God or from ourselves. A young doctor, in speaking of the days of his early practice, said to me once when, by a very slight modification of principle and honor, he might have easily made a rapid position for himself, but didn't, "You see, sir, I could not do it if I had to live with myself." Not only the eye of God but the eyes of conscience ever behold our every sin. Then the sin is photographed, and its picture may at any time in magnified intensity, be thrown upon the screen of memory. The assassination of Henry, Duke of Guise, was by the direct instigation of the King, Henry III. Guizot relates that the king contemplated with mingled satisfaction and terror the inanimate body of his mighty rival, who seemed to be merely sleeping, so little was he changed. "How tall he is!" cried the king. "He looks even taller than when he was alive."

Hidden sin is usually uncovered some day, even by our neighbors, and our foul hearts are seen in their true character. The false prophet, Mokarma, wore on his brow a silver veil, claiming that if the veil should be lifted, the light would strike men blind. But it was discovered that on his brow, instead of celestial lustre, were the white scales of a leper. The crown and royal robe of Manasseh covered a leper, who sought to pass off leprosy for holiness, by calling it worship. This brings us back again to the deepest guilt of sin, that it is always an insult to God. David in his penitential psalm (51) cried out to God "Against thee, thee only have I sinned and done this evil in thy sight."

THE KING OF ASSYRIA TOOK MANASSEH AND BOUND HIM WITH FETTERS

2. How a Young Man's Sin Dishonored His Father. If there were no God and no heaven, and no hell, it would seem that the son of a good man would be good if only to prevent sorrow and shame to his noble father. When the son of a bad man goes wrong he is to blame, for he should take warning from his father's sin and the sorrow it has brought; but the son of good parents is a hundredfold more to blame. When parents and children are loving and faithful to each other, the relation is "heaven begun below," but when a boy is like Manasseh, home is a "hell on earth." His father had died, but doubtless his mother lived to mourn his sins.

3. How a Young Man's Sin Corrupted a Whole Nation. "No man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." There is no one whose example is not likely to corrupt somebody else, and when a leader goes wrong many follow, like sheep, in the way of evil. "Like king, like people," was the rule in Israel as in other lands. Under a good king the people were fairly good, but they followed a bad king in evil yet more swiftly. Most boys and young men start in the wrong path because they are followers, rather than leaders. This warning of our lesson story against perilous following, is needed in every class of our Sunday Schools.

Cattle trains from Texas come thundering into Chicago, and the beasts are driven into strong pens. Hungry, thirsty, unaccustomed to human touch, it is almost impossible to lead or drive them to the slaughter-house. The foreman has a better way. If they will not be driven they will follow. A trained steer enters a pen, the bars are let down, and the trained steer leads his wild fellow steers out and down long lanes; then into the death alley they follow him in single file. But a door shuts just behind the leader, and he goes his way, while the others are left awaiting the death blow. "Like dumb, driven cattle," or rather like foolish led cattle, boys and young men yield to the "gang spirit," and follow the crowd to do evil, to their own destruction. This blind following of bad leaders is as foolish as it is wicked. Many a boy in his foolish, harmful habits is following some crooked calf-path, because he will not cut a straight path for himself by courageous will.

The example of Manasseh was like some of those deadly tenements in city slums, where physical and moral contagion spreads from one damp, dirty room to another, until the building gets eight or ten times the normal death rate, while pauperism and crime also spread from family to family.

4. Retribution in this world. The Old Testament pictures strongly what we, who believe in future punishment, also too little emphasize, that a part of the punishment of sin comes in this world. The New York Tribune cites the case of a young man who had borne the name of being the worst boy in his town, and had finally escaped from a reform school, and fled to California, who came back and voluntarily gave himself up for punishment "because his conscience branded him as an outlaw." Once, when Joseph Parker was asked if he believed there was a hell, he gave the startling answer: "I know there is; I've been there!"

*International Sunday School Lesson for July 30, Manasseh's sin and repentance, II. Chron. 33: 1-13. Golden Text: "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people," Prov. 14: 34.

IN MY COOL VERANDA NOOK

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Courtesy on the Road

AMONG the questions forced upon us by the summer, this one, of courtesy on the road, is likely to remain unsettled. Our land is covered by a twork of rails, and everywhere, swiftly moving elec- c cars afford people the opportunity to take jaunts d excursions over beautiful parts of the country at ght expense. Comparatively few can enjoy the luxu- of an eighteen hour ride from New York to Chicago, t most people can manage to pay teen or twenty cents for a pictur- que trip through an exquisite land- pe along the shore, or among the untains, or from town to town, ough some section of their State or ighborhood.

Alas, the trail of the serpent of torish ill-manners is over this delight- enjoyment. The heaviest blame st be laid on commercial greed. In other country save our own, are blic conveyances so crowded, that ople who pay for seats are compelled stand. It would seem obvious that en a car is full, no one else should allowed to enter it, and especially the case of the open cars, in which is uncomfortable and dangerous for men to stand, no one should be al- ved to enter after the car is full. the contrary, a car is not consid- ed full until all the sitting room is ed, all the available standing room sides, and until the steps are cov- ed by adventuresome men and boys o cling to their places like bees on e outside of a swarm. There is nei- er safety, comfort, nor decency in en cars so crowded.

Whether or not a tired man should ways resign his seat in favor of a man standing, is another unsettled int. Certainly a woman has no ht to make this demand. His kel pays for precisely the same ce that her's does. He may be ary or the reverse. He may be go- g a long distance, or may intend to ght at the next turning. A funny ry was told some time ago about an perious little lady who boarded a eet car in Boston. A gentleman, she supposed, persistently offered r his seat, which she as persistently clined to take. Finally, losing all tience, he brusquely pushed by her, claiming: "Good gracious, Madam, am not asking you to take my seat. am doing my best to pass you, so at I may get off this car at my rner."

Whether or not men should always sign seats and women accept them, nnot be settled by arbitrary enact- ent. One thing, however, must be lmitted, and it is that a man's dress enables him to and with comfort, while a woman's is very inconve- ent, and was never intended for the rough and tumble the road. As for the small boy, an important part his education has been shamefully neglected, if he is ffered to retain a seat while a lady stands. Every tle boy should be taught to rise, lift his cap, and of- r a seat to any woman or girl who has none. One ason why many men are awkward and ill at ease in ciety, is that they were never drilled in early child- od in the little cares and courtesies which go far to ake life worth living.

Whoever else may have a possible right to a seat, e small boy should regard it as his privilege to stand if there be occasion for it. Thoughtless fathers and mothers, who allow children who might easily sit on the parental lap to monopolize whole places, while elderly people stand, are very much to be blamed.

A Reader's View

Now that the prominent people have had their chance to speak in meeting, and declare what they anticipate from President Roosevelt in the next four years, a reader asks that she may be heard. She will explain herself, and we will listen to her:

> I am a little old woman, never heard of outside of her home. As I looked out over the broad field of the many-needed reforms, I thought "these ought ye to do but not to leave the other undone."
>
> As Dr. Swallow is almost alone, I want to say with him: "Denationalize the liquor traffic." Neither receive revenue from or grant license for the sale of intoxicants as a beverage. The contributors to your Symposium gave large space to Peace versus War. Right. But we do not want to forget that the liquor traffic has slain more men in the past year, than the terrible war in the Orient.

We have not room for the whole of our friend's good letter, but our hearts respond to her fully. The infamous traffic in liquor slays its millions. No computation can estimate the evil done by the influence of the saloon. We surely need an awakened public conscience here.

TWO PETS

Kitty Puss, now Kitty Puss, you are the dearest pet;
I love you more than tongue can tell, my heart on you is set.

Oh, charming little flower-maid, your mother says the same,
You are her very sweetest pet, and Kitty is your name.

The World Moves

A PARAGRAPH in the newspapers gave the information the other day, that Miss Florence R. Sabin has been appointed to the chair of Associate Professor of Anatomy in Johns Hopkins University. We have ceased to hear very much comment on the new woman. She appears to have been accepted as well-fitted, and quite worthy to take the place of the woman who preceded her. In every century, women, both of the old and the new type, have proved themselves capable, efficient, and quite able to do whatever duty bade them undertake. As years have passed, every step of woman's progress in the higher education, and in spheres of usefulness outside the home, has been stubbornly contested. In no field has the opposition been fiercer and harder to overcome than in the field of medicine. The brave women who were pioneers in the study of the healing art had every possible obstacle thrown in their way; were jeered at as immodest and unfeminine; their very morals were doubted, and when other weapons failed, that of ridicule was invoked.

. . .

Little by little, women have conquered success in this profession, so that now the woman doctor is not only tolerated but respected; she has equal rights with physicians of the other sex; is fitted for her place by a training as thorough as that given to men; meets other physicians, her brothers, in consultation, and wins large emoluments from her practice. Up to this time there has been an important reservation. It has been repeated and reiterated that women would never have the unerring accuracy and the iron nerve, as well as the dexterous touch of the surgeon. Pathology they might master, but not anatomy. Here it was supposed a line would be drawn which they could not pass. Miss Sabin's appointment to the Chair of Anatomy in Johns Hopkins is a tribute to her merits. She has proved herself able to do in her individual line anything which a man may do. The great university which has conferred this distinction upon Dr. Sabin, has also honored itself, and has paid a unique honor to women everywhere.

. . .

A great many young women are hesitating just now on the threshold of their future careers. They are in doubt what profession to choose. The day is passed when women contentedly stay at home, absorbed in domesticity, if they have talents which commandingly call them elsewhere. Home will always be woman's especial sphere. Nevertheless, not all women may remain there. As yet, there is no wonderful rush of cultivated women to the legal profession.

. . .

Women in the ministry are still exceptional. Very few churches desire a woman to be their pastor. The home missionary field does indeed offer opportunities to women who have been ordained to the same sacred functions with husbands and brothers. But more and more women of profound culture and true womanly nature, are looking forward to the medical profession as the one that will give them the largest opportunity to do good, to help others, and to become practical angels of blessing to their own sex. The world moves after all.

THE RESURRECTION OF MISS CYNTHIA

By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

CHAPTER XX.—Continued

"What is he like?"

"I don' know. I never thought anythin' 'bout it, nohow."

"God wants you to think about him, and to ask him for what you want," said Miss Cynthia, in a tone of joyful assurance. "He is our Father, and he loves us. Did you never think of that? Please think of it all the rest of to-day, and to-morrow, and ask him for something you want."

"If I c'd on'y b'lieve the' was any use of it," groaned the woman, dropping her rough head upon the table. "I want s' many things—w'y I can't begin to tell ye!"

"Don't tell me!" whispered Miss Cynthia.

She stooped and laid her arm timidly about the woman's shaking shoulders. "Just try and see," she urged, and was gone before the woman had done sobbing out her full heart before the Father-God, who spoke to her in the silence which followed the quiet closing of the door.

"I forgot to ask her to come to the meetings," reflected Miss Cynthia, as she tapped at another door; "but I don't believe she needs any spiritual dynamite."

Mrs. Schultz was vigorously scrubbing her small kitchen on hand and knees; but she stopped to welcome her visitor with a broad smile of welcome which brightened her round, red face into positive comeliness.

"I guess it's kind of damp in here," she said briskly; "but if you'll set on this square of carpet, Miss Day, the rest of the floor 'll be dry in no time."

"I came to ask you if you will come to the meetings in the Presbyterian Church," Miss Cynthia told her, with a growing sense of her mission weighing somewhat heavily upon her.

Mrs. Schultz giggled childishly. "Land! Miss Day, I've be'n a-ready, an' I've be'n converted agin," she said complacently. "You don't ketch me stayin' away from no meetin's. Las' winter me an' Dave went 'way over t' Spratt's Corners t' the Methodist r'vival. I've got r'ligion most ev'ry winter since I was fifteen."

Miss Cynthia's blue eyes opened wide. "What—becomes of it in the summer?" she asked.

"Blest if I know," responded Mrs. Schultz cheerfully. "It seems to kind of peter out, come spring, I can't keep it a-goin, somehow; but it's awful comfortin' while it lasts."

Miss Cynthia turned this difficult matter over in her mind for some minutes. Then she relinquished it with a sigh.

"Have you been in to see Mrs. Flannery lately?" she asked.

Mrs. Schultz shook her head with tightly compressed lips. "She's the dirtiest critter about her house I ever see," she said, smoothing down her clean calico dress with conscious pride. "I wish't they'd move away; that's what I wish. I was tellin' Dave Schultz this mornin', 'them Flannery's,' I says, 'is a disgrace to this neighborhood.' An' he says he c'n fix it so 't Tim Flannery 'll git kicked out his job at the factory. He ain't no good of a hand cause he's drunk most th' time; but she's 'nough to drive most any man to drink. She jaws so 't you you c'n hear her a mile ev'ry time he comes in the house, an' this mornin' she pitched a stove-lid at 'im. 'F Tim hadn't a be'n so drunk I guess 't he'd a-killed her right in her tracks. I shall be mighty glad when we've got shet of 'em. All of us neighbors feels the same way. Mis' Pell an' Sarah Brown an' Delia Burke, they'll tell you so if you ask 'em. An' her young'n's is the plague of the place, always a-snoopin' 'round under foot."

"What if you tried to help her?" asked Miss Cynthia.

"Help her!" Mrs. Schultz bristled with righteous indignation. "I guess I have helped her. She's always wantin' somepin off the neighbors. I've got so 't I hate the sight of her comin' int' the yard. I shet down on her borrin' fer good last week."

"It's religion to help people that need helping," said Miss Cynthia distinctly.

Her slow thoughts had finally marshaled the woman's correlated statements into their correct relation, and the solution was suddenly made plain to her. "If you won't do that, I'm afraid you'll have to keep on getting converted every winter," she added.

Mrs. Schultz stared. "What's Mis' Flannery got to do with my r'ligion?" she demanded. "She ain't got no more idee o' r'ligion 'an—'an——." Her eyes wandered vacantly in search of a simile. "She ain't got no r'ligion 't all," she concluded doggedly. "My! I was on m' knees most an hour in the anxious seats th' other night. You'd ought t' ha' seen me."

Miss Cynthia's eyes were fixed unseeingly upon the row of thrifty geraniums in Mrs. Schultz's one window, which shone clear and bright in the winter sunshine.

"I don't know how to say it as I ought," she said finally, "but I feel sure that if you would be kind to Mrs. Flannery and help her with the baby when she is tired, and—and not feel as if you hated her all the while—if you could love her—if you only could—that would be religion. And—and God would like it better than to have you sing any sort of a hymn.

"It is so clean and pleasant here," she went on, after a pause. "And you are so strong and comfortable looking. If she could learn to keep her house the way you do—if you could teach her; don't you think she "

Something in these halting words touched a spring of truth in Mrs. Schultz's ample bosom. "Well, I c'n try, anyhow," she said heartily. "I guess she doos git 'bout beat out with all those young'n's of hern. I remember mine us't to pester the life out of me when they was little. You're mighty good to come an' see me," she finished.

Miss Cynthia had risen. "I have done very little for other people," she faltered. "I—didn't understand that we must love one another and be kind. I am just learning."

Mrs. Schultz drew in her breath. "An' you've be'n a perfesser fer years, ain't you?" she asked wonderingly.

"Yes," acknowledged Miss Cynthia, reddening under the woman's candid eyes with a very real sense of shame. "That was all I was—a professing Christian."

"Land!" marveled Mrs. Schultz, as she stared after her departing guest. "I guess most folks think that's 'nough to keep 'em out o' hell."

CHAPTER XXI.

SPRING came early that year, first with rushing torrents of rain, which swept the desolate earth bare of snow and ice, then with the brave voices of robins calling aloud in the frosty mornings.

Cynthia Day heard the voices as one wrapped in a dream of hard-won peace, and kneeling before her window in the pink light of dawn, smiled into the veiled face of her future. She

Copyright, 1905, by Florence Morse Kingsley

CONTINUED ON PAGE 625

Washing Ginghams and Prints.

New prints should be washed in lukewarm water in which Ivory Soap has been dissolved. Avoid much rubbing. Rinse well, wring thoroughly and dry quickly, not in the sun. The secret of washing prints so that the colors will not fade is in doing it quickly and in using Ivory Soap.

There is no "free" (uncombined alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

Ivory Soap
99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

COMES A TIME

When Coffee Shows What It Has Been Doing.

"Of late years coffee has disagreed with me," writes a matron from Rome, N. Y., "it's lightest punishment was to make me 'logy' and dizzy, and it seemed to thicken up my blood.

"The heaviest was when it upset my stomach completely, destroying my appetite and making me nervous and irritable, and sent me to my bed. After one of these attacks, in which I nearly lost my life, I concluded to quit and try Postum Food Coffee.

"It went right to the spot! I found it not only a most palatable and refreshing beverage, but a food as well.

"All my ailments, the 'loginess' and dizziness, the unsatisfactory condition of my blood, my nervousness and irritability disappeared in short order and my sorely afflicted stomach began quickly to recover. I began to rebuild and have steadily continued until now. Have a good appetite and am rejoicing in sound health, which I owe to the use of Postum Food Coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Read the little book "The Road to Wellville," found in each pkg.

5% interest is the connecting lin between saving money and earning more money. Deposit your money here and we make it work for you, just as we have made other people's money work for them for the past 11 years.

We encourage you to save by allowing 5% interest, compounded semi-annually

for every dollar from the time it reaches us until withdrawn.

Your money is loaned only on improved real estate and the principal is not only safe, but part of it is paid back to us monthly with the interest.

No advance notice of withdrawal is necessary—he money is sent immediately when you want it.

Our free booklet gives the facts.

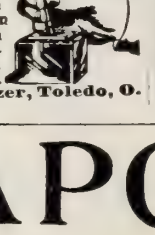
Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.

Dept. E, Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

AGENTS $20 to $50 weekly Entire or spare time Selling STANDARD SELF-Filling -Cleaning Fountain PENS

No ink dropper. No smeared fingers No "blow" No taking apart to clean No twisted rubber No valve or piston No awkward hump No complication FREE LESSONS in Successful Salesmanship make experience unnecessary. Write for new plan and do it NOW.

Standard Pen Co., 1506 Spitzer, Toledo, O.



Fills Itself instantly at any ink-well, THIS WAY.

ORNAMENTAL FENCI

25 designs, all stee Handsome, durable. Cheaper than a woo fence. Special induce ments to church an cemeteries. Catalogue fr

KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO., 445 North St. Kokomo, Indiana

"Well bred, soon wed." Girls who use SAPOLIO Are quickl married.

Last Weeks of Our Reduced Price Sale

SUITS, SKIRTS and JACKETS MADE to ORDER

One-Fifth Reduction from Former Prices

Perfect Fit Guaranteed or Money Refunded

3 Suits now $4.80
2 Suits now $9.60
9 Suits now $14.40
5 Suits now $20.00
4 Skirts now $3.20
7 Skirts now $5.60
0 Skirts now $8.00
2 Skirts now $9.60

Prices also reduced on Jackets, Silk Costumes, Rain Coats, etc.

This offer must be acted on at once, as it will be withdrawn as soon as our present stock of materials is sold.

Your choice of over 300 New York Styles of 300 fashionable materials.

Write for Catalogue and Samples TO-DAY.

We Send FREE to any part of the U. S. our Summer Catalogue, showing the latest New York Fashions, a large assortment of Samples of the Newest Materials, and simple directions for taking measurements correctly. No reduced price orders accepted after Sept. 9th.

To any lady sending us the names of two of her friends who would like our Catalogue and Samples, we will also send FREE a copy of the new booklet: "FASHION FADS IN NEW YORK."

NEW FALL CATALOGUE READY AUGUST 21

Our new Fall and Winter Catalogue will illustrate and describe the new styles we are receiving from abroad, in Suits from $6.00 to $25.00; Skirts $4.00 to $12; Cloaks $5.75 to $25.00, and Rain Coats $9.50 to $18.00. Positively no reductions allowed from the Prices in our Fall and Winter Catalogue. Write To-day for a selected line of samples and our New Fall Catalogue—sent FREE as soon as mailed to any part of the United States. Kindly specify the colors you prefer and whether you wish samples for a Suit, Skirt, Jacket or Rain Coat.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.
119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York
Mail Orders Only. Est. 17 Yrs. No Agts. or Branches.

Your Money Working at 5% PER YEAR

Always subject to your control if required for other purposes. Invested with which has been established 12 years, your savings will be in absolutely safe, conservative hands, free from speculation and earning for you

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO.

5 Per Cent. Per Year for every day in our care. Earnings remitted semi-annually by check or compounded. We have never paid less than 5% per annum on savings, distributing to holders of our certificates profits amounting to nearly three-quarters of a million dollars, while materially adding to our surplus.

Our business is conducted under

New York Banking Department Supervision

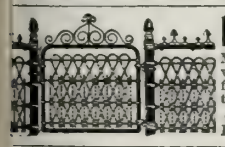
by whom it is examined each year.

Full particulars with letters of endorsement received from prominent clergymen, professional and business men will be sent to any one interested. WRITE TO-DAY.

INDUSTRIAL 5% PER ANNUM SAVINGS & LOAN CO.

Assets $1,750,000
Surplus and Profits, $150,000

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, N. Y. City



LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches. Address

COILED SPRING FENCE CO.
Box D Winchester, Ind.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Bread Institute of Domestic Science.
School motto: "We learn to do by doing."
Normal Course in one year.
Graduates readily find employment.
Good health at end of term.
Term begins Sept. 6th, 1905.
Catalogue Free. Worcester, Mass.

4% Write to-day for Booklet F. It explains "Safe Banking by Mail."
The Cleveland Trust Co., Cleveland, O.

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS
Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

LOANED FREE
32 page pamphlets of new and suitable Sacred Songs for Camp Meetings and Evangelistic Services.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 624

knew at last what life is: that to live is not merely a matter of bodies, or of houses, or of money; and knowing this she waited tranquilly, while the slow days rounded out the year of her allotted time.

Abby Whiton, hanging out freshly-washed clothes of immaculate whiteness amid the rigors of a March morning, heard the adventurous robins coaxing reluctant spring across the borderland of winter. She came in with nipped fingers to lay one of James Blake's thick letters beside the coffee-urn at Miss Cynthia's place.

"I guess we're a-goin to hev a reel early spring this year," she observed, gazing at her mistress with the keen eyes of a lover.

Miss Cynthia's small face, in the bright light of morning which streamed unhindered through the clear windows, shone with the radiant whiteness of a white flower in the sun. "I hope it will be an early spring," she said. "I should like——"

She stopped to look down at the letter, and her mouth quivered.

Abby Whiton jerked her elbows with an impatient sigh. Later she slammed the dish-pan down on the kitchen table with stony composure. "Ef that Jim Blake had a mite of the gumption he us't to hev, he'd a be'n on here to see her 'fore this time," she muttered. "I'll bet I'd be up-an-a-doin' ef I was sparkin'. Serve him right ef somebody else was to git her. I wonder what in creation he fin's to say in all them letters of hisn." She opened the door cautiously and peeped in.

Miss Cynthia was sitting idly by the hearth, her little feet on the fender; her blue eyes fixed upon the smouldering logs with a far-away smile. The large pages of James Blake's letter had fallen to the floor, and the big maltese cat was patting them experimentally in a staid, elderly fashion, faintly reminiscent of her remote kittenhood.

"Well, I mus' say!" snorted Abby, dealing the innocent cat a sound cuff, while she rescued the rustling pages. "You don't seem to keer much ef the cat doos git 'em! An' I'm sure I don' know why in creation I sh'd. I s'pose I'm a meddlesome ol' fool, anyhow."

Miss Cynthia laid hold of Abby Whiton's immaculate gingham apron. "Oh, Abby!" she said. Then she hid her face in the checked apron, as a child would hide its face on its mother's shoulder.

"Fer the lan's sake, Miss Cynthy!" expostulated Abby, in wild-eyed consternation; "don't ye git to takin' on now, er I shell hev to dash upstairs fer the camphire."

"He wants to come and see me the last week—in April," murmured Miss Cynthia from the depths of the checked apron, "and I—I don't know what to say to him."

"Well, I want-ta-know!" intoned Abby strongly. "I sh'd say that was easy es rollin' off a log. You either want t' see him, er ye don't. Come right down to it, I'll bet the ain't anythin' you want more. Ef I was you I sh'd write an' tell him that I'd be pleased to see him at m' res'dunce any day he'll name."

Miss Cynthia breathed a long sigh. "Perhaps that would be best," she said faintly. "I—can't tell him anything different."

"I sh'd say not!" chimed in Miss Whiton triumphantly. "Well—" she stopped short and eyed the small figure in the chair with critical eyes—"ef I was you, I sh'd git some new dresses made up, right off. The' ain't much time to lose. You want to look es well as ye kin when he comes. I'd git a-holt of Malvina Bennett, first off, 'fore anybody else cuts in ahead of ye."

"I don't think I—shall need any new dresses this spring," said Miss Cynthia.

One of the adventurous robins had settled in the old apple-tree just outside the window, and was carolling a lusty defiance to the large, wet snowflakes which were falling from the gray heavens like the soft folds of a bridal veil.

Miss Cynthia arose and walked over to the window. The robin darted away through the snow with a jubilant cry of courage.

"That's an awful good sign," said Abby Whiton, looking over her mistress' shoulder. "Not 'at I believe in signs; I never think nothin' 'bout seein' the moon over m' left shoulder, the way some foolish folks do. But I do like to see m' first robin high up, fer luck. An' ef he flies whilst you're a-lookin' at him, he'd ought to fly high. But ef you see him down on the ground, 'r ef he flies down, it's a sure sign of a come-down in the world. I never knew it t' fail. I guess you're a-goin' higher this year. I hope to goodness you be, anyhow."

Miss Cynthia turned suddenly and looked the old woman full in the face. "Am I too old to wear a white dress, Abby?" she asked.

"Not a mite!" cried Abby. "I like 'em myself fer most anybody. W'y land! Mis' Buckthorn had one made up las' summer, an wore it constant. I guess ef she c'n——"

"I want a real pretty one," Miss Cynthia went on thoughtfully. "It must be made of something soft and shining, with lovely lace; not stiff or ugly, like——. Oh, I do want to look pretty when—when he sees me. I want him to remember me—that way."

"I'll bet he'll remember the way you look well 'nough," said Abby, intent upon her own joyous, if unaccustomed, thoughts. "Don't you worry a mite 'bout that!"

So it came to pass that Malvina Bennett almost prayerfully cut into shining breadths of silvery, silken tissue. And Abby Whiton scrubbed the floors and shelves of her kitchen to a bridal whiteness, and examined her stores of pickles and preserves with a provident eye.

"I d'clare, this 'ere goods looks most like a weddin'-dress, come to make it up," ventured Miss Bennett in a timid whisper; this while she reverently applied a warm iron to the long seams of the skirt.

"It doos look consid'able like it," admitted Abby Whiton dryly. "But I guess it ain't fer you ner me t' say what 'tis fer."

But there were no other dresses made, and the white gown, when completed, was quietly folded away in the spare-room closet.

One day, when a warm, caressing wind was coaxing the last dead leaves from the old apple-tree in the garden, the Puffer twins brought Miss Cynthia a tiny bunch of arbutus buds, pink as a baby's palm and fragrant with the ineffable incense of resurrection. "We found 'em way up in the woods, all covered up with dead leaves an' pine needles," explained Edwina, "an we brought 'em to you because we love you."

And Miss Cynthia, stooping to kiss their round, freckled faces, with heartfelt gratitude was glad of all that happened in her past. It had been a strangely quiet, uneventful life, frozen and pinched and colorless in its earlier years, but crowned with innocent love and happiness at the last, and passing sweet like the wild fragrance of the arbutus.

"I have had everything to make me happy this year," she whispered to herself. "Everything, and I am not afraid!"

The still undercurrent of her thoughts lent a touching dignity and peace to her gentle presence. The poor and sick

CONCLUDED ON PAGE 626

Desserts
are easily and quickly prepared when Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is used. Always have a supply on hand and be ready for the unexpected guest. Send for Recipe Book, 108 Hudson Street, New York.

FLEISHER'S WORSTED YARNS

During the Summer months is the time to knit and crochet garments to wear next fall—sweaters, caps, shawls, capes, afghans, slippers, kimonos, etc.,—and garments for the children. Nothing else will so pleasantly relieve the tedium of these days. To reap the full benefit and pleasure, however, only the best yarns should be used.

The "Fleisher" Yarns combine all the excellent qualities required—evenness, elasticity and loftiness. The colors are bright and lasting. Your dealer should carry them.

A garment made of The "Fleisher" Yarns will stand the test of wear and wash.

Knitting Worsted	Germantown Zephyr
Dresden Saxony	Spanish Worsted
Shetland Floss	Ice Wool
Cashmere Yarn	Shetland Zephyr
Pamela Shetland	Spiral Yarn

Every skein bears the "FLEISHER" trade-mark ticket.

Free booklet, "A SHORT TALK ABOUT YARNS," mailed upon request.

"FLEISHER'S KNITTING AND CROCHETING MANUAL" mailed for four tickets from Ball "Fleisher" Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making all the new style and staple garments.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER
Department "B," PHILADELPHIA

MAKES GOOD COOKING A PLEASURE
BY USING THE
$2 and Up Easy to Clean O-HI-O Combination Steam Cooker—Baker

It Whistles.

Guaranteed to save 50 per cent. in fuel, labor, time and provisions. A whole meal, from soup to dessert, cooked over one burner on any style stove. No intermingling of odors or tastes. Desires you deliciously cooked. Easily digested, never spoiled, steaming hot meals. Thirty days' trial. Free for summer cottages. Graded for Canning Fruit.

Handsomely Illustrated Catalogue FREE.

$1 Cook Book for 4 cts. Postage.

WE WANT GOOD AGENTS.
OHIO COOKER CO., 727 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, O

BOMOSA COFFEE

BIG INCOMES
$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK
Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. Special Terms. Address Mr. P. B., care of
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO
P. O. Box 289, 31-33 Vesey St., New York

Four Little Bee Books FREE
All intensely interesting and helpful in a hundred different ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-day.
A. I. ROOT COMPANY, Medina, Ohio

Reduced Rates on Household Goods from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St., Chicago.

ARE YOU DEAF?
We have 25 kinds of Instruments to Assist Hearing. Sent on approval. Write for Catalogue.
WM. C. WILLIS & CO., 134 S. 11th St., Philadelphia

KRINOGALON is better, purer, more pleasant than soap for your toilet, but not dearer. Try it. Made by the NEW JERSEY MFG CO., Jersey City, N. J. Since 1860.

Agent's Outfit Free.—Rim Strainer, fits any pan. Agents make 5 to 7 dollars per day. Large catalogue new goods free. RICHARDSON MFG. CO., Dept. 6, Rochester, N. Y.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 625

in Inniafield—and they were many—touched her small hand with longing, and blessed her with dimmed eyes.

The teasing, persistent little pain had left her long since. But of this she thought but seldom. She thought only that it was—April, and she was not afraid.

The frogs were peeping loud in the distant marshes, and the willows wove golden arabesque against the warm blue of the sky the day that Rosalie Scott found Miss Cynthia once more walking on the upland road. The girl's face shone with a great and satisfying joy, which added the last charm to her vivid beauty.

"I have been lonely this winter," she confessed; "but I have learned my lesson, and—it is not too late. I want to thank you for—telling me what you did, Miss Cynthia."

"Has George Blossom come home?" asked Miss Cynthia directly, and read the answer to her question in the girl's happy eyes.

"It will be a long time, of course," Rosalie told her shyly. "But we shan't mind that now that we know we—love each other. Mother didn't like it very well at first. But father says George is just the sort of a man he likes. Of course, mother always thinks just as father does, and now she—we all—are very happy." The girl stooped to kiss Miss Cynthia, with all the warmth of her newly-learned lessons in loving.

The long, soft twilight of April had settled like gray, brooding wings over the village by the time Miss Cynthia entered her own door.

Someone was waiting for her in the cheerful circle of the fire-light. He turned at her approach, and looked at her with his kind, boyish, brown eyes. "Will you be angry with me because I came sooner than I said?" he asked. "I couldn't wait, dear."

"I—I am not angry," faltered Miss Cynthia. "I think I am—glad." But she shrank away from his eager arms in piteous, white alarm. "I—ought to have told you before!" she cried out, "I have been cruel—unkind!" Her voice broke into a tremulous wail of pain and longing.

"You must tell me now," he said in a low, determined voice. He took her cold hands in both his own and held them in a firm, warm clasp. "You will tell me—at once."

Then she told him, in short, disjointed sentences. "It was only—one year," she finished, "and the year is—almost over. I am not afraid—I am not afraid. But, oh, I want to live!"

He asked her one brief question—the name of the Boston physician—in a strangely altered voice. His face had grown stern and quiet. He bent his tall head and listened to her heart-beats, checking her startled exclamation with an authoritative word and gesture.

Then he drew her strongly to him. "Thank God!" he breathed. She felt a man's awful tears upon her upturned face. His lips brushed them away.

"You will not die," he said. "My little June Day—mine at last!"

. . .

Abby Whiton explained matters to Mrs. Nellie Ryan Cartright with joyous garrulity in the kitchen that same evening. "Yes, they're a-goin' to git married right off. The' ain't an airthly thing to hender. 'My!' I says to her, 'ain't it lucky you've got that hansome white dress all made up. I was thinkin' t' m'self all along it was just the thing fer a weddin'-dress.' But Miss Cynthy, she says she's goin' to be married in her trav'lin'-dress. It doos beat all! But I don't s'pose the doctor'd care ef she stood up in a gingham apern.

"What! didn't I tell ye that Jim Blake's a doctor? Well he is, an' makin' money han' over fist out West. I guess she'll git took keer of from now on. I never see anythin' like the way he looks at her. You'd think she was made out o' di'mun's. Of course I'm goin' West with 'em. Miss Cynthy says she couldn't git 'long without me, nohow."

In the privacy of the kitchen-pantry, by the flour-barrel, which had served as an effectual altar for her many fervent petitions, Abby Whiton returned thanks in a jubilant whisper. "She's in there a-laughin' with him this minute, O, Lord! I kin hear 'em, an' it doos soun' happy an' contented clear through. I'm s' glad an' s' thankful, I don' know what t' do, ner what t' say. But, O Lord, I guess mebbe, seein' 'at you understood all along how it was with Miss Cynthy, you'll understan' me now, without my sayin' no more. Amen!"

THE END

Missions in Eastern Asia*

NOT until the middle of the nineteenth century did the Church realize fully what a vast mission field was awaiting labor in Eastern Asia. Statisticians and travelers knew how enormous was the population of China, Mongolia and Japan, but those lands were practically closed against the Gospel, and no serious effort had been made to overcome the opposition to missionary work. Robert Morrison landed in China in 1807, and it was not until 1814 that he reaped the fruit of his labors by the baptism of his first convert. In that year the New Testament, translated into Chinese by Morrison, was issued, and five years later the whole Bible in Chinese was printed. This was followed by his dictionary, which contained 40,000 characters and cost $75,000 to produce. Seventeen years Morrison labored on these works, and when he went back for rest to his native land he had laid the foundation for missionary work in China. It is difficult to realize that all the vast work that has been done in that land, has been accomplished on the basis Morrison laid eighty years ago.

Nor does that fact represent the whole story. For a long period after Morrison had prepared the way, political difficulties arose which hindered the building of the fabric on the foundation that had been laid. Not until 1865, when Dr. George Moule went out and Hudson Taylor organized the China Inland Mission, was a beginning really made. Hudson Taylor has told us that in 1853 there were in that enormous population of three hundred millions, little more than three hundred converts. In the forty-six years since Morrison landed, no more progress than that had been made; but the pioneer work had been done, and from that time to this the harvest has been glorious. Nearly 200,000 professing Christians are now connected with the Protestant missions in China and the numbers are increasing every year. Even Hunan, the last province to open its doors, is now occupied, and there is promise of a widespread blessing in the near future. This, too, is no mere formal acceptance of Christianity. The converts are genuine. Tried in the fires of persecution, they have proved true, and have sealed their faith with their blood.

In Japan, progress has been still more remarkable. It is also most gratifying to our national feeling. It was to Americans that the first beginning of vigorous mission work was due, Williams, Hepburn and Verbeck, sent out by American societies, were the pioneers. They dared not go as missionaries, but went as teachers of English in the public schools. This was in 1859; and, in 1860, Goble of the American Baptists, and, in 1871, Greene, Gulick and Davis of the American Board, followed and took up the work. Thus, in less than half a century, the whole fabric of Japanese Christianity has been built up. The number of communicants is nearly fifty thousand, and there is a bright prospect of a large increase in the near future. The work has been full of difficulty from the beginning. There have been times when missionaries have been almost in despair. The Japanese youth were easily convinced of the falsity of Buddhism, but they lapsed into agnosticism instead of accepting Christianity. At times, it seemed, as if they would become a nation of infidels, but the goodness of God prevailed, and light has again and again broken out of the darkness That so many of the higher ranks, like Admiral Togo, have openly avowed themselves Christians, is a most hopeful sign. The war first with China, and now with Russia, has hindered mission work, but even this has its bright side. The cordial sympathy of Christian nations, and the opportunity of distributing Christian literature in the army, has had a promising result.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for July 30. Micah 5: 2-13; Ps. 22: 27, 28.

A Nation Mourns John Hay

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 615

sad and more remarkable for its international significance, was occurring in London. As a testimonial of the regard of the people of Great Britain, a memorial service was held in St. Paul's Cathedral. All that is distinguished in the political, social and literary life of the country was represented. The King sent his aide, the Earl of Denbigh. Among those present was Mr. Hay's daughter, who had gone abroad when the Secretary was apparently on the road to complete recovery. The service was full choral. After an organ prelude the choir entered, singing. Prayers were read for the bereaved family, and "Lead, Kindly Light" was sung. The Archbishop of Canterbury then gave the benediction. The great gathering slowly dispersed, feeling that the world at large had lost a friend. Here and there a figure still knelt in prayer, until the lights on the altar one by one went out.

Taylor University's Need

President Winchester, of Taylor University, Upland, Ind., writes to this journal:

"The year just closed has been a very prosperous one, only we have been cramped by poverty. We are confronted now by a very great need. Because of the failure of natural gas, we must have a steam-heating plant. If we do not get it before the cold weather comes on, I do not see how we can possibly keep the school open. It will cost us $5,000. The trustees have voted to put it in at once, and trust the Lord and our friends to furnish the money. I address myself to every reader of your paper, and beg them, with the greatest urgency I can employ, to send a gift at once, or a pledge of an amount to be paid within the next three or four months.

"I am positive that there is no way in which money can so surely be used for God's glory, as by putting it in this institution at this particular time. Let all the friends of Christian learning rally to the support of Taylor University. Any one who wishes to contribute can send the money to me, or THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will receive it and forward it.

MELLIN'S
For the Baby
FOOD

Colic and stomach troubles are avoided by using Mellin's Food for the baby. Mellin's Food being soluble, easily digested and very nourishing, Mellin's Food babies are free from colic and stomach troubles. Try a bottle of Mellin's Food and prove it to your own satisfaction.
We will send you a sample of Mellin's Food free of charge.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

CHANGED HUSBANI
Wife Made Wise Change in Food.

Change of diet is the only way to rea relieve stomach and bowel trouble.
A woman says:
"My husband had dyspepsia when we w married and had suffered from it for seve years. It was almost impossible to find a thing he could eat without bad results.
"I thought this was largely due to the u of coffee and persuaded him to discontinue He did so, and began to drink Postam Fo Coffee. The change did him good from t beginning, his digestion improved; he suffer much less from his nervousness, and when added Grape-Nuts food to his diet he w soon entirely well.
"My friend, Mrs. —— ——, of Vicksbu (my former home) had become a nervo wreck also from dyspepsia. Medicines h no effect, neither did travel help her. On n last visit home, some months ago, I persuad her to use Grape-Nuts food. She was despair, and consented. She stuck to it un it restored her health so completely that s is now the most enthusiastic friend of Grap Nuts that I ever knew. She eats it with crea or dry, just as it comes from the package keeps it in her room and eats it whenever s feels like it.
"I began eating Grape-Nuts food, myse when my baby was two months old, and don't know what I should have done witho it. My appetite was gone, I was weak a nervous and afforded but very little nouris ment for the child. The Grape-Nuts food, which I soon grew very fond, speedily set this right again, and the baby grew healthf rosy and beautiful as a mother could wis He is two years old now and eats Grape-Nu food himself. I wish every tired young moth knew of the good that Grape-Nuts would her.
Names given by Postum Co., Battle Cree Mich.
There's a reason.

The Wonderful new self-heating
Thermalite Ba
Better than a hot water bag because it gives a dr even, long-continued, vitalizing heat at just the rig degree of temperature. It also stores heat, which c be instantly turned on at a hour, day or night, summer or wi ter. Will last for years without r filling or renewing of contents. Wi not crack or burst at the seams, scal ing the user, as so often happe with the hot water bag. Perfecte in Germany. Eight recent Europea highest awards.

John Wanamaker says: "The will be a Thermalite bag in eve home in the land."
No. 1, gives heat 3 hours—$1.5
No. 2, gives heat 6 hours—$2.0
No. 3, gives heat 8 hours—$2.5
No. 4, gives heat 10 hours—$3.0
Money back if not satisfactory. We deliver pos paid on receipt of price if the druggist cannot suppl you. Free descriptive book.
THE THERMALITE CO., 164 Elm Street, New York, U. S. A

No Money Require until you receive and approve of yc bicycle. We ship to anyone on TEN DAYS FREE TRIA
Finest guaranteed 1905 Models $10 to $2
with Coaster-Brakes & Punctureless Tir 1903 & 1904 Models of Best Makes..... $7 to $1 500 Second-Hand Wheel All makes & Models good as new $3 to $
GREAT FACTORY CLEARING SAL
RIDER AGENTS WANTED in each town at g pay. Write at once for catalog and Special Of TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILE
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H 71 CHICAG

GINSENG
Culture is the "Only way" t make big money on little capital. Large incomes from small gardens. Pays 800 pe cent. profit in 4 years. One-quarter acre is worth $10,000 and yields more revenue than a 25 acre farm. Demand is heavy Supply is light. Five years' experience. Sales now exceed $12,500. I furnish pure American nursery stock at low prices; show you how, save you money and Pilot you to Success. Write to-day or to-night.
T. H. SUTTON, 530 Sherwood Ave., LOUISVILLE, KY.

Corns removed by the safe, sure and quick method—A-CORN SALVE. No cutting, no risk of blood-poisoning. 15c at your druggist's or by mail.

Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

GINSENG
Detailed advice and special instructions regarding its culture. It will pay you to investigate our practical and common sense methods. We supply choicest American Roots and Seeds, at most reasonable prices, help you towards successful cultivation, and pay you highest market price for your Dry Roots. Send stamp for illustrated booklet "E."
NORTH AMERICAN GINSENG CO., Station C, Louisville, Ky

DEATH TO HEAVES Guaranteed

NEWTON'S Heave, Cough, Distemper and Indigestion Remedy. A veterinary specific for wind, throat and stomach troubles. STRONG RECOMMENDS. $1.00 per can, of dealers, or Express prepaid
THE NEWTON REMEDY CO., TOLEDO, OHIO.

STARK FRUIT BOOK
shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's, Louisiana, Mo

The Boy's Bay View Camp

PASSENGERS on the great white steamers that ply on Long Island Sound between New York and the Connecticut towns, often hear when passing an island at the mouth of the Noroton River, bursts of lively music and catch glimpses of boys drilling by the beach. If they should stop for an afternoon, they would find that they had witnessed but one of the many interesting phases of the life of Bay View Camp for boys. The camp has now been in existence for about twelve years, and has steadily increased in popularity and usefulness. Bay View Island is halfway between Stamford and Darien. It is on the prettiest part of the Sound. The neighboring shores are dotted with the summer residences of wealthy citizens of New York, and the blue waters about the island are whitened by the sails of yachts. The boys have tennis courts, a ball field, croquet and cricket. They live in tents, and that they thrive under the open air conditions, is proved by the fact that the camp director has no need to call a physician for his charges.

All manly pastimes are encouraged. The tents are pitched near the Bay, where a raft is moored and limits set, marking the distance beyond which the boys are not allowed to bathe. When the boys have become accomplished swimmers, the vicinity of the raft is often the scene of exciting water sports. There are a number of boats belonging to the camp, including a fine launch, The Bay View. The lads are taught both to row and sail, under competent instructors. A tall tower is used as a lookout, and here the boys spend many an afternoon, spyglass in hand, watching the yacht races that take place frequently in the waters to the south.

A GLIMPSE OF BAY VIEW CAMP

There are three large buildings on the island—a mess-hall, that can be used for meetings; headquarters building, and a commissary building.

The veterans from the nearby Soldiers' Home come frequently to watch the boys at drill, and entertain them with thrilling war-time stories. Religious services, entirely unsectarian in character, are held every Sunday morning, and, whenever convenient, the boys march to some neighboring place of worship, accompanied by their band. This summer the boys are to have a series of stereopticon lectures on Europe. They will be given by Rev. Ezra T. Sanford, formerly of Hackensack, N. J. Mr. Sanford is one of the regular lecturers of the New York Board of Education. The boys come for the most part from New York, and the entire cost for a week at the camp is only $3. If one wishes to stay eight weeks, he can do so by paying $20 in advance. Gen. A. C. Kenyon has charge this summer, as in years past, and his kindness and thoughtfulness are greatly appreciated by the 9,000 boys who have been under his care since he took charge. Any one interested in this great work for boys, can receive further information by addressing Gen. Kenyon, 295 East Eighth Street, New York.

Sin on the Throne

By MRS. M. BAXTER

DURING the fifteen years of Hezekiah's life granted to him in answer to his prayer, his son Manasseh was born to him, and he was only twelve years old when he came to the throne (II. Kings 21: 1-15). God can use a child, as he did Samuel, but only a child who will obey. And Manasseh was not such a one. The words of the Preacher are singularly appropriate in this case: "Woe to thee, O land, when thy king is a child" (Eccles 10: 16). Manasseh was not old enough to fully appreciate his father, and probably he fell into the hands of flatterers and evil advisers. But the fact that Isaiah was probably still living when he came to the throne, and that Isaiah had been so intimately connected with his father Hezekiah, shows that he was not without opportunity to learn the ways of God. The worship of Jehovah was general in his father's reign, and the way of righteousness outwardly was taught and practised generally. He must have been accustomed to godliness at home. But, if an old tradition, accepted in very early times, has any right, that the aged Isaiah was "sawn asunder" in the days of Manasseh, it goes to prove that in the early part of Manasseh's reign he set himself against God in persecuting his messengers.

Thus this unhappy young king must have sinned against light. He had not, like the young king Joash, an adviser who took the place of father to him; but he was old enough to have perceived the real godliness of both his father and Isaiah, and he must have wilfully hardened his heart against God. Even the wicked kings of Israel, "Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin," and Ahab, "who sold himself to work wickedness," are not spoken of with the same terrible severity as Manasseh. When his grandson Josiah came to the throne, although like unto him, "there was no king before him that turned to the Lord with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, according to the law of Moses, . . . notwithstanding the Lord turned not from the fierceness of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled against Judah, because of all the provocations that Manasseh had provoked him withal" (II. Kings 23: 26). And when Nebuchadnezzar came and took Jehoiakim captive, and God sent an allied army against Judah to destroy it, we read, "Surely at the commandment of the Lord came this upon Judah, to remove them out of his sight, for the sins of Manasseh, according to all that he did: and also for the innocent blood that he shed" (II. Kings 24: 1-4).

And he corrupted the people; Manasseh seduced them to do more evil than did the nations whom the Lord destroyed before the children of Israel. His own sin was awful in the extreme. But that he should be so Satanic as to drag down with him to perdition the people over whom he reigned was more terrible still, and his unspeakable guilt in putting an idol in the very temple where was the presence of God was the grossest insult to the Most High. Why did not God smite such a man into instant and utter destruction? He would show the infinity of his mercy by saving even such a sinner!

LISTEN!
VERY HOT SUN
VERY HOT IRONS
VERY HOT WATER damage and fade delicate fabrics—besides, isn't your COMFORT worth considering?
Pearline
washes perfectly in COLD or LUKEWARM Water without Rubbing or other Soap. PEARLINE makes Cool washing for hot weather

WOODBURY'S
SOAP CREAM POWDER
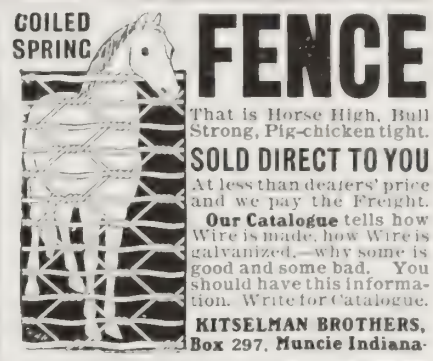
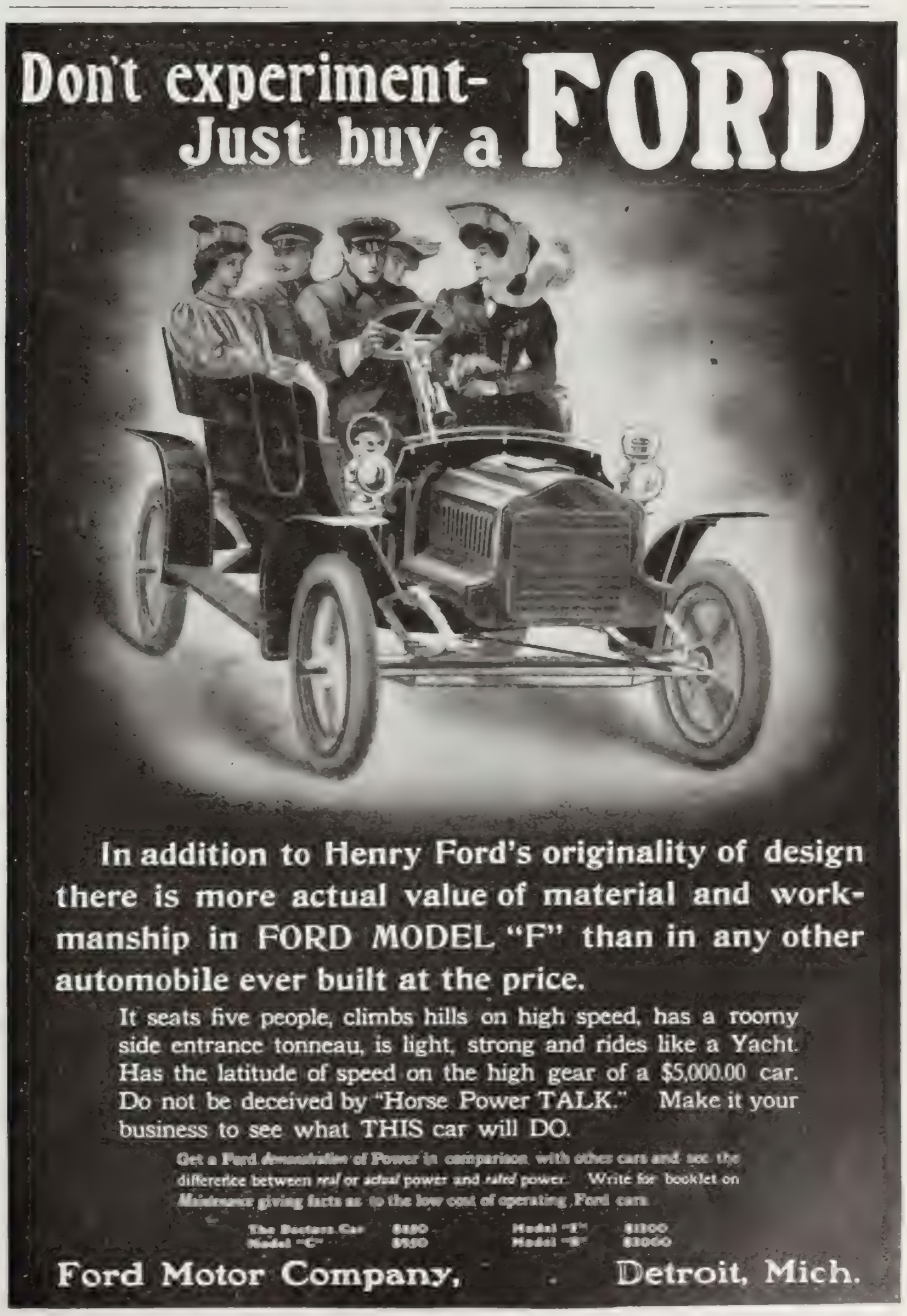
DENTAL CR
FOR THE FACE
You receive an impression of quality and efficiency in the very first contact with Woodbury's Facial Soap. Hygiene knows no safer soap for cleansing and beautifying delicate skin.
Send 10 cts. for samples of all four preparations.
The Andrew Jergens Co., Sole Licensee, Cin. O



COILED SPRING
FENCE
That is Horse High, Bull Strong, Pig-chicken tight.
SOLD DIRECT TO YOU
At less than dealers' price and we pay the Freight.
Our Catalogue tells how Wire is made, how Wire is galvanized,—why some is good and some bad. You should have this information. Write for Catalogue.
KITSELMAN BROTHERS,
Box 297, Muncie Indiana



Don't experiment-
Just buy a FORD
In addition to Henry Ford's originality of design there is more actual value of material and workmanship in FORD MODEL "F" than in any other automobile ever built at the price.
It seats five people, climbs hills on high speed, has a roomy side entrance tonneau, is light, strong and rides like a Yacht. Has the latitude of speed on the high gear of a $5,000.00 car. Do not be deceived by "Horse Power TALK." Make it your business to see what THIS car will DO.
Get a Ford demonstration of Power in comparison with other cars and see the difference between real or actual power and rated power. Write for booklet on Maintenance giving facts as to the low cost of operating Ford cars.
The Runabout Car $450
Model "C" $550
Model "F" $1000
Model "S" $1000
Ford Motor Company, Detroit, Mich.

Members American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association, Chicago.
Canadian Trade supplied by The Ford Motor Co. of Canada, Ltd., Walkerville, Ont.

Wherever you go you will find

AT ALL
FOUNTAINS

Coca-Cola

5¢

to refresh the parched throat, to invigorate the fatigued body, and quicken the tired brain

MASSENGALE - ATLANTA

MAGAZINE NUMBER

CHRISTIAN HERALD

COPYRIGHT 1905 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JULY 26, 1905

VOL. 28 NO. 30. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

SEE PAGE 646

Russia's Reform Movement---A Monster Meeting in Odessa to Demand a Constitutionl Government

OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

Yonkers, N. Y. What regiment, during the Civil War, carried an eagle into battle?

The Eighth Wisconsin. The eagle was called Old Abe, and in action he was set free and would fly just above the line of battle of his regiment. He was brought back to Wisconsin after the war, and lived to the age of twenty years. He was overcome at the fire in the Capitol at Madison, Wis., March 26, 1881. He was stuffed, and is now in the War Museum in Washington.

Mr. A. Meachen, Minneapolis, Minn., writes:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is one of the best papers published. Why I like it so much is because it urges evangelism and philanthropy, and gives so many excellent articles and illustrations of the same. It deserves to be in every household. I hope it may be found more and more in our Y. M. C. A., and our Y. W. C. A., and in all our public institutions, libraries, reading rooms, railway station waiting rooms, and prisons.

M. A. McK., Seven Mile, O. What were the deliverances of Londonderry and Lucknow mentioned in the Sunday School Lesson for July 2?

Londonderry is a city in the North of Ireland on the river Foyle. In 1613 it was settled by Protestants. From April 18, 1690, the Protestants of the North defended themselves within its walls against the army of James II., until the siege was raised in August of the same year. Lucknow is a city of Hindustan. In 1857 the city was besieged four months during the Sepoy rebellion. It was defended by only 300 British soldiers, and was delivered by Gen. Havelock, who fought his way through the besieging army, defeating them in eight battles outside the walls.

E. D., Morrisville. Did Kosciusko, the Polish patriot who fought in the American War for Independence, die in this country?

No; he returned to Poland in 1786, and took part in the war of 1792. Later, he settled at Solothur, Switzerland. He died in 1817, by his horse falling over a precipice.

E. S. P., Franklin, Vt. I know hunters and trappers who make a business of catching fur-bearing animals each season. Now, if they should leave their traps unset on Saturday, and set them again on Sunday, they would lose two days every week, which would be a big loss to them, as the season is so short. Would it be wrong for them to leave their traps set over Sunday; and Sunday morning, (leaving their guns at home), quietly go around to their traps to put out of misery anything that might be caught there?

It would be a stupid subterfuge. "Thou shalt do no work," is very clear and explicit, and we do not see how you can reconcile your suggestion with the commandment at all.

Anna G., Springfield, Mass. Will you kindly inform me through THE MAIL BAG, whether Paul Laurence Dunbar, the negro poet, is still living, and whether he has written other works besides his volumes of poems?

We believe he is still living, although in poor health. Mr. Dunbar has written a number of books, among which are The Fanatics, Folks from Dixie, The Uncalled, The Strength of Gideon, and The Love of Landry. All published by Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.

Patton C., Albany, N. Y. How can I gain information regarding the work and workers of the University Settlement Society of New York?

Write to the Secretary of the University Settlement, Mr. Seymour L. Cromwell, 36 Broad Street, New York City, asking for an annual report.

G. D. D., of Hampton Falls, N. H., writes:

Perhaps the critics of the New Jersey father who held his son's fingers over a burning match, would have been better pleased if, being neighbors, their homes had been burned through the unchecked propensity of that incipient fire-bug. Per contra, one other father has never ceased to be thankful to the kind Providence that suggested that same treatment more than thirty years ago. To many a young child words are vain things.

The New Jersey father in question was undoubtedly carried away by his excessive zeal. A reasonable punishment, suited to the children's age, would have been proper and unobjectionable, but the application of fire to a helpless child, however well meant, was too heroic a remedy.

——, Corona, L. I. When and where was Rev. William Henry Milburn, the blind chaplain of the Senate, born, and when did he die?

He was born in Philadelphia, Pa., September 26, 1823. He died April, 11, 1903.

C. F. N. A., Chicago, Ill. Can you tell me what nationalities occupy the district in New York called the East Side?

The lower East Side, the downtown district, is mostly populated by Jewish people. Dividing them in groups, according to the countries from which they came, fifty per cent. are Russians, twenty-five per cent. Galicians (generally known as Poles), eighteen per cent. Roumanians, and seven per cent. Hungarians.

Copyright, 1905, by Underwood & Underwood

A CROWD OF EMIGRANTS STARTING FROM NORWAY FOR AMERICA

At the present time, when the Swedish-Norwegian troubles are attracting attention, a very heavy Norwegian immigration to this country is going on. Our photograph shows a familiar scene on "sailing day," at the seaport of Christiania.

U. C., Brookfield, N. Y. What is the meaning of the term maelstrom?

It means literally "grinding stream." It is a famous whirlpool between Moskenaso and Mosken, two of the Lofoten Isles. It is sometimes called the Moskenstrom.

S. J., Butler, Pa. Where is lapis lazuli found? Is it considered a precious stone?

It is found in crystalline limestone, schistose rocks, and in granite, in Siberia, Tibet, Chile, etc., etc. The best specimens come from Bokhara. While it has been employed in works of art, such as vases and shrines, it could hardly be rated as a precious stone in the ordinary sense. It is valued chiefly for its beautiful blue color.

Fred J. M., Hastings, Ia., writes:

I was pleased to see considerable space devoted in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to "Sunday recreation, etc.," as I attended a Chautauqua yesterday (Sunday) and had that on my mind. Most of the people in control are Christians, and the aim of the Chautauqua, as I understand it, is to raise the intellectual, moral and spiritual standards. But I have reference to the sale of everything on the grounds just as it is during the week—cigars, lemonade, peanuts, candy, popcorn, etc. These are not necessaries. This might be expected at a gathering other than religious, but is it a good influence for children of Christian parents, and for parents themselves? If this is right, it cannot be wrong to sell groceries or dry goods. The tendency is not toward the sanctity of the Sabbath.

It is quite probable that such things may be outside the control of the Chautauqua managers. Consequently, criticism may be undeserved.

H. P., Wolfboro, N. H. What is the Kremlin, referred to in the Russian press despatches?

Kremlin, in Russian, means the citadel of a city; specially applied to the ancient citadel of Moscow.

Peter McC., New York. Where is "Fort Nonsense," and when was it built and for what purpose?

"Fort Nonsense," was the popular name of a defensive work on the hills overlooking Morristown, N. J., projected by Washington to keep his discouraged and famished army from revolt during the winter of 1779-80. The soldiers worked upon its construction until relief supplies came. The Washington Society of New Jersey erected a memorial stone on the site of the earthworks in 1888.

C. E., Dodgeville, Wis. Was the John who wrote the fourth Gospel, the same John who wrote the three epistles, and Revelation?

Many volumes have been written on both sides of this question, without reaching an authoritative conclusion. The difficulty arises from the difference of literary style. The Revelation is written in a rugged, harsh style, while the Gospel is refined, polished Greek. At the same time, the evidence is strong for the identity of authorship. The claim in the Gospel itself that it was written by John, is unmistakable, and the same claim is made in Revelation. It is possible that after a dreary imprisonment, and in old age, the A[p] may have been less careful of his [s] and may have been embarrassed b[y] difficulties of describing the things he [w].

A. L. P. Lunenburg, N. S., writes:

I noticed that a subscriber says he appre[s] your paper so much that he never allows one [o] destroyed. I appreciate it so much that I [v] mine away almost as fast as I get them. So [m] to the jails, some to help fill a box at the ra[y] station, some to India, to missionaries who [e] asked for good papers, some to the shipping [e,] where the W. C. T. U. send papers to be giv[en] the fishermen and sailors, and those that co[n] articles on the India famine orphans I use f[or] quarterly missionary meeting of my Bible [s] girls, who are supporting a little girl at the [e] byterian orphanage at Rutlam, C. I. I could use of a great many more.

J. O. Martin, Chambersburg, Pa., wr[ites]:

Seeing on a recent visit to Canada, the [m] leaf everywhere in evidence, we inquired it[s] nificance, and were told that it is the cou[n] emblem, and, further, that the maple tree i[s] mortalized by a national song or anthem. W[e] can the song be obtained?

Possibly some Canadian reader ma[y be] able to answer Mr. Martin's inquiry.

J. R., Watervliet, N. Y. Was Thomas Pain[e an] atheist or an infidel?

Infidel, sceptic, and scoffer he was f[rom]
the Christian standpoint, but not athe[ist]; for in the very opening passages of his [best] known book he declared: "I believe in [the] God."

Mrs. Susan B., Salem, Mass. Was John Nea[l the] poet a Quaker? Where was he born, [and] where did he die?

John Neal was a member of the Soc[iety] of Friends, but left it when he was a yo[ung]
man. He was born in Portland, Me. (t[hen] Falmouth). He died June 21, 1876.

E. N. T., Jefferson, Miss. What became of L[a-] rus after Christ raised him from the dead?

There are many traditions, but none [of] them reliable. One is that the Jews for[ced] him and other Christians into an o[pen] boat on a stormy night, in the expectat[ion] that the boat would be swamped; bu[t it] was miraculously protected, and drifte[d to]
Marseilles, where Lazarus became a bish[op].
Another is that he was Lazarus of [the] parable, who died and was carried [by] Abraham's bosom. This is absurd, [as] for the former tradition there is no e[vi-] dence. Nothing is known of him beyo[nd] what John tells us in his Gospel.

E. C. G., Columbiana, O. Where is the land of S[i-] nar, mentioned in Genesis, 10 and 11 chap?

It was the ancient name of the coun[try] through which the Tigris and Euphra[tes] rivers ran to the sea. It was known la[ter] as Chaldea or Babylonia.

Subscriber, Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. How can a p[er-] son who has striven for years to feel a nearn[ess] to Christ, gain faith?

Prayer and communion with him, are t[he] true methods. Read the Gospels mo[re] than the epistles; dwell on his life a[nd] character; think of his promise to be wi[th] you always; ask for the Holy Spirit [to] show him to you. The more you try [to] please him, the nearer you will feel hi[m] to be to you.

Miscellaneous

S. S. R., Elsberry, Mo. It is simply the Fren[ch] form of spelling the word.

Mrs. S. Q., Cattaraugus, N. Y. It would see[m] to be advisable to move, as you propose, so th[at] you can be convenient to church. Close soc[ial] and spiritual contact with God's people, is a gre[at] comfort and pleasure, especially in old age.

W. C. W., Mountain, Ont., Can. Marriages b[e-] tween those related by ties of blood are disco[ur-] aged, for the reason that the offspring of su[ch] unions frequently prove degenerate, i. e., intell[ec-] tual or physical weaklings. There is no Bib[lical] prohibition relative to such a union as you me[n-] tion, but it comes within the category of inadv[is-] able marriages.

Mrs. C. M. B., St. Paul, and several others ha[ve] asked why the Women's Anti-Mormon Memori[al] to Congress is called a "Memorial" instead of [a] petition. Webster gives one definition of th[e] word as follows: "A written representation [of] facts made to a legislative or other body as th[e] ground of a petition, or a representation of fac[ts] accompanied with a petition."

Reader, Salem, N. J. Napoleon was nominally [a] Christian, of course, as far as being an avowe[d]
"son of the Church," and publicly accepting [the] doctrines are concerned: but that was all. N[o] where in his letters or his published life, is ther[e] any evidence that he ever realized the tru[e] meaning of Christianity, or accepted Christ [as] his Saviour.

NEW YORK, JULY 26, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

WORKING-GIRLS OF THE DISTRICT

MISS McDOWELL, HEAD WORKER

CHILDREN BEING SUPPLIED WITH MILK

The Stockyards' Social Settlement

PROBABLY in no city in the country have such efforts been made as in Chicago, to brings light to the pathway of the toilers by means of social Settlements. With its large foreign population, umbering hundreds of thousands, it needed the bravest brave hearts to attempt to lift these people to a gher conception of life, to the American way of liv- g. The stockyards district was, perhaps, one of the ost discouraging when it was taken in charge, ten ears ago, by Miss McDowell. She has been aptly rmed the "Emmanuel Bayard of Chicago," and in ying this, reference is made to her self-effacing, and odest, persistent efforts to develop neighborhood conscientiousness nd self-respect in the community which her life has become incor- orated. A native of Chicago, Miss IcDowell is imbued with the spirit f self-activity which its atmosphere sters.

The Chicago University Settlement, of which she became the ead at its inception, ten years go, has been the scene of her con- ant efforts, whose best results are videnced in improved sanitary con- itions; better public educational acilities; the lessening of child abor; the higher ideals of living; he increased public spirit and sense f mutual co-operation and forbear- nce among the people of the cosmo- olitan neighborhood. When at he Settlement House, 4638 Ash- and Avenue, Chicago, where Miss IcDowell has her headquarters, ne realizes at once how pervasive nd persuasive is her moral influ- nce and inspiration on a neighbor- ood which can have little attrac- ion for a refined and cultured oman, except the impelling mag- netism which inheres in the possibility of doing good. Miss McDowell does all her work in just the way in which she talks, without affectation or mannerism, speaking with a characteristic well-controlled youthful spontaneity and enthusiasm. Her expressive countenance radiates geniality. Her mien, while dignified, carries much more invitation than command.

"I believe," she said, "that the Settlement is the feeble but honest outward sign of an inner necessity, urging the religious soul to find a way of making real the social ideals given by Jesus to the world.

"Settlement residents do not go to people with a plan, a policy, or a proposition," she added; "they go as friends, as neighbors, with a keen sense of the commonness of all that is best in all. Out of this living with folks grows the most delightful social relationships," she continued enthusiastically. "No side of life and no interests are forgotten."

"The Women's Clubs of the Settlement are perhaps as valuable a result as the Settlement can show," she said in response to a query. "A dim idea, an intuitive feeling is held by these women, that in their home-work, and often as the wage earner of a family, they have earned a right to be something more than breeders of a race; they feel feebly at first that it is their duty to be a part of this onward movement of womankind.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO SETTLEMENT HOUSE

"This sense of their social responsibility has been developed to the point of activity by social contact and through the formal programme. A conscious faith in the organic unity of womanhood, then of humankind, is awakened. Individuality is developed. And many a hidden talent is discovered in some tired mother, an ability nearly lost in the hard grind of daily routine. When discussing some question with a specialist, a doctor, nurse or lawyer, the observation of some woman with mother-wit, lifts up the whole club to the plane of the specialist, and a sense of common congratulation is felt because of the wit of one of its members.

"You can see how this develops personal growth," said the able club-woman. "A member's faith in herself is strengthened because the club believes in her, and she will do surprising things, as one of the whole club of which alone she never would have dreamed. She is no longer the overburdened, tired, unawakened woman who did not know her neighbors, nor herself, nor her children—not even her husband, until she saw them all in the light of their social relationships. In this new light, natural differences which make for individuality, are now interesting; and women are no longer looked upon in the class sense alone, but as women working together for the common good."

The University of Chicago Settlement, owes its institution to the Philanthropic Committee of the Christian Union of the University. The Settlement modestly began life in a small flat, with a small store-room in front, which was club-room, play-room and general auditorium. The work soon began to expand. Two years later, four flats were rented over a large feed store, together with a storeroom nearby, to accommodate the clubs, classes, lectures, concerts, etc. Later, four lots on Gross Avenue were purchased, on which a gymnasium was built, containing play-room, auditorium, shower-baths, reading room, public library station, etc., to which 1,500 people come daily.

Few Settlements have been established in more unattractive environs. On all sides are unsanitary and unpleasant conditions. The smoke and smell-producing stockyards and packing-houses occupy a square mile in one direction. Close by on the opposite side of the Settlement, is the city garbage-dump for the lake shore wards. Three sewers empty into the turbid branch of Chicago River, which forms the northern boundary of the district. This stream is popularly characterized as "Bubbly Creek," because of the carbonic acid gas constantly escaping from it.

Ten years ago when Miss McDowell came to live here, the vacant land was used as "hair fields," where the hair putrefaction, in the process of drying, added one more sickening odor to the heavily-laden atmosphere. The streets were then unpaved. There were no sewers. Ditches were covered with a germ-breeding scum. "The sanitary conditions were such," she said, "that when the inspector from the Health Department called to examine tenements owned by men with political pulls, he could

CONTINUED ON PAGE 634

The AMERICAN PULPIT

A BACCALAUREATE SERMON BY

WOODROW WILSON

President Princeton University

PROF. WOODROW WILSON

SPIRITUAL HEALTH

TEXT:—PSALM 67: 2

"That thy way may be known upon the earth, thy saving health among all nations"

I SUPPOSE that in a sense it is true, as satirical critics of university training like to suppose—and have supposed generation after generation without troubling themselves to re-examine the facts—that men just graduating from college are unsophisticated, as the world judges sophistication, and that they go out, at some risk of ridiculous mistake, into a world which will certainly chill and sober them with many painful but instructive surprises. I am inclined to believe, however, that their simplicity is exaggerated, their ignorance misconstrued.

The modern world confuses very practiced thinkers, throws very experienced guides out of their way. Not because it is so big, or even because it is so multiform and various. Bigness is not confusing if its proportions display upon examination a symmetry of fixed relations. Variety is not confusing, multiformity does not distract the careful and observant eye, if unity be anywhere discoverable, if the crowding elements be anywhere drawn into ranks and orders. The college bred man, if he be indeed bred and not simply cast and stamped like a senseless coin, would look with a comprehending eye on system, whatever the variety of detail. He naturally seeks a series, a governing arrangement and principle, and can hardly be wondered at if he cannot understand what the understanding has never forged together.

A Distracting World

We seek to regulate our life, and are baffled. Law will not come at our bidding, or merely because of our need. No sufficient rule of guidance seems to be anywhere discoverable. Thoughtful men turn themselves about in every direction, crying: "Is there nothing that can quiet us, give us confidence, assurance, peace?" There are even those amongst us who turn to the ancient, tranquil, patient East for quietness of spirit, and envy the Orient its calm of deadened energy. A recent writer, with satirical intent, no doubt, and a purpose he has no wish to conceal, to cast ridicule upon the frantic energy of modern communities, that pile up power and know not how to use it, and yet, it may be, with half serious admiration of the placid East, has avowed his disgust with the turmoil of aimless industry which fills the life of Europe and America with cheerless abundance, and has calmly proclaimed his preference for the monotonous levels of existence to be found in China's secluded kingdom, teeming with its close-packed millions, where each may hope to find little more than his daily dole of food, and the common comfort of shelter; but where there is peace without plenty, and the satisfaction of an undisturbed mind, not doubting dull duty, or slighting the daily task, content with its present, undismayed by fear of its future, neither restless nor in haste.

No doubt the days of the Oriental show singularly serene upon the surface, and are a happy thing for the jaded minds of our own men and women to look upon. They hide within them, it may be, for those who live them thoughtfully, and hold their spirits true to the calm counsels of their ancient creeds, conceptions of life and duty which satisfy if they do not save. Why should they not take solace and content from a belief which seems without date or beginning, and has held within its formulas the ages through an immemorial civilization, which no process of mere time seems able to impair? If quietness of spirit were all, if that life were life enough in which fear and doubt were set at rest, and the blood biddden go its slow pace of dull content, as if very sluggishness were a law of health, one might easily persuade himself that it were enviable to be as the patient, unchanging peoples of the East are, with whom life slips by like a watch in the night.

No Health Without Growth

But we are of another creed and impulse. We cannot believe there is health where there is no growth, where old wrongs go always unrighted, and new wrongs do not spring up, simply because nothing changes; where men do not desire, and therefore do not struggle; where habit and long endurance are the pillars of the temple of peace. For us, alike by nature and by faith, such ways of life are impossible. Our powers stir too imperiously within us, and our consciences tell us that we should use them; the quietude of inaction is not peace, but imprisonment. Our ideal is never here, it is yonder. We pursue it upon a rising path, upon which it costs many a struggle to maintain our footing, along which it costs many an eager effort to breast our way. Peace we can have only with the confidence that we are right, only with the hope that we shall attain, and it is not peace that we seek, but victory.

Distemper of the Mind

But victory in what—victory over what? As we pore upon our chart of life to-day where do the main routes of happiness and achievement seem to us to run? To the mines, to the marts of trade, to the stock exchanges, to places of political power, to places of adventure and daring? Do you not see that it is a matter of indifference whither you go: that all the difference to you will lie in the cargo you carry—not the cargo of capital, of credits, of merchandise, of knowledge, of experience, of aptitude or energy—but in your purpose? What sort of happiness are you in quest of? You are preparing to enjoy the world, but are you preparing to enjoy yourself? You know that if you be ill nothing will go well with you: good fortune will sit as uncomfortably upon you as bad; and, if bodily health be thus indispensable to you, is there no such thing as spiritual health? Will not distempers of the mind and spirit as easily mar your fortunes? If success in material undertakings were the sure way to happiness, how many more amongst us would be happy! Happiness is not for the purchaser. The sweet influences of contentment are not outside of you, but within you. Your mind and your heart are your only real kingdom. Rule and purify them and all your life answers to their governance.

It is so that I read the opening words of the Sixty-seventh Psalm: "God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; that thy way may be known upon the earth, thy saving health among all nations." "Thy saving health:" How the beautiful phrase sinks into our hearts! It is like rain upon dry ground!

Spiritual Medicament

What is a university but a place wherein to establish the health and natural vigor of our minds? And that is not done by knowledge. Knowledge is the mere food and tonic of the mind, learning merely its exercise. Its health is established, its strength increased, by right action upon these things. They minister to its health, but they do not constitute it. Moreover, though the psychologists dissect and anatomize the mind for our instruction, they do not and cannot in fact take it apart. It is immersed in matter, but it is itself spirit. Our hearts and our intellects are not in fact distinct. Our emotions sweeten our thinking, our hearts give character to our minds. As the spirit is turned so will the mind direct. Our spiritual health, our very rectitude of thinking, is determined by purity of motive, elevation of ideal, the plannings of purpose.

If God should be merciful unto us and bless us, and should cause his face to shine upon us, how should that make known his way upon earth, his saving health among all nations? No doubt because we should see in his face, as his merciful presence enabled us to look upon it, such counsels of confidence and of peace as would enter into our own spirits to rule them, release their powers by means of a perfect revelation of what is the true and acceptable and rewarding way of life, convince them once for all of their own nature and destiny.

In looking upon you to-day, as in writing the words I am reading, I have wondered if your four years in this place which we love, have brought you saving health. It is a question which touches the life of the university in every part, in every vital process, both within and without the classroom; it is also a question concerning the use you have yourselves made of the things that might have rendered you strong in every function of your natures. Has the life you have lived here, have the things you have pondered and held your thoughts, served to clarify your purposes, rectify your ju ments, and set you free from perplexing conjectures?

The ideal object of education is at once to deve and to simplify the mind,—simplify it by a perfect justment to its uses and to its environment; and such health. In "saving" health there is not only this e and adaptation but also a full pulse of ardent vig which fills action with zest, existence itself with gra ful ardors of satisfaction. There is no such savi health in the sad, submissive peace of a Chinese counti side. There is no such saving health in mere industi in mere striving after achievement. The modern stru gle for wealth is more like a consuming fever than li a right function of health. There is in many of o material achievements a touch of frenzy and distemp Our energy is stimulated to the pitch of intoxicatio lacks poise, overleaps the bounds alike of prudence a of pleasure, hurries us panting to beds of exhausti and of sickness, where the physician's task is to get t heat and turmoil out of our blood.

Uplifting Thoughts

No doubt our spirits were given us for quieter use for contemplation as well as for the breathless efforts a too eager race; and our education has been singular barren and aside from the mark, if it has not shown the springs of contemplation which lie in our nature the sweet counsels of reassurance and of guidance whic fill our days with light when we hearken to the Fath of our spirits and are still in his presence. The influ ences have been very strong amongst us which ought t make these things evident to all who give any heed regard to them. Some of the most manly and attra tive of your comrades have illustrated among you ever day how thoughts of God and of our long destiny li the thought and temper the judgment. If you hav not realized that this was an essential part of educatio the true refining process of the mind, it has been be cause you gave it no heed; if you have not been cor sciously touched by this, I venture to hope that yo have been unconsciously, and that in unfolding it t you now I am speaking of things in fact familiar.

The mind of the Oriental is quieted by his religion his undoubting belief in the fixed, unchangeable orde of the life he lives. He is the servant of Fate, an were a fool to kick against the pricks. It is after very different way that you think of your life. You ar of the same spirit with your Maker, not his slave, but if you will, his partner. It is the object of his savin grace, to make his thoughts your thoughts, his purpose your purposes; and your spirit is never so free a when that gracious wonder has been wrought. This i the peace that falls upon you when his face shines up on you. This is that saving health which clarifies and rectifies the processes of your nature.

Spiritual Health from Grace

The metaphor, if metaphor it be, is the more perfect because it has so exact a correspondence with our own observations and experience. We know how easy hope and quietness are to the man who is well, physically well, whose vital forces are in everything free of clog and impediment. Fear seems to be cast out by the mere confident flow of the blood; doubt seems to creep in only where there is functional disorder; and the physician seems oftentimes to stand nearer the sources of our happiness than the minister. Your pessimist is seldom a well man. If you cannot mend his digestion, you may not change his philosophy. And so I say, if it be a metaphor, this metaphor of health gives us the right criteria of happiness. We know that, the ordinary signs notwithstanding, spiritual health may come, does come, without bodily health, by the grace and revelation of God, even to the weak and suffering. It has laws and sources of its own. Physical disorder may impede it, but cannot destroy or preclude it. Many a noble invalid has illustrated its reality and beauty, many a militant dyspeptic has overcome himself and all adversaries of God by means of it.

This saving physical health of the spirit, like the saving health that purges the body of all distemper, has very positive laws, very unmistakable conditions. Its marks and elements we know. Where it is present it is plain that spiritual nutrition comes from a true percep-tin of moral values. The doubts and disorders of our a', whether they touch us as individuals or only as communities, arise, I think you will agree with me in s ing, out of our temporary confusion as to moral va u in the new circumstances of enterprise, the new nthods and difficulties of industry, we find our lives in ntact with. Reform would be easy, could we but rceive them. Even rectitude of intention waits on eightenment, purpose on knowledge. The light of eeds and codes is slow to penetrate the nebulous mass our present social structure, which is changing, but is t yet formed. The saving health of moral sanity ong the nations of the earth waits, as usual, upon t thought and purpose of the individuals who com se them. You will see, therefore, how our responsi ity is increased as men who are called upon to per ve, to assess, to estimate, to value, to make choice. I the choice of our callings, in the application of our ergies, in the mastery we seek and the service we of , we are looked to to exercise conscious, deliberate ral preferences.

Trustees of Moral Assets

It is odd, as it is impressive, how everything that a an touches takes tone and character from him sf, no matter how trivial it may be, how like mere utine, how little like a great transaction. You are ver a mere automaton. If you were, the things you oduced would give evidence, by their very uniform y and lack of distinction, of the unthinking machinery hich gave them form. You are spirit, whether you ll or not; you are character, whether you will be ht or wrong, and the thing which you touch is dis guishable. Educated men, whether their education of the school or of affairs, are in a very real sense stees of the moral assets of the world.

But it is not enough to be void of offense. You uld not yourself be satisfied with that. There is sitive obligation resting upon us as well as a negative, duty to create good as well as to avoid evil. Our nction in life is not that of critics merely, to perceive at this is good and that evil, prefer the one and reject e other, as a critic of art might buy the objects of his dmiration and leave the ugly to the vulgar. We must ade with our trust estate and increase it. We must be tive lovers of the good, propagandists of the excellent.

But the standard! It is easy enough to talk of assessing moral values and of increasing the stock of good in the world; but what is good and what is evil, for us individually and for the world in which we live? May we not determine that deep question by our experience, candidly interrogated and interpreted—by the peace, the ardor, the satisfaction our spirits get from our own days and their tasks—by the tonic health we get from one course of action, the restlessness, the bitterness, the disappointment and weariness we get from another? You do not have to go to a doctor to ascertain that you feel well; you do not have to go to a casuist or to a minister to find whether your conscience is at ease, your heart at peace with itself. What do you mean to seek? What do you expect to find? You may count success to be of this kind or of that, but one thing I can predict with the utmost confidence: you shall not find happiness without health, and health lies in the constant rectification of the spirit, its love of the truth, its instinctive sincerity, its action without fear and without a corruption of motive, its self-sufficing energy and independence. It is God's power in the heart. It is the spirit's consciousness of its immediate connection with his will and purpose. It is his saving health, which must be known among all nations before peace will come and life be widened in all its outlooks.

The Love of Truth

I do not see how the spirit of learning can be separated or divorced from the spirit of religion. At its heart lies that which is ideal, which elevates and ennobles, while it quickens the pulse and fills the lungs with a new and vivifying breath—the love of truth, the desire to see with the eyes of the mind, to see the things which are invisible and which stand fast through all generations. Once let this ardor get into your veins and you cannot afterwards sit content with the material evidence of your success. They cannot express you: they cannot mean to the world at large what you mean to yourself. More than that, they cannot live after you in any close enough association with your name to satisfy your hope and your vision of what is to be, unless you have so handled and disposed them as to fill them with a spirit, an unlifted, foreseeing spirit, which shall make them forever your own, a monument and sign of the heart that beat in all that you did. Your only fame in this world is the permanent record here of the spirit you have carried into the next world: there can be no severance of the one immortality from the other.

And I take the saving health of our spirits to be nothing less than obedience to the law of their immortality. This is a law of existence, not only, but also of growth and decadence. The soul that lives and has its powers quickened for a full age of health and wholesome zest will show always clear and constant progress in its vital processes. Its strength will increase, and with its strength its aptitude for happiness as well as for achievement. In life there can be no stagnation; so long as its processes persist there will be progression, advance, development.

The Clue to the Labyrinth

It is worth your while to observe that the power of a man's life increases in direct proportion to the simplification of his motive. It is that which brings concentration, confidence, and definiteness of action, precision of aim, exact adaptation of means; and the tendency of our lives is more and more to concentrate, as we advance in years, upon some one favorite object and ambition. As the process unfolds itself our true characters are revealed to the world: it is known for certain, whatever our attempted concealments, whether we are noble or ignoble, small or great, of fine stuff or base. There is in some men a terrible simplification, an intense concentration upon evil objects, upon low and selfish aims, which seems to sweep the very moral law itself away with their success until the thing which they seek is accomplished and at an end, and we see it laid alongside the standard measurements of time and circumstance. Then its futility is disclosed, its ugliness, its evident symptoms as if of disease and distemper. We see it to have been wrought under the heat of a destroying fever.

There is another simplification which is the simplification of saving health, of a self-forgetting love which clears all the courses of life of whatever impedes the beneficent and the right, a love of God and of our fellow-men, the happiness that comes of service and of a life that moves to the grave, not as towards death, but as towards a sweet fruition of every hope. This is your clue to the labyrinth; not to search for yourself, but for a way of service which will make you greater than yourself.

NEW YORK GOSPEL TENT CAMPAIGN

OUR Saviour's command, "Go ye into all the world," may be obeyed without going out of New York, for in that city are representatives of almost every nation under the sun. Many f these people, who would otherwise never attend a re gious meeting, are drawn to the tent services now be g held in various localities of the city.

This summer campaign is meeting with the most gra fying results. Especially is this ue of the work in the locality nown as "Little Italy." The ent is situated at One Hundred nd Twelfth Street and First venue, right in the heart of the talian quarter. Rev. Mr. Nardi onducts the services in the Itali n language, which is in itself n attraction, for very few of hese people understand English. The evangelist tells the simple tory of salvation, and his hearers isten with the greatest interest. The tent is crowded at every neeting, and in the house-to ouse canvas, Mr. Nardi is cor dially welcomed, for the people wish to hear more about Christ who is able to save.

Another very interesting series of meetings is being held in Tent No. 2, in a neighborhood long considered one of the hardest and "toughest" in New York. This is at Eleventh Avenue and Sixtieth Street, and is known as "Hell's Kitchen." The people who live in this locality did not know what to make of the movement at first, and trouble of all sorts was anticipated and predicted by those who know the character of the neighborhood. However, one of the first fruits of evangelical effort in "Hell's Kitchen," was the reformation of "Red" Featherston, who has proved his usefulness in more ways than one. There was a time, not very long ago, when a group of religious workers would almost as soon have thought of trying to preach the Gospel from the sacred temple of Lhassa, the "Forbidden City" of Tibet, as to try it outside of four strong church walls in that part of the Metropolis, where "Red" Featherston and his gang held sway. The evangelists who were assigned to this tent, decided to use diplomacy with these young men, and see if they could not find a soft spot in their hearts. Five of them were invited into the tent for a conference, and this proved to be the best of moves. Threats would have been laughed at; police interference would have been worse than useless, as it would only have called a temporary halt, and made the youths more determined than ever on mischief. But when the evangelists pleaded with them, the unexpected happened, and they not only promised not to interfere in any way with the meetings, but unanimously agreed to "defend the tent" and the workers.

ONE OF THE GREAT TENT SERVICES

These young fellows could not tell how it came about, but their hearts were touched, and when they heard that one of the neighboring "gangs" were coming up to have "some fun" at the meetings—which "fun" boded no good for the evangelists—"Red" Featherston gathered five of his chums in the shade of the tent in the afternoon, and in low tones they discussed the situation. "Now look here, fellers," said "Red," "if we ain't doin' bad, why should we let anyone else come up here and worry these people? I don't know what's the matter with me, but I'm tired of bein' bad, an' I want to try and be decent like other people." The others nodded assent. "Well," asked "Red," as he bared his head, while his fiery locks waved in the breeze, "what are we goin' to do about it?"

"Knock their blocks off, if they come up here to kick up shines," was the unanimous reply.

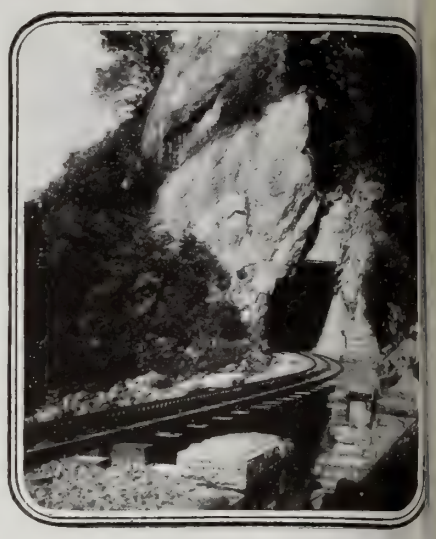
From being champions of the evangelists, the young men, much to their own astonishment, and to the intense relief of the few quiet residents in the neighborhood, became converts to this (to them) new religion, and they are now as active in rallying their friends around the Gospel banner, as they formerly were in ringleading all sorts of mischief under the title of the "Forty Thieves," with "Red Mike" as captain. Rev. H. M. Falconer, who is in charge of the tent at Sixtieth Street and Eleventh Avenue, says: "I do not think there is a harder field in the United States."

The Evangelistic Committee is greatly embarrassed at the present time, with the fact that more locations and lots have been suggested and offered without price for the erecting of tents than they can possibly meet, with the amount of funds at their disposal. Mr. John S. Huyler and Dr. A. F. Schauffler are the treasurers of the movement, and may be addressed at 150 East Twenty-second Street.

THE SKY ISLANDS OF INDIA

COOLIE WOMAN PICKING TEA

COANOOR, INDIA, 6,500 FEET ABOVE SEA LEVEL



THE MOUNTAIN RAILWAY

ISLANDS are mountains in the sea, and mountains are islands in the air; sky islands are towering heights that bring us nearer to the sky and to God.

India is noted for sky islands. The whole northern boundary of this mysterious land is a majestic mountain range 1,500 miles in length. On this great sky island are some of the most picturesque sanitaria in the world; sanitaria that, at times, alas! are veritable deathtraps, like Simla, where earthquakes shook the town, and all trembled at this tragic power that brought death and destruction to all.

During the hot season, all the Europeans who can do so, go to the salubrious mountains of India to get rid of the malaria of the plains, and to lay in a new stock of physical and spiritual strength for the strenuous life in the plains.

Some missionary societies wisely insist upon their missionaries taking an annual rest at the sanitaria on the hills. During these weeks of rest, ample provision is also made for the spiritual and mental edification of Christian workers. What this means to tired jungle missionaries none can know, except those who for many months have never seen a white face, nor have listened to a prayer in the English tongue.

The South India Association of missionaries has annual meetings at the hill stations. The printed notice has "Association." This is an improvement of English by the Hindu compositor!

Ootacamund, where we now are, is the seat of the Madras government for six months of the year. Here the beauty and the chivalry of the British Army and of the civil service meet. Here are races and dances and theatrical shows and concerts galore. Here, too, every effort is made to win men for Christ. Mr. C. T. Studd, the champion cricketer, is a leader in this work.

A powerful mountain locomotive pushes the train up the heights, and the scenery all along the way is superb.

TODAS, ABORIGINES OF THE NILGRIES

This and the accompanying photographs were taken expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

At the foot of the hills, the train passes through beautiful avenues of graceful areca nut palms, perhaps the most graceful palm in this land of palms. When the train begins to climb upward, the locomotive catches cogs between the rails and across frightful chasm alongside of great precipices and through innumerabl tunnels, every height is overcome. At times, the wa passes through evergreen coffee and tea plantation The tea plants are in regular rows, and look like ripple on the waters.

Smiling coolie women pick the young succulent sprouts, and from these tea i made. As we continue our way, we se enchanting cascades and waterfalls in th mountain streams, and, at last, the wel come whistle announces that we are nea Coanoor, the present terminus of th railway. There a warm welcome await us. After greeting friends, we go te miles farther on to Ootacamund, travel ing in carts or tongas, and, at last, w are in our mountain home on the sk island, sitting once more before a cheerfu wood fire.

The first missionaries to do Christia work on these heights were the Basle mis sionaries. These carry on a great work among the Badagas and coolies on the tea and coffee estates.

The Church of England Mission is do ing much work in the towns, and have also a successful work among the Tadas, the aborigines of the Nilgiris, whose life is said to be very immoral, and who, because of this immorality, are fast dying out. Their munds or villages, look like a lot of exaggerated beehives, picturesquely placed on the mountainside, near a shola or jungle.

Glorious, indeed, are these mountains of God's own making, and every missionary who can, ought to spend at least one month every year on these sky islands.

Bapatla, India. GEO. N. THOMSSEN.

THE STOCKYARDS' SOCIAL SETTLEMENT

Continued from Page 631

laughingly belittle the condition, by saying: 'What does it matter, one smell more in this region?' "

The schools were inadequate it seems, kindergartens and manual training were unknown. Parks, libraries, and bathing facilities were far distant. Children were put to work at eleven and twelve years, often working at night, and sharing the irregular hours of their parents. Much of this has been changed.

"There was then, as now," said Miss McDowell, "a large body of surplus labor, from 3,000 to 5,000, waiting every morning at the stockyards for a job, and only giving up hope for the day when the policemen drive them out. This element is a menace to the community; as is also the transient foreign class, who can live on less, because their standard of living is low, and who return to the old country without having caught the spirit of the new.

"As long as work in the yards is plentiful," Miss McDowell went on to say, "the standard of life in the surrounding neighborhood is comparatively high, but it falls with the diminution of work. Of the 20,000 to 30,000 workers in the yards, three-quarters at least live in this neighborhood, which is of cosmopolitan character, including Irish, Germans, Scotch, Bohemians, Poles, Lithuanians, Scandinavians, Hungarians, Finns, Welsh, etc. This, you must know, is an industrial community, and not a slum. Irregularity and uncertainty of employment appear to be the most demoralizing factors; and the query often comes to my mind, whether bad social and economic conditions do not cause intemperance quite as inevitably as intemperance breeds an unemployed class."

"Yes, there is a large percentage of saloons," she responded, in reply to a question. "One for every forty voters. These saloons are political and social centres, the saloon-keeper and the ward politician being the chief interpreters of American institutions. The saloon, too, is often an employment bureau, and the bank where checks can be cashed. It is the only place as yet near the yards which offers a comfortable seat at the lunch hour. Another menace to the home life of this community is the increased employment of women and girls in the stockyards, which has doubled in the last decade. Their average wage, formerly 75 cents a day, is now $1.50. Machinery has brought this about by giving to women a power equal to men. The women will work for less wage, and consequently become of economic value to the employer; but they are also an economic menace to the men workers, who are struggling to keep wages up to the manhood level. The greatest problem has been presented by the Bohemian women, who have taken up the work of butchers and are driving the men from their places. Our remedy for this lies in the organization of these women into labor unions, which will raise the standard of living and make necessary higher pay. And when the butcher women want the same wage as the men, the employers will probably not want them. The better class of women will come out and go gradually into domestic service, an open and inviting field."

In commenting on the religious life of the community in which she lives and serves, Miss McDowell said: "Perhaps more men attend church here than in most communities. Within walking distance from the Settlement House are two German Lutheran Churches, one Methodist, one small Methodist Mission, and four Catholic Churches. The Bohemians are chiefly interested in religious questions; the Poles are intense in their patriotism; the Germans are occupied with social questions; while the Irish are busy with practical politics.

"In a community of such widely different social and religious elements," she said thoughtfully, "one sees the need for a strong centralizing influence which shall be non-partisan and non-sectarian, yet in the deepest sense religious, drawing men and women together as the basis of a common humanity, emphasizing the fatherliness of God and proving the brotherliness of man by social service." JANE A. STEWART.

OUR GREAT ALIEN INVASION

BY JOHN WILLIS BAER

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said:
This is my own, my native land?"

THERE may have been a time when men who could not give a hearty "Amen" to that sentiment, were called men "without a country." If ever true in its full meaning, and I doubt it is not true to-day. Let me remind you that there are loyal and royal citizens of the United States who gladly give full allegiance to the Stars and Stripes, who are not "to the banner born." America is not their native land; it is the land of their adoption.

Let us together look into this subject of Emigration and Immigration. It is now an international problem. That man who views the situation from an exclusively national aspect, needs to broaden his horizon. Don't you remember the old truth familiar to our boyhood days—"What goes up must come down, upon the head or the ground?" By the same natural law, the tide of migration must find its level. The tide goes up in one place, it goes down in another. I believe that nationally we are too selfishly concerned about what comes upon our land and upon our ground. We give too little constructive thought to the other fellow's head, and the other fellow's ground.

Let me at the beginning declare my position on Immigration from our own national standpoint. I am with President Roosevelt, who said in one of his messages to Congress: "We cannot have too much Immigration of the right kind, and we want none of the wrong kind." I had occasion to write that sentence in a letter recently to Mr. Jacob A. Riis, and in reply by letter, among other things he said:

"I agree with you thoroughly, and further, the 'wrong kind' of Immigration is in my mind easily identified with the kind that wants to do wrong, not with any class or race. I know no better material for the true American, than the one who came from abroad, but with appreciation of what freedom may be made to mean for the race."

Jacob A. Riis is such a one, and Jacob A. Riss is right. Now go back in our thoughts to this great restless force moving upon the map of the world. Let us consider some facts, some figures, some fears.

Whelpley, in his new book just from the press, The Problem of Immigration, says:

"Like a mighty stream it finds its source in a hundred rivulets largely in Northern, Southern, and Eastern Europe. It's an army moving at the rate of nearly two millions each year, and is invading the civilized world. Its tongue is polyglot; in dress all climes from pole to equator are indicated; all religions and beliefs enlist. There is no age limit; young and old alike travel side by side. There is no sex limitation, for the women are as keen, if not more so than the men. The army carries its equipment on its back. Throughout Europe the word America is synonymous in all classes with freedom, prosperity, and happiness. The desire to reach America is the first sign of awakened ambition; the first signal of revolt against harsh environment; the dream of age and youth alike.

"Gaining in volume and momentum each year, without apparent regard for the law of supply and demand, the pressure of this army is already made itself felt upon communities in which it finds its destination. The cry of protest has gone up from those who find themselves crowded from their occupations and their homes by the new arrivals, and the peoples are asking also, what steps are to be taken to check this alien invasion.

Personally, I should be glad to see this whole question taken up seriously and constructively by the governments of the world. Would that President Roosevelt, the great international policeman and peace-compelling executive, might take the initiative in calling together such an international conference.

A writer in the Fortnightly Review has suggested some such programme as this for such a conference. Give it careful thought.

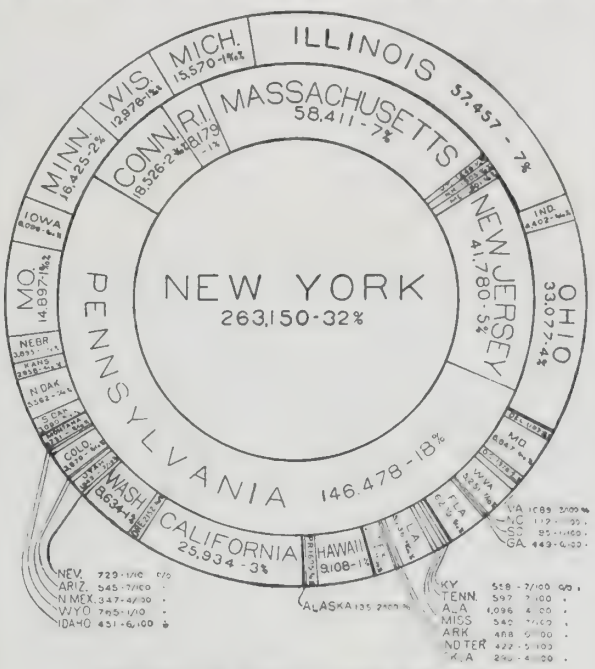
First, To encourage a high moral, physical, political, and educational standard of admission into any country.
Second, To guard against the spread of disease from one country to another.
Third, To check undue activity on the part of transportation agents.
Fourth, To maintain a world-wide system of police identification and restraint of criminals.
Fifth, To persuade each nation to live up to its full responsibilities in the care of its deficients.
Sixth, To induce the amelioration of political or economic wrongs in given areas. Such influences are driving people from one country to another to the discomfort of the latter.

By all means let us have such a conference. This great question of migration is viewed by some with too much alarm, when they consider it purely from a selfish and national standpoint. It demands "team work" by the nations of the world. The people of the United States gladly welcome the choice of Europe; Europe desires to retain its worthy sons. Europe, however, is willing to miss from among its numbers its undesirable citizens. The United States very properly objects to receiving them, and vice versa, At present it is a great game of chance—a game of give and take. Many of the world's governments are aroused—some are passing laws restricting Immigration, others making laws restraining Emigration.

Now for some figures. This ever restless moving from one land to another; this apparent all too easy mapping of national ties—let us view it from our own shores. The United States received during the fiscal year ending June, 1904, a total of 812,870 aliens, 30,000 of these came to us through Canadian ports—a decrease of 80,600 over 1903, which was the year registering the largest number of Immigrants ever received into our country. You ask very naturally, "From whence did these aliens come?" Let me quote from the Government's official, report as follows:

A striking and significant feature of these figures is that the chief diminution in Immigration for the year was shown in the arrivals from Austria-Hungary amounting to 28,855, and from Italy to 37,326. These two countries aggregating 66,181, or twenty odd thousand more than the total net decrease of the fiscal year 1904. The countries of Northern and Western Europe, with one notable exception show increases. Great Britain's increase being 18,643. The one exception to the foregoing statement is shown by the decrease of 18,265 in the arrivals from Sweden.

It appears that during the year there arrived 549,100 males, and 263,770 females, an increase in the females as compared with last year of 19,870, and a decrease in the males of 64,046. As respects age, 109,150 were under 14 years; 657,155 were between 14 and 45, and 46,565 were 45 or over. 4,953 could read but not write; 168,903 could neither read nor write. It is presumed the remainder, 640,014 could both read and write. It also appears that 103,750 of these aliens had already been to this country. That 95,575 brought with them fifty dollars or more each, while 501,530 brought each less than fifty dollars. The total amount of money shown to officers by these 812,000 aliens was $20,894,383, or $4,776,870 more than was brought by the 857,000 of the year before. This fact taken in connection with the circumstance already referred to as to countries from which the increase of the year under consideration came, furnishes assurance of a marked improvement in the character and thrift of the more recent Immigration. The 28,451 English Immigrants brought with them in 1903, $1,405,000. This year the 41,479 of the same race brought $2,736,000. The 35,366 Irish had $796,000, while the 37,000 Irish this year showed $1,920,000. 71,700 German immigrants last year had $2,480,000, this year 74,790 possessed in hand $3,622,000.



IMMIGRATION CHART — Printed by permission

Proportion of Immigration and Number of Immigrants going to each State during the fiscal Year ending June 30, 1904. Total, 812,870

It is further shown that there were excluded at the seaports of the United States during the year a total of 7,994, indicated as follows:

Idiots	16	Women for immoral purposes	9
Insane	33	Assisted aliens	38
Paupers	4,798	Contract laborers	1,501
Diseased persons	1,560	Anarchists	1
Convicts	35	Procurers	3

While considering our own national Immigration statistics, let us have in mind the movement to and from Canada. Keep in mind, too, that Canada has more land than the United States, though we still have millions of acres to be occupied by the Immigrant after irrigation has done its necessary work of transforming the desert into a garden. Canada now has a population of about six millions, and more than three millions and a half square miles of area. Canada has more area than the United States, but we have a population of more than eighty millions. I am informed from good authority that the Emigration from Canada during the last one hundred years or less has been one million. Her Immigration last year was 100,000, fully half of it going across the imaginary line from the United States. Seventy-five per cent. of her total Immigration is from the agricultural classes of foreign countries.

Now, what are the real reasons for this great movement of peoples from our shores to North America? The reasons are very well stated by Whelpley, to whom I have already referred.

Leaving out of consideration the movement of all undesirable people, such as criminals and paupers, Whelpley refers to four distinct causes of migration.

First, the natural cause which arises from the restlessness and ambition of youth and middle age, apparent in all peoples. As a rule, these people make acceptable citizens.

Second, the economic wrongs that are causing the exodus from Italy, and in a less degree from Austria-Hungary. Sicily is practically depopulated. From some of the Italian villages over eighty per cent. of the people have come to the United States, to escape what really amounts to slavery and mental and bodily starvation.

Third, the political cause is best illustrated in the case of the Hebrews of Russia (permit me to say, however, that we can afford to drop the curtain over Russia at this time. It's as bad to hit a nation as it is to hit a man, when that nation is down).

Fourth, the artificial cause is the abnormal activity of Transportation Companies to secure business.

Now, for some fears viewed also from our own national standpoint. I prefer to state them in the language of Commissioner Sargent. He says:

It is impossible for any but the most recklessly and foolishly optimistic to view the situation without realizing very seriously its bearing upon our well being. It is not alone that virtually nearly a million aliens have been added to our population within the short space of one year. I think that fact is one of large dimensions. All the constituent elements of this great army of invasion are to be considered—their individuality, character and capacity for useful work, their respect for law and order and their ability to stand the strain, moral, physical and mental, of the life of their new surroundings. In other words, the power to assimilate with people of this country, and thus become a source of strength for the support of American institutions and civilization instead of a danger in periods of strain and trial. To doubt that they possess such ability is to discredit unvarying human experiences. The problem presented, therefore, to enlighten intelligence for solution is how may the possibility—nay, probability—of danger from an enormous and miscellaneous influx of aliens be converted by a wise prevision and provision into a power of stability and security.

Now for some remedies, to be summed up in two good words, distribution and evangelization.

First: As to the practical question of distribution, glance at the chart, which, with the permission of the government, I am able to produce herewith for the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. With this chart take in also the following statement—the words of an expert. "These congested alien centres within our cities and states become a menace to physical, social, moral, and political security." As Commissioner Sargent has said, "These colonies become hotbeds for the propagation and growth of those false ideas of political and personal freedom whose germs have been vitalized by ages of oppression under unequal and partial laws, which find their first concrete expression in resistance to constituted authority, even the occasional assassination of lawful agents of that authority. Above all, they are congested places in the industrial body which check the free circulation of labor to those ports where it is most needed, and where it can be most benefited. Do away with them, and the greatest peril of Immigration will be removed."

The problem of the distribution of Immigration must be carefully thought out. Commissioner Sargent suggests that the Government establish a Bureau of Information. A splendid suggestion, when we take into consideration that thirty-two per cent. of the Immigrants remain in New York. This problem of distribution is not, however, to be easily settled at the seaport where the Immigrant lands. It must be handled at the point of his debarkation. Thus, again, I believe I am proving that the whole general question is one of international importance, and demands most careful consideration by accredited representatives from various governments.

The question of evangelization, thank God, is now being taken up by many of the evangelical denominations and societies having headquarters in our own land. We must keep in mind, however, the fact that a very large proportion of this alien population, whatever their life may have been politically or socially, as compared with our own, is composed of loyal adherents of Christianity as expressed in various forms. The steerage of many a ship contains devout Christian men and women, loyal to the work of God, whose motive power is swayed by the deep fundamental truths of Christianity. My heart often burns with indignation when many a speaker unconsciously, in his appeal, which often seems self-righteous eloquence, urges that the Gospel of Christ be carried to these Immigrants as they come to us, assuming that they are pagan, and that Christianity is unknown to them. We must give the Gospel to those who do not have it, and we must surround with proper influences, those who have already espoused it in their home lands, and thus strengthen and deepen their faith.

Unless the question is thoughtfully considered and the problem solved, the alien invasion into this country of ours "may be the rift within the lute which, slowly widening, will make the American music mute." Instead, however, of placing undue emphasis on the menace of this invasion, I consider it a mission, not only for the loyal disciple of Christianity, but a mission for every loyal American. We must Americanize the Immigrant, or he may Europeanize us. We must lift him up, or he may pull us down. Our hope lies in God, a strong heart, a clear head, and an outstretched hand. Let the American people put their ears to the ground, and they will hear the tread of the feet of men and women from other countries in the world who are coming to our shores. Coming, to help make America a greater America! Let us throw over them when they have been naturalized, the Stars and Stripes, and over Old Glory the blood-stained banner of the Cross. Let us give each "newcomer" a man's chance.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly, Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Where Was Eden?

FOR the satisfaction of many correspondents, who have written us, asking for information as to the site of the Garden of Eden, we published, in a recent number, an article by Professor Edgar James Banks, in which he offered a solution of this vexed question. He has recently visited a region, which corresponds in many particulars with the Biblical description of the Garden. As to those in which it differs, the professor found evidence of topographical changes, which might well, in the course of six thousand years, have altered the face of the country. The region is situated in the northeast of Arabia, about a hundred miles north of the Persian Gulf. There the Tigris and Euphrates form an angle, at the apex of which they unite, and flow in a common stream to the gulf. The other two rivers, the Pison and the Gihon, are not to be found, but may have dried up or changed their course. The wonderful fertility of the district impresses every visitor. It is a veritable garden, in which all fruit-bearing trees flourish. Moses probably visited the region during the time of his seclusion in the land of Midian, when he fled from the face of Pharaoh.

This appears to be a more probable identification of the site of the Garden than any yet suggested. The interest attaching to it as the birthplace of the race is therefore intense. No wonder that the traveler passing through it is deeply moved as he thinks of the period of innocence and happiness of which it may have been the scene, and of the sin which has involved so much pain and misery to the human race. There is no tree of life there now, the fruit of which would enable men to live forever, otherwise a legion of angels would be needed to guard it, for men still pine for immortality, though they too often neglect the only way to it. Neither is there to be found there now the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, though there, as everywhere else in the world, the fruits of that tree are within reach. Every generation partakes of them, and learns by bitter experience how deleterious they are.

It is the custom at this time, among scholars, to deride the whole narrative of the Garden of Eden, with its talking serpent and its trees of momentous fruit, But, however it is regarded, whether as myth or history, the story is true to life. We know our position in the scale of being by our own experience, and whether we are reaping the fruits of our great progenitor's sin, or have risen from a lower order of creatures, the situation is the same. We have in us the passions and propensities of the brutes, and we have in us, too, possibilities and capacities which must have come from the divine nature. The story of the fall is repeated in every life. Man disregards the divine warnings and prohibitions; he craves the knowledge of good and evil, and, like a child who plays with edged tools, he bears the wounds of his knowledge.

The same goal is before those who treat the narrative as history, as before those who treat it as myth. We need to rise out of our doubtful state, and to seek the heavenly destiny. Until the decisive moment comes, when, by Christ's help, we steadfastly set our faces toward God, the tendency of our lives is downwards to the bestial level; but from that time forward there is perpetual development, until at the last, death comes as a change, like that which occurred to Enoch, "who was not, for God took him."

The Immigration Problem

IN the very able communication from Mr. John Willis Baer, which appears on another page, a new and important suggestion is made in connection with the overshadowing immigration problem. Mr. Baer makes the point that it is no longer a question of national, but of international interest, and that it can only be dealt with satisfactorily by an International Conference. For any one nation to endeavor to regulate immigration within its own territory would be at best but a makeshift, for the vast tide of Europe's restless, migratory millions would be forever beating against its shores, and the problem would be continuous and interminable. Since it is evident that the question of distribution must be settled at the port of embarkation, instead of being confronted, as now, at the port of debarkation, co-operative and harmonious action among all the governments concerned would seem to be the only way out of the dilemma.

Mr. Baer has studied both the situation at home and the methods employed by the Canadian authorities, and he has been impressed with the superiority of the latter, to some extent at least. But Canada's system has one disadvantage which would make it unavailable here: It opens the door to contract labor from abroad. On the other hand, the plan suggested by Commissioner Sargent, of establishing a Government Bureau of Information, or an Immigration Clearing-House, possesses a distinct advantage, as it would result in distributing the immigrants, instead of allowing them to be massed in New York and other Eastern cities. There are many States that would welcome them, where they would not come in conflict with recognized labor interests. Indeed, it is a fair presumption that the labor organizations would rather see them thus distributed, than congested in the cities, where they are a menace to industry and liable to become a burden upon the community, instead of being quickly transformed into self-supporting citizens.

We may expect to see legislation, probably with a view to concerted international action on this whole subject, during the coming session of Congress. So urgent has the question become, that our government cannot much longer delay taking the necessary steps to afford relief to a situation which grows worse with every passing year.

Pouring in by Thousands

SIGNATURES to the Women's Memorial to Congress, praying for the unseating of Reed Smoot, the Mormon Apostle, continue to pour in to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. With these lists come letters, which tell in unmistakable terms how deep is the feeling of women all over the country against polygamy, and especially against one who upholds the monstrous doctrine taking his place among those who make the laws of our beloved land. From churches, from women's organizations, from factories, stores and offices, from the homes of the wealthy and of the humblest, comes the protest—"We will have not this man to help rule over us"—Even women who are "shut-ins," write that although they cannot go out, they can and will send others. The cry is "Send us Memorials! We want to do what we can in this righteous cause!"

Do not forget, while signing the petition, that it is necessary not only to sign your name, but to affix the town and State of your residence. This is important, as in the formal presentation of the Memorial to Congress, every State will stand by itself.

Among the Workers

—MRS. A. S. STEELE, of the Steele Home for Needy Children, Chattanooga, Tenn., has just celebrated the twenty-first anniversary of her wonderful work in that city. She has now 133 children in the Home.

—REV. MR. HARRIS AND WIFE, who left New York with a Gospel wagon some time ago, intending to ride to California, were at Lilly, Pa., on July 11th. They are traveling slowly on account of Mr. Harris' health.

—MRS. ANNA MCKEAN WHITE, one of the ablest and best known public speakers on the Mormon question, has lately spoken on the Women's Anti-Mormon campaign before many large audiences, with excellent effect. Her home is at 800 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia.

—THE Seventy-fourth Annual Camp-Meeting will take place at Ossining Heights (formerly Sing-Sing), August 3 to 13, Rev. P. M. Watters, D.D., presiding, assisted by Rev. F. H. Carpenter. The managers of this famous old Methodist Camp-Meeting extend an open invitation to all, irrespective of denomination, to enjoy the spiritual privileges of the occasion.

—THE ORGANIZATION of Christian commercial travelers, known as "The Gideons," is having a very healthful and prosperous growth. It is just five years ago since it was inaugurated by three men; to-day its membership numbers over six thousand, with camps in practically all of the leading cities. A Gideon Evangelistic Campaign was recently held in Boston. Many conversions took place.

Utah's Protest

POPULAR indignation in Utah, the citadel of Mormonism, has been aroused by the latest attempt of the hierarchy to boldly appropriate, for the benefit of Mormons exclusively, a tract of public land known as the Uintah Reserve, which the United States Government has decided to throw open to settlers in the usual manner. A great public meeting was held in Salt Lake City, at which many speakers denounced the attempted land steal in unmeasured terms, and suitable resolutions were adopted, a copy of which will be forwarded to President Roosevelt.

It is significant of the earnest and resolute campaign methods of the women of the country in the war they are now waging on Mormonism, that the Salt Lake City assemblage was held under the auspices of the Women's Auxiliary to the party which has set itself the task of redressing the wrongs inflicted by the hierarchy upon the non-Mormon population of Utah. But the addresses made upon this occasion have more than State or local application. They are of the most vital interest to the whole American people, as showing how the hierarchy is regarded in its own stronghold by those who are not afraid to speak out boldly in the interest of truth and national enlightenment. They corroborate with startling emphasis, the opinion of the hierarchy already expressed by various writers in this journal.

Rev. Dr. Helmick, one of the speakers at the Salt Lake meeting, said:

When we have an organization in our midst, the leaders of which are themselves law breakers and law defiers, and their constituency upholds them in their lawlessness and in their defying the laws of the government, I do not consider such people loyal American citizens. I can't see where they get the right to assume ecclesiastical supervision of the Uintah reservation. It is the first time I ever knew in my life that an ecclesiastical organization had a right to a reservation of the Government of the United States unless it was granted by the Government of the United States, as a privilege granted to them to exercise ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and I have not yet found an instance in the history of the United States where any church organization has been granted the exclusive right of ecclesiastical jurisdiction over any territory belonging to Uncle Sam.

Another speaker, Dr. S. E. Wishard, said:

The Mormons believe that the priesthood holds the keys of revelation, of the oracles of God and man upon the earth: the power and right to give laws and commandments to individuals, churches, and rulers of the world; the right to appoint kings and the makers of constitutions. We Americans have a notion that we can make a constitution for ourselves as free American citizens, without dictation from any ecclesiastical body. And if the hierarchy claim the right to do these things, we need not be surprised when this assumed right begins to be exercised among the people.

Mrs. Smith, Secretary to the Women's Auxiliary, took decided ground. She said:

It is up to the Gentiles to make the Mormons live up to the laws. They could do it if they wanted to. There are a whole lot of Gentiles in Salt Lake who are afraid to tell them that they must obey the laws of the United States. Most of these are men. It seems to me that men will not take the initiative — and so the women should.

The Rev. Dr. Walker, speaking in the same vein, said:

I am convinced beyond question of the unpatriotic, the un-American character of the Mormon hierarchy. I have a great deal of regard and sympathy for many thousands of the Mormon people. I have respect for the sincere, earnest Mormon believer, but for the one who is not honest, for the one who by his acts and by his life and by his words, gives us reason to believe that there is lack of genuine sincerity in his life, I have only contempt.

Judge Samuel McDowall put the situation in a nutshell, when he said:

One thing I think you asked too much. When you call upon the masses of the Mormon people to obey the laws, I think that is too much, because their first allegiance is to the hierarchy, and while many of them are no doubt somewhat disgusted with that body, they have not the courage to resist its authority.

In all of the speeches on this memorable occasion, there was a tone of high patriotism and of earnest appeal for the supremacy of the Constitution, the respect due to the American flag, and the recognition of the rights and liberties of American citizens. The courageous attitude of the non-Mormons of Utah should inspire the women of the country to still further energy in the present campaign. With Smoot out of the Senate, and the hierarchy shorn of its power as a factor in national affairs, a great step will be accomplished toward the ultimate disintegration of the whole abominable system, and polygamy would soon become a memory of the past.

The BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

The Origin of Life

CAN a living thing come from anything but a living parent? Until a few weeks ago, science firmly denied that it could; but now the fact is contradicted by Prof. J. Butler Burke, of the University of Cambridge, England. Prof. Burke has been experimenting with radium, in the hope of solving certain biological problems. He submitted a solution of sterilized bouillon, or beef-gelatine, to the action of radium, and in about two days' time there appeared in the formerly lifeless matter, certain bodies that had at least the appearance of living organisms. They were, it is true, if alive at all, a much lower form of life than any hitherto known; but it may not prevent their vitality being demonstrable. They seem to have nuclei; they grow; at a certain point they effect cleavage, and separate bodies go off to lead a separate existence.

What these creatures can be, if creatures they are, puzzles scientists. It has been suggested that they may be crystals, which are known to grow; but this Mr. Burke has answered by the test of polarized light. Under the polariscope, crystals exhibit wonderful gradations of light and shade arranged in more or less geometrical forms. On the other hand, they are not bacteria, for they are soluble in water, which bacteria are not. At the present stage, however, it is impossible to pronounce with certainty on these points. Further examination, conducted with the most jealous scientific care, will alone determine the nature of the new bodies.

"The first and most obvious objection," says a scientific journal, "to the satisfactoriness of the experiment was, of course, the contention that, supposing the sterilization of the beef-gelatine was perfect, might not the radium itself have contained the germs. Radium, however, is in itself fatal to bacteria, and further, it was subjected to the sterilizing process at the same time as the bouillon, being exposed to a heat in which no known organism can exist. The inference seems, therefore, to be inevitable that the radium has set up in the dead bouillon some modification, some 'unstable aggregate' that may be a living organism, conforming to Spencer's definition of life—'the continuous adjustment of internal to external relations.' If this be so, then we have the confirmation of Spencer's theory that at one period life must have been evolved from dead matter, for the period when the earth was incandescent would have been fatal to all organic life." It is that confirmation which materialists have long sought to establish, but it will need more than this professor's experiment to establish it in the face of the statements of the Bible.

All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made. In him was life, and the life was the light of men (John 1: 3, 4).

A Girl's Sacrifice

How much even a child will give up for the benefit of those she loves, was shown last week by the act of a girl of fourteen years of age, who lives at Elizabeth, N. J. Her mother and younger brother had been ill, and the doctor said that the best hope for their recovery lay in their going to the mountains. But the girl heard her mother say that she had not the means. It would cost more than a hundred dollars for such a trip. Not long afterwards the girl was on a street car, and she overheard two ladies behind her, remarking on the beauty of her hair. One of them said she would give a hundred dollars if she had such hair. The child listened, and followed them when they left the car, and she noted where they lived. Then she went to a hairdresser and persuaded him to cut off her long golden locks. She grieved at losing them, for she was naturally proud of her hair. But the hope of getting the money for her sick mother and brother to get well, consoled her. She wrapped them up and carried them to the house of the lady who had admired them. To her sorrow, the lady explained to her that her remark had merely been a wish that her own hair was as beautiful; but seeing the child's tears, and hearing her story, she took the hair, promising to sell it to a New York hairdresser for her, and to raise a fund to make up the needed sum. So the girl's sacrifice will not be in vain. Her mother must love her intensely after such a proof of her devotion. She will not be as those who hear of One who gave his life for their spiritual recovery, and care nothing for him.

PROFESSOR BURKE, OF CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY, IN HIS LABORATORY

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends (John 15: 13).

A Climber's Fall

It is one of the ironies of life, that men who encounter extraordinary dangers, frequently meet their fate by the commonest and most ordinary accidents. An instance of this rule occurred a few days ago in Newark, N. J. A man living in that city was noted for his daring climbing. If the steeple of a church needed repairs, it was he who was employed to do them. If the high chimney of a factory had lost some bricks, it was he who was sent to replace them. No feat was too daring for him to attempt, and at the most dizzy heights his head was cool and his step sure. He was only thirty years old, but he had acquired the nickname of "Steeple Jack" by his many feats of daring. One day, recently, when he was not occupied in his business, he visited a Chinese restaurant. After eating his meal he was descending to the street, when his foot slipped, and he fell down the steep stairway. When the employees went to his assistance, it was found that his skull was fractured, and in a few hours he was dead. In his dangerous feats he was on his guard, but in such a place as an ordinary restaurant, he was careless. It is so with the dangers of the soul; it is in moments of self-confidence that men fall.

When they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them (I. Thess. 5: 3).

A Submarine Disaster

A submarine boat owned by the French Government has met with a fatal disaster off the coast of Tunis. Experiments were being made with her on July 6, when her machinery became disorganized and failed to bring her to the surface. She has electric propulsion, reversible propellers, and all the newest contrivances. She carries four torpedo tubes and is 125 feet in length. When the failure became apparent, signals were made to two tugs in the harbor of Abdallah, which went to her assistance. They succeeded in raising her nearly to the surface when the cable snapped, and the submarine sank again to the bottom. During the next four days, efforts were continued to raise the boat. Her crew of thirteen were alive, but were almost suffocated. Food and water were conveyed to them, and they were informed that no effort was being spared to rescue them. On July 10 they signalled: "Hurry; water gaining." It was evident that in some way the water was leaking into the boat, and the danger of being drowned was added to that of suffocation. Since that time there has been complete silence, the signals from above being unanswered. It is evident that even if the vessel is raised none of the lives can be saved. She was considered a most formidable agent of warfare, capable of destroying the strongest battleship. But she has herself come to grief with her crew, and the career of destruction planned for her has failed. Even in mechanics the warning of the inspired penman is fulfilled:

His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealing shall come down on his own pate (Ps. 7: 16).

Engaged by Mail

A matrimonial romance came to its culmination in Catskill, N. Y., on July 12. Some time ago, a cotton planter in Georgia was bereaved of his wife. He lived alone afterwards until his loneliness became intolerable. Through a friend living in New York he heard of a widow who was similarly left in solitude, and received from him an introduction to her. They did not meet, but a correspondence began, which continued for six months. During that time the characters of both as revealed by their letters won upon each, and finally the Georgian proposed marriage and was accepted. All the preparations were made, and though neither had seen the other there seems to have been perfect satisfaction on both sides and genuine affection. On the day appointed the bridegroom traveled to Catskill, where the lady was staying, and there for the first time beheld her face to face. Apparently neither of them saw reason to change the resolution they had made, for they proceeded to a church and were made man and wife. Evidently it was not the bride's beauty that won her husband, but the marriage may not be the less happy on that account. The church itself avows its love for its heavenly bridegroom, though it sees him not.

Whom having not seen ye love (I. Peter 1: 8).

Hurt in Shelter

During the heavy thunderstorm that broke over New York on July 10, there was a serious accident to a party of workmen. They were engaged in preparing the foundation for an extension to a building near the water front. When the sky grew black and the big drops began to fall, the workmen hurried to shelter. There was a platform in the thirty-foot excavation about six feet from the surface. It had been roofed over and thither the men ran. They were protected from the storm there and they waited for it to abate. But the rainfall had flooded two sewers, which overflowed into the excavation and washed the earth from the supports of the platform. It was weighted with several bags of cement and a quantity of sand. Gradually the supports slipped and soon the whole platform, with its living burden and dead weight of material, was precipitated into the excavation. The firemen and police reserves were summoned, and worked hard to extricate the buried men. Five of them were brought up and carried to a hospital, where it was found that they were all more or less seriously hurt. Better for them had they braved the storm than have fled to a shelter so insecure. How many there are who in the storms of life seek other refuge than that which the Psalmist proved to be safe.

Thou hast been a shelter for me and a strong tower (Ps. 61: 3).

A MORMON MYSTERY

BY KARL DUNBAR

"We know better than we do."—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

HER face was that of an angel, as artists and poets have painted them for us; and that face looked down upon me day after day from the wall of a room where I had found temporary lodgment.

There was a wistful pleading look about the eyes; one lock of the rippling blonde hair had escaped from its fellows and seemed to be shading the left eye. One could almost see that lock move in the air of the room. The long and somewhat slender neck was unprotected save by a filmy lace, which reached upward from the shoulders of the gown and ended in a soft ruche under the rounded chin.

It was a face to dream about; perhaps to love; and I, Karl Dunbar, a confirmed bachelor, whose acquaintance with women had been somewhat limited and yet of the best, found myself wondering what my accomplished and devoted mother and my college-bred sisters might think of that face.

I was absolutely heart free and not a little annoyed to find myself the victim of inherited gout. My entire family insisted that the hot baths of Salt Lake City and my very temperate life would entirely eradicate even inherited evil. The baths at Salt Lake were evidently helping me, and time alone could determine whether the relief was permanent or transitory. One thing was gratifying: my surroundings were most delightful. An old schoolmate of my mother's had taken me into her fine home and had also installed me in the guest-room, where the picture I have so imperfectly described looked down upon me from the walls.

Sometimes, when my gracious hostess ran in to offer me some motherly attention I was tempted to ask her about the picture, but a secret dread kept me silent. I had already learned through others, that my hostess, after leaving the eastern academy where she had been a student, became the wife of a prominent Mormon, indeed, she was born into the church. I learned also, that her life, as the third wife of this official, had been heavy with trials which she had borne bravely. The husband was now dead, but all three widows maintained their separate establishments and lived their individual lives.

The children of this triple marriage numbered sixteen. I saw none save an elderly married daughter and a little grandchild. Neither of the ladies ever mentioned the departed lord and master, and as they attended church with unfailing regularity, I was led to infer that they were devout Mormons.

Now and then, as I sat in the gloaming in my own room, looking at the portrait which had such a marvelous attraction for me, I dreamed strange dreams, and I felt tempted to ask one of the Elders whom I met constantly, about the beautiful girl, but the question invariably died on my lips. I waited patiently until some trusty friend might give me the desired information.

The Gospel of the Unexpected had been of great service to me in many ways, and I was destined to obtain the history in a strange manner.

One of the physician's orders which I carried out implicitly, provided for a bath in the Great Salt Lake twice each week, in addition to the bath at the Hot Springs. It is a remarkable bath tub, and the strange part of it is the very democratic and yet exclusive company one meets with there. Floating about on your back, you encounter a judge from Idaho, a man from the Sandwich Islands, congressmen, doctors, scientists, authors, and laymen of every kind and degree. It was my fancy to select an early hour, when the bathers were less numerous, and on one of these occasions I found myself hobnobbing with a silver king, whose acquaintance I had made at the national capital long before. Man is not a beautiful animal in his bathing dress, but we recognized each other, and floated or swam about, talking over mutual friends and affairs in Washington, until we began to feel the pangs of hunger, then we mounted the steps, and agreed that we would meet as soon as possible, and dine together.

The silver king was waiting to greet me as I emerged from the bathing section, and in a few moments we were seated at a table overlooking the lake, while our dinner, the best we could procure, was being prepared. Naturally, our talk turned upon the Mormon question, for we had just been greeted cordially by a prominent member of that faith, who was spending a few days with his family at Saltair, at least, a portion of his family, and one of his wives. We had both seen him at the capitol. After discussing the question for some time, and telling each other some rather odd experiences, I chanced to ask my friend if he had ever known Madame Leighton, my hostess.

"Not by that name," he said, "although I have mining interests about here, and have not missed a plunge in this lake for nearly twenty years."

"She was a classmate of my mother," I said, "and I am boarding with her."

"Where does she live?"

I gave the street and number.

"Bless me," he said, "you mean Elder ———'s third wife!"

"Perhaps," I answered; "in fact, I am getting very cautious about the second, and third, and fourth alliances; the complications overpower me."

"That woman," said the silver king, "was at one time a great beauty, and until number four came, her power over the Elder was almost absolute."

"I wonder if it can be a girlhood picture of her which hangs in my room; it is a beautiful face."

"I should like to see it," he remarked.

"GOOD HEAVENS! DUNBAR—THE FACE IS ALIVE," HE EXCLAIMED

It was settled that he should do so that night, after our return to town; but I was called to the telephone by him later on, when he excused himself until morning, as some mine owners were consulting with him. Would I permit him to come early in the morning?

Soon after breakfast on the following morning, Mr. Silas Bullion sent up his card and was shown to my room. As he entered, the sunlight rested on the portrait and it seemed to greet him.

"Good heavens, Dunbar, the face is alive; it is radiant; no wonder you—"

"Shut the door," I said quickly; "some of the family may hear you." He closed the door and sat down opposite the portrait.

"Poor child; poor girl," he said.

"Do you know who it is?"

"Yes, I—suppose so."

"Is there any doubt?"

"Not in my mind or that of others. She was one of the most beautiful girls that ever lived, and was called 'The Sego Lily.' You remember how the early comers existed on the root of that beautiful lily, which is now the State flower of Utah?"

"Yes," I said, "some of my leisure hours have been spent in painting the State flower for friends at hom Was she one of this family?"

"Yes. See here, Dunbar; I can't tell the story he with her eyes upon me; I may be a hard-hearted mone getter, but I tell you, as that story all comes back me, I feel like crying for her and saying: 'Oh! religio religion! what crimes have been committed in thy name Come down to my hotel, Dunbar, and I'll get t old man in who knew all about it, and he shall tell t story to you, as he told it to me. He does not drea that it affects us as we know it does. His religious ze and fanaticism leads him to think it all right; but y must curb your temper and be cautious in your que tions, or you will not get the whole story."

"I will be discretion's self," I said.

It was late in the afternoon when Mr. Bullion brougl the old man into his private parlor, and introduced m to him as a "distinguished lawyer from Washingto who was trying the hot baths, and was anxious to writ something about the early history of Utah."

The old gentleman was evidently in moderate circum stances, and was proud of an opportunity to meet i this social manner, a man of such well known financia ability as Mr. Bullion.

After some reminiscenses of the early years, an stories of the hardships encountered by his little ban in coming over the plains, he chanced to say, "Yes, th Sego Lily saved our lives; it was bread and meat to us."

"By the way Elder," said Mr. Bullion, "what wa that story you told me once about some pretty girl the granddaughter of a friend of yours. I remembe you told me about it when we were up in the mountain one night."

"You must know, Mr. Dunbar," he said, turning t me, "that my friend, the Elder, understands these Utal mountains better than any man I have ever seen."

"Do you mean Lily, the Sego Lily?"

"Yes, a blonde, wasn't she?"

"An angel!" said the old man fervently. "I have taken her little hand in mine and walked these streets when it seemed to me that she was leading me, and I was only following."

"Whose child was she?"

"The daughter of a good woman, who was the third wife of one of our prophets and leaders. The mother had some hard trials, but she bore her cross bravely; and never murmured, until one day, when she was ordered to give Lily to be the wife of a man who had already taken two of her beautiful girls to wife. Lily was her prayer child; and she told me once, as we are cousins, you know, that for months and months she prayed every day before a picture of the Madonna, that God would make the child coming to her, gentle in spirit, faithful, noble and true; and when Lily came, and her husband was away with his fourth wife, every one could see how much the child looked like that picture of the Madonna.

"She was beautiful, gentlemen, beautiful and good. Her mother worked hard, and got money enough to send her East to school, and when she came back after four years, and walked into the Tabernacle one day with her mother, every man and woman just kept their eyes on her.

"The little children called her 'Queen Lily.'

"In a little while we saw she wanted to get away and go back East, something troubled her; and one day I asked her, as an old man and kinsman could, what it was.

"We were sitting out under a tree, in her mother's yard, and she looked all around, and then burst into tears.

"'Oh, uncle, it is not right; I cannot live here, women are not honored and loved as they should be, and the law is disregarded. I detest the very sound of polygamy; they pretend that it is not carried on, but it is, and you know it is, secretly; and all around me I see women with sad, tired faces, worn by sorrow, women who are trying to satisfy their heart-hunger by platitudes, in the name of religion, and my heart aches for them; I want to go back to the East, where I cannot see all this canker-eating misery, and I have no money; and uncle'—the dear child always called me uncle—said she, 'the worst has come, and if I dared I would end my life; nothing but the thought of breaking my patient mother's heart keeps me from it.'

"'Lily, my dear, tell your uncle what the worst is. Tell me for your own sake.'

CONTINUED ON PAGE 641

IN MY COOL VERANDA NOOK

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Saturday Half-Holiday

A TOKEN of advancement in brotherly love and human kindliness is the Saturday half-holiday, which is almost universal at present, during the tw fervid months of July and August. In addition to th many of the large stores close every day in the week at.ve, so that employees have time for rest and fresh ai in the evening. The co-operation of the public shuld be freely accorded, so that employers may not lo sales by their generous conduct toward wage-earners. Women who can control their time should tae pains to finish shopping by half-past four, and Saturday morning errands would better be anticipated orFriday or postponed till Monday. One of the chief excuses urged by those who constantly break the Sabath by using it as a day, not of religious obse ance, but of secular recreation, is that they hve no other time for physical recuperation. "If w do not seek amusement then, we shall never secure it," they plead. A Saturday, when release fr n work is given at noon, affords opportunity for gaies and excursions, and leaves people without aplogy if, on Sunday, they neglect the house of God.

t takes from the poor man the necessity to play bse-ball on Sunday, and from the rich man the excuse for spending hallowed hours on the golf-links. No one can see without regret, if he care fc the moral growth of our country, the increasing li nse in the matter of Sabbath-observation; golf-links and tennis-lawns attract throngs of well-dssed and well-to-do people, younger and older, p ple whose places were formerly in the pew as a m ter of course. One of the worst features in th especial matter is that boys are employed as caddies, and thus taught by example and precept tht the Lord's Day is not to be honored if there bin it a chance for money-making, or for worldly p asure.

. . .

More and more the dry rot of Sabbath-breaking is ating into character in this dear land of ours. Te effects are manifest in multiplied instances of d eneracy, in the lack of integrity in business, and in he lessened respect for the family bond. We c not offend in a single point without infringing th whole code. A Sabbath-keeping nation wor-ships God, and holds him in reverence; a Sabbath-keping nation loves and studies the Bible. For this reason, if for no other, the Saturday half-holiday is a boon, and an occasion for general gratitude. We welcome a holiday and are quite ready to d p our tasks. We do not ask to have a whole holiday every week, but a half-holiday fits into our nd with nice adjustment.

In certain suburban villages, there is a Wednesday half-holiday for grocers, butchers, and marketmen whose Saturdays are long and hard. In these villages, deliveries of all food-products are, as a rule, made on Saturday. A little care on the part of householders would make an end of Sunday service in the line of delivering meat, groceries and milk at private homes on Sunday morning.

Are You Superstitious?

"Don't turn back after you leave the house, dear. You'll have bad luck all day."

"Don't sit down at table with thirteen persons. One of them will die during the year."

"Don't give a knife as a present. It will cut friendship." "Knock on wood. Hurry. You have just said you haven't had an illness in the last six months. Avert the danger. Knock on wood."

To those of us who are not superstitious, these hints and vagaries of the black art appear supremely silly. We do not tremble at dreams. We have no terror of the supernatural. Signs and wonders mean nothing to us. But to multitudes they are means of apprehension. Not only the illiterate are sufferers. Few people wholly escape the shadow of some pet superstition. Some will never walk under a ladder, or open an umbrella indoors.

Some have a family legend of a ghostly footfall on the stairs before a death. Some are broken-hearted at a shivered looking-glass. Some unspeakably dread a dog's long howl under the window.

These are relics of an inarticulate age, when omens meant more than in the lime-light of our modern years. Let us escape from their fetters. They should not weigh upon grown men and women in the twentieth century.

THE BABY MINSTREL

Dimpled fingers touch the strings,—
Ah, the baby knows
That the music is asleep;
She can wake it, see her smile!
As she plays her mother's harp.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—M. H. I do not feel competent to advise you. As you say, there are exceptional circumstances. Ordinarily it is better not to enter into marriage with any one in whose family there is even remotely insanity.

—Ella. The simplest prayer for a little child is:

Gentle Jesus, meek and mild,
Look upon a little child.
Pity my simplicity.
Suffer me to come to thee.

Concerning Illness

WHEN a dangerous illness prostrates somebody in the home, and there falls on the family the shadow of a great anxiety, everything for awhile is at a standstill. By common consent the ordinary topics are in abeyance. Whether or not there shall be a new carpet for the dining-room; whether the front of the house shall be altered by the addition of the bay window, that a month ago seemed so desirable; whether Sue shall have a new frock, or Polly a trip to California, these and other matters are of little consequence now. Even the common occasions of depression; the bad debts that are slow in the settling; the disappointments that one never grows used to, retreat into the background when father, mother, or Brother Edward is fighting death in a room above the stairs. It is typhoid fever, and there are white-capped nurses watching its every fluctuation; or it is pneumonia, and the doctor is grave, fearing that the heart will not endure the strain, and the lungs refuse their office. Whatever the malady may happen to be, if it is serious and the issue doubtful, the household waits on it with bated breath. The doctor's coming is the event of the day. How we wait for his verdict; how we scrutinize his face, so impressive when he chooses not to reveal what he thinks; how we pray that God will make the dear one well! People whose prayers have been perfunctory for years, or who have almost forgotten how to pray, pour out their souls in supplication when life and death are trembling in the balance, and to-morrow's sun may see the house in mourning.

Then it is that family affliction arouses itself and shows that it is real. There are family antagonisms as instinctive and as common as family affection. They are forgotten in the crucial hours of peril to a dear one.

What joy and gladness when the tide of returning health sets strongly in, when the doctor steps jauntily across the threshold, and one of the nurses is dismissed. Little by little, the sick one gets well. Presently he or she resumes the old duties, the man goes to business, the woman picks up the former interests and tasks. The long illness is a thing of the past.

A reader of this page has sent some useful hints on visiting the sick. She draws from her own experience, and therefore should be heeded when she tells us plainly

HOW TO DO IT

First of all, my dears, wear some of your pretty clothes when you come to see us. Go where you may, no more appreciative or admiring eyes will ever rest upon you than ours.

When you enter our sick room, take a seat not too near, and directly facing us, so we can see you without turning our eyes.

Try to sit easily and quietly. If your gloves lie in your lap —gloves that happen to have fasteners of the "snap" variety, which, perhaps, are stiff and may really need clasping and unclasping to make them move more easily—wait I beseech you, until a more convenient season, before attempting a process so painful to one at least.

Speak in a clear and natural voice. Do not think it a kindness to speak in so low and subdued a tone that we have to strain our ears to catch it.

Do not say "Why, how splendid you look! You don't look as if you had been sick a day." We who have suffered so much find it hard to believe such a statement, especially when we hear you say when out in the hall, "How frail and miserable she looks! I believe she is going into consumption." Alas, for our ears which hear through brick walls and closed doors, the very things not intended for us to hear, and our imagination never fails to supply the missing words, if there be any.

Talk to us about things that would interest us if we were well. But do not tell us of harassing, heart breaking or blood-curdling things, which have an unpleasant way of recurring to us again and again, and of getting so mixed up in our dreams as to make our nights hideous.

Lastly, be sympathetic. "Sympathy is two hearts tugging at one load," therefore the burden is lighter than if one is tugging alone.

Be thoughtful. For "evil is wrought from want of thought as well as from want of heart."

Be natural. "Not like everybody else, but with thine own peculiar charm."

Be cheerful. For "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine."

Our friend's words are so pertinent that we cannot do better than bear them in long memory, whenever we visit those who are tenants of easy-chairs and couches, and who cannot go about in freedom and vigor.

A BOY'S COURAGEOUS GOODNESS

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS*

"WHAT is a boy?" asked a speaker who was addressing a company of boys. One could hardly guess what answer the speaker expected to receive, but a most sagacious reply was given by one of the boys: "A boy is the beginning of a man." The same idea is to be found in the old adage, "The boy is father to the man." But the boy's way of putting it is the clearest and the best. In all the Bible there is not to be found a truer man, nor more noble king than Josiah. He was worthy to be compared with David, for "he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord." but unlike King David "he declined neither to the right hand nor to the left," but went straight forward in all rightdoing. And what was the character of the boy who was the beginning of such a man? It must be acknowledged that Josiah was not well born, even though he made his advent in a king's palace. His father, Amon, though a son of Israel, was named after an Egyptian god, the chief of the Theban triad. King Amon ruled only two years in Jerusalem, but he is said to have "multiplied trespass," and "tried to show how much evil could be compressed into two years." He ruled his own household so badly that his servants conspired against him and slew him.

The boy Josiah was no more fortunate in his grandfather, who was King Manasseh. It is said of him that "he made the inhabitants of Jerusalem to err and to do worse than the heathen." While it is true that Manasseh did repent and humble himself before the Lord, he had sowed seeds of evil influence impossible for him to recall. But the boy Josiah was more fortunate in his great grandfather, who was King Hezekiah. "There shall be peace and truth in my days," was the motto of his kingdom. And right well he carried this out, leaning upon the arm of the Lord and calling upon him in prayer when great emergencies arose.

But what had Josiah to do with his father, his grandfather, and his great grandfather? It has been said, "All kings live in the last king or the reigning monarch; that we know not which of our ancestors comes up in us at this moment or that, now the tiger, now the eagle; now the praying mother, now the daring sire; now some mean soul that got into the current by a mystery never to be explained; now the cunning, watchful patient deceiver, who can wait for nights at a time, and never complain of the dusk or the cold; and now the hero that never had a fear; the philanthropist that loved the world; the mother that never looked otherwise than God himself would have her look." Yes, what of Josiah's mother? He was fortunate there. His mother was Jedidiah, signifying one beloved. The name she gave her son, "Josiah" (whom God heals), in all likelihood indicated her hope that he would in his day and time overcome the existing evils of idolatry. And the boy Josiah was fortunate in his grandmother, Adaiah, "Jehovah adorns." And so the forces of good and evil met in Josiah and they were to do battle in his soul.

At eight years of age, Josiah came to the throne in a most troublous time. His crowning was the outcome of regicide, and fratricide, for King Amon had been slain by his servants, and they in turn had been slain by their own countrymen, the men of Jerusalem, who then made Josiah king. They had crowned him in the Temple Court, between the two great pillars of Jachin and Boaz.

There can be no question that the secret of the great and good reign of King Josiah was his faithfulness to God's laws. But he did not inherit godliness, for we are told that "while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David his father." This was in the eighth year of his reign, when he was sixteen years of age, at which time he probably assumed the duties of a reigning king. Up to this time the affairs of state had probably been managed by Hilkiah, the high priest, and others associated with him.

putting the sublime fact of brain specialization, the result of which in plain words we call "habit."

Dr. J. B. De Morte, in his lecture on the "Secret of Character Building," puts strong arguments for early Christian training, laying the road for the trunk lines of a virtuous life, thus making it hard to do evil and easy to do right. It gives a new meaning to the familiar injunction: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." We might almost say, he cannot depart from it, for it is a part of his very being, woven into the texture of his brain. But the brain specialized with evil, as in the case of the criminal, how hard to change it! There must needs be a new physical basis built up, as well as a spirit. Nothing appeals to a boy more strongly than a high ideal, particularly in the period of "adolescence," so called, which begins about twelve years of age and extends to sixteen or eighteen. A youth of fifteen was taken in to see the opening of the Supreme Court of the United States. Majestically the judges filed in and took their seats, all in a row, and then proceeded to business in a quiet and dignified way. On coming out, the lady who had accompanied the boy, said: "Do you think you will ever make as grand a man as any of those judges?" With a face filled with hope, and in a cheerful voice the boy replied: "Well, they were all boys once." This incident was afterwards related to Justice Harlan, when he replied appreciatively, "That's good, and it is not so very long ago that we were boys either." It was afterwards repeated to Justice Brewer, and he replied, "Judge Harlan will be seventy-two to-morrow."

THEY BRAKE DOWN THE ALTARS OF BAALIM IN HIS PRESENCE, AND THE IMAGES THAT WERE ON HIGH ABOVE THEM

Illustration and Application

Josiah the Child. We do not read of the early death of his mother, so in all probability she lived to train her child in sweet and homely virtues, while Hilkiah, the high priest, and Huldah, the prophetess, schooled him in other matters that pertained to a king-child.

An eminent preacher, greatly interested in psychology, in giving an address to children, told them that "all they thought about, and all they did made little paths on their brains, just as people passing through a field make a path with their feet. Wrongdoing makes a bad and dangerous path on the brain, while good thoughts and deeds make a good and safe path." It was a simple way of putting it, but it was the truth.

Josiah the Youthful Reformer. In the twelfth year of his reign, when he was but twenty years old, he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places and the groves and the carved images and the molten images. And this he did by having those that were wood hewed down, while the molten images he had broken to pieces, and ground to powder and scattered upon the graves of those who had worshiped them. His youthful zeal was so great that he had the remains of false teachers of idol worship dug up, and their bones burned upon the altars where they had led in sacrifice. This was done to pollute the altars so that the people would disdain their use. Not only in Jerusalem, but throughout the whole land, the youthful reformer prosecuted his work.

In all times, "youthful Josiahs mean reformed nations." No story in history is more fascinating than that of the young King Alfred, afterwards called "Alfred the Great," who ascended the British throne in the ninth century at twenty-two years of age. He took the ten commandments and made them the basis of a code of laws, through the administration of which he made his kingdom a safe place for life and property. And not only this, but King Alfred's laws, and the trial by jury, first instituted by him, have largely influenced all nations and people since his time.

Two boys sat on the same bench at Truro Grammar School; one was Humphrey Davy and the other Henry Martyn. Both made their mark in the world, and back of behind them the memory of a good and unsullied name. Davy invented the "safety lamp" which has been such a boon to miners, whilst Martyn carried the light of the Gospel to those who dwelt in heathen darkness.

"What a dark night," thought Mr. Morrison, as he stepped into the copse and groped his way along the woodland path. All nature seemed asleep—not a sound from bird or other wild creature, only the soft whispering of the leaves overhead. "Hark! what is that?" A quiet, firm footstep in the distance breaks the silence, coming nearer and nearer. Then a dim figure of a man appears—a gamekeeper with a lantern in his hand. "But what a wretched flickering light," thought Mr. Morrison; then he spoke his thought aloud—"That is a poor light you are carrying," he said. "Yes, sir," answered the gamekeeper, "I carry that kind of light a-purpose not to disturb the game."

The two parted, and silence fell once more on the wood, but the gamekeeper's words still lingered in Mr. Morrison's mind. "He carries a dim light on purpose. Ah! that is what many Christians are doing to-day. They do not want to let their light so shine before men, that it shall be noticeable that they belong to the Saviour. They want to keep their lamps burning with just enough flame to light them into heaven, but not sufficient to make them conspicuous. But God wants no half and half lights; he looks for steady, burning lamps, filled with precious oil—the power of the Holy Ghost.

Josiah, the Keeper of God's House. "When he had purged the land, he returned to Jerusalem." It had taken him nearly six years to accomplish this. In the meantime the Temple itself had come in for a share of the purging. What a lot of idol rubbish had gathered in during the fifty-five years' reign of Manasseh and the two years' reign of Amon. The Temple had become more foul than Augean stable. When the work of cleansing was done, King Josiah proceeded to have it repaired as a fit place for the worship of the true God.

In the house of the soul sits a weaver,
With his shuttle flying all day;
A-weaving, weaving, weaving,
And the fabric shall never decay.
But always the same, the weavers' name,
In the house of the soul, is myself!

Oh, lonely and silent weaver!
Consider thy infinite task;
"Is the fabric the best I can fashion?"
Forget not, forget not to ask!
For time shall not finish thy labors,
Eternity can but complete;
And the work as it stands, when it comes from thy hands,
Must be laid at the Master's feet.

EVA WILLIAMS MALONE.

The king was still youthful, being only twenty-six years of age. There was hearty co-operation with him on the part of all manner of workmen, artificers, and builders, and carpenters, and bearers of burdens. And when the repairs were complete there was glad service on the part of musicians, and Levites, and scribes, and officers. Through all ages the character of Josiah has been a beacon-light, particularly to the young. God has put the story in his Book as an example, as an inspiration to encourage fathers and mothers who do battle for the souls of their boys surrounded by great temptations. But the story is particularly for the boys, to show them how to make men out of themselves, men in whom God is well pleased.

Surely God does not expect that all shall be kings, or even reformers in a large way, but rather that each shall make the most of the place in which he finds himself.

Just to be tender, just to be true;
Just to be glad the whole day through!
Just to be merciful, just to be mild;
Just to be trustful as a child;
Just to be gentle and kind and sweet;
Just to be helpful with willing feet;
Just to be cheery when things go wrong;
Just to drive sadness away with song,
Whether the hour is dark or bright,
Just to be loyal to God and right;
Just to believe that God knows best;
Just in his promise ever to rest;
Just to let love be our daily key—
This is God's will for you and for me.

* International Sunday School Lesson for August 6. Josiah's good reign, II. Chron. 34: 1-13. Golden Text: "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth" Eccles. 12: 1.

A MORMON MYSTERY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 638

"'Will you try to help me if I tell you? Will you not turn against me as every one has done, but my sad-hearted mother?'

"'I will help you,' I said. Poor dear, church or no church, I made the promise.

"And then she told me, that for weeks, ever since her return, the man who had married her two sisters, wanted her for his wife.

"I didn't wonder that he wanted her, but it kind of staggered me.

"'Oh, uncle, it is not right, it cannot be right.'

"'If the church orders it so, it must be right,' I said.

"With a look of despair, she said, 'Uncle, the church has ordered it, but I deny its right to sell me body and soul.'

"'Hush, dear, hush; you might get into serious trouble, and Lily——'

"Well, gentlemen, I saw how it was. Keen wanted her, and was bound to have her, and he had settled it all with the head of the church. I couldn't help her, and no one could, unless her mother might get her away again quietly."

"See here, Elder," said Mr. Bullion, "the law had been passed then forbidding polygamy, had it not?"

"Oh, yes; but you see the church is the higher law, and there are ways to evade human laws when they conflict with the Divine ones."

"Divine ones!" I said emphatically under my breath.

The old man went on: "I tried to talk with Lily's mother a bit, but she was so miserable, she just pressed my hand like one in deep trouble, and left me. So it went on for awhile, and at last Lily disappeared. When people asked where she was, the family said, gone away to study. The queerest part of it was Keen was gone, too. He did not come back for over a year. Some said he went to Europe, some said he was in California, and others that he was in Washington, where he had lots of friends. I don't know about that; all I do know is that he made things right with the church, and that he has grown richer and richer, and prospers daily. I wish I was as well-to-do."

"But Lily, what became of her?" I asked.

"Well, sir, we don't know. There's rumors and rumors; but you must never mention her name to her mother. She's a changed woman since those days, and has little to say to any one. If she knows whether Lily is alive or dead, she never tells; my opinion is she don't know, but perhaps I am wrong."

That night I dreamed of the Lily, and she seemed to come to me for aid. Her hands were stretched out to me, imploring me to help her, and when I saw Bullion I told him about it, and he said either that picture must be removed from my room, or I must leave sooner than I had expected to.

Circumstances favored my speedy departure. A classmate from the East wired me from San Francisco to come down there for a couple of weeks. He was a good physician, and thought I might venture to give up the hot baths for a little while. I decided to go.

Bullion saw me off at the station in his great-hearted fashion, and laughingly said that the ghost of the Sego Lily would no longer haunt me when out of the Salt Lake region.

My friend the doctor knew San Francisco well, and he took me about whenever his business engagements would permit.

I found myself greatly interested in the so-called Funeral Parlors, and one day, when some carriages had driven away, I followed the gentleman who seemed to be in charge, and asked if I might be permitted to know something of their methods of business. We had nothing of the kind in my own home.

"Certainly," he said, and I was taken all through the establishment, from the vaults below, where bodies are received, to the dressing and reception rooms above, and also the large parlors where services are held. The wisdom of the arrangement is apparent, when you consider the large number of people who board in California, also the great number of invalids who go there, and the inadequate provision in private houses for such sad ceremonies.

The doctor had gone into the country that day, and I lingered a long time chatting with the gentleman, who proved to be one of the partners. Just as I was leaving, the senior partner returned from escorting the burial party. As he opened the door he exclaimed: "Karl Dunbar! you here? Well, every one turns up in California;" and we were clasping hands cordially as old neighbors and friends.

Of course we had much to tell each other, and when the doctor wired me that he must stay overnight, I naturally invited Sam Churchill, my old friend, to spend the evening with me.

The next day I drifted into Sam's parlors, and as he was very busy, I accepted his invitation to look over some albums which he had in his office. It was rather gruesome business, but I kept on and secretly admired his businesslike methods.

"We have strange things happen here, Karl, stranger than any romance; when you come to any pictures marked 'Ex,' let me know, and I will tell you the story."

Sam went out and left me with the books. As I turned over the pages carelessly, I suddenly saw before me the face of the Sego Lily—two pictures of her side by side.

I was nearly stunned for a moment, and not surprised to find on the margin "Ex., Book 168. Year 18—"

When Sam returned, I said as carelessly as possible, "Tell me this story."

"Oh," said he "that's a mystery: that happened during my very first year of business. It was the strangest case I ever knew, and I should like to unravel it."

"Tell it, Sam, or better, let me read it here in your private office," I said.

"All right; here Brady," he said to a clerk, "bring me book 168, year 18—, from the vault." The clerk took the keys and soon returned with the book.

This was the substance of the record: "June 26th, 18—. A tall man—name said to be Travis, going to Europe. Wife confined; child dead. Called at No. 1072 Cliff Street; took bodies. Funeral set for day following. Man in hurry; plenty of money. Paid bill, $300. Drove him to train—he did not wait for funeral. Planned to send bookkeeper girl and clerk as mourners, to keep up appearances. Something wrong.

"In the evening went to room and looked at body; beautiful; high color; no pallor. Morning—took notion to delay funeral—did so. Kept things quiet from clerks. Watched body; took picture.

CONCLUDED ON PAGE 642

SHREDDED WHOLE WHEAT

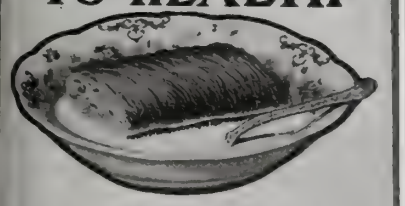
JUST THE TICKET

A perfect food is a through ticket to Health, with no stop-overs and no accidents. A perfect food must not only contain the maximum of nutriment, but it must be easily assimilated by the stomach. It must contain the highest possible nutritive value.

Shredded Whole Wheat Biscuit

is the only known food which fulfills these demands. Everybody likes it because it may be prepared in hundreds of different tempting ways—with milk, cream, eggs and all kinds of seasonable fruits and vegetables. ¶ It is good for everybody because it is made from the whole wheat berry, shown by chemical analysis to contain in concentrated form, everything necessary to sustain human life and build strong, healthy bones, teeth, muscles and tissues. ¶ Always serve it according to directions in the book of recipes. ¶ In place of bread for toast, sandwiches, etc., try Triscuit, the whole wheat cracker. It is delicious with butter, cheese or preserves. Try "Toasted Triscuit" and Cheese. ¶ Write for "The Vital Question Cook Book," free.

ON THE ROAD TO HEALTH



NATURAL FOOD CO.
NIAGARA FALLS TO EVERY HOME

APPEAL

1843 1905

Tenement: Sick-room temperature, 96°.

Sea Breeze: 20° to 30° lower. Always breezy, always cool. Nurses' care, nourishing food, flowers, surf bathing.

$2.50 will take a teething baby from the sweltering tenement to Sea Breeze for one week.

$5.00 will take the sick or worn-out mother and little brother of four.

How Many Will You Send?

A friend will duplicate each gift of $2.50 or less up to $250.00.

Stamps—checks—postal orders.

New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor.

ROBERT SHAW MINTURN, Treas.,
105 East 22d Street, New York.

ROYAL Baking Powder

Makes the food more Wholesome and Delicious.

DON'T POWDER THE BABY

It will not relieve prickly heat or chafing of any kind. It only aggravates it. Use

SPIM SOAP And SPIM OINTMENT-CREAM

Instead. It is just as good for the parents. There is a comfort in feeling clean. Fill up the pores with powder and the feeling is gone. Try SPIM OINTMENT-CREAM on your face when he comes from a romp with his horse or bicycle. It cures and you have the greatest time ever offered. Nothing like it for sunburn. Cures in a night. Your grocer or druggist should be able to supply you with both. If not, send 25c for SPIM SOAP and 50c for SPIM OINTMENT-CREAM (stamps taken) and I will send it to you direct from here.

SPIM CO., 55 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N.Y.

Charles B. Knox, manufacturer of the celebrated Knox's Gelatine, sole proprietor. Drop us a postal card for "Watch the Baby" booklet. It tells how your baby may win a prize of from $1 to $5. FREE.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief for PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.

Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.

GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

Learn to Knit

Great as our former Knitting books have been, the new Columbia Book of Yarns (Fifth Edition) is perfect in every way. It contains a wealth of information with 106 fine photographs of the very newest stitches and instructions for making them. It would be a low price for this book, but it costs only 15 cents at dealers or by mail.

COLUMBIA YARNS are the best for all knitting purposes. Go farthest and are cheapest in the end.

Look for the Columbia trademark on the label around every skein.

Columbia Yarns, Philadelphia

TRAINING SCHOOL for CHRISTIAN WORKERS

Prepares women for Christian Work. The full course requires six months and includes Bible Study, English, Commercial, Nursing, and Domestic Science.

A Diploma will be given each person completing the full course and passing satisfactory examination.

POSITIONS GUARANTEED TO GRADUATES

Terms low and payments made easy. Only a limited number of students can be accommodated. Apply to Miss F. M. Gordon, Normal Florence Crittenton Mission, 215 Third St., N.W. Washington, D.C.

THIS GENUINE LEATHER TURKISH ROCKER

Shipped anywhere in the U.S. freight charges Prepaid, upon receipt of $3. If after careful examination it is found exactly as represented, pay the balance $2.50, and you have the greatest value ever offered. A chair equal to this cannot now be retail from $4 to $5. It is made of the very finest genuine leather obtainable and workmanship is perfect. "There is nothing better made." Write today. Leather Furniture Catalogue No. 5 sent free.

Central Mantel Co., 1242 Olive St., St. Louis

LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE

No gumming to clog neck of bottle—No sediment—will not spoil nor discolor the finest papers. Full 2 oz. bottle retails at 5c., or sent by mail for 10c.; also half-pints, pints and quarts.

LE PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE, 2 oz. size retails 5c.; by mail, 10c.

LE PAGE'S GLUE STRONGEST IN THE WORLD 1 oz. bottle or tube, 10c.; by mail, 12c.

RUSSIA CEMENT CO., 154 Essex Ave., Gloucester, Mass.

LOANED FREE

32 page pamphlets of new and suitable Sacred Songs for Camp Meetings and Evangelistic Services.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

EDUCATION FREE Gospel Bible Missionary and Training School, Boston, Mass. Address for Catalogues, REV. J. B. THOMAS, D.D., Newton Centre, Mass.

Printer and Pressman Wanted to [illegible] a business of four or five thousand a year and [illegible] positions. Earnest Christian [illegible] Address at once, with reference, Berea College, Berea, Ky.

JAP-A-LAC

REGISTERED TRADE MARK

"WEARS LIKE IRON"

applied to

SOFTWOOD FLOORS

makes them look like fine Hardwood. It dries with a beautiful luster and retains its brilliancy through wear and tear right down to the wood.

Use JAP-A-LAC and discard your old, unsanitary carpets.

JAP-A-LAC comes in twelve colors, and Natural or Clear. It is a stain and varnish combined, and rejuvenates everything about the home.

"You can do the work yourself."

Upon receipt of ten cents, to cover cost of mailing, and the name of your dealer, we will send, FREE OF CHARGE, to any point in the United States, a ¼ pint can of JAP-A-LAC, together with interesting booklet and color card.

Ask your dealer or

THE Glidden VARNISH CO. Address Dept G. C. 751 Williamson Bldg. CLEVELAND, OHIO.

JAP-A-LAC YOUR FLOORS MAKES THEM SANITARY

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICES

Dewey's Improved Acme Dress and Corset Protector

Better and cleaner than Dress Shields, being a complete garment, always ready to wear with any dress. The best Protector to be worn with the Popular Shirt Waist Suits, and Shirt Waists, as they require no sewing in. The only perfect protection from perspiration.

REDUCED PRICES. One Pair Does the Work of Six

No. 1. Bust Measure 28-33 $ .50 No. 2. Bust Measure 34-39 $ .60

No. 3 Bust Measure 40-45 .75 No. 4 Bust Measure 46-49 1.00

Agents Wanted. Catalogue Free. Send Money by P. O. Order.

M. DEWEY, Manfr., 1395 H, W. Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

MEN AND WOMEN AGENTS

You can make a STEADY AND BIG income, selling

IDEAL COMBINATION COOKERS BAKERS

The season is now on—every housekeeper buys, and every sale means to you a Profit That Is Worth While. Ideal Cookers are widely advertised. Thousands in use. Cooks an entire meal over one burner of any stove. Cuts cost of fuel in half. Some of our agents sell a whole carload a season. General, State and County Agents given exclusive territory and a most liberal Money Making Offer. No capital required. Write to-day for our 48-page catalogue and full particulars.

Toledo Cooker Co., Desk H, Toledo, O.

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

$5.80 A DAY is the average salary made by agents selling our COOKER and line of KITCHEN SPECIALTIES. Free samples. Write at once.

H. S. ROBINSON, 899 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, Ohio

A MORMON MYSTERY

CONCLUDED FROM PRECEDING PAGE

About noon on day following—alone in room—heard a sound; turned and found woman's eyes open. She said one word, 'Baby.' Went to her and tried to be cool; gave her some wine and water, and lifted her in my arms and put her on that sofa in my private room. Left child's body in casket and locked it. Plate inscribed 'Isabel Travis, wife of John Travis, of Salt Lake City, died June 26th, 18—, also infant daughter of same.' Determined to keep the secret; something wrong. Took another picture of the girl when she did not know; gave her food and tried to make her talk, but she would not, only to ask if I 'had been paid for my services.' I said Yes, in full; and if there was anything I could do for her, I would do it for the sake of my dear old mother at home.

"She thanked me and cried over her baby, and then she begged me, as I loved the mother I had spoken of, to keep her case a profound secret for at least five years. I promised, and she gave me a little ring 'for my kindness,' she said. Well, she seemed like an angel to me, and all I know is that she went to board at La Salle street and only remained two weeks. So far as I know, she has never been heard of since."

"Sam," I asked, "what was done with the lady's effects?"

"Oh, Travis told me he had sent them home to her mother with an account of her death. He was going to Europe for a time. Well, the thing worried me so that I made a trip to Salt Lake and could not find any such name. Of course my idea is that the girl was brought away against her will, and was either thought to die or was drugged in order to get the man free from some legal complications."

"It is monstrous!" I exclaimed.

"Yes, the longer I live the more I pity women. All the same, I should like to see that beautiful one again—the woman I was paid to bury and didn't bury. She was a superb figure and so modest and lovely."

That night I told the doctor the whole story, and we knew then that we had solved the Mormon Mystery as far as we could.

"And that man," said the doctor, with flashing eyes, "is still honored in the Mormon Church, and his victim is literally buried from the world. See here, Karl, was Daniel Webster right when he said:

> This is the people's government, made for the people, made by the people, and answerable to the people?

When crime and polygamy are carried on, as we know they are secretly, are we, after all, a free people?"

And now comes the question: Where is the beautiful woman and what is her life, far from home and friends? Wherever she may be, the spirit of the Madonna will shine through that exquisite face into the life.

Progress of the Women's Campaign

LETTERS are being received in large numbers daily, by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, couched in the most encouraging terms, and containing signed Memorials with thousands of signatures, demanding the expulsion of Reed Smoot from the Senate. Besides the women themselves, ministers, men holding important positions in the business world, and heads of families are now sending for copies of the Memorial, to distribute. While this is distinctly a woman's movement, they are none the less grateful and appreciative of all the help given them by the men.

One wholesale merchant in Texas sends for fifteen Memorials, as his wife is working to secure the signatures of the members of every woman's organization in their city. A clergyman of Lake Como, Fla., writes:

Please send me more anti-Mormon Memorials. The six copies sent me recently have been started out for signatures, and I can dispose of a good many more to ministers and friends who will secure signers and mail them to you. Yesterday, after church, I secured a number of names to the petition.

From Kentucky comes many letters. Mrs. T. H. T., writes:

Send me a dozen Memorials. I intend to get every woman I can to sign. May God bless the women that started this movement, and may he help every woman to do all in her power against this great evil.

"I am heart and soul in this movement," writes Anna J. S., of Brooklyn, N. Y. This lady is hard at work in her neighborhood canvassing for names. Another branch of work which counts. Presidents and others connected with W. C. T. Unions, are sending for more Memorials, having filled those already sent. Michigan sends greeting from many cities, towns, and hamlets. Mrs. M. C. M., says:

Mormonism is a blot on our country, and surely no Mormon should be allowed to help make the laws of this land.

Women of far-off Colorado are deeply interested. From Oak Park, Waynesville, N. C., comes the cheering word:

The indispensable CHRISTIAN HERALD follows me to this "Land of the Sky," and I send for more of the Senate Memorials. The women of this summer resort are deeply interested in this strong petition, and will soon send you many signatures. You will receive also another signed memorial from my home in Louisiana. I feel confident that God will bless the united efforts of the patriotic Christian Judiths of our land, and that they will triumphantly bring from the Senate Chamber the head of the Modern Holofernes.

Memorials in Great Demand

Editor, The Christian Herald:

I am truly thankful for the prominence you are giving the Mormon question, and hope you will keep right on until we succeed in crushing out this monster of evil! On Saturday evening, the 2d inst., I spoke to a full house at Dr. Doyle's large and beautiful church. Had twenty-five of the Memorials with me, and they were all gone in a few minutes and I could have used as many more. On Friday morning, the 7th inst., I spoke at the Pennsylvania States Rally of the Christian Endeavor Society in Baltimore (in the Lafayette Presbyterian Church), to one thousand people. I told of what you were doing and of the Memorial, at the close every petition was taken. I went back to the hotel and got another supply, and wherever I went people came to me asking for petitions, which I gave. MRS. ANNA MCKEAN WHITE.

Philadelphia, Pa.

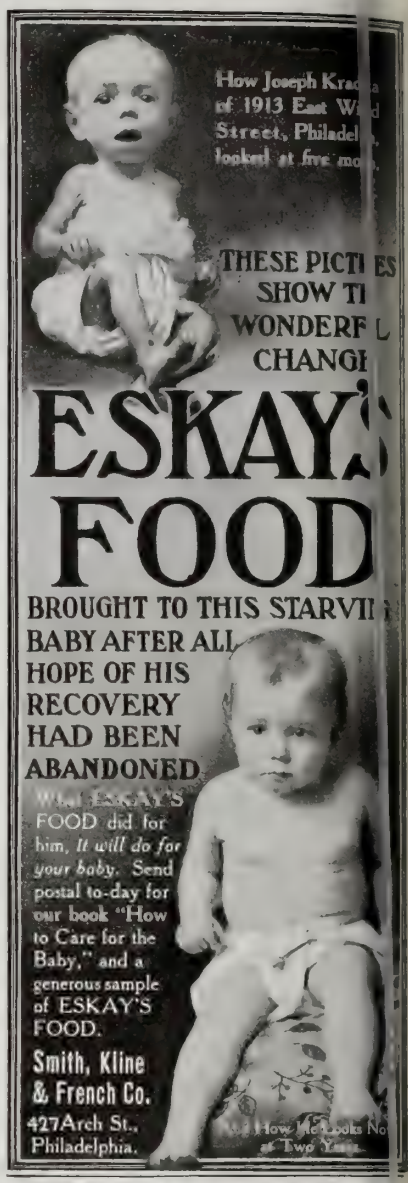
A Home for Christian Workers

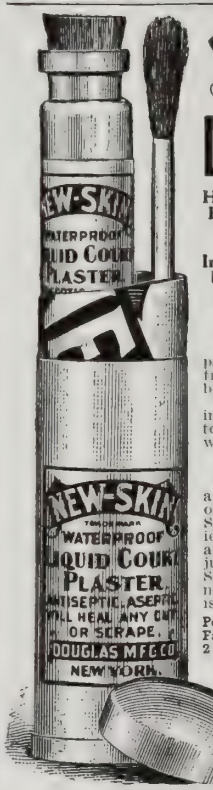
Elim Home, at Bell Island, N. Y., one of the best known retreats for invalid or overworked missionaries and Christian workers, is now in its ninth season of usefulness. With the assistance of friends in various States, the Rev. William James, founder of the Home, has made it a retreat of great value to the class it is specially intended to benefit. In addition to its regular work, Elim Home gives excursions during the hot months for tenement mothers and small children, and to the aged poor. This institution is deserving of the support of charitable readers. All communications should be addressed to Rev. Wm. James, Bell Island, South Norwalk, Conn.

The Prison-Gate Mission

The report of the New York Prison-Gate Mission for June, shows the following work done:

Met and advised with ex-prisoners, 709; fed and lodged, 93; found employment for 38; furnished articles of clothing to 9; hopeful conversions, 12; visitors to the Prison-Gate office, 135.





NEW-SKIN TRADE MARK REGISTERED WATERPROOF

LIQUID Court Plaster

Heals Cuts, Abrasions, Hang-Nails, Chapped and Split Lips or Finger Tips, Burns, Blisters, etc. Instantly Relieves Chilblains, Frosted Ears, Stings of Insects, Chafed or Blistered Feet, Callous Spots, etc., etc.

A coating on the sensitive parts will protect the skin from being chafed or blistered by new or heavy shoes.

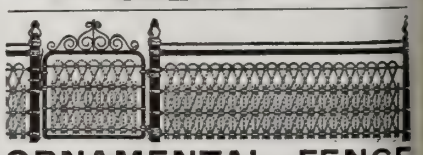
Applied with a brush it immediately dries, forming a tough, transparent, colorless waterproof coating.

Mechanics, Sportsmen, Bicyclists, Golfers, Etc. are all liable to bruise, scratch or scrape their skin. "NEW SKIN" will heal these injuries, WILL NOT WASH OFF and after it is applied the injury is forgotten, as "NEW SKIN" makes a temporary new skin until the broken skin is healed under it.

Pocket Size (size of illustration) 15
Family Size 25
2 oz. Bottles (for Surgeons and Hospitals) 50

At the Druggists, or we will mail a package anywhere in the United States on receipt of price

DOUGLAS MFG. CO.
Dept. 33
96-102 Church St., N. Y.



ORNAMENTAL FENCE

Cleverly combining Grace, Strength, and Durability. Moderate in cost. Sold direct to you. Catalogue Free. Box 302 KITSELMAN BROS., Muncie, Ind.

The "Best" Light

is a portable 100 candle power light, costing only 2 cts. per week. Makes and burns its own gas. Brighter than electricity or acetylene, and cheaper than kerosene. No Dirt. No Grease. No Odor. Over 100 styles. Lighted instantly with a match. Every lamp warranted. Agents Wanted Everywhere

THE "BEST" LIGHT CO
3—70 E. 5th Street, CANTON, OHIO.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The Living Christ*

IT is an historical fact that the apostles supposed they had seen Jesus. In me way they had come to feel that Je- is had not simply gone where pious Jews ent at death, where the dead prophets fore him had gone. They believed that had broken through the confines of the iritual world and had come back to the en that he loved; that he was in a state spiritual nearness to them, which made practicable for them to speak to him in ayer, and which enabled him to bring s personal influence directly to bear up- their spirits. "Christ liveth in me" was aul's report of his spiritual experience. ne Christian church has ever since per- tuated this testimony in its report of rsonal experience. This belief of the hristian church, from the apostles down, a colossal historical fact that must be counted for in some way. Various the- etical explanations have been advanced, t none of them has stood the test of sci- tific scrutiny as has that which is pre- nted in the Gospel narrative, namely, at on the third day after his death, Je- s' tomb was found empty, and he him- lf in bodily form was seen by his disci- es. His resurrection was not a mere storation to previous conditions, like that perienced by the young man of Nain; it as rather an entrance into a new and gher form of personal existence in which he has access to the spirits of all willing men. We have more than the mere religious teacher, Jesus of Nazareth, to be classed with Confucius and Buddha. We have a resurrected Christ, who is our Living Lord and Saviour.

* From Studies in the Life of Jesus Christ, by ward I. Bosworth. A series of thirty studies the Gospels, taking each in its order. Pp. 259. blished by the International Committee of ung Men's Christian Associations, New York.

Books Received

The American Book Co., New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago, has issued the following: French Grammar, for the use of Americans, by J. H. Wormser, Ph.D., and A. De Rougemont, B.A.; revised by Prof. Louis W. Arnold; pp. 203. Price $1. The Fairy Reader, adapted from Grimm and Andersen, by James Baldwin; pp. 190. Price 35c. Essentials in American History, an up-to-date text book, by Albert Bushnell Hart, LL.D. of Harvard; pp. 631, illustrated. Price $1.50. Essentials in English History, by Albert Perry Walker, A.M., and Albert Bushnell Hart, LL.D.; uniform with the preceding volume; pp. 592, with maps and illustrations. Price $1.50. Half Hours with the Lower Animals, by Charles Frederick Holder; illustrated, 60c. The Child's David Copperfield and Oliver Twist, retold by Annie Douglas Severance; illustrated, 40c. Mayer's Das Amulet, edited by C. C. Glascock, Ph.D., Yale; a little novelette for students. Price 35c. History and Government of the United States for Evening Schools, by Wm. E. Chancellor; 112 pp., maps and illustrations, 30c. Economy in Education, by Prof. R. N. Roark; deals with many problems that confront the teacher; pp. 252. Price $1.

The Bible in Brazil, by Hugh G. Tucker. This is an interesting narrative of fourteen years, during which the author traveled in Brazil as agent of the American Bible Society. Dr. Tucker says that his object in writing the book is to present more clearly to the Christian people of the United States and England, the conditions which surround 17,000,000 souls on the South American continent and also to give some idea of what the Church is doing. A fascinating tale of daily life on this "neglected continent," giving life-like pictures of Brazilian, Indian, colonist, steamer, boat, tent, and hut life, also that of priest, merchant and laborer. All sorts of conditions and experiences find a place in the pages of this interesting book. Profusely illustrated. Price $1.25 net. Published by Fleming H. Revell Co., New York.

THE FIRST FRUITS*

AN attempt has been made to show that the offering of the first fruits by the ebrews was derived from a custom in the rrounding nations. There was a super- tion current that the first fruits contain- d the strong germinal activity of the seed, hich thus entered into the organism of e eater. It was the same principle hich impels savage tribes to eat the bod- s of their enemies, that they may gain eir strength and mental power. A read- g of the law of the Hebrews, however, ows that the offering could have had no ch foundation. It is possible that, as th other laws and customs, an existing stitution may have been cleansed and rified from superstition and incorporated the code. It is evident that the basic ea of the offering was an expression of atitude to God. It was an acknowledg- ent that the fertility of the earth was due t so much to natural law, as to him who ade the law. Thanks should be rendered him that the seed deposited in the earth d come to harvest, and the best form of ankfulness was an offering of the first uits.

It was thus that the Hebrew was brought to touch with God. In this regulation, in many others, he was taught to look ove proximate causes, to the great First use. It was God who blessed his labors d gave him their fruit. Their prosperity liged on their obedience to him. Their tional adversity was not due to mistakes policy or statesmanship, but to their rsaking God and offending him. In these aterialistic days we are in danger of los- g this idea. Prosperity comes, we too en think, to the man of the shrewdest nd, the most active brain and the most gorous energy. We thrust God out of s world and treat him as if he took no in- rest in it, but had wound it up like a ock and left it to its own devices. The fering of the first fruits was a distinct re- oof to that idea, it was grateful recogni- on of his divine care.

The old laws of sacrifices are gone for- er. There are no more bleeding beasts or smoking altars. We have evolved out of that stage of education, but the lessons it was designed to teach still survive. We still need to learn that God expects sacrifice from us, not so much of property and money, as of our hearts and lives. If we surrender ourselves to him, we shall give freely of our substance, and more spontaneously than the old law required. It is not that we tithe our income, and keep a beggarly debtor and creditor account with God, giving him just so much and no more than the Mosaic demand. The Christian is a son, not a servant, and, a loving son, who delights to help forward in every way he can, the causes in which his Father takes pleasure. It is the heart and soul devotion that God craves. He does not need our gifts, for there is no lack of his power, but he likes to see us give, because of the love of which our gifts are a proof.

It is this principle that opens the gate to the poorest of his children. As men see great givers pour out their millions to this or that beneficent cause, they lose heart and think their mites will be despised. But it is not so; the poor man who denies himself that he may give, gives more than the wealthy man who does not have to abridge his comforts in order to give his millions. The poor woman, tired after doing the work of her own house, who goes to clean up for a sick neighbor, has given more than the millionaire. She has given herself, and it is that which God sees and approves. It is the spirit and the soul that he looks to. If those are given to him, as the poorest can give, he counts them consecrated, and accepts them. The poor widow who cast the two mites into the treasury, gave, Christ said, more than they all. They were "all her living," and the munificence of the greatest givers does not attain to that measure. The first fruits of our lives, the best and most precious of ourselves, we must consecrate to him, if we realize how much we owe to him, and as the Hebrews were bidden remember, when they offered their first fruits, the time of their enslavement in Egypt, so should we remember as we give of our money, and time, and labor, the bondage from which Christ has set us free.

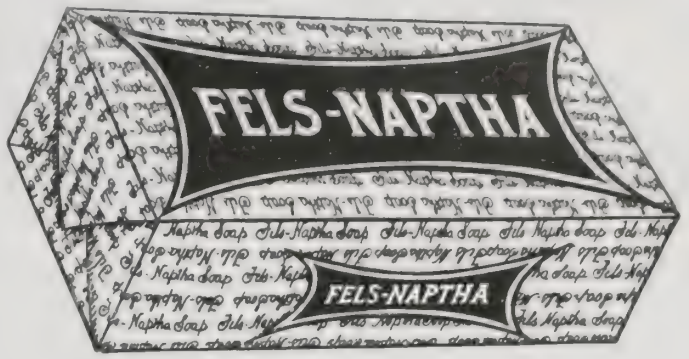
* Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for Aug. 6. Levit. 23: 9–14; Deut. 16: 9–12.

Before using.

Trouble Hard labor.
Needless expense.

After using.

Comfort Economy.
Whole clothes.



Before

Unpleasant wash-day fumes and smells. Lifting clothes in and out of the wash-boiler. Rubbing them to pieces on a wash-board. Scalding the strength out of the cloth and broiling it out of you. Lugging and burning extra coal. All-day confusion. Nerve-wrecking, clothes-tearing, back-straining drudgery.

After

Only cold or lukewarm water and moderate easy rubbing with Fels-Naptha soap. Cleaner, sweeter, purer clothes than anything else will get them. No harm to the most delicate dainty fabric. Fine silks and laces more beautiful than ever. The day's work done with time and strength to spare.

It's wonderful how beautifully Fels-Naptha cleans everything it touches—makes dishes, silver, and glassware shine; takes spots out of carpets and fine rugs; washes tiles and porcelain bath-tubs; oil-cloth and linoleum—without hurting the varnish surface; cleans sinks and loosens grease from inside pipes.

Nothing else for its purpose is at once so effective and so harmless. The way to prove it is to try it and follow the easy directions on the wrapper.

If your grocer hasn't Fels-Naptha soap, give us his name and we'll send you a free sample.

Fels-Naptha Philadelphia

"An investment in happiness pays compound interest."

No American home need be without the happiness of an

Emerson

Piano, for, while it contains all the musical perfection which wealth can buy; yet its price comes easily within the most moderate means. The remarkable fact that more than 83,000 have been sold is the result of a beautiful tone-quality mellow, vibrating and powerful—united with a wonderfully sympathetic action, extraordinary staying powers and the utmost refinement of detail and finish known to the piano maker's art.

Our new Short Grand is considered by critics the most notable success of its type in this country. Write for illustrated catalogue and booklet describing new Short Grand.

Emerson Piano Company

117 Boylston Street Boston

167 Michigan Ave. Chicago

Causes of Loss of Hair

Dr. Saboraud, the eminent French Dermatologist, says that 98 per cent. of hair losses are the results of microbes and the neglect of dandruff. The antiseptic action of preparations kills microbes and removes dandruff. Their constant use for a period will, by acting directly on the hair bulbs, furnish nourishment, vitality, and growing power to the impoverished roots and air shafts, resulting in complete restoration.

Seven Sutherland Sisters'

Sold by Druggists.

"It's the Hair—Not the Hat"

That makes a woman attractive

4% Write to-day for Booklet F. It explains "Safe Banking by Mail."
The Cleveland Trust Co., Cleveland, O.

Four Little Bee Books FREE

All intensely interesting and helpful in a number of novel ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-day

A. I. ROOT COMPANY. Medina, Ohio

SOME LITTLE ONES WHO OCCUPY COTS AT MONT-LAWN

Little Children Help Mont-Lawn

ONE of the most touching features connected with the Children's Home at Mont-Lawn, is the interest that other children take in the work. Many of the little ones connected with different Sunday Schools and Junior Endeavorers hold fairs and collect money in various other ways, in order to contribute to the Fresh-Air Fund. Some of the letters written when the money is at last collected, are most interesting, showing that the writers are thoroughly in earnest in their desire to help the poor little ones, who otherwise might never have a breath of country air all through the hot summer.

One dear little letter from Lakewood, N. J., runs thus:

Enclosed please find a check for $105, with which we wish to support five beds for the season at Mont-Lawn. We would like to have the beds called "Sunbeam Beds of Lakewood. N. J.," because we are the Sunbeams of Lakewood. We held a fair to get the money for these beds.

Yours truly, SUNBEAM SOCIETY.

President, Harriet M. Harrer; Vice-President, Ramona Simpson; Treasurer, Ethel Wight; Recording Secretary, Helen Disbrow; Corresponding Secretary, Marie White.

Such a generous gift as this comes like a twofold blessing to those who have the Fresh-Air work at heart, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD takes this means of expressing its gratitude to the little Sunbeams of Lakewood. Not only are the children blessed who will be their beneficiaries, in having ten long beautiful days and nights at Mont-Lawn, but the Sunbeams themselves will shine all the brighter for the gentle deed of kindness.

Over one of the snowy cots at the Home, there hangs a card which reads:

Given in memory of James Richard Mapes, a dear little four-year-old Christian.

When Richard's mother sent the $21 with which to endow the cot, she wrote a pathetic, but beautiful story of her little son's life and death:

"I feel that I must give you a little history of this precious money," she wrote, "that all may know of the dear child, whose last prayer was for the 'poor little boys,' and which now prompts our hearts to send his own little bank account to be used for the children at the Home, that you have so generously provided for them."

The writer then tells how, on one chilly autumn day, when she was amusing her boy in the house, they chanced to speak of the coming Christmas, at the same time looking at the illustrations in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, little Richard was attracted by the pictures of some poor boys, looking at them long and earnestly. At last he asked if they, too, would receive some of the many presents he had asked Santa Claus to bring him. Shortly after this, when his mother was hearing his evening prayer, after asking God as usual to "bless papa and mamma and baby boy," the little fellow paused and whispered a few words, which his mother could not catch. She softly asked: "What did you say, darling?" And with shining eyes lighting up his baby face, as with God's love, little Richard answered: "Mamma, I asked God to bless all the poor little boys."

Soon after, this idol of his parents' hearts was taken very ill, and although during his sickness, the little sufferer many times would look into his mother's face, saying: "O mamma, ask God to please make baby boy well." God knew best, and took him. Continuing, the sorrowing mother writes:

We are left desolate and heart-broken, but still with the all-sustaining hope of meeting our precious boy in the better land. We hope to visit the Children's Home soon, and will bring a picture of dear little Richard, asking that it may be hung upon the wall above the cot endowed in his memory, and that the little boys may look upon the lovely face of one, whose last prayer was for them.

And so through the loving thoughts and acts of living children, and the ministrations of those, who, being dead, yet speak with pathetic pleading for the little ones, Mont-Lawn stretches out tender arms to the poor children of teeming New York.

If you wish to know more about Mont-Lawn, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, send for booklet, which will be mailed free to your address. $21 endows a bed for the season, thus ensuring ten days of care and comfort to seven of New York's poor children. $3 will provide ten day's vacation for one boy or girl.

Mrs. Anthony's Faith

"I FEEL ten years younger already," said old Mrs. Anthony, the mother of brave Bill Anthony of the Maine, to a representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who called on her the other day. "I knew it would come! I was sure, for I prayed and trusted."

"But," said the visitor, "when the days went by, and things grew darker and darker, what did you do then?"

"Oh," replied the cheerful little woman, smilingly, "I just kept on praying."

If the good people who have contributed to help Mrs. Anthony, could have heard the tone of conviction in which she said these words, their own hearts would have glowed with gratitude that they could be helpful to this strong-hearted woman, brave and steadfast in her faith, amidst pinching poverty and miserable surroundings. These gifts have made it possible for Mrs. Anthony to remove to a more comfortable place, and have provided her with some of the necessities she had been obliged to part with, to temporarily keep the wolf from the door. She wishes to express her gratitude to all who have so kindly come to her assistance, especially to Mrs. C. of Albany, who wrote her a beautiful letter of love and sympathy, enclosing a substantial gift also.

All contributions in aid of Mrs. Anthony will be acknowledged in these columns.

Epworth League Convention

METHODISTS, the country over, must have been proud of the showing made at the recent Convention of the Epworth League. While Christian Endeavor draws from all denominations, the Epworth League is distinctly and exclusively Methodist. Yet the hosts assembled at Denver, Colo., on July 6th, rivalled the mother organization at Baltimore in number, as they did in enthusiasm.

The Seventh International Convention opened with three simultaneous meetings, which taxed to the utmost the capacity of Coliseum Hall, Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church and Central Presbyterian Church, the largest auditoriums in the city.

Governor Jesse F. McDonald, Mayor Robert W. Speer, Representative Robert Bonynge and others, made welcoming addresses, and responses were given by the Rev. G. F. Salton, Ottawa, Ont.; the Rev. S. D. Chown, D.D., Toronto, Ont.; the Rev. T. N. Ivey, D.D., Raleigh, N.C.; the Rev. I. Tovel, Toronto, Ont., and others.

AN UNUSUAL BOND

with Federal and State Supervision, and Corporate Responsibility

We own and offer $300,000 First Mortgage Bonds, paying 6% interest.

The denominations are $100, $500 and $1,000. Principal and semi-annual interest (January and July) payable at the American Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago, and the First National Bank, Boston.

The maturities are $30,000 a year, beginning July 1, 1907, to July 1, 1916.

The character and business standing of the issuing corporation is of the highest.

Upon each bond is printed a copy of the Certificate of legality of the Attorney General of the State in which it is issued.

The conservatively appraised value of the property securing the mortgage-liens deposited with the Trustee to secure this issue, is three-and-three-fourths times the amount of the bonds.

The Trust-Deed requires that the ratio of deposit of mortgage liens of one-and-one-half times the amount of the bonds shall be maintained with the Trustee until all of the bonds mature.

This is a desirable investment bond for executors and trustees of estate who desire the largest income consistent with absolute safety.

The American Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago, as Trustee, holds $1,500 of security for every $1,000 of bonds in this issue.

An exceptional opportunity for Savings Bank depositors to exchange a portion of their 3% and 4% savings into a conservative 6% bond, as $15,000 of the bonds maturing in 1915 are $100 denomination.

Prospectus and full information will be forwarded upon application to our nearest office.

SIX PER CENT BONDS AT PAR

Trowbridge & Niver Co.

Municipal and Corporation BONDS

First National Bank Bldg., CHICAGO — 60 State Street, BOSTON

References. Dun's or Bradstreet's Commercial Agencies, or to any Chicago Bank.

PLEASE RETURN THIS COUPON TO-DAY. PROPERLY FILLED

C. H. COUPON

TROWBRIDGE & NIVER CO.

First Nat Bank Bldg., Chicago, or, 60 State Street, Boston.

Please send circulars describing Six Per Cent Bonds at Par, to

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

This Washing Machine Costs You Nothing.

You pay for it after it has paid you for itself.

It will do a regular EIGHT hour washing in FOUR hours, and it won't wear the clothes. We prove this before you pay a cent.

We send any reliable person our "1900" Washer free of charge, on a month's trial. We pay the freight on it to your home station, at our own expense.

YOU don't risk a penny, and WE don't ask from you any cash deposit, note, contract nor security. You simply write us for the month's trial, and we do the rest.

If, on a four weeks test, you can't wash clothes with it equal to best hand-work, in HALF THE TIME, with half the wear and tear, and with HALF THE EFFORT, send it back to your nearest Railroad Station, that's all.

When you are convinced it saves you FOUR hours labor out of every EIGHT hour weekly washing, KEEP the machine. Then you must pay us 50 cents a week, till the washer is paid for.

The four hours a week our "1900" Washer SAVES YOU would have cost you for washerwoman's time 60 cents. Your own time (if you do the washing yourself), is worth as much as a washerwoman's, and any servant's time costs you board and money equal to this, in the long run.

The "1900" Washer lasts at least five years. Every year it will save you about $31.20 in labor. In five years this amounts to $156.00—think of that!

In the free month's trial alone it will save an average family $2.00 and you assume no risk whatever, no responsibility during the trial.

Isn't this the broadest, and fairest offer ever made you?

We may withdraw it tomorrow, if it overcrowds our factory.

But all reliable persons who answer this advertisement shall have the benefit of the offer, provided they write to us promptly on reading it. Shall we send you a Washer on trial, to be paid for as it pays you? Answer TODAY, while the offer is open, and while you think of it. Address me direct for personal attention, viz: R. F. Bieber, Gen'l Mgr., The "1900" Washer Company, 804 North Henry Street, Binghamton, N. Y., or 355 Yonge St., Toronto, Canada.

POND'S EXTRACT

THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR

Quick Relief

is given to cuts, burns, sprains and bruises by prompt use of Pond's Extract. Cooling, soothing, healing.

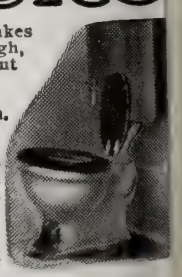
Witch Hazel is not the same thing. On analysis of seventy samples of Witch Hazel—so often offered as "just as good"—fifty two were found to contain wood alcohol or formaldehyde or both. To avoid danger of poisoning insist on having

THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR

POND'S EXTRACT

NATURO

After 1,000 Years of mistakes are you still using the old, high, flat closet, 17 inches high front and rear?



The NATURO is 14 in. high in the front and 11½ in the rear.

Book F, mailed free, gives further details. Surely you'll write for this important book.

The NATURO is a Syphon Jet, also, the highest perfection in sanitary earthenware. But send for Book F.

THE NATURO CO., Salem, N. J., U.S.A.

STORY-TIME AT THE DE PEYSTER HOME FOR INVALID CHILDREN

THE CONNECTING LINK

A JULY day on the East Side. The sun's rays like red-hot arrows as they beat mercilessly down on a crowded, noisy, and dirty street, with never a whisper of breezes playing in the cool tree-tops, but only an occasional stirring of reeking air, stifling in foul odors. Hundreds of human beings in the streets; men tending their wares; mothers scantily dressed and sitting on doorsteps on the side of the street which affords a little shade, keeping meanwhile a languid watch over the little ones who swarm about, trying to extract their meed of childish pleasure from the pitiably unfitting surroundings. A dark, narrow hall and stairwise, closer and fouler than the street outside, and leading up, up to cell-like places of abode, or down into damp basement rooms, where the swarm outside finds shelter for the night. A dim, close room, its single window opening into a narrow airshaft, which is supposed to supply the needed oxygen to hundreds of people, its furniture of the scantiest. A dear little baby boy up here, whose dearness shines out through its earthy covering of grime; old enough to be playing outside, but compelled by disease to remain here during scorching day and sweltering night, neglected and alone during the hours in which the mother can be working for their bread.

A superb summer day, the rays of the lofty sun revealing far distant beauties of mountain and valley, and tempering the air of the elevation to a delightful summer warmth. A pine grove, through which cool breezes play with a gentle sigh, as of entire contentment, while below happy children wander, gathering flowers or playing about the rocks. A large building, standing just where it can catch and hold the health-giving sun-rays, while the refreshing breezes wander at will through the doorways and windows. Upstairs a large dining-room, which can be sunny or shaded as needed, and where tables are spread and bountiful supplies appear three times every day.

Do you doubt the truth of the two pictures? Go down on the lower East Side of New York for the first, then visit the Watts de Peyster Hospital and Home for Invalid Children at Verbank, N. Y., ninety miles northeast of the city, for the second. Where is the connecting link between the two? It lies in the generous hearts of all who suffer with these suffering children. The Home has cared for thirty-two children constantly during the past year, but many others have been turned away. The reason for the necessity of this lies in the lack of space, and many are continually denied admittance because, as when the Babe of Bethlehem came to this old earth, there is "no room." A few hundred dollars would make such changes in the building as would accommodate twenty-five or thirty more little invalids, who now wait in suffering for such a place. The Home has an elevation of nearly twelve hundred feet. The building is supplied with modern conveniences. It stands with open doors ready to receive the sick and needy little ones, if only the connecting link may be found. It looks after their physical and intellectual welfare in school and kindergarten; and, above all, it earnestly seeks their spiritual welfare in direct and intelligent efforts to bring each one to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Ten dollars means that a child is lifted out of the wretched surroundings of the first scene and placed for a month in the beauty of the second. It means a chance of health for the ailing body. It may mean a life of fruitful service here and eternal salvation for some little one. If you can help to supply the connecting link, send your contribution to Florence Mahin, Superintendent, Watts de Peyster Home for Invalid Children, Verbank, N. Y.

BUSINESS WOMEN

A Lunch Fit for a King

An active and successful young lady tells her food experience:

"Some three years ago I suffered from nervous prostration, induced by continuous brain strain and improper food, added to a great grief.

"I was ordered to give up my work, as there was great danger of my mind failing me altogether. My stomach was in bad condition (nervous dyspepsia, I think now), and when Grape-Nuts food was recommended to me, I had no faith in it. However, I tried it, and soon found a marked improvement in my condition as the result. I had been troubled with deathly faint spells, and had been compelled to use a stimulant to revive me. I found, however, that by eating Grape-Nuts at such times, I was relieved as satisfactorily as by the use of stimulants, and suffered no bad effects, which was a great gain. As to my other troubles—nervous prostration, dyspepsia, etc.—the Grape-Nuts diet soon relieved them.

"I wish especially to call the attention of office girls to the great benefit I derived from the use of Grape-Nuts as a noon luncheon. I was thoroughly tired of cheap restaurants and ordinary lunches, and so made the experiment of taking a package of Grape-Nuts food with me, and then slipping out at noon and getting a nickel's worth of sweet cream to add to it. I found that this simple dish, finished off with an apple, peach, orange, or a bunch of grapes, made a lunch fit for a king, and one that agrees with me perfectly.

"I throve so on my Grape-Nuts diet that I did not have to give up my work at all, and in the two years have had only four lost days charged up against me.

"Let me add that your suggestions in the little book, "Road to Wellville," are, in my opinion, invaluable, especially to women." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

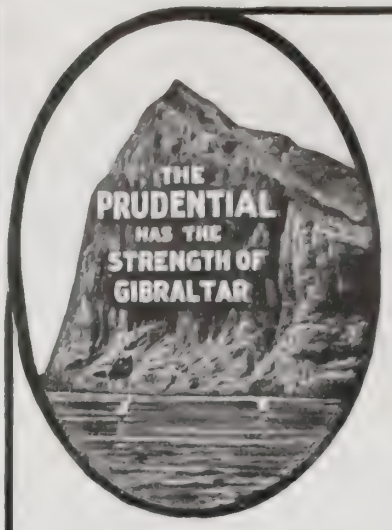
"The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY
Has just issued these New Editions of the
AMERICAN STANDARD REVISED BIBLE

Send for Illustrated Price-list

Minion Bible, 24mo. . . 22c. 25c. 50c.
Minion New Testament, 32mo. . 8c. 12c.
Minion Testament and Psalms, 32mo. 15c.
Minion Psalms, 32mo. . . . . 5c.
Pulpit Bible, Quarto $8.75

Bibles at Cost for Missionary & Sunday School Work
BIBLE HOUSE, ASTOR PLACE, NEW YORK



Another Week Gone!

and the little family in your cheerful home is still unprotected from the trials of financial stress if you should be suddenly taken away.

Save them that trial. Save a little money which now goes for incidentals, and let it build a barrier wall against the attacks of want, when such protection is most needed.

The Prudential

can help you build that wall. It is no idle catch phrase that has inseparably linked the Prudential name with the rock of Gibraltar. It HAS the strength of Gibraltar, and you may well use its resources, its solidity, its liberal terms of insurance to safeguard the financial welfare of your family.

Another week has begun. Write to-day for circular, "How Can I Invest One Hundred Dollars per Year to the Best Advantage?"

THE PRUDENTIAL INSURANCE COMPANY of America
JOHN F. DRYDEN, President — Incorporated as a Stock Company by the State of New Jersey — HOME OFFICE Newark, N. J.
Dept. 70

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

Low Rates
West and Northwest
Chicago & North-Western Railway.

The following rates and dates of sale are for strictly first-class round-trip tickets from Chicago, with liberal time limits.

$67.50 To San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego and return on certain specified dates throughout the Summer.

$56.50 To Portland and Puget Sound Points and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$65.00 To Yellowstone Park and return, including stage transportation ($85.00 also includes hotel accommodations in the park). Daily until September 16.

$30.00 To Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colo., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$25.00 To Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colo., and return. Daily August 12 to 14, inclusive.

$20.00 To Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colo., and return. Daily August 30 to September 4, inclusive.

$27.50 To Hot Springs, S. D., and return. $30.70 Deadwood and Lead and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$20.00 To Duluth, Superior and Ashland and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$17.25 To Marquette, Mich., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$16.00 To St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

First-Class Personally Conducted Tours to Portland, California, Utah, Yellowstone Park and Colorado, all expenses included, leave Chicago July 27 and August 10.

CORRESPONDINGLY LOW RATES ARE IN EFFECT FROM ALL POINTS.

For further particulars address

W. B. KNISKERN, Passenger Traffic Manager, CHICAGO, ILL.

Prominent Men of the Hour

Copyright, 1902, by Rockwood Permission N. Y. Globe

LIEUT. PEARY PRESIDENT BUTLER PRINCE ARISUGAWA DR. TUPPER

ROBERT EDWIN PEARY, the great Arctic explorer, will start in a few weeks to make another search for the north pole. Commander Peary has devoted years of his life to the quest and has gone the farthest north of any explorer in the Western Hemisphere. A special steamer for the trip was launched a short time ago and named the Roosevelt. The ship will be taken as far north as possible, and then, by a system of relays, it is hoped to reach the pole. Among Peary's previous discoveries are the famous Iron Mountain, Melville Land, which he named; Heilprin Land, and the insularity of Greenland.

PRESIDENT BUTLER, of Columbia University, New York, has just received the coveted degree of Doctor of Letters from an English university, an honor conferred on few Americans. Dr. Butler, with the exception of President Eliot of Harvard, is the best known of our educators to the teachers of foreign countries. He has taken an active part at all the recent educational conventions in this country, and his ideas on higher education have been widely copied. He only graduated from Columbia in 1882, and became president twenty years later.

PRINCE ARISUGAWA, of Japan, has been acting as the special representative of the Mikado in Germany and Great Britain. Accompanied by the princess, he attended the wedding of the Crown Prince of Germany, and they were cordially received in Berlin, despite the threats of pro-Russian papers to give them a chilling reception. The prince was educated in England, and received his naval training on board a British man-of-war. He is now an admiral, and one of the men to whom the present efficient Japanese navy is due. His wife named the new battleship Katori, which has just been launched at Barrow-in-Furness.

REV. DR. TUPPER has just preached his first sermon, as the successor to the late Dr. Lorimer, at the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, New York City. Dr. Tupper is one of our foremost pulpit orators, and as soon as he accepted the call it was decided to keep the church in its present location, as it was felt that Dr. Tupper could carry on the work there with great success, although many of the congregation have moved from that part of the city. After a short trip abroad the new pastor will take permanent charge in the fall.

The Rising at Odessa

SEE ILLUSTRATION ON FIRST PAGE

READERS of the newspapers have had during the last six months many thrilling reports from disturbed Russia, but the wildest imagination could hardly dream of the kaleidoscopic changes that have taken place recently in the districts bordering on the Black Sea. In the great mercantile city of Odessa, one of the world's greatest grain ports, a number of meetings were held demanding reforms in the Russian administration, and also, to a certain extent, advocating a termination of the present war. The meetings at first were not interfered with, but gradually the more disorderly element of the city joined in, and the government became alarmed. A large number of troops were sent to the city, but were unable to do much, as the rioters received assistance from an unexpected quarter.

The Kniaz Potemkin, one of the largest ships of the Black Sea fleet, had put into the harbor and trained her guns upon the city. It was found that the crew had mutinied and had thrown her officers into the sea. The sailors declared that they would assist the rioters ashore. The lights of the city were put out at night and the water front was pillaged, and at last burned. The government hurried a fleet to the scene to sink the pirate man-of-war, but she slipped her anchors and sailed into a Rumanian port, where she caused great alarm and the Rumanian fleet prepared to resist an attack. The Kniaz was under the control of a committee of seven and divided councils were soon apparent. She put back to Odessa and the fleet there did not attack her, as mutiny was feared on the other ships. Again the Kniaz went back to Rumania and this time surrendered. The ship was later given over to the Russian authorities, the crew having landed on Rumanian soil. The Kniaz sunk shortly after, as her sea cocks had been opened.

The people of Odessa, who had been terrorized by the Kniaz, became quieter, and according to last reports the town was comparatively peaceful, but it will take years to repair the damage that has been done. Although the trouble in the Black Sea was of assistance to agitators in other parts of the country in a moral sense, it was of little use in a material way, as it is too far from St. Petersburg to cause great uneasiness to the government.

The Eclipse Expedition

ON the fourth of next August, an expedition will sail from Boston, on a cruise to the Labrador coast, to view the total eclipse of the sun. They will also visit the hospital and mission of Dr. Grenfell, the famous missionary, whose career is known to the general public from the stirring Labrador tales of Norman Duncan. Dr. Grenfell will meet the expedition in his boat, the Strathcona.

On the way north the party will stop at Sidney, Cape Briton Island, and cruise along the northern shore of Newfoundland, thence to Belle Isle, and out into the Atlantic. They will make visits to the Great Whale Factory, Cape Charles, the Deep Sea Mission Hospital, Battle Harbor, the Moravian settlements, and other points of interest. They will live on the boat throughout the trip.

Miss Isabel Rogers Edgar, who spent the summers of 1902 and 1903 in Labrador, will conduct the excursion. There will be ample room on board the boat for contributions of all kinds for Dr. Grenfell's work. All communications in regard to the trip may be sent to 261 Broadway, New York City, care of Cooke's Tourist Agency.

MENTAL ACCURACY

Greatly Improved by Leaving off Coffee

The manager of an extensive creamery in Wis., states that while a regular coffee drinker, he found it injurious to his health and a hindrance to the performance of his business duties.

"I cannot say," he continues, "that I ever used coffee to excess, but I know that it did me harm, especially during the past few years.

"It impaired my digestion, gave me a distressing sense of fullness in the region of the stomach, causing a most painful and disquieting palpitation of the heart, and what is worse, it muddled my mental faculties so as to seriously injure my business efficiency.

"I concluded, about eight months ago, that something would have to be done. I quit the use of the old kind of coffee, short off, and began to drink Postum Food Coffee. The cook didn't make it right at first—she didn't boil it long enough, and I did not find it palatable and quit using it, and went back to the old kind of coffee and to the stomach trouble again. Then my wife took the matter in hand, and by following the directions on the box, faithfully, she had me drinking Postum for several days before I knew it. When I happened to remark that I was feeling much better than I had for a long time, she told me that I had been drinking Postum, and that accounted for it. Now we have no other kind of coffee on our table.

"My digestion has been perfectly restored, and with this improvement has come relief from the oppressive sense of fullness and palpitation of the heart that used to bother me so, and I note such a gain in mental strength and acuteness, that I can attend to my office work with ease and pleasure and without making the mistakes that were so annoying to me while I was using the old kind of coffee.

"Postum Food Coffee is the greatest table drink of the times, in my humble estimation." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Don't experiment—Just buy a FORD

In addition to Henry Ford's originality of design there is more actual value of material and workmanship in FORD MODEL "F" than in any other automobile ever built at the price.

It seats five people, climbs hills on high speed, has a roomy side entrance tonneau, is light, strong and rides like a Yacht. Has the latitude of speed on the high gear of a $5,000.00 car. Do not be deceived by "Horse Power TALK." Make it your business to see what THIS car will DO.

Get a Ford demonstration of Power in comparison with other cars and see the difference between real or actual power and rated power. Write for booklet on Maintenance giving facts as to the low cost of operating Ford cars.

The Roadster Car Model "C" $850 $950 Model "F" $1000 Model "S" $3000

Ford Motor Company, Detroit, Mich.

Members American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association, Chicago.
Canadian Trade supplied by The Ford Motor Co. of Canada, Ltd., Walkerville, Ont.

"In all the land, range up, range down,
Is there ever a place so pleasant and sweet?"

THE 1000 ISLANDS.

There may be somewhere on the earth a more delightful region than that of the Thousand Islands, but if there is, it has not been discovered. It is as fine as the Bay of Naples, with no danger of being buried in hot ashes. There are 2,000 picturesque Islands scattered along the twenty-five miles of one of the most beautiful rivers in the world. You can find out a great deal regarding it in No. 10 of the "Four-Track Series," "The Thousand Islands" of the St. Lawrence River issued by the

NEW YORK CENTRAL

A copy will be mailed free on receipt of a two-cent stamp by George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent, Grand Central Station, New York.

RHEUMATISM

Relieved Without Medicine

New Remedy Discovered Which Absorbs Acid Impurities Through the Large Foot Pores.

A DOLLAR PAIR FREE

on Approval—Write To-day.

Don't take medicine for Rheumatism, but send your name to the makers of Magic Foot Drafts, the great Michigan discovery which is relieving every kind of Rheumatism without medicine—chronic or acute—Muscular, Sciatic, Lumbago, Gout, etc., no matter in what part of the body. You'll get the Drafts by return mail. If you are satisfied with the relief they give, send us one dollar. If not, send nothing. You Decide.

Magic Foot Drafts possess the remarkable quality of absorbing from the blood the impurities which cause Rheumatism, relieving where everything else has failed. They are even relieving cases of 30 or 40 years' standing. They will relieve you. Send your name today to Magic Foot Draft Co., R A 29 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich. Our splendid new book on Rheumatism comes free with the Drafts. Send no money—only your name. Write to-day.

GINSENG Culture is the "Only way" to make big money on little capital. Large incomes from small gardens. Pays 800 per cent. profit in 4 years. One-quarter acre is worth $10,000 and yields more revenue than a 25 acre farm. Demand is heavy. Supply is light. Five years' experience. Sales now exceed $12,500. I furnish pure American nursery stock at low prices; show you how, save you money and Pilot you to Success. Write to-day or to-night. T. H. SUTTON, 530 Sherwood Ave., LOUISVILLE, KY.

FREE TO AGENTS

Flat thin knife cuts loose a perfect cake. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T.

HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

FENCE Strongest Made

See how closely it is woven. Sold direct to the farmer at factory prices, on 30 Days Free Trial. Your money back if not satisfied. Write today for free Catalogue.

COILED SPRING FENCE COMPANY
Box 47, Winchester, Indiana

MELLIN'S
For the Baby
FOOD

Mellin's Food — an infant food without an equal except Mother's Milk. A food that feeds, a food that gives satisfaction, a food that has been used for many years with best results, a food that makes the babies grow strong. Send for a free sample.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

INCOME OF
6% per annum on sums of $100 or more, withdrawable after one year . . . . . .
5% per annum on any amount deposited, withdrawable at any time . . . . . .
SECURED by first mortgage on New York City improved real estate, and a guarantee fund of 10% of the face value of all mortgages in force.
This corporation is subject to examination by the Superintendent of Banks of the State of New York.
KNICKERBOCKER SAVINGS AND LOAN COMPANY
(Established 1883)
38 Park Row New York City

Thousands of Dollars
have been wasted in Marble headstones now lying rotting and overgrown with weeds. Thousands more are being wasted for cleaning, refinishing and repairing Granite monuments. Every stone gets moss-grown, cracks and crumbles.

White Bronze
is good for all time. Moss-growth, cracking and crumbling are impossible.
GOLD AND SILVER MEDALS at the Universal Exposition, St. Louis, 1904.
If interested give approximate sum you can spend and we will send a variety of Beautiful Designs,
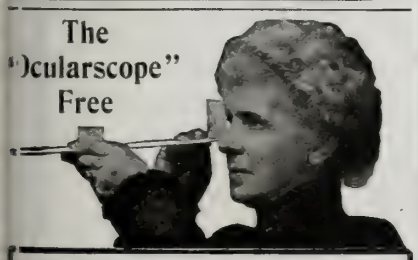
prices and full information. No obligation to buy. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.
AGENTS WANTED
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

The "Ocularscope" Free



Get Your Glasses at Wholesale
Examine your own eyes without an oculist. Send for our "Ocularscope," the latest invention of the 20th century. Sent Free, with our beautiful Illustrated Catalogue of spectacles and eye glasses. Mail order only. Send to-day.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS
402 Houseman Building, Grand Rapids, Mich.

STATE MANAGERS WANTED
By an established Ohio corporation; good salary, office expenses and commissions paid to men of character and ability. References required and given. Address, MANAGER, 176 Ontario Bld'g, Toledo, Ohio.

The Royal Reformer

By MRS. M. BAXTER

AS King Hezekiah was privileged to have the prophet Isaiah as a friend and adviser, so was Josiah privileged to have the prophet Jeremiah, and we see in the lives of both these kings how great a blessing it was to be associated with prophets who walked with God in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom they shone "as lights in the world, holding forth the Word of life" (Phil. 2: 15, 16). This king was a child, only eight years old when he came to the throne. Unlike his grandfather, Manasseh, who was a child of twelve when he began to reign, Josiah "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the ways of David, his father, and declined neither to the right hand nor to the left.

It was "in the eighth year of his reign, while he was yet young"—sixteen years of age—that Josiah began to seek after the God of David his father, and it was in the thirteenth year of his reign that "the Word of the Lord came to Jeremiah" (Jer. 1: 1). Josiah had another man of God who stood by him, the prophet Zephaniah, the son of Cushi, the son of Gedaliah (Zeph. 1: 1). Thus Josiah had exceptional advantages and he profited by them to the full. It was in the twelfth year of his reign, just one year before "the Word of the Lord came to Jeremiah," that Josiah "began to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places, and the Asherim, and the graven images, and the molten images." Before the Word of the Lord came to Jeremiah and Zephaniah, so that they could write the vision, how much they and Josiah might have spoken of and prayed over the burden of the Word of the Lord, which was pressing more and more upon them.

Both prophets saw the evil which was coming if the people did not repent, and they urged repentance upon both king and people. Jer. 4: 7-9 speaks of Nebuchadnezzar as the "lion which is come up from his thicket," "the destroyer of the Gentiles . . . he is gone forth from his place to make the land desolate and thy cities shall be laid waste without an inhabitant." All these prophecies were uttered in the days of Josiah, as well as the predictions in Zephaniah 1: 2. And although much which the latter predicts about "the day of the Lord" will have a plenary fulfilment in the time of the tribulation, which is yet future, yet it had a primary and very sore fulfilment in the destruction of Jerusalem and Judea by Nebuchadnezzar, and the captivity of Judah. It is no wonder then, that with such prophecies brooding in the hearts of these two prophets, and probably spoken of, in some measure with the king, that Josiah was stirred up to works of reformation, such as no king before him had effected.

Josiah was so determined upon the destruction of idolatry, that he did not trust the workmen whom he employed without being present in person to see his commands carried out. "They brake down the altars of Baalim in his presence, and the sun images [margin] that were on high above them, he cut them down; and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images, he brake in pieces, and made dust of them, and strewed it upon the graves of them that had sacrificed unto them. And he burnt the bones of the priests upon their altars, and cleansed Judah and Jerusalem. Perhaps Jeremiah had said to the young king that which he afterwards prophesied from the Lord: "Be astonished, O ye heavens at this, and be ye horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord. For my people have committed two evils: they have forsaken me, the Fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water" (Jer. 2:12-13).

"How Money Grows"

is the title of a book which tells:

How to invest small sums

How to tell a good investment

How you can convert $100 into $358.83

How to choose between real estate and stocks

How savings banks make their money

How to choose your partners

How to guard against uncertain "prospects"

How to protect yourself in case you should not care to hold an investment indefinitely, etc.

This book is not an advertisement of any particular investment. It is a general "talk" about investments, based upon my experiences and observations. My book will interest all persons who can save $10 or more per month from their income. Write me a postal saying, simply, "Send How Money Grows." You will receive the book, free, by return mail.

W. M. OSTRANDER,
INVESTMENT DEPARTMENT,
161 NORTH AMERICAN BLDG.,
Philadelphia.

WE WANT AGENTS
in every town to ride and sell our new bicycles. Good pay. Finest guaranteed 1905 MODELS, with Puncture-Proof tires, Coaster-Brakes $10 to $24 1903 & 1904 Models $7 to $12 of Best Makes.
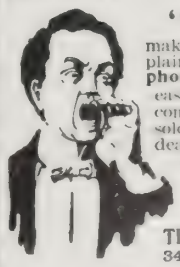
500 Second-Hand Wheels
All makes & Models good as new $3 to $8
CLEARING SALE at half cost.
We SHIP ON APPROVAL and
TEN DAYS TRIAL to anyone without a cent deposit. Write at once for Special Offer on sample bicycle.
TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H 71 CHICAGO

DON'T SHOUT!
"The Morley"



makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.
Write for booklet and testimonials.
THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E,
34 South 16th St., Philadelphia

BOMOSA COFFEE
BIG INCOMES
$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK
and expenses to men to sell Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. Exclusive territory and Special Terms address at once Mr. P. B., care of
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO
P. O. Box 289. 31-33 Vesey St., New York

STARK FRUIT BOOK
shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro s, Louisiana Mo.

Good Bread – Good Nature

The human body demands from the food daily about 4 ounces of protein, 4 ounces of fat, 16 ounces of carbohydrate and a slight percentage of phosphate. Government Analysis shows that white bread, rolls and biscuits made from GOLD MEDAL FLOUR contain these constituents more nearly in the proportion demanded by the system than any other single ration. Good food, good digestion and good nature go hand in hand. Nearly all good natured people use GOLD MEDAL FLOUR.

WASHBURN-CROSBY'S

GOLD MEDAL FLOUR

COPYRIGHT-1905 WASHBURN-CROSBY CO. MINNEAPOLIS MINN. U.S.A.

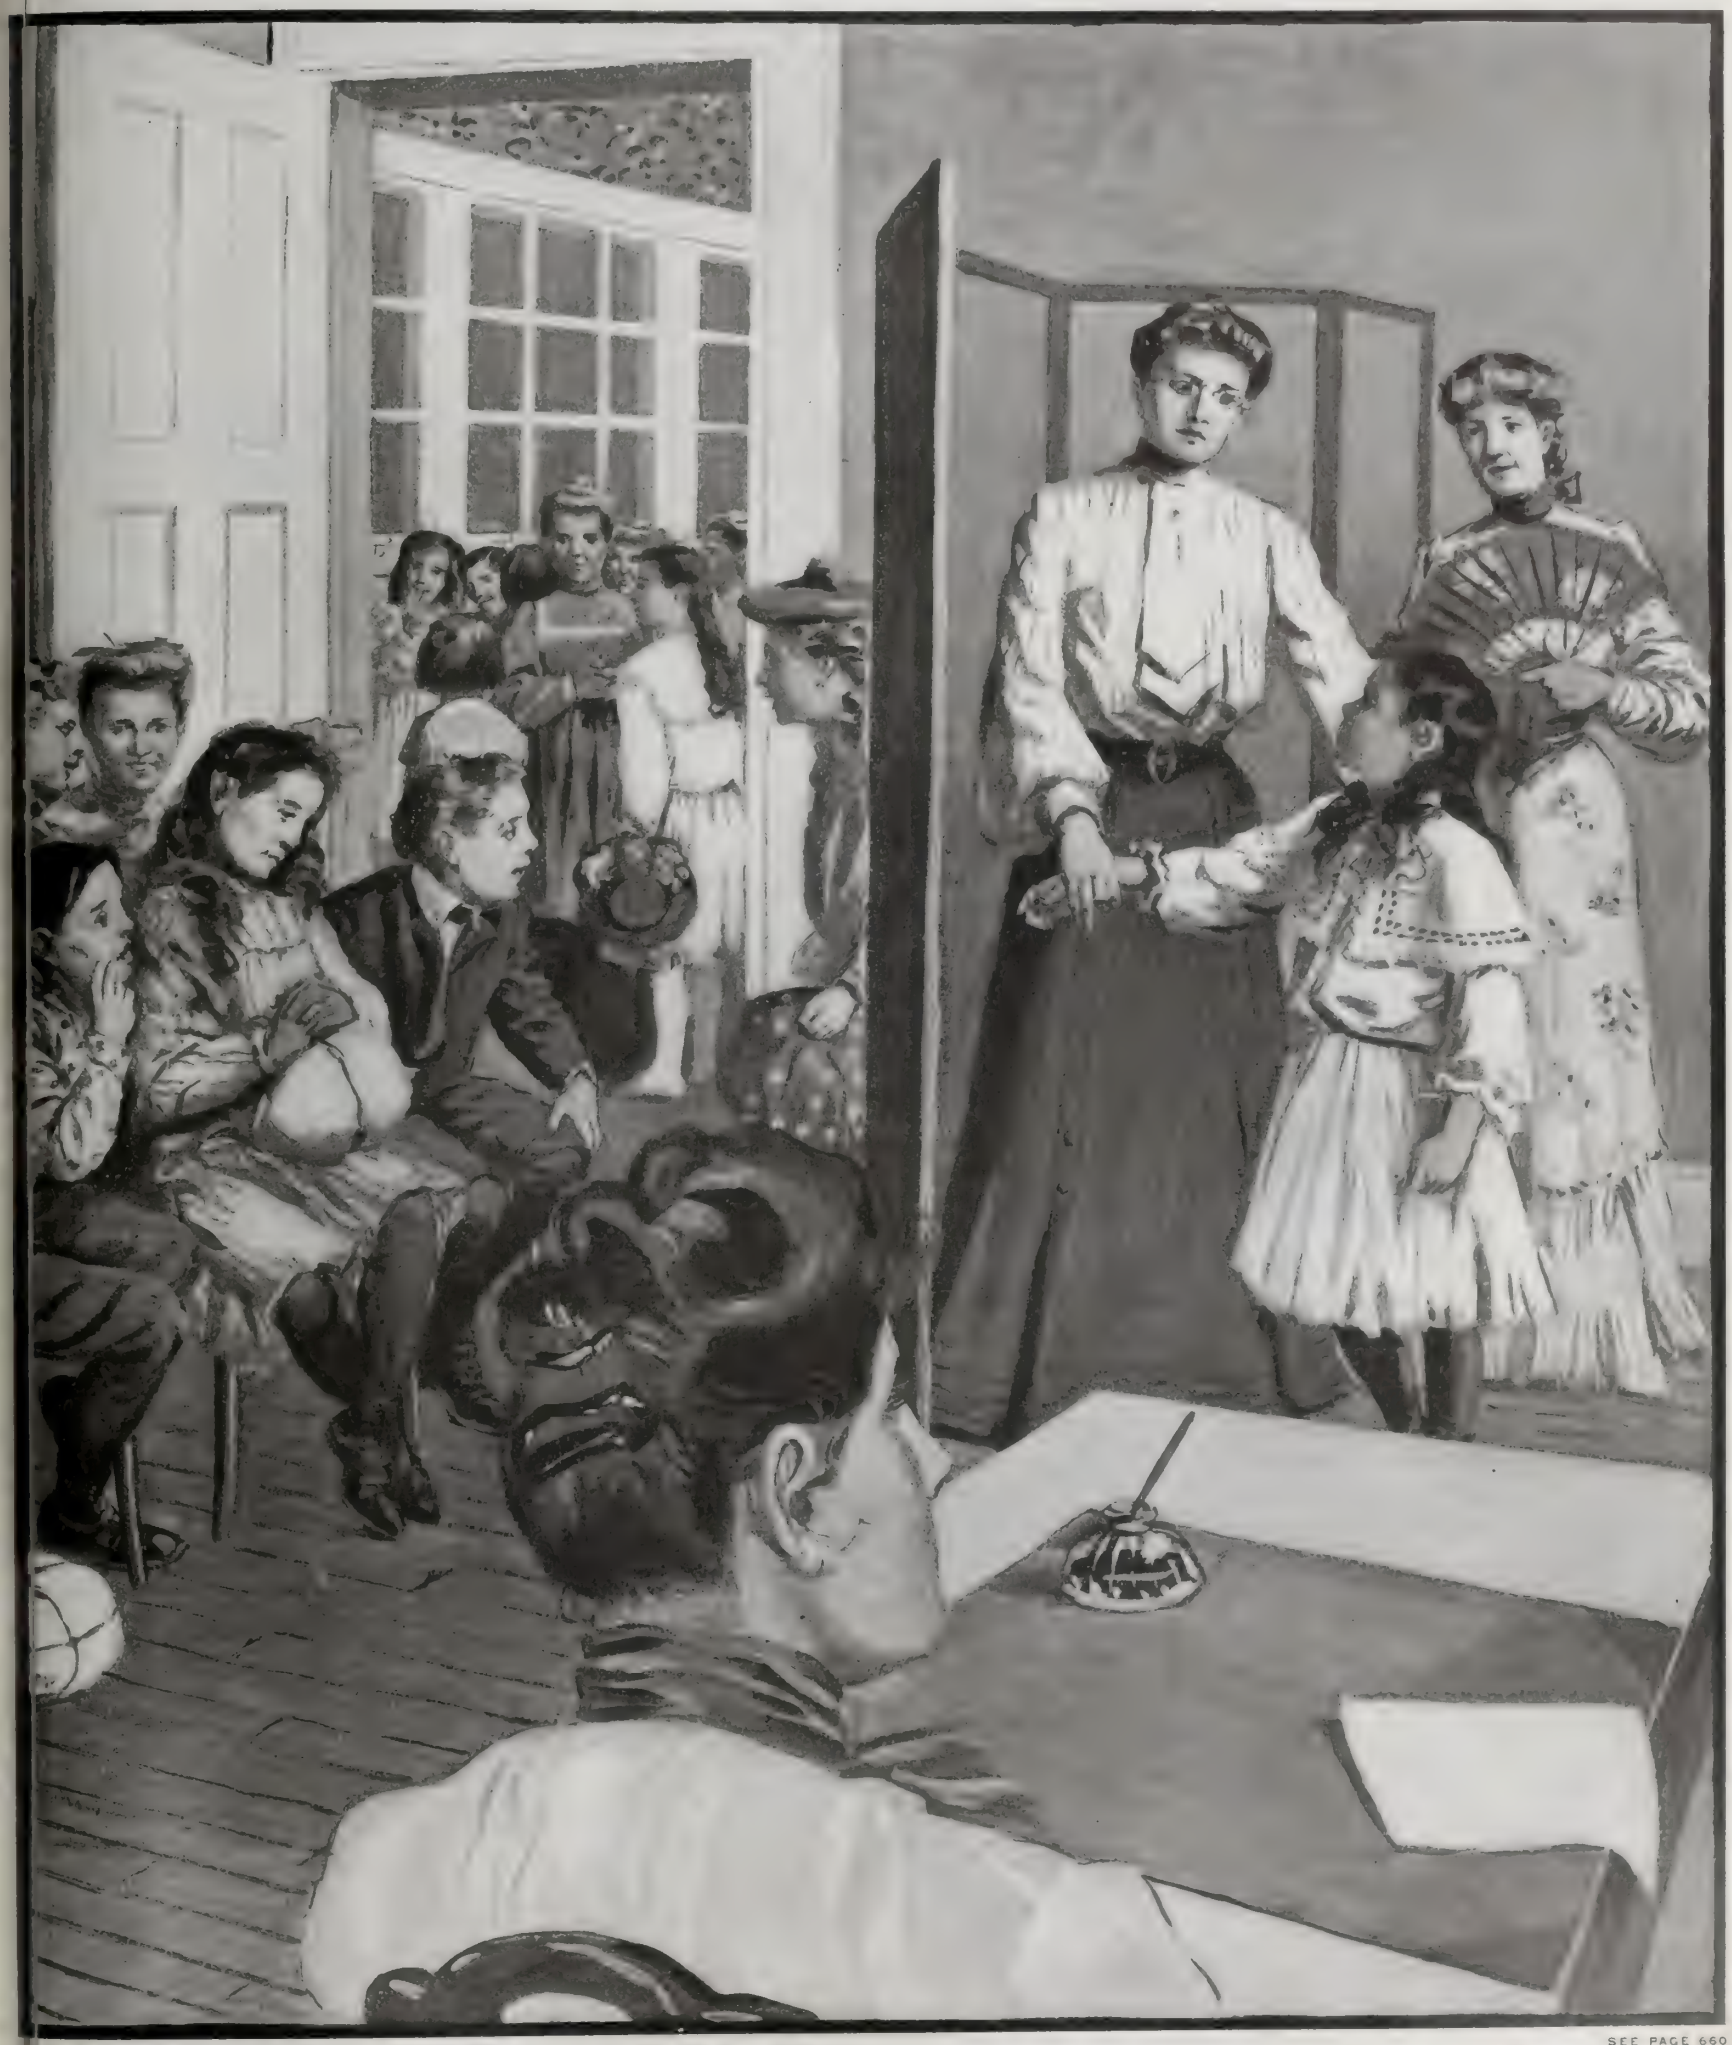
CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, AUG. 2, 1905

VOL. 28-NO. 31. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH



SEE PAGE 660

"Passing the Doctor"---Little Applicants Waiting to be Sent to Mont-Lawn

OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

J. K., Ky. Is the common oleander poisonous?

Yes; especially the root.

Alabama Subscriber. How many visits did the Marquis de Lafayette make to the United States after the close of the Revolution?

He made one in 1824, when Congress voted him $200,000 and a township of land. Send your consular question to the State Department, as they have the records there.

C. H. R., Toledo, O. To relieve, or to prevent overcrowding of cities, what law or legislation do you suggest? If the victims of these conditions are not to be blamed, are not those withholding either the knowledge or the necessary legislation, to blame?

It seems to us that the first step toward relieving congestion, is that suggested by U. S. Immigration Commissioner Sargent, for creating a Bureau to distribute immigrants widely, instead of permitting them to remain in the great cities. Then those States where labor is plentiful and workers scarce, could draw on such a Bureau, and thus gradually assist in reducing the surplus of unemployed, both native and immigrant. The general government as well as the States should cooperate in solving the overcrowding problem.

K. M., Oriskany Falls. What are the great manufacturing nations, and what is the annual value of their output?

The latest figures available in this case are those of the census of 1900. At that time America was in the lead, with an annual output valued at $13,004,000,000; Great Britain came next with $5,000,000,000; Germany, $4,600,000,000; France, $3,450,000,000. It will be noticed that the production of American manufacturies is practically equal to the others given. These four countries are the great purveyors to the world's markets, the other countries coming far behind.

Subscriber, Addison, Pa. 1. Was John Calvin originally a Romish priest? 2. Why did he oppose Luther?

1. He was intended for a priest and actually served in the preliminary offices, expecting to rise to the priesthood, but, accepting the Reformed doctrines, he did not proceed to ordination. 2. Calvin opposed Luther on the question of the real presence in the Lord's Supper. While Luther held that the body and blood of Christ are objectively and substantially present in the elements at the Lord's Supper; Calvin contended that they were only spiritually present and could be partaken of only spiritually through faith.

R. I., Jamestown. 1. What duties are performed by an American consul at a foreign port? 2. How many consuls are there from foreign countries in New York City?

1. Consuls keep track of all mercantile interests in their districts, and make reports to this government. These reports are published, and are invaluable to American merchants and shippers. The consul, in addition to promoting the mercantile interests of his country, has to look after interests of any Americans who have got into difficulties in his district, sign passports, settle disputes between crews and ship captains of his own nationality. In some heathen countries he ranks as a judge and tries cases involving his countrymen. 2. Forty-five. This does not include the members of the consular staffs, vice-consuls, etc.

J. H. M., Monticello, Ia. Why were Christians forbidden (Acts 5: 20) to eat the flesh of animals that had been strangled?

It appears to have been a matter of expediency, rather than of principle. The Jewish Christians were scandalized by the admission into the church of Gentiles who disregarded Jewish laws. They thought that Christianity was to be grafted on to Judaism. They insisted that when a Gentile became a Christian he should be circumcized and observe all the Jewish laws. Paul declared it to be unnecessary, and this meeting was called to decide the matter. Evidently the feeling of the Judaizers was very strong. But the decision went against them. As a concession, however, Gentile Christians were prohibited doing certain things, among which was the eating the flesh of an animal that had been strangled. This was forbidden under the Jewish law (Deut. 12: 23 and other passages). It was not an onerous prohibition for the Gentile, and if by that means peace could be secured with his Jewish fellow Christian, it was worth doing. But, as you will see by Paul's remarks on another prohibition (I. Cor. 8: 8), he regarded the whole thing as a mere temporary concession, made for the sake of peace.

L. C., Johnstown. Is it true that Americans are the greatest coffee and tea drinkers among the Western nations?

Americans are the greatest consumers of coffee. In 1903 about 915,086,380 pounds were imported. Americans are not the greatest tea drinkers, the English being the greatest consumers outside of Asia.

E. S. Winkley, Aurora, Ind. I desire an authoritative statement on the following questions: How long a time was required for the miracle of the shadow moving backward on the dial (II. Kings 20: 11)? Was our Lord six hours on the cross? Was the Apostle Paul shipwrecked four times?

We do not know how you can obtain an authoritative statement as to your first question. Isaiah and Hezekiah are both dead, and there is therefore no way of learning more about it than is recorded. As to the second question, it would appear that as it was "about" the third hour of the day when he was crucified, and he was still alive at the ninth hour, that he was more than six hours on the cross. Paul had evidently an experience of shipwreck that is not described in the Acts. He refers (II. Cor. 11: 25) to his having been a night and a day in the deep, an incident of which we have no further account. He had then been shipwrecked three times, as he says. Another shipwreck occurred later (Acts 27: 44), so he must have been shipwrecked four times.

Schoolboy, Vergennes, Vt. I should like to know something about the first railways built to ascend steep mountains. Where are they located in this country, and how long have they been in operation?

The first road of this kind in the United States was built at Mauch Chunk, Pa., and opened in May, 1827. It was first used to draw coal from the mines to the Lehigh River; the cars descending by gravity and being returned by mules. A powerful stationary engine on the summit now draws up the train, which is used only by tourists. The Mt. Washington Railway in the White Mountains, N. H., was begun in 1866 and opened in 1869. Another railway in the Catskills is 7,000 feet in length. A road running from Manitou to the summit of Pike's Peak is eight miles long.

E. F. M., Lynn, Mass. 1. If a man owns a lot in the cemetery, and dies without leaving children, can his wife claim the lot, or will it belong to his father? 2. Also, suppose that both die without children will the lot belong to the man's parents and have they a right to be buried in it? It reads in the deed, "to him and his heirs forever."

1. In the first case, we think the wife would have the right to be buried in the lot, but the Massachusetts law differs from New York, and a lawyer in that State should be consulted. 2. In the second case, the lot belongs to the "heirs" of the man, whoever they may be, by the law of Massachusetts.

Constant Reader, Pittsburg, Pa. 1. How do Protestants know that the Bible is the Word of God, and that its writers were inspired? 2. Why do not the translations of 1539, 1611 and 1885 all agree? 3. Is it probable that the Revised Version will be abandoned, on the ground that the King James version is more accurate?

1. It has internal evidence of being the Word of God. It bears all the marks that we would expect in a communication from God. Its effects are such as have never followed the circulation of any other ...ok, and its writers show in their productic ...the evident force of divine authority ...It would require a volume to give yo ...the grounds on which these assertions ...est. Many such have been written, and to ...ese we must refer you. 2. They are ...ub-stantially in accord. The English ...ua-guage has changed, and the translat... ...in each instance endeavored to express ...the language of their day the meaning o... ...the original, and they succeeded. 3. ...is much more probable that the King ... ...Version will be superseded by the Re... ...Version, which is more accurate an... ...comparably superior.

J. J., Newark, N. J. Is it true that in some ...rts of the Czar's empire the women do the ...art-ing and proposing?

It is true of the Ukraine, where, ...om time immemorial, such a custom has ...e-vailed among the ignorant peasa...y. When a woman of the lower agricul...al class falls in love, she goes to the n...'s home and informs him of the state of ...er feelings. If he reciprocates, all is ...ll, and the formal marriage is arranged. ...f, however, he is unwil...g, she remains there, ...p-ing to win him ultim...e-ly. If he is determ...ed not to marry her ...e leaves his home and ...ys away as long as sh...is in it.

N. R. R., Milford, Te... 1. When and why wa...e name of Pharaoh c...g-ed to Khedive of Eg...t? 2. Why and when id... men begin shaving ...ir beards off?

1. The last of ...e Pharaohs (according ...o the Greeks) was Ps...-metichus, in whose r...n the Persian inva...n took place. Egypt ...s subjugated and the r...al title transferred from ...e Egyptian kings to t...r conquerors. No su...-quent Pharaoh is m...-tioned in sacred or s...-lar history. "Khedi..." has no connection w... "Pharaoh." It is a ...-gal title, higher th... viceroy, but not eq...l to that of king, sult..., or any other indep...-dent ruler. 2. At ... early a time that ... date can now be assi...-ed. The earlier ra... were bearded, and c...-querors compelled prisoners, slaves a... bondmen, to shave, in token of servitu...

H. P., Norwalk, Conn. What is the "Aztec C... of 1847?"

It is a patriotic society. It was origin...ly composed of officers of the United Sta... Army, who served in the war with Mexi... The society was formed in the City of M... ico in 1847. "Each primary member m... nominate as his successor his son or ma... blood relative, who, during the life of t... primary member, is known as associat... member, and on the death of the former ... entitled, as his representative, to full me... bership."

E. B. J., Millen, Ga. What is the duty of a w... whose husband is superintendent of a Sund... School, and holding official position in t... church of one denomination, while she is ... inactive member of another? Is it her du... to join his?

If she could be persuaded to do so, ... thus unite their spiritual labors, it migh... be well. But many are conscientious... bound by loyalty to their denominatio... and these we would not change, unless the... made the change voluntarily. Remembe... all are not called to work in the same se... tion of the Master's vineyard. One ma... exert the silent home influence, while a... other is called to public service.

FRANCE'S TRIBUTE TO COMMANDER PAUL JONES

The photograph shows the scene when the casket containing the remains of Paul Jones was placed on public view in the famous Place des Invalides, in the French capital. The American blue-jackets are depositing the casket on the front steps, while a brilliant military and civic gathering looks on.

NEW YORK, AUG. 2, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

COLONY CHILDREN AT DRILL

YOUNG COLONISTS ON JUDEAN ROCKY CLIFFS

THE COLONISTS' WEAVING ROOM

The American Colony in Jerusalem

BY A. M. STACK

UST without the walls of Jerusalem, a few hundred yards north of the Damascus gate, lives the "American Colony." Their name is no index as to who they are or what they are. All of them are by no means Americans. Yet those who are other countries speak our tongue and are proud of r name.

Some twenty odd years ago, a small band of Chris-ns, desiring a more congenial atmosphere in which live and worship God, crossed the Atlantic and the editerranean, and settled in the city of Jerusalem. In is society are to be found natives of Canada, Eng-d, Scotland, Germany, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, dia, Roumania, and Pales-e. Originally, the mem-rs of the colony were all nericans, but their peculiar cial and religious life has tracted to them other peo-e of similar beliefs.

In the colony are people o at one time were either ethodists, Baptists, Presby-rians, Episcopalians, Lu-erians, Dunkards, Greek ristians, or Jews. But all ve surrendered their for-er denominational tenets, d have united on the inciples and practice of ristian Socialism. They ve one uniform rule of cial and religious life—Love God with all thy art, and thy neighbor as ys elf." That embraces eir entire creed.

The colony is composed of out 150 people—men, omen and children—and ey live as one great family. ey occupy two large stone ildings, together with me smaller ones near by, situated a short distance om the "Tombs of the Kings." The main buildings are Oriental style, with interior court. And there, amid e sacred scenes that surround the Holy City, they live life more perfectly ideal than anything ever dreamed in the philosophy of Plato. They essay to lead a e, modeled after the teachings of the Master. Their ligious belief is based upon the Saviour's answer to the wyer's question: "What is the great commandment the law?" (Matt. 22: 35-39). In the simplest way ssible, they seek to fulfil in their lives the two great mmandments, upon which we are told hang all the w and the prophets. In these two commandments one, they claim, is embodied the essence of all pure ligion. Their faith is simple and its application direct. They are not missionaries as we understand the term. They preach in deeds and not in words; and the life of everyone is intended to be an argument for Christianity. Their policy is to influence others by example, rather than by precept, and, considering the people among whom they live, they are not far wrong. Most of the natives are so steeped in ignorance and prejudice that miracles would not convert them.

Almost all the success attainable—and that is indeed small—is with the children. Acting on this theory, the

THE MAIN BUILDING OF THE AMERICAN COLONY

American Colony has a large and well attended school in Jerusalem. No charge for tuition is made. In this way they reach a large number of the children of the natives and teach them our language, our methods, our ideas, and some of the pupils unconsciously imbibe our religion. Undoubtedly the way to missionary success in the Holy Land is through the schoolroom. Christians must capture a Mussulman while he is young. To convert him, we must show him that Christianity is better than Mohammedanism.

The colony's school building is within the walls of the city, and a corps of competent teachers are in charge. There is also a Kindergarten in connection with the school. Religious worship is held on every Sabbath. The colony has no regular preachers, and conducts services only on its own premises. Everybody is welcome to attend. There is no sermon, but some one reads a chapter in the Bible, and a general discussion and interchange of ideas will follow. The worship is rather informal, and the ladies join freely in the discussion. They use a Bible that is some kind of literal translation, and the reading has an odd sound to English ears. Their singing is especially fine, and makes the services most attractive. In the Sabbath meetings, their discussion and explanations of the Scriptures evince study and research. They are perfectly familiar with all the Bible references to the sacred places around them. The colony gives special heed to the second great commandment, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." Its members believe in the brotherhood of man, and try to live up to their belief. They fully accept Christ's definition of a "neighbor" and endeavor to be a neighbor of mankind. They add to "godliness, brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness, charity." The blind beggars that line the highways, and the wretched lepers near the city have always a friend in the American Colony. They carry their doctrine into the home circle, and in their daily life they act towards each other like real brothers and sisters. Some are married and have children, yet the unmarried members of the society work just as cheerfully to support and educate the children as their parents do. And when parents die, the children are cared for and reared as if they were brothers and sisters indeed.

They own everything in common. They believe in a direct application of Christ's teachings to social and business life and not merely to personal conduct. Each member of the colony owns an undivided and indivisible share of the whole property, and in all that is earned there is a community of interest. The baby at its mother's breast is a full stockholder, and owns as much as the hardest worker in the society. There are various sources from which they receive money, but all is earned by labor in some way. They are not supported by any church, order or society, but "hoe their own row." They have a store in the city, and sell rare coins, fancy

CONTINUED ON PAGE 653

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY

Rev. F. DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

HIS FIRST MIRACLE

TEXT: JOHN 2:11:

"This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee"

FINDING the rational causes for the inception of things is a passion in the human heart and mind. But next to it is the desire of making a right start when, after years of hard work and toil, we would give to the world the results of our labor and our investigation. When Henry M. Stanley came from his exploration of the "Dark Continent," he did not let the facts thus gained lie dormant in his mind. He at once headed towards the great metropolis of London. There, in Albert Memorial Hall, before the representatives of the English throne and the greatest of scientists, he described the results of his daring journey. What he did not tell by lip, he told as soon as possible to the world, by his pen. No sooner did Samuel F. Morse cry as did the Greek mathematician "Eureka!" "I have found it! I have found that a telegraphic message can be sent over the wires," than at once he applied to the American Congress to help him build a line from Baltimore to Washington. He would prove to all the world, in the best and most emphatic way, that telegraphy was to be classed among the "Found Arts."

Purified Art

I enter a great artist's studio. I say to Jean Francois Millet, "What are you working so hard about?" "Oh," he says, "I have consecrated my life to a new mission of art. I used to be noted for the skill with which I appealed to the lowest passions of life—to the evil desires of the world through suggestive figures of the nude. I heard some bystanders looking at one of my pictures say: 'It is too bad that Millet, with such a genius as he has, paints pictures like that?' I at once left Paris and went back to my old home. There, among the hamlets of France, I began to study the pure beauties to be found in the face of my old grandmother. Now, I am trying as an artist, to depict the homely virtues of the French peasants. As this is my first peasant picture to be sent to the French Salon, I want to make my mark in my new field; for when a man is to make a great success in any one line, he must be very careful about his beginning. This is a new beginning for me as a Christian artist." To make a right beginning for his new art—his Christian art—Tissot, the former artist of the French society woman, secluded himself for years in the Holy Land, that he might walk and live amid the scenes where Christ lived and died. As a Christian artist he wanted to make a right beginning.

The desire to make a right beginning is implanted in every one's life who starts upon a great career for the reformation of the customs and the habits of the world. Thus, when I began to think upon this subject, this miracle at the beginning of Christ's ministry began to grow and widen and deepen and lift itself higher and higher in the purposes of Jesus Christ. Why? It was Christ's first miracle. For thirty long years he led the life of obscurity. Now Jesus comes forth and practically says: "I have come to reveal my Father to the world. I want to win the belief and trust of the people. How shall I begin my work in the most attractive and impressive way? I will do it at the wedding in Cana of Galilee." Thus we must approach our subject with awe and reverence. This miracle is not a mere happen so. This first miracle of Christ was one by which we may catch the keynote for the onward musical movements of a perfect life.

A Modern Galilean Wedding

Where does the active scene of Christ's earthly ministry open? At a nuptial song. At a time of joyful festivities. At a time when not only the young, but also the old and the middle-aged, are trying to be happy and to make everyone happy. At a time when laughter and merriment and good cheer are making tired men and women feel, for a time at least, that care and worry and anxiety and distrust have no part to play in the great social economy. The celestial song, which was sung on the morning of the Nativity, was no more joyful in note than the songs we hear as we come over the hills and see the wedding party dancing upon the grass, upon the outskirts of the Galilean village of Cana.

Would you have me describe the joy of a wedding festival I once witnessed in the East! I did not see it at Cana, I did see it, however, at one of the neighboring towns of Galilee. First, I found the wedding guests came from far and near, as they once came to "Westover," where Colonel William Byrd, lawyer, statesman and landed gentleman, married his daughter to a distinguished representative of Virginia's aristocracy, or to "Mount Vernon," when Martha Washington's granddaughter, Eleanor Parke Custis, was married to young Major Lewis, or to "Monticello," when the great Jefferson and the Randolph families become one at the marriage altar. There the guests came not only by the tens, but by the hundreds. The bridal home was full, and all the neighboring houses were crowded with the invited guests.

A Neighborhood Festivity

Then the ceremony was not finished by a few words mumbled off by a minister, and a quick scurrying away for the train by the bridal couple, after a few grains of rice had been thrown. But days, and sometimes even a week, were given up to the festivities and to the hilarities. As I came over the hills towards this village, I saw the maidens by the score, with their hair decorated with flowers, and their garments of the bright, gorgeous colorings of the East, shining in the sunlight. With their arms encircling each other's waists, they were as Miriam of old, dancing over the greensward and singing in time with the moving feet. The young men came there with their fleet horses caparisoned with the finest trappings. There were games and feats of strength for the competitors at these festivals. At last, after days of frolic, came the wedding ceremony. Then came the great climax of all, the "wedding supper." Christ's first miracle was performed at a season of social festivities.

I am glad that Christ's nativity was announced to the world by the overture of song. I am glad that his first miracle was performed at a wedding. I am glad we do not see Jesus at this time standing clothed in the skins of wild beasts, as was John the Baptist in the wilderness. Christ came to this wedding to mark his approval of innocent pleasure. "His attendance upon the wedding in Cana of Galilee, proves," wrote Bishop Ryle, "that true religion was never meant to make man melancholy. There are times when it is lawful to be merry and rejoice." "The calendar of the sinner has only a few days of the year marked as festival days," wrote Elon Foster, "but every day of the Christian's calendar is marked by the hand of God as a day of rejoicing." Yes, by the echoing we know it. By the joyful songs we hear to-day coming over the Galilean hills, in the chorus of which Christ's words may be blending, we believe it. Thank God, Christ's first miracle was performed for a bride and not for a widow, at a banquet and not by a bier.

Chimes of the Wedding Bells

Rejoice, though storms assail thee, rejoice when skies are bright,
Rejoice, though round thy pathway is spread the gloom of night;
If the good hope be in thee that all at last is well,
Then let thy happy spirit with joyful tidings swell.

Christ's ministry opens in a scene of human festivities. It does more than that. Christ came to Cana of Galilee, to prove that the most important place on earth, this side of heaven, is the marriage altar. "Marriage," wrote Dr. Taylor, "is the mother of the world and precious kingdoms, and fills cities and churches, and heaven itself. Like a useful bee, it builds a house and gathers sweetness from every flower, and labors and unites into societies and republics, and sends out colonies, and feeds the worlds with delicacies, and obeys the king, and exercises many virtues, and promotes the interest of mankind, and is that state of good to which God hath designed the present constitution of the world." That is, the right kind of marriage does all this. Therefore, as marriage is so important in God's sight and man's, it is very essential, oh, young people that you ask Jesus Christ to your weddings when you are about to be married. Yet the strange fact remains, that the last Being in the universe some of us would ever think of inviting to our weddings is Jesus Christ.

We treat Christ a great deal as some of us have treated our best earthly friends, when giving a reception or a party. We take the calling list of our wives and grown daughters and sons, and we bunch the together with the names of our personal friends, business and social. Then, when the night of th tertainment comes around, we say to ourselves, ' is not Mr. So-and-So, here?" Then we go to our and say, "My dear, Mr. So-and-So is not here. you invite him?" She looks at the list of guest answers, "No, husband; we forgot to put that down." "Too bad! too bad!" you say. Yes, too bad. But though it is too bad, this fact re incontrovertible. You did not neglect to invite very wealthy man to your daughter's wedding. Because you expected him to give her a present. did not forget to invite that prominent statesma social queen? Why? Because you expected the give that wedding prominence in the newspaper. you did neglect to invite that old-time friend, wh been true to you for many, many years. Thu often neglect to invite to our weddings Christ, w our best of all friends.

The Divine Guest

Not only do the young people often neglect t Christ to the wedding, but they very often negle talk to him and consult with him before they en themselves for life. They treat Christ in referen the coming engagement, a great deal as did a y lady, many years ago, her New England pastor. came to Doctor Pelpin and said, "Pastor, I wan talk to you. I am in doubt whether I should m Mr. So-and-So. I want your advice." With that kindly old minister looked at her and said, "Wel girl, when is the wedding to take place? Next Tuesday?" "Oh no," she answered, "not next T day, but next Thursday." So some people com Christ to talk about their coming marital plans, w they have made up their minds to marry, whether wants them to marry or no. These young girls will about their wedding plans with other girls. They talk about them to people who are almost strang But they will not talk about them to Christ, wh more interested in that coming wedding than any o being in the universe, not excepting the bridegr himself.

Young folks, about to enter into the nuptial st will you not ask Christ to your wedding? Will you talk to him before the engagement ring is slipped the slender finger of the left hand? Will you not, Christ's help, avoid the awful life-time mistakes wrong marital entanglements? Death itself is prefe ble to a wedding ceremony where Christ is not pres to make the hearts and spirits one as the law bi together the physical twain as one. Sometime ago, quick ring of my telephone called me to the Emerge Hospital. "Come quickly," came the call, "a ma dying and wants to see you." There I found a yo man, by the name of Robert Duff, who had been cau in the live wires of an electric plant. He was bur so badly that his lower limbs were already dead. mind was as clear as is yours or mine. He was talk to his fiancee, a sweet girl, who sat weeping by side. Within a few hours his body was a corpse in arms. Oh, that was sad! But it was not nearly sad as if that young man had lived and they had be married in body, but not in spirit. Better the de body of the loved one in your arms, than the c corpse of a dead love, holding together a man an woman by law and not in spirit. Christ's presence Cana of Galilee is a divine suggestion, teaching t over every marriage altar should be a divine bened tion. Talk to your Saviour about whom you are marry, and then invite Christ to your wedding and y will make no marital mistakes.

Christ's Ready Helpfulness

Another lesson of the miracle is that nothing is t small, or too insignificant to do, if by that act, you a going to make your fellow-men happier. This chan ing of water into wine was not done to heal the sick, to raise the dead, or to cast out the "devils," which the number of a legion were torturing the poor mani amid the Gadarene tombs. It was done simply a purely to relieve the embarrassment of a host and ho tess, whose supply of wine for the marriage feast ha rupout. It was done to alleviate one of those little domestic troubles with which most of us have been conversant in the days of our own homes.

Cannot you see those guests gathering in the East in your own house? Your wife had made preparations for ten or twelve guests for dinner. There was just enough oysters, enough salads, enough squabs, enough figres of ice cream for the invited guests, no more and no less. Suddenly, when you were about to be seated, the bell rang and in came three or four friends from a distant city. You had to ask them to dine. There was no way out of it. Then your wife took you and the children aside and said, "I don't know how we will get through. We have not enough food for those extra guests. Now, you and the children have got to take turns in going without. You must refuse in turn the different courses. When the plates are passed, you must say, 'I do not want any, thank you.'" Of course all went well, except with your youngest boy. The salad looked so good, that when it was being passed, he said, "I want some, mamma." Then her face flushed. She was embarrassed. Every one in the room was embarrassed. Do you not recognize a mighty Christian lesson in the fact that Christ performed his "first miracle" in order to relieve a little domestic fury of the home?

Genial Companionship

If I put myself in Jesus' place, I think I can imagine the scene which took place which led to his going to the wedding. Cana is only a few miles away from Nazareth, where Jesus was then living. There is a tradition that this Cana bridegroom's name was Cleophi, who was about to marry Mary's sister. The mother of Christ is talking to Jesus. "Are you going to our aunt's wedding?" she asks. "Oh no," is the reply, "I do not want to go. Weddings have not very much interest for me. But, mother, you go. I know you will have a good time and I will send my aunt my love and benediction through you." "But, my son," says Mary, "I do not want to go without you. You should go for the family's sake, as well as for mine." "Well, mother," he answers, "if you wish it, I will go." Does not this statement bear out the strange wording of the chapter, "And the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee and the mother of Jesus was there, and both Jesus was called and his disciples to the marriage"? Why was Mary's name here mentioned first, if there was no reason for Christ going there to please his mother? Yes, I think I am not going beyond my right when I state that Christ went to the wedding, and he performed his "First Miracle" there to teach us that nothing in life is too small, or too insignificant to do, if by that little act we can bring happiness into some loving heart.

Among Home Associations

Where was this "First Miracle" performed? In Cana. What does that mean? Christ started his earthly ministry among his near neighbors and friends. Cana is only a short distance from Nazareth. He did not leave home and go among strangers to find a Gospel field. He began right among the friends and companions of his youth. In all probability there was not a guest at this famous wedding who did not personally know him. Not a grown man or a grown woman was there but had seen him a barefooted boy running over the Zebulun hills. There was not among all those guests one who had not felt the touch of his personal life upon his or her life. This personal touch of Christ has to me a great lesson. The wonderful picture of the wedding in Cana of Galilee in the Parisian Louvre, teaches it in more ways than one. There the old master has the laughing-eyed maidens and the young men whispering their secrets in their ears. There the table is groaning under the most tempting of dishes. There are the old folks and the children. But there in that wedding scene the artist has assembled all the members of his own family and all his friends. His wife is there. His mother is there. His children are all there. His neighbors are there. Beautiful and suggestive fact is that. It means as Christ performed his "First Miracle" in Cana among his friends and neighbors, we must begin our earthly Christian service among those we love and hold dear. Do not be a Gospel messenger only to the heathen. Go and find your neighbors and talk to them about the Atonement of the Cross. Find the heathen at your very door.

The further you go into this premise, the more powerful becomes the Gospel lesson. Not only did Christ begin his public Gospel ministry among his neighbors, but he began that Gospel ministry in a private way within the quietude of his own home. Mary, his mother, had felt this divine influence long before the outside world felt it and saw it in Cana of Galilee. How do I know? The inference is clear from the chapter of my text. When the wine failed, Mary heard the women of the house talking together about the mishap. This would be most natural, if the bride-to-be was Mary's own sister and Jesus' aunt. What then happened? Why, Mary immediately went and told Christ. Then she said to the servants: "What he saith unto you do it." Do not these statements prove to you that Mary knew Jesus could extricate them out of their difficulties if he would? Ah, yes; Christ showed his divinity first in his home. It is right and necessary for us to begin our public ministry for Christ among our friends. It is not, however, more important to be a Gospel messenger to our neighbors than a Gospel messenger in private to our husbands, our wives, our parents, our children, in the quiet sanctity of our own homes. Christ was a divine Christ in a carpenter shop, before he was a divine Christ making the water blush crimson in Cana of Galilee.

Preparation for Service

But we must not circumscribe our Gospel ministry to our homes and our neighbors and our friends. We must not say, "Because Christ performed his first miracle at a wedding, therefore we will only attend the weddings and the festivities of the young people." We have a greater mission than that. No sooner were these young folks married and started out in the world with Gospel good cheer, than Christ went forth into the world to continue that ministry. He went among the strangers. He went to those who cursed and derided and ultimately slew him. He went to those who would have nothing to do with him. He went among the sinners and the outcasts to carry to them the "Bread of Life." He went to Mary Magdalene and to the house of despised Zaccheus. He went everywhere where the sins of mankind were calling for the need of a Saviour. From amid the songs and the merrymakings of this nuptial banquet, will you and I carry the message of Christ to an outside sinful world? Will we preach Christ amid the cypress as well as amid the orange blossoms? Will we preach Christ under the moaning, weeping willows as well as among the singing multitudes of weddings of Galilee? "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting." It is your duty to go to both places. But remember, oh, Christian, those who are preparing to enter another world, and to be married to death, need you, as much as those who are about to place upon their fingers the wedding ring of gold, which will encircle that finger after the flesh has withered away in the grave.

THE AMERICAN COLONY IN JERUSALEM

Continued from page 651

trikets, and novelties made of olive wood and mother-of-pearl. Among other things, some of them run a livery business, silversmith, blacksmith and cabinet shops, while others are engaged in teaching, dentistry, photography, etc. The women engage in dressmaking, fruit canning and cake baking for the wealthy ladies of the city. In their social economy, every one has a particular work, and with all of them their work seems to be a labor of love. There are no drones, no kings, no queens; all are equal. The colony has a treasurer and a general manager, who looks after the finances and business affairs, but this gives him no precedence over the others. The women have two looms and several wheels, and make most of the clothing worn by themselves and the children, as well as sheets, window-curtains, carpets, etc. They also have a knitting machine and knit all the hosiery, and an experienced tailor makes most of the outer garments of the men and boys.

One of the young ladies of the colony, the daughter of a Chicago lawyer, is at the head of the government school for Mohammedan girls in Jerusalem. She is a beautiful and most accomplished young lady, and is doing a noble work among the daughters of the natives. She relates some amusing incidents of the schoolroom. When she first took charge, she found the girls had been taught nothing but the Koran. She at once put them in arithmetic, geography, etc., whereupon the mother of one young lady came over next morning very much out of temper, and objected to her daughter studying geography, assigning as a reason that she "did not want any new religion taught to her girl"

As to the matter of rations, it takes considerable to feed this big family. They consume eighty pounds of flour per day and other things in like proportion. At meals they ask the blessing in song. All of the colony eat in the same dining-room, and several large tables are necessary to accommodate them. They are most gracious hosts and know how to entertain the stranger within the gate. They make no charge and will accept money only as a gratuity. Of course, no American would enjoy their hospitality without making them an adequate gift.

A PRETTY NOOK IN THE COLONY KINDERGARTEN

While visiting in Jerusalem, I stopped with the American Colony through a mistake, being misled by the name. Yet I am indebted to that error for one of the most agreeable experiences of my life. I never entered any home where I saw more evidence of Christian love or a more direct application of Christianity to every-day life. But to be with them and to see their principles in practice, our prejudices are weakened, if not entirely removed. They claim to be the only permanent and completely successful society of the kind on earth. They say many other attempts have been made, but all have fallen short of success.

The American Colony is well known in the Holy Land, and its members are very popular with the natives. This popularity is due in a great measure to the fact that they do not assail the religion of the natives. They do not tell a Moslem that his religion is wrong—they show him that Christianity is right. The colony has been good to the natives, and has won their hearts by many acts of kindness. It has carried to the natives the Gospel in deeds, and not in words. In their creed, there is no room for pride, envy, avarice, ambition, and all the train of evil emotions that do so much to destroy human happiness. In plain view of the Mount of Olives, within a short distance of Gethsemane and Calvary, and in the midst of so many scenes made sacred by the presence of Him who went about doing good, these simple people are devoting their lives to the service of God and the betterment of their fellowman.

Among the Workers

—Evangelist Johnson, of Moody Institute, Chicago, has just closed a series of tent meetings in Wells, Minn., covering a period of nearly four weeks. One hundred and seventy-five confessed Christ. The music was conducted by Geo. Moody of Chattanooga, Tenn., assisted by a chorus of seventy-five voices.

—A party of Welsh revivalists will soon visit this country. It includes Mr. J. Tudor Rees, Mr. W. Beddoe Rees, and Mr. Dewi Michael, a revival singer, who has been thrilling thousands abroad with his wonderful voice. Mr. Tudor Rees was with Evan Roberts from the outbreak of the great revival. J. Raymond Hemminger, Carlisle, Pa., will manage the party.

MOLLY'S CHANGE OF SCENE

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

"THERE isn't a thing tempts her, Norah."

"Couldn't she eat the broiled chicken I brought her, mother, nor the jelly?"

"She just picked at them; that's all. She's that listless, dearie, that she'll take no interest. The doctor says she does be needin' a change; but what change can we give her?"

"If she'd only brace up, mother!"

"Yes, that's what your father says. He's got no patience with Molly. He says I've spoiled her, and maybe I have; but since she left the high school and couldn't go to college, Molly's been more dead than alive. The only thing ever she wanted was education, an' I tried to get it for her, God knows—and she so clever, too, but it couldn't be managed. Then she had that fall, the first day in the factory, and since then she doesn't care what 'comes of her. I'd give a year of my life to help the child. It's a heart-break to see her fading away; but what can I do? She's thin as a ghost now."

Tears came into Norah's eyes. She was big and homely, with coarse, red hands, and the strength of an ox. She tossed off her work in the laundry at the beautiful big house where she lived, as if washing were merely blowing soap-bubbles. It was child's play to her, and her merry laugh rang out over the tubs, and her jests almost set the cook and housemaid into fits as she hung out the clothes, or brought in great baskets of them to be sprinkled and rolled up for the ironing.

The one bit of poetry in Norah's life was her delicate sister Molly, the youngest of her mother's nine children, the one who had been coddled from babyhood, and who was pining away because she could not do as she wanted to, and had to take up a life she loathed, and there was no chance to get her the change that would save her.

Poor girls have no business with nervous exhaustion. Molly had come honestly by hers. At the high school she had not only worked far beyond her strength, but she had been worn out in the effort to conceal her people and her poverty from her schoolmates. Her simple dresses were few enough, but they were as nice as those the others wore; and at graduation, somehow, she had contrived to have as dainty a white gown and as beautiful ribbons as any one else. Norah had seen to that. The old mother and father and Norah had modestly kept in the background on commencement night.

Little did her parents dream that she was so desperately ashamed of them, that she wouldn't for the whole world have had the girls know that she belonged to them. With infinite pains she had avoided intimacies, and kept to herself, lest the class should suspect her of any connection with Pat Montgomery, who drove a truck for the woollen mill.

Once when a heavy rain had come up suddenly, her mother had ventured to bring her an umbrella and overshoes to the school, Molly had taken them with a brief thank you, and had not explained when one of the girls said: "Well, Molly, you are fortunate. Our Bridget would not condescend to bring my rain-coat or umbrella, if it were to save me from consumption."

When Patrick put down his big foot at last that Molly must earn her living like the rest, that she might learn the typewriter, or go into a shop, or into the mill, being in his view no better than other girls, and the pressure of his long struggle having begun to tell on his health and strength, Molly collapsed. She thought she should die. She slipped on the factory floor and was badly hurt. Not badly enough, though, to account for her going to pieces as she did. Patrick was angry with her; his wife was broken-hearted; the big brothers were puzzled and pitiful, and Norah came over evenings and coaxed and consoled, all to no purpose.

Molly sat all day long in a rocking-chair, moping and languid, looking like a broken lily. Now the doctor said she must have a change. Norah went home disconsolate.

Two days later, Norah came back, bursting into the little house like a whirlwind, in the middle of the morning.

"Mother," she said, "Molly can have a change. The family's all off to Europe, the servants are gone, and I'm left to be caretaker. I'll take the child to stay with me. She'll be a different girl after eight weeks at The Birches: you see if she isn't."

"But, Norah, would your lady be willing?"

"I asked her, and she said, 'Yes, certainly.' You see they've gone in a hurry. It wasn't thought of till two days ago. And I'm in sole charge."

Hurriedly Molly's things were thrown into a suitcase, a cab was summoned, and Norah hustled her sister away to the great house where she had spent the last six years, a trusted and efficient helper. Little did the owners of The Birches imagine that Norah had taken leave of her conscience and was now about to prove it, by an act that seemed in her view justifiable. She meant to save Molly's life, and she thought Providence had shown her the way.

Molly leaned back in the cab and languidly dropped her eyes, until they had turned in at the stone gates of the avenue that led to the house. The ascent was steep but well graded, and the driver stopped several times to rest his horse on the way up. He drove around to the back, and Norah paid his fare, and, unlocking the kitchen door, brought Molly inside.

"Come with me, sweetheart," she said. "I've your room all ready and waiting."

It was not to the part of the house where Nora slept that she conducted Molly. She piloted her up the broad polished stairs, her strong arm half-lifting her.

"WHAT ON EARTH ARE YOU DOING IN MY COUSIN EMILY'S ROOM?" DEMANDED MISS PRENTISS

"You'll have this room, darlin'," she said.

But Molly was aroused at this.

"Why, Norah, what do you mean? I can't stay in this room. It's a guest chamber."

"Well, what if it is? It's not exactly a guest-chamber. It's Miss Emily's room, and she's away for a year. You'll do it no harm, and it 'll do you good, and there's only our two selves in the house, and we'll have no more words. Miss Emily's always wantin' to help the poor, so I'm givin' her a chance; that's the whole of it."

Miss Emily's room was the prettiest that Molly had ever seen. She realized the enormity of her being in it when the owner was absent, but the temptation had come on her suddenly, and she thought there would be no harm in staying there just one day. For the great, beautiful room was flooded with sunshine. A soft carpet like green moss covered the floor. The bedstead was of shining brass; the furnishing was all white and gold. Books were in the cases and on hanging shelves. Exquisite pictures were on the walls. One sunk into the depths of the chairs. There was a desk with paper and pens, a divan heaped with cushions, and a bath-room tiled with white and gleaming with silver fittings. Molly Montgomery drew a deep breath of delight.

This was her element. Here was where she belonged. For the first time in weeks she held herself erect and surveyed her slender figure in the long pier-glass.

Norah brought her luncheon on a tray covered with a white napkin, and she ate with enjoyment, sitting beside an open window looking down on a rose-garden.

"But, Norah, you are all wrong. I can't stay here. Why did we have to be poor, Norah, and dacy so common, and everybody so mean?"

But here Norah's quick Irish temper took fire.

"The good Lord forgive you, Molly, for dag to call your father common. It's common you are t have the black thought! I'm sure you'll meet misfune running your way with a bow if you don't mend your manners. There, honey, there!" as she saw olly flush and then turn pale, "Never mind, we've miled you among us and that's the truth."

A week passed, flying swiftly, and Molly had her delicate appetite and gained the look of health. She slept in the big, beautiful room, in the luxurious bebetween sheets of fine linen; she read Miss Emily's oks, she walked in the rose-garden and felt herself to an enchanted princess. Norah waited on her, hand and foot, in the intervals of keeping the house aire and clean. The men who came on errands supposed olly to be a relative of Norah.

One day, never to be forgotten by her ter, she carried out the idea of the enchanted pr cess more fully. Miss Emily's closets were empt but there was a chest in the room which Moll had the curiosity to open. It proved to be fille with exquisitely embroidered garments, some ite, others softly tinted. Yielding to an im lse, Molly dressed herself in the pretty clothes, sh- ing with a kimona in faint blue, with sha wy roses straying over it.

She surveyed herself in the glass with de. She was a vision of beauty with her black air in a heavy coil, her deep blue eyes, her gra ul, girlish figure. She meant only to look and en put away the borrowed finery, when her art stood still.

In the mirror she saw, entering the door y, some one she knew. A short, stout figure, ith hair turning gray; a severe person in a hin black dress, who advanced, exclaiming: "y, Molly Montgomery. What on earth are ou doing here in my Cousin Emily's room, nd in her kimona?"

If the floor could have opened and swall ed her, Molly would have been grateful. he turned so white and faint that she would ve fallen, had she not clutched at the back of he nearest chair. For this lady was no less a rsonage than the principal of the high scho a woman whose keen eyes penetrated every s- guise, and whom no girl could hope to dec e. But Norah flew to the rescue.

"An' is it you, dear Miss Prentiss? She, herself told me you might come and stay h me while she was away, an' I was to take g d care of you. This is my sister Molly, that's s y- ing here to help while the family's gone. Mo, how did you dare touch Miss Emily's thi ? How did you dare? Take them off directly, d come to the kitchen, where you belong."

Molly was now between two fires. Miss Pr- tiss, on the one side, continued surveying he h silence, with an expression of withering sc . On the other, Norah stood a picture of agoni d entreaty. Presently her countenance clear "Norah, dear," she said, "please leave me w Miss Prentiss."

Norah went down stairs wringing her hands.

Molly poured out the whole tale, and Miss Pren listened in wonder, patience and sympathy. Mo kept nothing back, and did not spare herself. Wh she had finished, Miss Prentiss spoke.

"Well, my dear, you have behaved very badly. I h hoped to help you to win a scholarship in Hartw College next year, and to carry out your plans. Y see, I knew your good father and mother and esteem them highly. The only thing I doubted you for w because you were capable of feeling ashamed of the Now will you do precisely what I bid you?"

"Yes." The answer came in almost a whisper.

"Write down in a few words an apology to Emily f your invasion of her room, and give it to me. The go to work and relieve Norah of some of her care. If yo still wish to study I will give you a little help, and se about college, provided we are done with false shame.

The statement was written and given to Miss Pre tiss. But Emily never heard of it, nor saw a line of i Miss Prentiss burned it one rainy evening when she ha a bit of fire on the hearth. Molly had her wish. Sh went to college, and in time became a teacher. Whe that time came, she had learned to know the differenc between real things and shams.

THE HOT DAYS IN NEW YORK

WHEN we read of the march of troops across the Desert of Sahara, where the dust rises in suffocating clouds, and the sun eats unceasingly on the cork helmets of ıe troops, or of some long journey through ıe parched plains of Arizona, where the ery air seems to burn the faces of the aveler, we think that the limit of human ndurance must have been reached in ıese arid places. Yet neither of them ın compare with the suffering of the eople in the congested districts of a great ty during a hot wave. The trooper of ıe Sahara and the cowboy of Arizona e inured to the steady beat of the sun, ıd are equipped for the weather of a hot ountry. In New York the hot days ome almost without warning, last for a eek or two, and then depart as sudenly as they came, leaving behind them many dead and suffering as would be und in the wake of battle.

Shortly after the thermometer showed inclination to stay above ninety, the ty did what it could to save life and minish suffering. On the East Side, ydrants were opened in the afternoons, ıd filled the streets from curb to curb with water. What a relief it was to a crowded block! The children, and even older people, streamed from the tenements and danced knee-deep in the gushing current, and splashed the water over one another until the street resembled a public bath or a miniature Coney Island. At night the park restrictions were raised, and whole families went to the public breathing places, to sleep until the red face of the sun, showing above the tops of the high buildings, told the exhausted sleepers that another day of torture had begun.

LIVING ON THE FIRE-ESCAPES

THE INDISPENSABLE FAN

Early travelers across Brooklyn Bridge, could see hundreds of white spots on the tin roofs of the buildings along the water front. These white spots were the temporary beds of people who had fled to the roofs to sleep until cooler weather should come. People riding on the Elevated trains would pass row after row of sleepers lying but a few feet away, on the fire escapes of the buildings on Third and Sixth Avenues. The fact that there might be danger in so many people being crowded together on a narrow platform several stories above the street, was apparently forgotten in the general desire to get away from the sweltering atmosphere of a tenement room. The great public recreation piers that jut far out into the waters of the East River, were crowded with tired mothers and little children. On the piers a breeze would be often felt when the air was dead and heavy in other parts of the city. These piers have been the means of saving many lives within the past few weeks.

One of the saddest sights to be seen was a group here and there about a horse overcome by heat, that was ending his life's journey in the gutter. It was good to see the anxious faces of the people who, their own misery forgotten, watched sadly the animal's death-struggle, and a murmur of satisfaction would burst from the watchers when a small street urchin would come staggering up with a heavy pail of water which he would pour gently over the horse's head, in an effort to revive him. Many a horse owes its life to the ministering kindness of some bystander. One young woman, a hospital nurse, took charge of one horse that had just fallen. Under the woman's orders, cracked ice was brought, a drink was forced down the animal's throat, and in a short time he was on his feet again, and continued on his journey.

At the beaches it was but very little more comfortable than in the city. The sands of the shore felt like the sparks from an engine. Wherever one went during the burning days he seemed doomed to misery, and the first rain-storm could not last long enough or bring water enough to satisfy the exhausted millions of Manhattan.

WAITING FOR A BREEZE

FOURTEEN THOUSAND CONFESS CHRIST

Number of meetings held	202
Aggregate attendance at meetings (estimated)	1,114,650
Invitations distributed	4,370,675
House to house visitation: calls made (estimated)	575,000
Enquirers registered	13,675

THE above figures are a record, in summary, of the wonderful five months' ission, just concluded, which r. Torrey and Mr. Alexander nducted in London. It was no all task to which they set emselves when, at the beginng of February, they started eir Gospel campaign in the rgest hall of the world's most pulous city. Day after day e great structure was crowded. There was blessing as well as ultitude. What stories I have eard of lives made over to God, whole families saved, of runkards converted, and loved nes reunited! A British peer f the realm was among those ho found salvation; a French obleman found the Saviour and ent back to his own land to reach the Gospel; a colonel in the British Army was he first man to stand up to confess Christ; a popular ciety entertainer was converted, and is now preaching he Gospel; actors and actresses, infidels and atheists, hieves and gamblers, high and low, rich and poor, oung and old, believed and were saved.

From Albert Hall the evangelists proceeded to Brixon, in the south of London, where, in a large iron uilding specially erected, for seven weeks the Gospel as preached twice a day to vast crowds. Results were ow at first, but toward the close there were numerous onversions.

The third and concluding district in which the mission was held was in the Strand—one of the busiest centres. A special building was erected. For the first week of the mission rain poured down in torrents. One Saturday afternoon, to escape the storm, a man, utterly hopeless and defeated, entered the building. Before he left it, he was a new man in Christ Jesus. In a note which he sent up to Dr. Torrey, he thanked God for the rain, adding that he was on his way to commit suicide when the storm drove him into the service. At the evening meeting, Dr. Torrey read the letter. Curiously enough, in the vast congregation to listen to it, there was another man who also was bent upon self-destruction. God arrested him also, through his servants, and he was saved. In the Strand, just as in other centres, there was wonderful blessing.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION HALL IN THE STRAND, LONDON

A Thanksgiving Service was held in Royal Albert Hall July 3, and was confined very largely to workers and converts. The vast building was packed from floor to topmost gallery. Lord Kinnaird occupied the chair. Mr. W. G. Bradshaw, who is at the head of one of London's big banking establishments, made an address reviewing the work of the Mission. He said:

"It has been through the mercy of God, a wonderful success. Overflowing congregations have gathered day by day, to listen to faithful preaching in the plainest terms, until they have aggregated over a million souls. About 14,000 men and women, drawn from all classes of society, have stood up in the meetings to confess that they have accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. More than ten thousand Christian workers have stood shoulder to shoulder in the cause of the Gospel, in unbroken harmony and brotherly love."

The total cost of the five months' mission was $85,000. The Evangelistic Council which invited Torrey and Alexander to London, contributed $50,000; collections amounted to $32,500, which left only $2,500 to be subscribed at the closing meeting. In January, 1906, Torrey and Alexander will begin a great Mission in Toronto, Canada. Meantime, Dr. Torrey goes to Germany to spend some time with his family, while Mr. and Mrs. Alexander go to New York.

J. KENNEDY MACLEAN.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, Associate Edi

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly, Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTI... HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Ma...

The Mormon Menace

WHEN THE CHRISTIAN HERALD took up the cause of the women of America, in support of their movement to deprive the polygamous Mormon hierarchy of representation and lawmaking power in our National Senate, it resolved among other things, to find out, if possible, what the Mormons are doing in the matter of immigration. With thousands of busy propagandists at home and abroad, the skilful elders and others who conduct this part of the work have little difficulty in finding plenty of proselytes. Their labors among the unsophisticated peasantry of Europe, especially those of the Scandinavian countries, have been abundantly productive of converts to their salacious and alluring doctrines, to which a certain class of weak men and women readily fall victims.

But those leaders well know that polygamy is a statutory offence in the United States, and that our immigration laws discriminate against all who openly avow themselves polygamists. To meet this difficulty they resort to cunning. Our immigration authorities in New York know this. They state substantially:

1. That the immigrants who, having been caught in the Mormon net, come to these shores, are skilfully coached to evade the immigration law (as far as polygamy is concerned), and that the Ellis Island officials are powerless to prevent it. Hence, hundreds of budding polygamists get in who should be excluded.

2. That many Mormon immigrants are coming in through Canada. There being no exclusion test in that country, they are using it as a "back door" to gain admission to the United States. At the same time, large numbers are settling in the Dominion, so that our northern neighbor will doubtless have a very considerable Mormon question on its own hands at no distant date.

We need hardly point out that the Mormon immigrants, especially those who have already adopted polygamy as a "cardinal doctrine," are not desirable immigrants. Our laws aim to keep all such people out of the country.

Under the Act of March 3, 1903 (Section 2), in the enumeration of classes of aliens to be excluded from admission to the United States, this clause appears:

> "Polygamists, anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the government of the United States, or of all government, or of all forms of law. . . ."

That these people are undesirable on the grounds stated in the Act of Congress, is becoming notorious, through the growing indications of disloyalty on the part of the Mormon leaders and their following. It is only a few days since a storm of disapprobation broke out among the non-Mormon population of Utah, occasioned by the fact that in one overwhelmingly Mormon section of that State, the American flag was not hoisted on July Fourth until 3 P.M., and then it was put up at half-mast.

The Great Hot Wave

NOT since the summer of 1901 has the country east of the Mississippi River suffered so much from the scorching rays of the sun, as it did in the two weeks following the ninth of July. From that date, the heat increased from day to day, until the thermometer climbed with sickening regularity to some point above ninety, or even to a hundred, and we thought how altogether lovely it would be to "sit in our bones," with a cool breeze blowing through them. The people in the cities, especially the poor, were the greatest sufferers; but the country also came in for its share of discomfort. Such places as Lake George, the Adirondacks, and even the New England coast, where people went for refuge, were reported as almost unbearable. Mt. Washington, whose summit seems in our imagination to float forever in cool mists, found its head warmed to seventy degrees.

One of the surprising features of the hot wave was the fact that the South was quite comfortable. New Orleans, and parts of Florida, were having moderate summer weather, with the thermometer hovering in the lower seventies. One Southern gentleman came to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office, and said that on his way North he had not been uncomfortably warm until he reached Washington. The heat of the North was too much for him, and he went South to get cool. A physician from Turkey said that Constantinople was a much pleasanter place than New York. President Roosevelt set the good example of going camping with his boys on the Long Island shore, as the only successful way of avoiding the heat was to get as close as possible to mother earth, in the coolness of the woods.

People who sought relief in nearby sea resorts were sadly disappointed. Thousands went to Asbury Park and to Atlantic City. At the latter place they found the air at one hundred degrees on the famous board walk.

The great daily death record, reaching into the hundreds, has been equalled but few times, and the results of the intense heat will be felt for months to come, both by the people who sweltered and gasped in the cities, and, above all, by the poor beasts of burden who stood for hours on the hot pavements. Many horses were compelled to drag heavy loads, regardless of the heat, until they dropped, and slowly breathed out their lives on the scorching bricks. One lesson should be taken to heart from the hot spell. New York and other cities should provide the public drinking fountains with low troughs, for the use of dogs and cats. We claim to be a civilized nation, yet for lack of water, dumb animals go mad or die from thirst. It is also true that few of our cities are provided with an adequate number of drinking fountains, and that the water supplied is not filtered, and is so warm as to be far from refreshing. If it were possible for the wayfarer to get a drink of properly cooled water at various points on our city streets, there would be a diminished trade at the saloons, and fewer sunstroke cases in the hospitals.

Unheeded Appeals

ONE cannot but rejoice that, even in this torrid weather, congregations so large are gathered in our great cities when any famous preacher holds a service. A most impressive spectacle has been presented on each of several successive Sundays, at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, in New York, when Dr. G. Campbell Morgan has preached. The great edifice has been crowded, both on floor and galleries, by eager listeners, in spite of the declaration given by the fashionable journals that the city is empty. In other cities, too, the announcement that a sermon will be delivered by some preacher eminent at home or abroad, is sure to attract a large audience. The Gospel has not lost its influence with the masses, nor have the people wearied of the old story.

There is the more reason to rejoice in this fact, because we have the Apostolic assurance that "faith cometh by hearing." There are many ways by which men are led into the kingdom, but none so much honored as that of the spoken word. It is the means that the Holy Spirit most frequently uses for producing conviction, that leads to conversion. The Christian, too, is often led by preaching to a more consistent life, to a recognition of his failings, and to a sense of his dependence on divine help. The arrow shot at a venture, is divinely guided to a vulnerable place, and makes a wound that sends the sufferer to Christ for healing.

If all the people who are to be found in the congregations listening to the earnest preacher were thus blessed, how much nearer we should be brought to that long expected time when all men shall know the Lord! The difficulty, and too often the danger, with many, is that the word spoken produces no permanent effect. The preacher is heard with interest, he is admired, and a temporary elation is felt, which passes away at the church door. The hearer does not apply the lessons to himself; does not act upon the advice given. This custom of hearing, without doing, is not only a wasting of energy, but is a positive injury. A famous preacher uses a homely illustration of its benumbing influence. He says: "A factory is built in a neighborhood which had no such enterprise before. At six o'clock in the morning its bell clangs forth its summons. Every sleeper in the town is awakened by the unusual sound. A few who are employed in the factory, rise at th... call and go to their work. After a few months, the ...rn-ing call awakens them, but no one else. Those h... it who heed it, but the others who disregard it, and ...ve no active duty associated with it, slumber on ... dis-turbed by the clamor." It is so with the Gospe... ap-peal. When the hearer translates the message int... on-duct, he is ready for the next message; but wh... he makes no practical use of what he hears, he be...nes all the more somnolent. One of the most e...test preachers that ever lived was puzzled by such res... of his preaching, and was told: "Thou art unto th... as a very lovely song, of one that hath a pleasant ...ce, and can play well on an instrument: for they hea...hy words, but they do them not." Twenty-four cen...ies have passed since those words were spoken, an... we witness the same phenomenon. Human nature i... not changed; the people who hear the Word and do i... not are still with us and disappoint the preacher's h...es. Well that with others the message is received as ... all to definite duty and is obeyed!

The Right Spirit

SINCE we published, a few weeks ago, our Sy...po-sium on Sunday Recreation and Desecratio... a great many letters have been received dealing wit... his very important subject. In these, the writers, fo... he most part, confine themselves to pointing out va...us forms of Sabbath-breaking now in very general use. A few, however, lay the axe at the root of the tree, ...en they state that the Church itself is not wholly bl...e-less. One reader—a railroad official in Nebras...—points out the evil influence of travel on the Lord's ...y, even when the object is to attend religious meet...s, and believes that if pastors united in condemning ...e practice, it would be greatly discouraged. Other rea...rs hold that pastors who leave their flocks unshephe...d in the summer for weeks and months, often without ...y adequate spiritual provision, need not be surprise...o find religion at a low ebb and Sabbath-breaking or...e increase when they return.

We are pleased to note, however, that the maj...ity of the writers do not cavil at the Church, nor indulg...n fault-finding with the pastors; but express their re...i-ness to aid in any effort—on the basis of the plans ...g-gested by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—to carry the Go...el out into the highways and byways, and to reach ...e multitudes in the parks, at the popular seashore ...d mountain resorts, and the suburban groves and pi...c grounds. This is the right spirit, and we trust that ...e publication of the Symposium may be productive ...f practical results in stirring up many churches in ...r large cities and busy manufacturing towns, to take ...-vantage of their opportunity for active "field servi..." during the next two months.

Smoot Must Go

From the New York Daily News

The movement to deprive Reed Smoot of the seat in the Un...d States Senate, to which he was elected by the Utah Legisla...e at the dictation of the Mormon Church, is obtaining new head... in view of the nearer approach of the next session of Congress, ...d owing to the impulse given to the agitation by the National Lea...e of Women's Organizations.

Not only American women, but every true American man w... is loyal to country, to home, and to family, should, and will, u... in demanding that Reed Smoot, the apostle and champion of M...monism, be driven from the United States Senate, just as trai... and enemies of the Republic have been driven from that bod... the past.

Mormonism has placed itself outside the pale of religious tole...tion, and Utah, having violated the solemn contract on wh... statehood was granted, does not deserve to be treated as a s...reign American commonwealth. It is a bigger question t... party. It involves the very life and moral health of the nati... Smoot must go!

WHAT THE BIBLE SAYS

OF THE BLOOD

Romans 5: 8 and 9	Ephesians 1: 7
Revelations 5: 9	Ephesians 2: 13
Revelations 7: 9, 13 and 14	Hebrews 9: 12, 13, 14 and 22
Revelations 12: 11	Hebrews 13: 11 and 12
Revelations 1: 5	John 1: 7
Colossians 1: 14	Peter 1: 18 and 19 D. F. E.

The BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

In Sacred Mecca

LAWS, strictly enforced by the Turkish authorities, have for long years excluded non-Mohammedans from their sacred places, and l kinds of untrustworthy stories were ·culated about Mecca and its pilgrims. ·cently, however, several Christian trav·ers, at the risk of their lives, joined in e pilgrimage, and from them we now ow exactly what takes place. It ap·ars that the pilgrimage to Mecca, the ·thplace of the prophet, is incumbent on ·ery Moslem, who is not incapacitated f poverty or sickness. Many of them ·tend their journey to Medina, two hun·ed and fifty miles farther, where Mo·hmmed is said to be buried, but the ·jority are content with the pilgrimage f Mecca, which they believe insures ·em entrance to the Moslem heaven ·en they die. The number of pilgrims ·most passes belief. In 1893, a count ·s made, and was found to be 92,625. ·ey come from all quarters, and repre·sit a population of 176,000,000.

Mecca is situated in a hot, sandy valley ·Arabia, and is a most filthy, unhealthy ·ce. Its sacred mosque is the prayer ·ntre of the Mohammedan world. It ·ntains the famous Kaaba, which in its ·n contains the sacred black stone, pro·bly an ærolite, and the well of Zemzem, ·vich is a spring of medicinal water. The ·grims, on their arrival at Jiddah, the ·rest seaport, have to undergo quaran·e for several days. On approaching ·cca, they must put off their clothes, ·l dress themselves in the garb of a ·jee, which consists of two long strips of ·vite cloth, one of which is worn around ·loins and the other over the shoul·rs. Sandals may be worn, but the head ·st be uncovered. On entering the ·sque they kiss the sacred stone, and ·h around it seven times. They then ·nk of water from the well of Zemzem, ·l kiss the stone again. Then follows the ·ning between the mountains of Safa and ·rwa. These are on opposite sides of the ·ley, and must be ascended seven times, ·l pilgrim reciting specified passages ·m the Koran at certain stages. The ·grimage continues seven days, each of ·vich has its prescribed duties. Some ·slems remain fourteen days in order to ·quire extra merit. The seventh is the ·at day of the pilgrimage. On that ·y a sacrifice is offered by the pilgrim. ·I may be a sheep, a goat, a cow, or a ·mel, according to his means. At the ·nclusion of the ceremonies he is enti·d to a certificate, which is issued by the ·h authorities, and which he carefully ·serves to the end of his life. In some ·es, however, a wealthy Moslem who ·s neglected the pilgrimage, and falls ill ·becomes too old to perform it, hires a ·n to go in his place. He pays all the ·penses, and the real pilgrim is bound in ·rn to hand him the certificate.

A curious instance of fanaticism is rep·ented in the illustration on this page. ·s not uncommon for pilgrims to declare ·t, having once seen the Kaaba, they ·ll see nothing more so long as they live. ·e Kaaba shall be the last image im·ssed on their eyes in this life. To such ·e official in charge of the Kaaba brings ·arge brick, heated to a white heat, on ·vich they gaze at short distance until ·ir eyes are seared, and they are led ·k to their homes blinded for life. What ·ity it is, that men so passionately de·voted, should not have heard the message of Israel's prophet:

What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God (Micah 6: 8).

Strange Travel of a Bullet

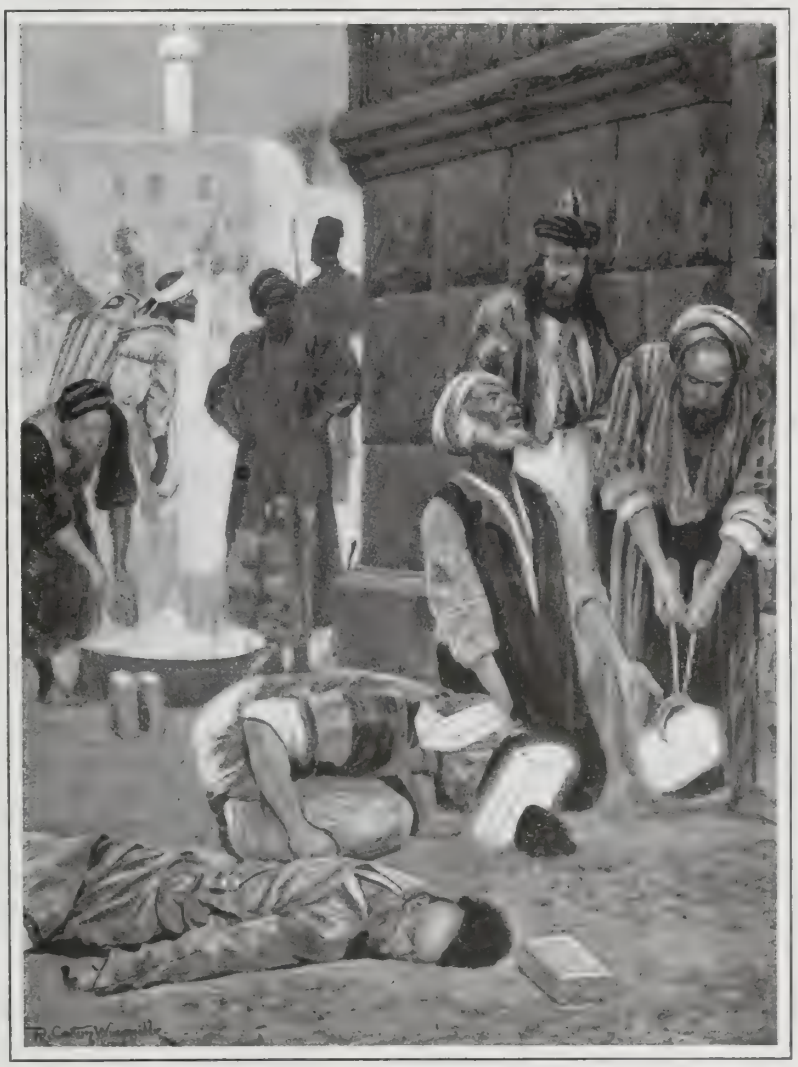
A man was taken to the Post Graduate Hospital in New York, last week, to have a bullet taken from his ankle. The strange feature of the case was that the bullet has been in his body for forty-two years without causing him pain or discomfort until recently. He says that he was fighting in the battle of Gettysburg, in 1863, when a bullet from a Confederate rifle struck him on the right shoulder. He was taken to the field hospital, where the surgeon probed for the bullet, but could not find it. He supposed that it had glanced off. The wound healed and nothing more was thought of it. The man, however, felt sure it was in his body. But he was healthy and concluded he would not be troubled by the missile. Two weeks ago, however, he felt severe pain in his ankle, and went to a doctor about it. Being unable to diagnose the case, the doctor placed it under the X-rays. They showed, lodged among congested veins, the old bullet. It has now been removed, and the patient is recovering. The bullet must have passed harmlessly through his body, until it reached a place where it did mischief. It is so sometimes with the sins of youth. They are forgotten, until suddenly they rise in retaliation, and atonement is required. Happy are they who have received through Christ, forgiveness for them.

My transgression is sealed up in a bag, and thou sewest up mine iniquity . . . but his flesh upon him shall have pain, and his soul within him shall mourn (Job 14: 17, 22).

A Reply to Osler

An authoritative reply to Dr. Osler's contention comes from a much abler man, Sir James C. Browne, the author of various works on mental and nervous diseases. In a recent address to the Public Health Congress, he declares it was a good working hypothesis to regard the natural life of man as a full century. He did not agree with Prof. Osler and others that the world's effective, vitalizing work was done between the ages of twenty-five and forty. Much of the world's best work, he said, had been done by men over forty. If the world were deprived of their work, it would go back to the twilight of ages ago. He quoted numerous instances to prove his contention. He urged that it was a duty to lengthen as well as to strengthen life. Every child should be brought up impressed with the obligation of living to a hundred years, and should be taught to avoid irregularities in living which tend to prevent the attainment of this ambition. The eminent surgeon might have added that there is a divine promise to all who desire so long a life:

With long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation (Psalm 91: 16).



MOSLEM FANATICS BLINDING THEMSELVES AT MECCA

Prehistoric Remains

From Baltimore, Md., comes the news of an interesting discovery. Students of the Maryland Academy of Science have found on the banks of the Choptank River, a number of gigantic skeletons. Some of them measure fully eight feet, and are believed to have been buried at least a thousand years. The collection comprises eight skeletons, of which some are women and children. They are not all complete, but the larger bones have been found, and there is at least one complete skeleton of an adult man. The discovery is considered one of the most important, from the standpoint of anthropology, that has been made in years. The bones cannot be of recent burial, but must have lain there for centuries. The formation of the ground above the graves gives every evidence of this. During the excavations the remains of camps of later Indians were revealed. These consisted of oyster shell heaps, charred and burned earth and fragments of cooking utensils. These were fully ten feet above the graves which contained the gigantic skeletons. In spite of their huge stature and magnificent physique they have left no trace of their lives, except their skeletons now discovered. It is only by service to their kind that men immortalize themselves.

One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh, but the earth abideth (Eccles. 1: 4).

Peary's Polar Expedition

For the seventh time Commander Peary is voyaging toward the North Pole. Every time he has increased hope of success in his quest. The experience gained from hardships of former voyages inspire him with enthusiasm. On July 16, his fine new ship, the Roosevelt, sailed on her northern course. He takes his former route along the Greenland coast to Cape Sabine. There the old whaler, the Erik, which accompanies him, will transfer her stores and return. Peary will take on board a number of Eskimos with dog teams, and work his way up the narrow channel between Greenland and Grant's Land until the ice stops him. Winter quarters will then be established, sledges will be built, and after the long Arctic winter will come the dash for the Pole by the sledging party, which, Mr. Peary hopes, will not be a longer march than five hundred miles. He expects that by February the twilight will be strong enough to enable him to see his way. Then with some twenty sledges lightly laden and drawn by dogs, he will make his way into the land never yet trodden by mortal foot. This risk is in the hope of gaining for our country the honor of discovering the long sought goal, in which search it is estimated that four thousand men have already lost their lives. We may hope that all who thus imperil their lives in the cause of science and patriotism, are putting their trust in Him who said:

I will bring the blind by a way that they know not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known; I will make darkness light before them and crooked things straight (Isa. 42: 16).

The Bible Promotes Reformation

Sunday School Lesson, By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

THE HIGH PRIEST

THE Bible lost and found. Shall we put your Bible into the list of "lost articles," or is it among those "found?" In the Middle Ages the Bible was "lost" by the people, its perusal being forbidden; but it was "found" by Luther, then a monk, who found it covered with dust on a high shelf of a monastery library, and opened to the story of Samuel, called of God even in childhood, to condemn Eli, the priest, and reform the nation. Both these incidents—Samuel and Luther—are instructive parallels to the story of the young King Josiah, whose reformation of Judah was intensified by the discovery of the long lost Law of Moses. As the Word of God that came to Josiah, the whole book of Deuteronomy, or perhaps the whole Pentateuch, was a much fuller message than the brief spoken Word of God that came to Samuel, so the Word of God that Luther found and passed on to us, is much fuller than the little Bible of young Josiah.

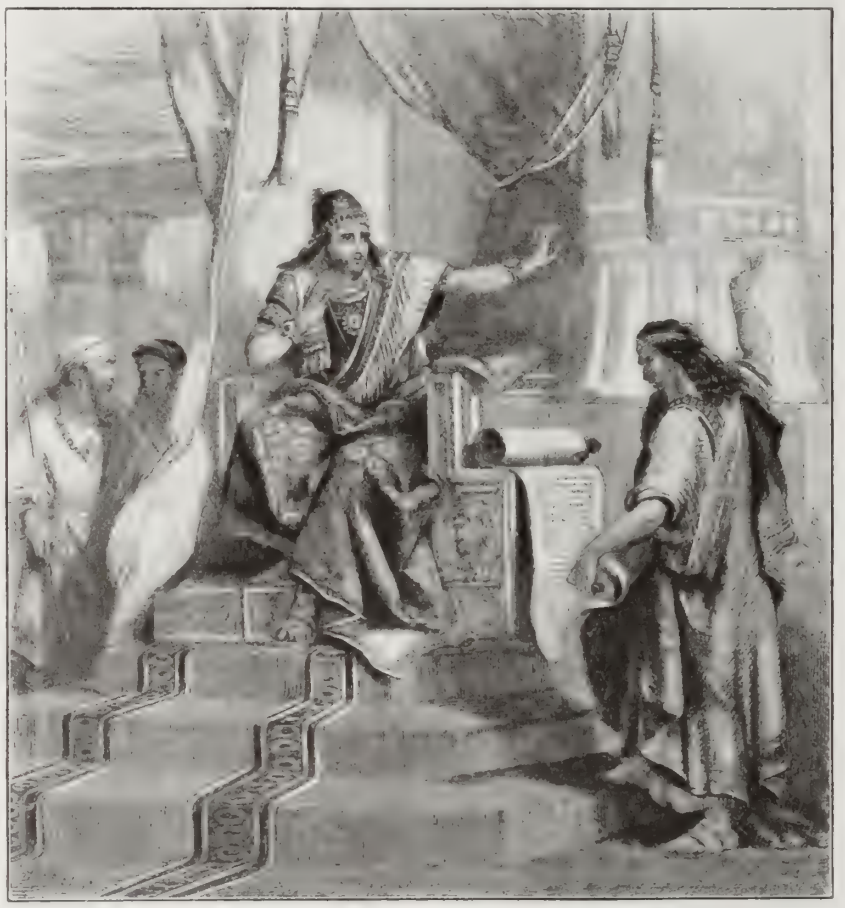
Let us thank God our Bible is complete, and is not chained or hidden. But let us remember, also, that for us to set aside the full Bible we have, with the wonderful story of Jesus, whether by scepticism or by neglect, is a greater sin than the burning of the law by Ahaz, or the hiding of the Bible by Romanists in darker ages, when the Bible had not proved its divine excellence by transforming nations as well as individuals. Here is the best modern parallel we have seen of the lost and found Bible of Josiah's time. A ship's officer, Rob Caistor, a young man, on homeward bound voyage, went ashore at Madeira, and did not return to the ship, nor could he be found by a search party, and the sad news had to be given to his expectant father, retired Captain Caistor, and to his sister and sweetheart, that he had as completely disappeared as if the earth had swallowed him up. Fifteen years later he came home and told his story. On going ashore at Madeira he had been seized and blindfolded by a party of men who called him "Mr. Eustace," and said he belonged to a family that had incurred their hatred, and he would be kept until the wrong was expiated. He laughed at their mistake, said his name was not Eustace, but Caistor, and that his family had never incurred the enmity of anybody. But they would not believe him, and took him to a vessel that carried him to some unknown port, and then he was taken on a mule, still blindfolded, far into the mountains. He became delirious, forgot his former life in the fever, and when he recovered, settled down to bear his captivity. "Sometimes," he said, "we had English and American travelers staying the night with us, for we were hospitable, and they always spoke of a world I had nearly forgotten. So things went on for years. But one day I came across a small copy of the New Testament, with 'To my brother Rob' on the fly-leaf. How glad I was to find that Testament. I hid the Book, and at every possible opportunity read it. At length the Light of God truly entered my soul, and I knew what it was to be free, pardoned, saved, and kept by the grace of our Saviour Christ. I grew so docile with this happiness in my heart, that none thought I would try to gain my freedom. But I planned it out, and after a long time I was able to get away in the clothes of an American tourist, who donned mine for the nonce, and gave me the means of escape in the form of money, and here I am, after fifteen years of silent bondage, free." Years afterwards, he said: "Mine has been a very varied experience, but sometimes I almost envy my little son that he will not have fifteen years stolen out of his life. And yet, who knows, that may have been the only way by which I could be won for Christ." Thus the Bible has often come into the life of men and nations as an awakener and emancipator.

Let us not lose the sense of the Bible's preciousness because it is such a common blessing, coming to most of us as a gift. The Mohammedans have such reverence for the Koran that their rule is never to read it until they have washed their hands. Let us never slam or throw it, but treat it with reverent courtesy as a letter from a king, and cherish its promises as if they were written for us directly by the King.

Frederick the Great was about to build Sans-Souci. Right in the centre of the ground proposed for its beautiful garden stood an old mill. Wishing to have it removed, the King sent for the miller. "My good man," he said, "I want to buy your mill." "I will not sell it, please your Majesty." "I will give you double its value." "I thank your Majesty, but I will not sell my mill for any price whatever." "Why?" "Because, for generations it has been in my father's family, and I mean to pass it down to my son." "But don't you know I have the power to take it, aye, without paying you a single farthing!" "Yes, sire," replied the miller most respectfully, "were it not for the Chamber of Justice in Berlin, which contains our country's laws, among them the special law of inheritance. You are too just a sovereign by far, to take my ancestor's mill." "You've won your case, my friend," exclaimed Frederick, charmed with the compliment, and shaking with much warmth his humble neighbor's hand; "by all means keep your mill, and pass it down to your children's children. I will change my garden ground."

Some one tells us there are thirty-one thousand of the King's promises in the Bible. How rich we are, the sons and daughters of the King. No power can take from us the pardon and peace thus promised.

The Bible is a treasure in health, but especially so when wounds and sickness point our thoughts to the eternal world whence it comes, and for which it prepares us. A colporteur located near the Russian army writes: "I approached a group who were watching the wounded soldiers returning from the war, and soon I was among these latter, offering my books. One man asked for a large-type Russ Testament, price one rouble. He had made up his mind to buy it, after gazing at it longingly for some time. He was just getting the money out of his pocket when the Colonel came up, and inquired what kind of book he was buying. The wounded soldier handed him a copy. 'Dost want to buy?' asked the officer. 'Yes, your honor.' 'Art wounded from the front, or only on the sick-list?' Then turning to me he said: 'Colporteur, do you go through and give each wounded man a copy of the books you have with you, and I'll see to the payment of the bill.' The Colonel had only just time to sign and pay for the copies, when the last bell rang for the train to start." Better still to get the Bible to use in the battle of life. He is ever ready to die, who lives as the Bible teaches.



WHEN THE KING HEARD THE WORDS OF THE LAW, HE RENT HIS CLOTHES

The Best Bible Interpreter. In this story, the prophetess Huldah was called on to interpret the Bible, but an earnest spiritual life is the best interpreter. The missionary to Japan sits down for two years at Nagasaki and learns the language, that he may be able to comprehend the life and the questions of those about him and to speak to them in their own tongue. But the war correspondent never tries to learn the language. He hires an interpreter; he goes to a Japanese who can speak ...glish, and says, "I will give you thirty dollars a mon... go with me and translate Japanese into English, ...d English into Japanese." But it is a risky way, for ... the interpreter intentionally deceives, and often he m... blunders in his English.

There is an easy way to interpret the Bible: "He ...t willeth to do his will, he shall know of the doctri..." Those who live earnestly for God and man are sel... troubled with doubts. Up in the Lebanon a trav... found a woman who had been a Maronite—a sect sin... to the Roman Catholics—but she got a Bible in s... way and read it secretly, and when at fifteen yea... age she lost her baby boy, and the priest came to ex... money that he might pray the child out of purgat... fires, the mother had so learned her Bible by spiri... study, that she answered swiftly, "Jesus Christ s... 'Suffer little children to come unto me, for their f... behold my Father's face.' He took the children in... arms and blessed them, and I believe that my little ... is among the blessed children in heaven."

Judgments on those who disregard the Bible's wa... ings. For centuries the warnings of Moses had been ... fore the kings and people of Palestine, but they ... gone on, save in a few spasms of reformation, from ... to worse, and the judgments such persistent sinning m... bring were anew proclaimed by the faithful Huldah, ... stands in brave contrast to the f... prophets of all ages, who are ever re... to prophesy "smooth things" in orde... be popular. Those who think God is ... good to keep his promises of fut... punishment, should consider to how la... an extent he has punished sins of in... viduals and nations for six thous... years. Men think pain the worst thi... but God so estimates sin. All nat... proclaims that God is seeking for us ... mere pleasure, but perfection, which ... oftener the product of pain than pl... sure. But the pain that sin brings in ... future life, we have no assurance ... benefit any one, save as it is accep... in this world as a warning. A you... clothing salesman in New York dra... carbolic acid late at night in an unf... ished building, and lay down to d... When the acid burned his mouth a... throat, he repented, and staggered ... to the sidewalk, crying to passers-by ... get a doctor, that he had drunk poiso... but was sorry that he had done it, a... wanted to live. He was hurried ... a physician's office, but, in spite of t... doctor's efforts, he died there. Repen... ance often comes too late to save o... from the consequences of his folly a... sin. It ought to seem to us no less ... mentable that repentance often com... too late for us to work with God to sa... others, when we have ourselves be... saved.

One Sunday evening, after the reg... lar service at the Methodist Church ... Hempstead, L. I., the pastor conduct... a short after-meeting, in which he sa... two verses of "The Sweet By-and-By... After the service, a gentleman came ... to the pastor and said: "If you will si... the hymn 'The Sweet By-and-By' ne... Sunday evening, I will be here." Th... next Sunday evening a similar servi... was held. The pastor said that at th... request of a gentleman present, he wou... sing the hymn, "The Sweet By-and-By... After the hymn had been sung, an invitation for a... those who wished to give their hearts to the Lord Jes... Christ was given. The pastor said to the old gentleman... "And won't you, too, accept the invitation to go fo... ward?" "Certainly," said the man. All prayed fo... themselves that God, for Christ's sake, would forgiv... their sins. After the meeting, the minister asked th... old man with his tottering step (he had lost one leg whil... commanding the Union Forces at Missionary Ridge)... "May I ask your name?" "Certainly," came the reply... "Joseph Hooker." He was asked if he would come t... the regular church prayer-meeting the following Frida... evening, to relate his experiences, and to tell to other... around what a dear Saviour he had found. The genera... consented. On Tuesday evening, as General Hooke... was entering the Garden City Hotel, he fell dead fro... heart disease. On Friday he was buried. Rev. Charle... Miller, of the Hempstead Methodist Episcopal Church... officiating. The evening he was to attend the prayer... meeting he had entered through the gates into the city... "Saved alone."

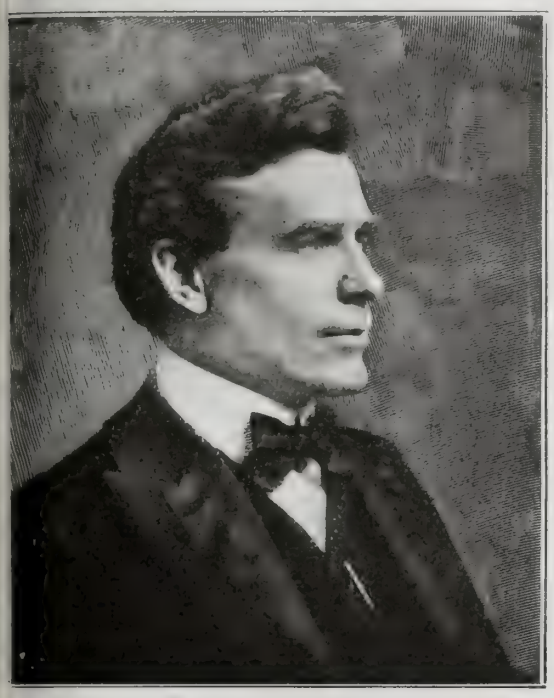
Blessings on those who heed the Bible. Because the... young Josiah had earnestly sought to obey the Bible... and to lead his people to do so, he was excepted from the... doom of his people, and judgment postponed beyond his... reign. "Because thine heart was tender, and thou didst... humble thyself before God," such was the explanation... of the favor God showed the youthful king.

* International Sunday School Lesson for August 13. Josiah and the Book of the Law. II. Chron. 34 : 14-28. Golden Text: "I will not forget thy word," Psalm 119 : 16.

ACTIVE EVANGELISM

UNDER the auspices of the American Christian Missionary Society, and the directorship of the "Department of Evangelism" (which is in the hands of Dr. H. O. Breeden of DesMoines, Chairman, and Rev. W. J. Wright, Cincinnati, Superintendent), the Disciples of Christ are doing excellent work. There are eight lines along which this department has been working for several years.

1. To maintain a Bureau of Evangelism, with the object of furnishing to the churches information concerning preaching and singing evangelists. 2. The holding of evangelistic rallies in cities for creating deeper interest, and for discussing the best methods of evangelism. 3. The compilation of evangelistic bibliography; issuing statements descriptive of the most commendable publications in the work. 4. The creation of an evangelistic literature of their own; and the stimulation of evangelistic writers with a view to the development of a deeper evangelistic spirit. 5. The organization and direction of simultaneous and union evangelistic meetings, and assistance in such efforts, where possible. 6. To conduct schools of evangelistic methods in colleges, universities, conventions, Chautauquas, etc., for training men for the work of evangelism. 7. A regular department of evangelism in the Home Missionary Magazine. 8. To raise funds for the maintenance of the work by personal appeals.



SUPERINTENDENT W. J. WRIGHT

Last winter a great campaign was organized and carried on simultaneously in all the Churches of the Disciples, in Chicago, resulting in a large ingathering of souls. A similar assault of Gospel batteries will be opened in Cincinnati in the fall. Another is planned for Pittsburg. Special meetings will be held on the Pacific Coast in September, immediately following the international Missionary Convention in August. Mr. Wright took a prominent part in the great revivals at Kansas City and Louisville last winter.

One of the best things done by the Department of Evangelism was the holding of a Summer School of Evangelism, at Chautauqua Lake, for ten days, in July. Some fifty of the ablest of pastors and evangelists in the country took part in the school. The idea of this particular summer school was to discover suitable men for the special work of evangelism, and train them in the best methods of service on the field. It is believed that a number will devote themselves to evangelistic labors as the result.

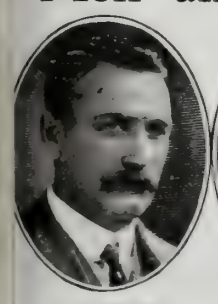
. . .

Another enterprise now going on under the same auspices, is the series of tent meetings at Marion, Ind., where three large tents are in use. Several evangelists are at work there in the cause of Christ, and thousands are hearing the Gospel who rarely hear it preached, and many are seeking the way of life and salvation.

Superintendent Wright is forty years of age, and is possessed with an all-consuming zeal to save men. He tried to stay in business for years, but the conviction grew daily that he must give himself fully to the work of the Lord. He tried school teaching, ironmill work, drumming for wholesale houses, and other employments, but his conscience would not let him rest until he gave his time and strength completely to the Lord's work. He is well educated and fully equipped for the leadership of this large and growing work, and has been made the instrument to lead many to Christ.

S. T. WILLIS.

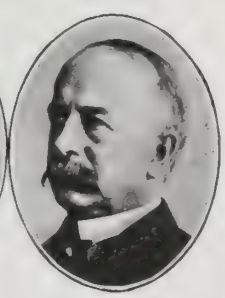
Men and Women of the Hour



J. F. STEVENS

PRINCE CHARLES

MRS. J. P. STOKES



JUDGE DILL

MISS ROSE HARRIET PASTOR, the young Jewish woman who has done so much to lighten the lives of people on the East Side, in New York City, was married July 1 at Noroton, Conn., to James Phelps Stokes, the noted young settlement worker. Both Mr. and Mrs. Stokes intend to devote their lives to work among the poor, and, after a summer in Europe, will make their home in a small tenement on the East Side.

. . .

JOHN F. STEVENS has been appointed Chief Engineer of the Panama Canal, to take the place of Mr. Wallace, who recently resigned. Mr. Stevens has been accustomed to large engineering problems, and his appointment was received by the press with almost universal approval. He will endeavor to improve the sanitary conditions under which the men on the canal will work, as well as introduce several new methods of canal construction.

JUDGE DILL, of New Jersey, who was recently appointed to the bench, caused much astonishment among his legal brethren, by giving up an income of $300,000 a year, to accept an office paying $3,000. He is a man of great determination, and having once decided that his duty lay in the direction of public service, he turned a deaf ear to the many requests that he still remain a private practitioner.

. . .

PRINCE CHARLES OF DENMARK has been offered the crown of Norway by the Norwegian Storthing. The crown has been offered to so many, and so many conflicting reports have been sent out from Christiania, that the public has begun to take information in regard to the Norwegian-Swedish crisis with great caution. However, Prince Charles has still the matter under consideration, and there seems a strong probability that he will accept. He is a naval officer of repute.

Be Careful of Your Hands!

Yellow soaps will make them red and coarse and hard; a source of never-ending humiliation and annoyance.

Ivory Soap adds to their beauty, keeps them soft and sweet and dainty.

For washing dishes, as well as for the bath and toilet, it is the only soap the self-respecting housewife will use.

There is no "free" uncombined alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

Ivory Soap
99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

BARRELS OF AIR BURNED
For Cooking and Heating. New Wonderful Stove.
HARRISON'S VALVELESS, WICKLESS, AUTOMATIC AIR AND OIL-GAS BURNER.

395 barrels of air consumed with one gallon of kerosene oil. Wood and coal cost money—air costs nothing. You can't burn air alone, but with a large spoon full of oil we use about a barrel of air.

Turn knob, touch match, fire's on. Turn again, fire's off. That's all.

Cheap, simple, easily operated, economical, absolutely safe.

NO WICK, VALVES, DIRT, ASHES, SMOKE, HOT OR FIERY KITCHENS. Summer Kitchen Work A Pleasure.

Splendid for baking, roasting, cooking, ironing, fruit canning, picnics, camping, and for heating houses, stores, rooms, etc., with Radiating Attachment. No dangerous Gasoline—no wood and coal bills. Will not explode. Lasts ten years. Handsomely made. All sizes, prices $3.00 and up. Write for free Catalogue and Special Offer. Write today for New Plan.

WORLD MANUFACTURING CO., 6032 World Building, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

BIG MONEY MAKER
$125 to $250 per month. Want Agents, Salesmen, Managers in every State and county. Men or women at home or traveling, all or part time, showing, taking orders, appointing agents. Enormous demand the year round. Customers delighted. Everybody buys. Taking the place of all other stoves. New, patented, just out. Nothing else like it. Write today for Catalogue, Special Offer, and our New Plan.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

25 designs, all steel. Handsome, durable,—Cheaper than a wood fence. Special inducements to church and cemetery [illegible]
KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO., 445 North St., Kokomo, Indiana.

GINSENG BOOK FREE
Do you realize the large amount of money that can be made in raising Ginseng? Our book, which is free, explains this carefully. On a small investment you can get big returns. While the edition lasts we will send our Ginseng Book absolutely free.
UNION SEED CO., Inc.,
Dept. 14, 104 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL
71ST YEAR. Opens Sept. 28, 1905. Day Classes, sessions 3:30 to 6 P. M. Evening Classes, 5 to 10 P.M. Degrees LL.B., LL.M. and J.D. Tuition, $100.
Address L. J. Tompkins, Sec., Washington Sq., New York

WANTED—Ladies to Take Orders for the Latest Novelties in Fine and Domestic Dress Goods. Liberal commission. Profitable work. Write for particulars, giving responsible references, to A. M. Mosely, Mill Agent, 375-377 Broadway, New York City.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

STARK FRUIT BOOK
shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro s, Louisiana, Mo

LOANED FREE
32 page pamphlets of new and suitable Sacred Songs for Camp Meetings and Evangelistic Services.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS
Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition

The Art of Knitting and Crocheting continues its universal popularity. It is a pastime, which combines profit with pleasure. A machine cannot give a garment the distinctive elegance, as will the human fingers.

To produce satisfactory results, however, only the best yarns should be used. The "Fleisher" Yarns are the acknowledged standard of excellence—uniform, lofty, elastic—the colors bright and lasting. Your dealer should carry them.

If you use The "Fleisher" Yarns, you can be sure that the working will be a pleasure and the finished result satisfactory. A garment made of The "Fleisher" Yarns will stand the test of wear and wash

Knitting Worsted	Germantown Zephyr
Dresden Saxony	Spanish Worsted
Shetland Floss	Ice Wool
Cashmere Yarn	Shetland Zephyr
Pamela Shetland	Spiral Yarn

Every skein bears the "FLEISHER" trade-mark ticket.

Free booklet, "A SHORT TALK ABOUT YARNS," mailed upon request.

"FLEISHER'S KNITTING AND CROCHETING MANUAL" mailed for four tickets from The "Fleisher" Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making all the new style and staple garments.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER
Department "B," PHILADELPHIA

5% PER YEAR Every Day on Every Dollar

A strong feature of our investment is the fact that earnings are paid for every day your money is left with us. You may start at any time—withdraw when you see fit.

WE PAY 5% PER YEAR ON YOUR SAVINGS

Earnings remitted semi-annually by check or compounded. Your money always subject to your control if required for other purposes.

OUR PATRONS ARE PROTECTED

by assets amounting to almost two million dollars. Our loans are made upon the best class of New York and Suburban Real Estate—to home buyers, who pay us interest and part of the principal each month, which is in turn re-invested.

ESTABLISHED 12 YEARS

Our business is conducted under NEW YORK BANKING DEPARTMENT SUPERVISION, by whom it is examined each year.

Our clients include many prominent clergymen, professional and business men in every State of the Union—some, doubtless, in your locality—to whom we are privileged to refer you. They heartily endorse our methods.

Full particulars with letters of endorsement sent to any one interested. WRITE TO-DAY.

Assets, . . . $1,750,000
Surplus and profits, $150,000

Industrial Savings and Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, N. Y. City

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

JUNKET

A Delicious Dessert

Junket is a healthful dessert food which delights everybody. It is pure and wholesome, easily and quickly prepared. No baking, no boiling, no eggs, no cornstarch required. It agrees with and will be retained by the most delicate of stomachs, the dessert can be bountifully eaten by children, by invalids and well people, with none but beneficial results. Fresh, ripe fruit frozen in Junket makes a dessert fit for a king.

If you have not tried Junket, send us 10c to-day and we will send enough to make 10 quarts of this delicious dessert and a booklet of dainty Junket recipes.

CHR. HANSEN'S LABORATORY
Box 3045, Little Falls, N. Y.

MIDSUMMER AT MONT-LAWN

REV. E. T. SANFORD

NEW YORK for many days has lain at the mercy of torturing sun, beating upon heated pavements and blistering winds blowing among superheated structures. Men and women have fallen by scores, victims to this almost unprecedented hot wave, which overwhelmed the city for nearly two weeks. The sufferings of children in the tenement districts were terrible, and death in many instances ended the pitiful life which pale, overworked mothers strove in vain to prolong.

It is at such a time as this, that Mont-Lawn is a veritable city of refuge, from which stretch helping hands.

It does one's heart good to see the processions of little people form in the long corridors of the Bible House, for inspection by the doctor, before being sent to Mont-Lawn. Behind a screen in one corner of the room stands the good doctor, who examines each child, to make sure that its physical condition is such as not to endanger the other little guests at the Home. This examination over, the children march to the cars which convey them to the steamer Chrystenah, for that beautiful trip up the Hudson. Ten long days and cool nights in the "Children's Paradise," seem to almost make the little folks over again. Unquestionably, during the recent hot spell, Mont-Lawn has been the means of saving many little lives.

Up at the Home the children are as merry as crickets, playing on the shady lawns, or roaming among the hills and woods nearby. On Saturday afternoon, when Dr. Klopsch visits Mont-Lawn, there are games and short foot-races, in which both boys and girls participate. On rainy days the children are assembled in the old chapel, where the ingenuity of the teachers is sometimes taxed to the utmost in devising means to keep the restless little ones amused. With story and song and indoor games the time passes pleasantly, but it is as hard work for teacher as child, and each are equally glad when out-of-doors again beckons.

Rev. Ezra T. Sanford, of the North Baptist Church, 234 West Eleventh Street, New York City—a good friend of our Fresh-Air work—delighted the children on a recent evening by giving a lecture on the "Patriots and Prophets of Palestine," illustrated by stereopticon views. He was dressed in Bedouin costume, consisting of a large camel's-hair coat, like that mentioned as the clothing of John the Baptist. His head-dress consisted of thin cloth, protecting the back of the neck, and held upon the head by large rolls of heavy camel's-hair, called by the Arabs, "akkal," and with Syrian shoes purchased, with other costumes, in Nazareth. Mr. Sanford was very pleasing in his entertainment of the children. When they gathered together in the chapel, which had been darkened in the twilight hour with large curtains, and turned on oxy-hydrogen gas, the little folks were literally fascinated by the beautiful pictures of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

Miss Collins writes that the Home is very much in need of clothing for both boys and girls. Some of the children are scantily clad, and as their clothing is often old and much worn when they arrive, ten days' wear puts it in such a condition that more is necessary in order to send them home decently clad. Send all contributions of clothing (which will be acknowledged in this paper), to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y., care Miss Helen Collins, superintendent.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD publishes a very attractively illustrated booklet, descriptive of Mont-Lawn. Send name and address, and it will be mailed to you free. Twenty-one dollars endows a bed for the whole season, insuring a ten days' vacation each to seven little ones. Three dollars will pay for one child, whose life may be saved if taken from the hot city at this time.

The Late E. C. Smith

EPENETUS C. SMITH

READERS of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will learn with regret of the death of Mr. Epenetus C. Smith, of Poughkeepsie, which occurred on the 20th of June. In March, 1904, there appeared in this paper, under the title of "Fifty Yellow Roses," an account of Mr. Smith and his wife, and of the many deeds of Christian philanthropy that marked their life's journey.

Mr. Smith was one of America's most successful business men, and always carried out the Golden Rule in his transactions and in social intercourse. He was also noted as a man of prayer; no step was taken without communing with his Maker. His faith was a living one, and his cheerful optimism in religious matters was as a tonic to the hearts of many bruised with sorrow and beset with doubt.

His home life was ideal, and his popularity with young people was unbounded. He took part in their pleasures and was the confidant of their youthful sorrows. In Poughkeepsie, where he lived, his call to a higher life has left a void that cannot well be filled.

An American Hospital

The American Hospital and Training School for Nurses, at Constantinople, Turkey, has now an American board of trustees to look after its interests. The new board met on July 6, and adopted a constitution and elected the following officers: William Ives Washburn, President; George Washburn, D.D. (for forty years president of Robert College, Constantinople), Vice-president; James S. H. Umsted, 54 Broad Street, New York, Secretary; E. H. Baker, 32 Thomas Street, New York, Treasurer.

The hospital is by no means an experiment. For several years, under the wise direction of Dr. Thomas Spees Carrington, a physician of international reputation, the institution has been doing good work, and has earned an honored place for itself among the hospitals founded in foreign lands by American enterprise and Christian philanthropy. Before Dr. Carrington undertook his great work there were but five or six hospitals for twenty millions of people, and surgery was practically unknown. The trustees wish to enlarge the work, and need from $10,000 to $15,000 for it. Any communications in regard to this Christian hospital may be addressed to the secretary at 54 Broad Street, New York City.

Called Higher

Mrs. Samuel Brodhead, one of the oldest residents of Old Forge, died at her late home, on Feb. 17, of progressive paralysis. Mrs. Brodhead joined the Methodist Episcopal Church when nineteen years of age. When she and Mr. Brodhead moved to Old Forge in 1862, she at once identified herself with the Brick Church by letter, and was a faithful member.

Died Oct. 24, 1904, William Mein, at his home, Louisville, N. Y. Mr. Mein was the son of John and Elizabeth Mein, and was born at Crailings, Scotland, Nov. 25, 1827. He came to America with his parents when thirteen years old. In 1857 he married Miss Ellen McCurry, who died Oct. 4, 1902. He leaves three daughters to mourn his loss.

On August 27th, 1904, Mrs. L. P. Wimberly, of Abbeville, Ga., was called home, and a devoted husband and two little boys are left to mourn the loss of a devoted wife and mother. Mrs. Wimberly was a lovely and gifted woman, a graduate of Wesleyan College, at Macon, Ga. She was appointed Postmistress at Abbeville, Ga., May 2d, 1902, serving in that capacity until just previous to her death. Mrs. Wimberly was a great lover of music, in which she was very proficient, a devoted Christian, and a faithful reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which she greatly prized.

Last Month of Our Reduced Price Sale

Suits and Skirts

MADE TO ORDER $4.80 to $20

One-Fifth Reduction from Former Prices.

This is the last announcement of our reduced price sale. If you wish to save money on your suit, skirt, jacket or rain coat, write now for our Catalogue of styles and Samples of the newest fabrics, so that you may make your selections and order at once.

Over 165 Summer and advance Fall styles, and 300 seasonable materials, from which to make your choice. Catalogue and Samples sent FREE to any part of U. S.

Orders Filled in One Week.

Perfect fit guaranteed or money refunded. We know we can please you.

$ 6 SUITS now	$ 4.80
$12 SUITS now	$ 9.60
$18 SUITS now	$14.40
$25 SUITS now	$20.00
$ 4 SKIRTS now	$3.20
$ 7 SKIRTS now	$5.60
$10 SKIRTS now	$8.00
$12 SKIRTS now	$9.60

NEW FALL CATALOGUE READY AUGUST 21

To any lady sending us the names of two of her friends who would like our Catalogue and Samples, we will also send FREE a copy of the new booklet: "FASHION FADS IN NEW YORK."

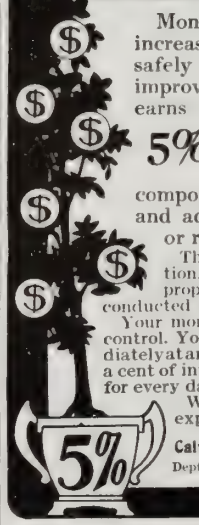
Our new Fall and Winter Catalogue will illustrate and describe the new styles we are now receiving from abroad: Suits from $6.00 to $25.00; Skirts $4.00 to $12.00; Cloaks $5.75 to $25.00 and Rain Coats $9.50 to $20.00.

If you contemplate the purchase of a Fall or Winter garment, write to-day for a selected line of samples and the new Fall Catalogue—sent FREE as soon as issued to any part of the United States. Kindly specify the colors you prefer and whether you wish samples for a Suit, Skirt, Jacket or Rain Coat. Be sure to say you wish the new FALL Catalogue.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York
Mail Orders Only. Est. 17 Yrs. No Agts. or Branches

Growing larger all the time



Money deposited with us increases rapidly. It is safely invested—loaned on improved real estate—and earns compounded semi-annually and added to your account or remitted to you.

5% interest

There is no risk or speculation. Ours is a plain business proposition which we have conducted for the past 11 years.

Your money is always under your control. You can withdraw it immediately at any time without forfeiting a cent of interest. The 5% is allowed for every day the money is here.

Write for booklet that fully explains our proposition.

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co
Dept. E, Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md

"No crooked legs for this baby."

Straight Legs

and a strong, flat back developed if the baby learns to walk with

Glascock's Baby-Walker

Endorsed by physicians as the best physical developer. In it child can sit, stand, jump or walk. "Cushioned-spring supported." Adjustable. Keeps child clean; safe. Insist upon "Glascock's"—the standard. Special sizes for cripples.

Buy of your dealer if possible, or direct, if he hasn't Glascock's Walker. Write to-day for our illustrated descriptive catalogue FREE.

Glascock Bros. Mfg. Co., 668 West Street, Muncie, Ind.

4% Write to-day for Booklet F. It explains "Safe Banking by Mail."

The Cleveland Trust Co., Cleveland, O.

ARE YOU DEAF?

We have 25 kinds of Instruments to Assist Hearing. Sent on approval. Write for Catalogue.

WM. C. WILLIS & CO., 134 S. 11th St., Philadelphia

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

Back-Door Mormon Immigration

AT ELLIS ISLAND

"YES, the most of them come from the Scandinavian countries, Norway, Sweden and Denmark," said Mr. Roman Dobler, Superintendent at Ellis Island, in answer to an inquiry by a CHRISTIAN HERALD representative. "Quite a number come from Scotland, and some from Germany and other parts of the continent; but the majority emigrate from the first mentioned countries. Formerly, when I was inspector on the New York side, and boarded the incoming steamers, I naturally came in contact with the Mormon missionaries, with their bands of converts. They were coming in greater numbers then than now, I am sure; but there is a reason for this."

On being further questioned, Mr. Dobler said that so sly and crafty were these Mormon missionaries, that they were now coming into this country through Canada in considerable numbers.

On being told about the women's war now being waged against Mormonism, and of the part THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was taking in the campaign, the gentleman expressed himself as greatly interested. He gave to the writer a copy of the "Immigration Laws and Regulations." In these laws we read that by the Act of March 3, 1903, Section 2, among the classes of aliens who shall be excluded from admission to the United States, are polygamists.

COMMISSIONER WATCHORN

"I do not think that the majority of the people brought from foreign countries have had a 'full revelation' regarding plural marriage before coming here," said the Superintendent. "That is reserved until they find themselves out in Utah and other States, where Mormondom flourishes, and where polygamy is practiced, secretly in many cases, but none the less surely. These Mormon missionaries are the craftiest and the smoothest individuals imaginable. They are always ready with an evasive reply, and when pressed further, they suddenly know nothing whatever about the matter.

"The arguments," he said, "which are used by these men to bring people into the Mormon net, are very specious, appealing directly to the thrifty people of Scotland and Scandinavia. Promises of land to till, which may be all their own; money that can be accumulated in a short time; a home in a land flowing with milk and honey—all these things appeal to industrious, honest and practical people, who eagerly swallow the bait."

"But what of the young women and girls?" was asked. "Do they have any idea of the fate awaiting them when they reach their destination?"

"Certainly not," answered Mr. Dobler. "I remember one particular instance. My attention was attracted to a young girl, who, although belonging to one of these Mormon missionary bands, seemed to be alone. I asked her if she was a Mormon, and she replied that she did not know, but she had an uncle in Utah whom she was going to visit. The girl evidently was too young and innocent to have any idea of what might befall her, and as every one of the band had sworn that they were not polygamists, I could do nothing. Still I kept the case in mind, and not very long afterward, this same girl wrote a letter to the Government, saying she had been kidnapped or lured from home, and asking for protection. This she got, and she was returned to her home."

This is only one case; but what of the many others that are never heard from? What of those who, through ignorance or fear, never let their plight be known to the outside world?

The fact that not a single immigrant has been rejected at Ellis Island during the year as a polygamist, in spite of the fact that Mormon Missionaries are actually at work abroad, points to the conclusion that these immigrants either swear to a falsehood, or that they are still untaught in this special doctrine of plural marriage. Commissioner Watchorn, upon being consulted on the subject, quite concurred in the latter inference.

"I cannot conceive," he said, "of any woman being willing to share her husband with another wife, to have a half, quarter, eighth, or sixteenth of a husband, as the case may be. They must be ignorant, these poor women and girls, who come here so confidingly to the new world, where there is such a chance for everyone who is willing to work." And the Commissioner's piercing dark eyes softened, as he spoke of the women lured through treachery and deceit lying at the bottom of this wretched traffic.

"This whole business should be rooted out of the land," he continued emphatically, "and the women can do it. It is a noble work you have engaged in, and there is no better cause under the sun. Unseating Reed Smoot is the first step in the right direction, and I congratulate THE CHRISTIAN HERALD upon its campaign. Do not let up in your efforts, until every woman has a chance to write her name as against this monstrous thing."

The following statistics, given by the Commissioner, show how many Mormons have passed through the port of New York during eleven months, ending May 31, 1905:

DEP'T OF COMMERCE AND LABOR

Manifested destinations of alien passengers arriving at the port of New York during eleven months, ending May 31, 1905:

Nevada	586
Idaho	407
Utah	737
Wyoming	740
Total	2,470

This statement is significant, in conjunction with the fact that many more of this class of immigrants are coming in at the "back door," by way of Canada. The immigrant feature is but one of the various ways in which the serpent of polygamy trails his slimy length over our land; and while honest-minded people are dreaming of security, the Mormon menace grows.

Many signed Memorials are daily coming in. Women are enlisting by thousands, under the banner which floats for the integrity of the home; but there must be hundreds and hundreds of thousands to fight this thing successfully. "The enemy never sleeps." Send for a Memorial; sign it; get your friends to sign, and to send for more copies. Do all you can to arouse women to a sense of the fact that this is a woman's war for women. There is but one side to the question, it does not admit of argument. Reed Smoot must not be allowed to retain his seat in the Senate of the United States, and his removal will be the first step toward crushing the treasonable Mormon hierarchy, and wiping the stain of polygamy from our fair country, and thus saving thousands of women from is Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. Scientifically prepared as an infant food it is the nearest approach to Mother's Milk. Send for Baby's Diary, a valuable booklet for Mothers, 108 Hudson Street, New York.

The Nursery's Friend

TYPES OF IMMIGRANTS

wretchedness, none the less awful because entered into voluntarily, snared through the most sacred of sentiments.

"I DESS DEY FORDET"

"PUT ice on her head," said the doctor,
"Move quick, don't delay, or she'll die:
Bring some milk at the same time, step lively,
I doubt we can save her, we'll try!

"You poor, puny, starved little baby,
No wonder the heat laid you low!
How you're living at all in such weather,
The angels above only know."

"No ice and no milk," sobbed the mother,
"No money, no food in the house:
Don't tell me God cares for His loved ones;
What we have wouldn't feed e'en a mouse.

"If there were a God, he'd send someone
To save you from starving, my pet."
"Don't ky, mamma, dear," said the baby:
"He told 'em—I dess dey fordet!"

CYNTHIA WESTOVER ALDEN.

JELL-O ICE CREAM POWDER

MADE THIS IN TEN MINUTES

DO YOU LIKE ICE CREAM?

You can make and freeze it yourself in ten minutes with JELL-O ICE CREAM Powder. Everything but the ice in the package. No heating, no fussing, no trouble. Simply stir the contents of one package into a quart of milk and freeze. That's all. This makes 2 quarts of the best Ice Cream in the world. Costs about 1c per plate. Approved by Pure Food Commissioners. Highest Award at St. Louis Exposition. If your grocer can't supply you send us his name and 25c. for two packages, enough for a gallon.

Four kinds: Vanilla, Chocolate, Strawberry and Unflavored.

Send for new illustrated recipe book just issued, Free.

THE GENESEE PURE FOOD CO., Le Roy, N. Y.

$20 to $50 WEEKLY made selling this NEW INVENTION, the STANDARD SELF-Filling Fountain PEN

Self-Cleaning

No ink dropper. No smeared fingers. No twisted rubber. No complication.

$178.90 earned in 32 days by retired business man in Va.
$35.80 for a month's spare time by G. Jos. Lovett, of Mass.
$5.40 made in first two hours by Mrs. Mary M. Lennon, of Mich.

Our free lessons in successful salesmanship make experience unnecessary. We send all particulars and figures to prove above and other records; write today.

Fills Itself instantly at any ink well, THIS WAY.

Energetic Agents and District Managers Wanted
Standard Pen Co., 706 Baker Bld., Toledo, O.

$5.80 A DAY is the average salary made by agents selling our COOKER and line of KITCHEN SPECIALTIES. Free samples. Write at once.
H. S. ROBINSON, 899 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, Ohio

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

Low Rates
West and Northwest
Chicago & North-Western Railway.

The following rates and dates of sale are for strictly first-class round-trip tickets from Chicago, with liberal time limits.

$67.50 To San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego and return on certain specified dates throughout the Summer.

$56.50 To Portland and Puget Sound Points and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$65.00 To Yellowstone Park and return, including stage transportation ($85.00 also includes hotel accommodations in the park). Daily until September 16.

$30.00 To Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colo., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$25.00 To Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colo., and return. Daily August 12 to 14, inclusive.

$20.00 To Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colo., and return. Daily August 30 to September 4, inclusive.

$27.50 To Hot Springs, S. D., and return. $30.70 Deadwood and Lead and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$20.00 To Duluth, Superior and Ashland and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$17.25 To Marquette, Mich., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$16.00 To St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

First-Class Personally Conducted Tours to Portland, California, Utah, Yellowstone Park and Colorado, all expenses included, leave Chicago July 27 and August 10.

CORRESPONDINGLY LOW RATES ARE IN EFFECT FROM ALL POINTS.

For further particulars address

NW572 W. B. KNISKERN, Passenger Traffic Manager, CHICAGO, ILL.

EVER TREAT YOU SO?

Coffee Acts the Jonah and Will Come up.

A clergyman who pursues his noble calling in a country parish in Iowa, tells of his coffee experience:

"My wife and I used coffee regularly for breakfast, frequently for dinner and occasionally for supper—always the very best quality—package coffee never could find a place on our table.

"In the spring of 1896 my wife was taken with violent vomiting, which we had great difficulty in stopping.

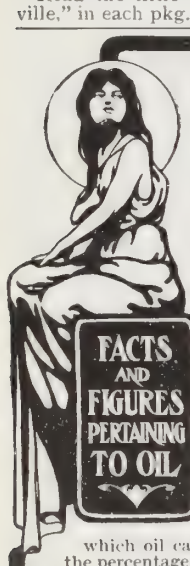
"It seemed to come from coffee drinking, but we could not decide.

"In the following July, however, she was attacked a second time by vomiting. I was away from home filling an appointment, at the time, and on my return I found her very low; she had literally vomited herself almost to death, and it took some days to quiet the trouble and restore her stomach.

"I had also experienced the same trouble, but not so violently, and had relieved it each time by a resort to medicine.

"But my wife's second attack satisfied me that the use of coffee was at the bottom of our troubles, and so we stopped it forthwith and took on Postum Food Coffee. The old symptoms of disease disappeared and during the 9 years that we have been using Postum instead of coffee we have never had a recurrence of the vomiting. We never weary of Postum, to which we know we owe our good health. This is a simple statement of facts." Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.



Valuable Information Pertaining to Oil

A new, Free, copyrighted book, by Otto G. Tague, Editor of THE OIL NEWS, the recognized oil organ, will be mailed to any address.

This book gives detailed information that all persons interested in oil should have. It tells how leases are obtained; how companies should be organized; how companies in which stockholders lost money during the past three years were organized and mismanaged; how money was lost; the only manner in which oil can be produced profitably; the percentage of profits; gives data as to cost of obtaining leases, drilling wells and operating same—in fact, contains reliable information that leaves the reader fully posted on the production of petroleum and the profits to be made therefrom.

This Book is Free for the Asking

A postal card will bring it. It offers nothing for sale, but is given as a souvenir for the purpose of increasing the patronage of THE OIL NEWS.

OTTO G. TAGUE, Editor The Oil News
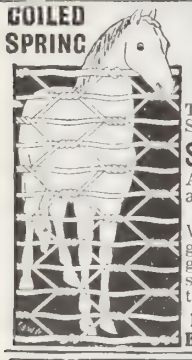
319 Opera House Block, Lima, O., U. S. A.

COILED SPRING



FENCE

That is Horse High, Bull Strong, Pig-chicken tight.

SOLD DIRECT TO YOU

At less than dealers' price and we pay the Freight.

Our Catalogue tells how Wire is made, how Wire is galvanized,—why some is good and some bad. You should have this information. Write for Catalogue.

KITSELMAN BROTHERS,
Box 297, Muncie Indiana

FREE

Cram's Atlas of the World, containing a complete series of 106 Newly Engraved and Colored Maps, covering every portion of the globe, including separate maps of every state and territory in the Union, and special maps of our new possessions of Porto Rico, Philippines, etc. It also contains a history of the United States with illustrations of the interior and exterior of the Capitol, and other public buildings of Washington, D. C., together with half-tone photographs of all the Presidents of the United States from Washington to Roosevelt, and biographical sketches of each. Send 25 cents to cover postage and mailing of TIMELY TOPICS for one year and get this fine Atlas FREE. TIMELY TOPICS is a handsomely illustrated, high-class publication, with cover lithographed in five colors. Sample copy free. Write to-day. Address: TIMELY TOPICS, Pittsburgh, Pa.

RECLAIMING THE PRISONERS

WHILE a great many people are busy on their farms, or enjoying a well-earned vacation at the mountains or seashore, the work of the Prison-Gate Mission still goes on in New York City. Every morning the Superintendent or his assistant meets the ex-prisoners as they come from the penal institutions. The Superintendent also visits Sing Sing Prison on certain days, where he advises with the men about to be discharged.

During the past few months between seven and eight hundred discharged prisoners were met at the various prison gates. The majority of these men were friendless, homeless and penniless. The Prison-Gate Mission fed, sheltered and found employment for a large number of them.

"Not long since," said Superintendent Munro, "an ex-convict accosted me as I walked down the gravel-path from the gate of the New York Penitentiary. I extended my hand to him and hoped that, by God's help, he might have a better future. As I spoke of his old home tears came into his eyes. When he found his tongue he said, 'Chaplain, I am down and out today and have not a friend in the world, nor do I know where to turn; but I am thankful for your kind words to me this morning. Just give me one chance. I want to be a man again.'

"When we remember that the great majority of those who come from prison cherish the best intentions of living a correct life, but are handicapped from the start by the want of real friends, food, shelter and some kind of employment, we can readily see the importance of such an institution as the Prison-Gate Mission, and what an immense help it can be to these unfortunates.

"The following quartette of sample cases shows what the Prison-Gate Mission has been doing during the past few weeks for the ex-prisoner. Not only have we fed and sheltered ex-prisoners, besides finding them employment, but several of them are now endeavoring to live earnest Christian lives:

"J. J. D. came to us about five weeks ago. We met him as he came out of prison. When first approached he was sarcastic and surly. It would take too long to tell the story of his transformation and how he became a changed man, but we fed him, sheltered him, gave him clothing to make him look respectable, and with the grace of God in his heart, he started out to earn a living by peddling. Since then he has gone to a neighboring State to work, where he is doing well. Before he left us he gave evidence of having been genuinely converted.

"A. B. is a carpenter. He has spent several years behind prison bars for various offenses; he has led a checkered career in crime. Drink has been his ruin. He also has been restored, by God's help, through the Prison-Gate Mission.

"M. M. has served six terms in prison during the past eighteen years. He is young as yet (only 38 years of age), but old in crime. During his last imprisonment, he sent for me and informed me that he had made up his mind to live a better life. After his discharge he came to the Mission rooms, where we prayed for him and had him pray for himself. This man's conversion and transformation alone are worth all the money spent in carrying on the work of the Prison-Gate Mission from its organization.

"The last of the four is M. F., an ex-professional man, of fine education, who had fallen some years ago through drunkenness. He has led a wild career, more as prodigal than criminal, but has been in prison several times. For several years he has been going deeper in the bitterness and misery of a backslider's life. After coming out of prison we invited him to the Mission rooms, where we talked to him of his evil life and his return to God as the first step toward reclamation. He has returned, thank God! and is now living a humble life of prayer."

Contributions in aid of the Prison-Gate Mission's work may be sent to the Treasurer, Andrew A. Knowles, Esq., 33 Wall Street, New York, who will gratefully acknowledge the same, or to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any reader wishing information about the Mission should address the Superintendent, Rev. John J. Munro, 150 Baxter Street, New York.

Character Building*

WHAT is the way of salvation? What must a man do to inherit eternal life? It is astonishing that nineteen centuries after Christ came to reveal the way of life, men are still asking these questions. Still more astonishing is it that so many and different answers are given to them. One teacher gives the answer that Paul gave to the Philippian jailer, and so has the merit of being scriptural. But it not infrequently happens that the inquirer is mystified by being told to believe on Christ and he will be saved, as the jailer would have been if Paul had told him no more than this. Another teacher will tell him he must read the Bible, be regular at the Sunday School services, join a church and cultivate the habit of prayer. All these are very good things, highly commendable, and ought to be practised more than they are, but they are not the way of salvation.

The faith that Paul prescribed to the jailer is the beginning of the new life. The teacher who urges that step, is unquestionably right, if he tells what the next steps must be. Many a man has said: "I believe in Christ, in his divinity, in his atonement and in his resurrection; but I do not find that such belief affects me. Am I entitled to be considered a Christian?" In some revival meetings, men are urged to accept Christ; and, they say, and honestly believe, that they do, expecting that some mystical change will take place in them. When they find that they are the same kind of men, with the same tastes and impulses, they are disappointed, and rashly conclude that religion is not the power that it professes to be.

The essential thing is character. Suppose this man, who has accepted Christ, as he was urged to do, happened to have an intense passion to become a better man. Not so much terrified at the prospect of eternal punishment, or anxious for eternal happiness, as to become a better man here and now. He has tried various philosophic methods, but finds none satisfactory. They hold him while their novelty lasts, but fail him in his time of need. Now, such a man in accepting Christ, declares I believe in Christ, with a new meaning in his words. It is as if a prisoner on trial for his life should choose a lawyer, saying, I believe in him and will put my case in his hands. Or, if a man stricken with a dangerous disease, should choose a physician and trust him to save him. Or, if a loving father, intensely anxious for the welfare of an only son, should choose a teacher for him and give the boy entirely into his hands. That father must have studied the teacher's character and have faith in him, before he confides to him the son who is dearer to him than life. It is no empty form of words, in any of these cases, when the declaration is made, "I believe in him." Like these and deeper, more heartfelt, is the faith that says, "I believe in Christ."

This is faith that leads to change of character. The subject knows that he cannot change himself. He has tried and failed. He studies Christ's methods, strives to understand his principles and purposes. Reads all that is recorded of him, studies his teaching, follows his example. His prayers are no longer formal, perfunctory utterances. They are conversations with Christ. He asks Christ to show him how to act and what is his duty. Asks him to make his teaching plain to him. He does not now waste his strength struggling against sin; he seeks holiness and the positive expels the negative. Gradually, by an invariable law of our nature, he grows like the Being he trusts and admires. He dwells upon the character of Christ until he becomes Christ-like. That is how character is built up, and no other method ever produces that result.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for Aug. 13. II Pet.1-11; I Cor.9:19-22; Prov. 15:13-15.

MELLIN'S For the Baby FOOD

Constipation and many other infantile disorders are the results of improper feeding. Give your baby Mellin's Food and see how quickly infantile troubles disappear. Send for our book "The Care & Feeding of Infants" and we will send it with a sample of Mellin's Food free of charge.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

REVERSIBLE Linene Collars and Cuffs

Have You Worn Them?

Not "celluloid," not "paper collars"; but made of fine cloth, exactly resemble fashionable linen goods and cost of dealers, for box of ten. 25c. (2½c. each)

No Washing or Ironing

When soiled, discard. By mail, 10 collars or 5 pairs of cuffs, 30c. Sample Collar or Pair Cuffs for 6c. in U. S. stamps. Give size and style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. P, BOSTON, MASS.

BICYCLES ON TRIA

for 10 days. We ship on a proval to anyone without a cent depos
Finest guaranteed 1905 Models with Coaster-Brakes & Puncture-Proof Tir
1903 & 1904 Models of best makes..... $7 to $1
500 Second-Hand Wheel
All makes & Models good as new $3 to $
RIDER AGENTS WANTED each town at good pay. Write at once f
Special Offer on sample bicycle.
TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H-71 CHICAG

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label.

Wood Rollers. Tin Rollers.

BOMOSA BEST GROWN COFFEE

BIG INCOMES

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK

for getting orders for our Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. For full particulars and Special Terms address at once Mr. P. B., care of

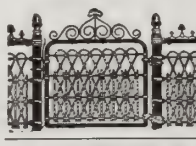
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289. 31-33 Vesey St., New York



LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches. Address

COILED SPRING FENCE CO.
Box D Winchester, Ind.

NEWTON'S Heave, Cough, Distemper and Indigestion Remedy

A veterinary specific for wind, throat and stomach troubles. STRONG RECOMMENDS. $1.00 per can, of dealers, or Express prepaid.

THE NEWTON REMEDY CO.,
TOLEDO, OHIO.

Four Little Bee Books FREE

All intensely interesting and helpful in a hundred different ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-day.

A. I. ROOT COMPANY. Medina, Ohio

WANTED A few live, energetic persons to become associated with us. A rare chance. Write for particulars. Address,

THE NEW JERSEY MFG. CO. Jersey City, N. J. (Inc. 1890).

"DE LIL BRACK SHEEP"

This negro version of the parable of the "Ninety and Nine" was recited with much pathos by Mrs Charles M. Alexander, at one of the great meetings of the Torrey-Alexander Mission, in the Albert Hall, London.

DE lil brack sheep, don strayed away,
Don los in de win and de rain;
An de Shepherd, he say, "O hirelin,
Go, find my sheep again."
But the hirelin frown - "O Shepherd,
Dat sheep am brack an bad."
But de Shepherd, he smile, like de lil brack sheep
Cuz the onliest lamb he had.

An he say, "O hirelin, hasten,
Cor de win and de rain am col:
An dat lil brack sheep am lonesom,
Out dar so far from de fol."
But hirelin frown, "O Shepherd,
Dat sheep am ol and gray."
But de Shepherd, he smile, like de lil brack sheep,
Cuz fair as de break ob day!

An he say, "O hirelin, hasten,
Go, here am de ninety-an-nine;
But dar, way off from de sheep-fol, dat lil brack sheep of mine."
An de hirelin frown, "O Shepherd,
De res' ob de sheep am here."
But de Shepherd, he smile, like de lil brack sheep,
He hol it de mostest dear.

An de Shepherd go out in de darkness,
Where de night was col and bleak;
An dat lil brack sheep, he find it,
An lay it agains his cheek.
An de hirelin frown, "O Shepherd,
Don' bring dat sheep to me."
But de Shepherd, he smile, and he hol it close,
Cuz . . . dat lil brack sheep . . . wuz . . . me!

A DOCILE KING

By Mrs. M. Baxter

WHILE the repairs to the Temple were proceeding in the time of Josiah (II Chron. 34: 14), Hilkiah, Jeremiah's father, the last high priest before the destruction of the Temple, made a great discovery. Hilkiah the priest found a book of the law of the Lord given by Moses—i. e., the Pentateuch, or five books of Moses.* Could it be that the Word of God had been so neglected that no copy of it could be found? Had God, in his wondrous grace, made known his will to men, and they had become so callous to it that no copy was forthcoming? Of course there was no printing in those days, but the command of God had been that when a king of the children of Israel should sit upon the throne of his kingdom, he should write for himself a copy of the Pentateuch. "He shall write him a copy of this law in a book, out of that which is before the priests and Levites; and it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life, that he may learn to fear the Lord his God, to keep all the words of the law and these statutes to do them; that his heart be not lifted up above his brethren . . . to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom, he and his children, in the midst of Israel" (Deut. 17: 18-20). There should have been as many copies of the Pentateuch as there had been kings.

How many of the kings of Israel and Judah really obeyed this commandment does not transpire. When Saul was chosen king, Samuel "told the people the manner of the kingdom, and wrote it in a book, and laid it up before the Lord" (I Sam. 10:25). No doubt this "manner of the kingdom" referred partly to this quotation. We cannot doubt that David and Solomon were both obedient to his command; but Rehoboam and many of the kings of Judah, and Jeroboam and his successors on the throne of Israel in Samaria, probably, to a man, disobeyed it. Whether any of the good kings of Israel obeyed it, we know not. But it would seem that when Josiah came to the throne, not only was the practice discontinued, but absolutely unknown; for the written Word of God was lost. How was this? Evidently the ark which contained the tables of the law had been carried away from the holy of holies (II. Chron. 35: 3,) and the Levites had become corrupt, so that the Word of God was not taught. It had ceased to be the standard for life and teaching, and had fallen into disuse. When respect for God's revealed Word ceases, there remains no authority to which appeal can be made. No wonder that Judah became corrupt.

The discovery of the Word of God had a great effect upon Jeremiah. Hilkiah delivered the book to Shaphan the scribe, who took it to the king and read it before him. And Josiah recognized the words as a message from God; he was much moved, and rent his clothes. He took what God said to heart, and at once sought to get into direct communion with God. If the reading of God's Word does not bring us to speak with him and to wait upon him for the answer, we do not read it aright. It cannot be like another book. It is spirit and life (John 6: 63). It is very touching that a deputation from the king headed by the high priest waited upon no learned scribe, but upon a simple woman whom God had made a prophetess—Huldah, the wife of Shallum, Jeremiah's uncle (Jer. 32: 7).

Neither the high priest nor the prophet Jeremiah despised women's ministry; they knew that neither of them were so intimately acquainted with the mind of God as this godly matron, who, with all her household cares, had a heart to listen to God.

*Probably only the Book of Deuteronomy.—Ed.

Answered Prayers

S. G., Pa. "I take all my trouble to Jesus, great and small; and often he has answered my prayers."

H. R. B., Kansas. "I have peace and blessedness such as I never dreamed of having in this world. Truly God does answer prayer."

Edith M., Wisconsin. "My heart overflows with gratitude for the wonderful changes that have taken place, and are still taking place in my life, in answer to prayer."

Mrs. H. A. C., California. "A member of my family has been very ill; underwent a very serious operation, and is on the way to health again. My testimony may help some one; I trust so."

Mrs. Alice B., Can. "I wish to thank God for answering my prayer. My husband was sick, and I prayed to God to make him better. He is now quite well and at work once more."

Mrs. A. S., Mich. "I was in trouble and I prayed to God to help me, and my prayer was answered. With no one on earth to help me but him. I hope others will trust him, and he will sustain them."

B. B. B.

Bitter, Black, Bile and how Right Food Corrects It.

Biliousness, from incorrect food, opens the way for an outfit of derangements of not only the body but the mind as well.

The world is a dark or gloomy place to the victim, whether millionaire or mendicant.

The wife of the head of a great insurance office in an Eastern city, was relieved completely, of this wretched affliction by the use of Grape-Nuts. She says:

"For years I was a constant sufferer from biliousness and extreme constipation and I suffered from the most dreadful headaches once a week, which sometimes lasted 3 or 4 days at a time. Grape-Nuts food came to my notice about 5 years ago. I liked it from the first and begun to use it because I liked it, without any thought that it might help my health. To my surprise I noted that after a short time all my ailments began to decrease, and they gradually but surely disappeared. I am now, and have been for years, completely free from them and enjoy perfect health.

"Everyone in my house now eats Grape-Nuts regularly, even my little two-year-old girl likes it with her Postum Coffee (another thing we are never without) and prefers it to any other cereal. It pulled her through a difficult period of teething during the hot weather—she never refused Grape-Nuts when other food could not tempt her to eat. It is the first food I intend to give to my baby boy when I wean him.

"My husband eats more Grape-Nuts food at every meal than of any other one dish. He says it never palls on him, and he finds that it regulates his bowels perfectly." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek. Mich.

There's a reason.

Read the little book "The Road to Wellville" in each pkg.

Wheel Chairs

We make a complete line of modern Rolling Chairs for adults and infants, and sell direct at WHOLESALE PRICES. 75 styles to select from. We pay freight and sell on

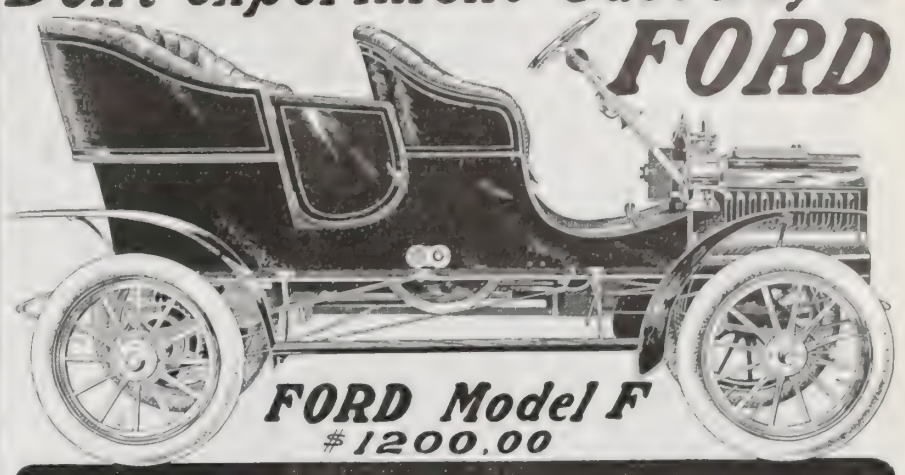
30 DAYS TRIAL.

Liberal discounts allowed to all sending for FREE Catalogue NOW.

GORDON MFG. CO. 526 Madison Ave., Toledo, O

AGENTS OUTFIT FREE. Easy-sweep Dust Pan. Handled with foot; dirt emptied without hitting. Large Catalog very latest household articles, rapid sellers. Richardson Mfg. Co., Dept. 6, Bath, N.Y.

Don't experiment-Just buy a FORD



FORD Model F
$1200.00

Get a demonstration of it's power -
It's Hill Climbing Power-that's real power, in comparison with other cars costing twice as much

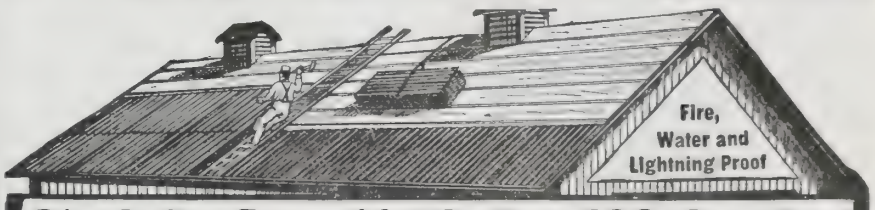
Big enough for a comfortable Touring Car, handy enough for a Runabout, seats five people.

Has big tires, side entrance tonneau, full elliptic springs and a double opposed motor that takes hills on the high gear like a $5000 car. Light weight and excellence of material and workmanship, features of all Ford cars, are especially evidenced in Model F.

Write for catalog containing full description of all our models.

Ford Motor Company, Detroit, Mich.

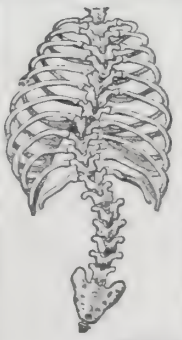
Members American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association, Chicago.
Canadian Trade supplied by the Ford Motor Co. of Canada, Ltd., Walkerville, Ont.



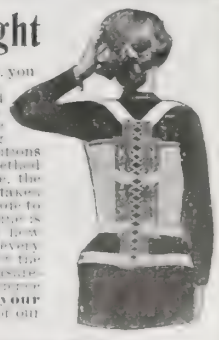
Steel Roofing, $1.50 Per 100 Sq. Feet

Painted red both sides; most durable and economical covering for roofing, siding or ceiling, for barns sheds, houses, stores, churches, cribs, poultry houses, etc.; easier to lay and cheaper than any other material; no experience necessary to lay it—a hammer or hatchet the only tools you need. At this price WE PAY THE FREIGHT to all points east of Colorado, excepting Oklahoma, Texas and Indian Territory. At this price we furnish our No. 15 semi-hardened flat steel roofing, sheets 24 inches by 24 inches. At $1.60 this same material corrugated as shown in illustration, or in "V" crimped, or standing seam. At 50 cents per square advance over above prices we will furnish this material in 6 and 8 feet long; $2.25 for brick siding or beaded ceiling or siding. Send us your order for immediate shipment. Time will prove its enduring quality. It withstands the elements the best of all coverings. Ask for further particulars. WRITE FOR FREE CATALOGUE NO. A. M. 373 on building material, wire, pipe, plumbing material, furniture, household goods, clothing, etc. We buy at SHERIFFS' AND RECEIVERS' SALES. 100,000,000 feet of lumber from the World's Fair.

CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO., 35th and Iron Sts., CHICAGO, ILL.



Crooked Spines Made Straight



If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble, you can be relieved in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who relieved himself of spinal curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. The scientific and medical world is amazed at the work being effected. Noted physicians in prominent medical institutions and in private practice are endorsing it. The Sheridal Method relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is straightened and strengthened, and soreness taken out of the back, the cartilage between the vertebrae is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed and the spine is straightened. There is relief from the first, no matter how long it has existed. Write us at once for free book. We have agents in every State in the Union. Hundreds of testimonials from all over the world. Don't give up hope if you have tried other methods and failed completely. There is no need to be deformed any longer. We guarantee satisfaction, or refund your money at the end of thirty days' trial. Write for our new book giving full information and references.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 207 Eighth St., Jamestown, N. Y.

"Good wives grow fair in the light of their works," especially if they use

SAPOLIO

PLEASANTVILLE TERRACE

Atlantic City's New Suburb

A Few of the Cottages Along the Reading R.R. Note the High Ground

EVERY word of this advertisement will interest the ambitious person who wants to get ahead in the world and gain independence with declining years. It points the way to wise investment and a comfortable fortune by showing you how to invest your savings—as little as $1 at a time—where they will be absolutely safe, and where they will grow into large profits.

Built and Occupied by an Atlantic City Investor

Hundreds of people who acted on this advice have already nearly doubled their money. Pleasantville Terrace Unquestionably the Greatest Real Estate Investment Opportunity Now Available Anywhere. No other subu

Is Growing into Fortunes

Summer Home of a Washington Family

so rapidly, because there is not another piece of ground in the United States as desirably located, with so many natural advantages in favor of rapid growth.

Franklin P. Stoy, Mayor of Atlantic City, says: "I regard Pleasantville Terrace as the natural suburb of Atlantic City."

11 minutes from the great Atlantic City Boardwalk on the main line of the Reading R.R. (see time-table).

Fifty-five feet higher than Atlantic City—the only desirable high ground suitable for building, in or near Atlantic City. Not a bit of swamp-land on the property—no malaria. In short, Pleasantville Terrace is the place that is going to make fortunes for those who have the foresight to invest there now, just

Building Operations are Under Way in Every Section

Like Atlantic City Has Made Millionaires

Residence of a Southern Family of thoughtful men, who bought tracts of the "barren island" that has since become the "Queen City of the Coast."

We bought this tract before the present rise in values and laid out Pleasantville Terrace; otherwise, we could not offer building lots 25x100 feet at from $25 to $55 (according to location), payable in easy weekly or monthly amounts, as little as $1 weekly.

We definitely guarantee continuously increasing values and insure successful development of Pleasantville Terrace by helping lot owners to build. Note

The Cosy Corner Home of a Philadelphian photographs of houses already built and under way

Title is guaranteed. No mortgages. No taxes unti 1906. No charge for deed. If you die before lot is paid we issue deed to your heirs without further payments

Whether you wish to buy for a home near th country's greatest playground, or for investment, by al means investigate this proposition. Write to the mai office for free illustrated booklet and maps. Do i to-day, before this opportunity escapes you.

Next time you are in Atlantic City you can investigate the property. We run free excursions at frequent intervals from Atlantic City, to enable lot owners to see improvements.

Pleased Investors, All Over the World, Endorse Pleasantville Terrace

(Extracts from Letters on File in my Office)

From a Missionary in Tenma, Nara, Japan

It gives me pleasure to testify to the promptness, courtesy and entirely satisfactory manner which has characterized all the business relations I have sustained with the Atlantic City Estate Company, and of my implicit confidence in their integrity.

From Basalt, Colorado

One of the satisfactory things of life is the feeling of having done some one thing well.

I believe that the one thing that I have done well is the investment I made at Pleasantville Terrace.

I certainly have no other investment I consider in any way near as good.

From Regina, N. W. T., Canada

Enclosed find check. I am well acquainted with Pleasantville Terrace, and I know that it is a first-class investment. Many thanks for your good selection. Thanking you for your courtesy and promptness, I remain.

From Atlantic City, N. J.

I own several lots at Pleasantville Terrace, and am familiar with that locality. The land is high and desirable, the streets graded and graveled and considerable building improvements made. The place is readily accessible.

Washington Woman Receives Free Deed

I want to thank you for the courteous fulfillment of your promise of issuing free deed.

I understand there had only been paid on this account $12.50, and I cannot help but express my appreciation for the prompt and courteous manner in which you fulfilled your promise.

From Brattleboro, Vermont

I think there is a promising future for Pleasantville Terrace, and with the improvements the Company are making it will be an ideal town. We intend to build there as soon as opportunity permits.

From Oakland, California

I have been watching investments of various forms for a number of years, have noted the collapse of some "get-rick-quick" concerns, and am more than ever confirmed in my belief that the best possible investment for a man to-day is real estate, and that the best real estate investment is Pleasantville Terrace.

From Philadelphia, Pa.

I made the most thorough kind of investigation before I bought land at Pleasantville Terrace to satisfy myself that things were as you claimed. I find that you have more than fulfilled your promises and am very glad to recommend you to any one contemplating an investment.

ATLANTIC CITY ESTATE CO.

VICTOR J. HUMBRECHT, President

Main Office: 1001 Drexel Building, Philadelphia, Pa

Atlantic City Office: 937 Boardwalk (Opposite Steel Pier)

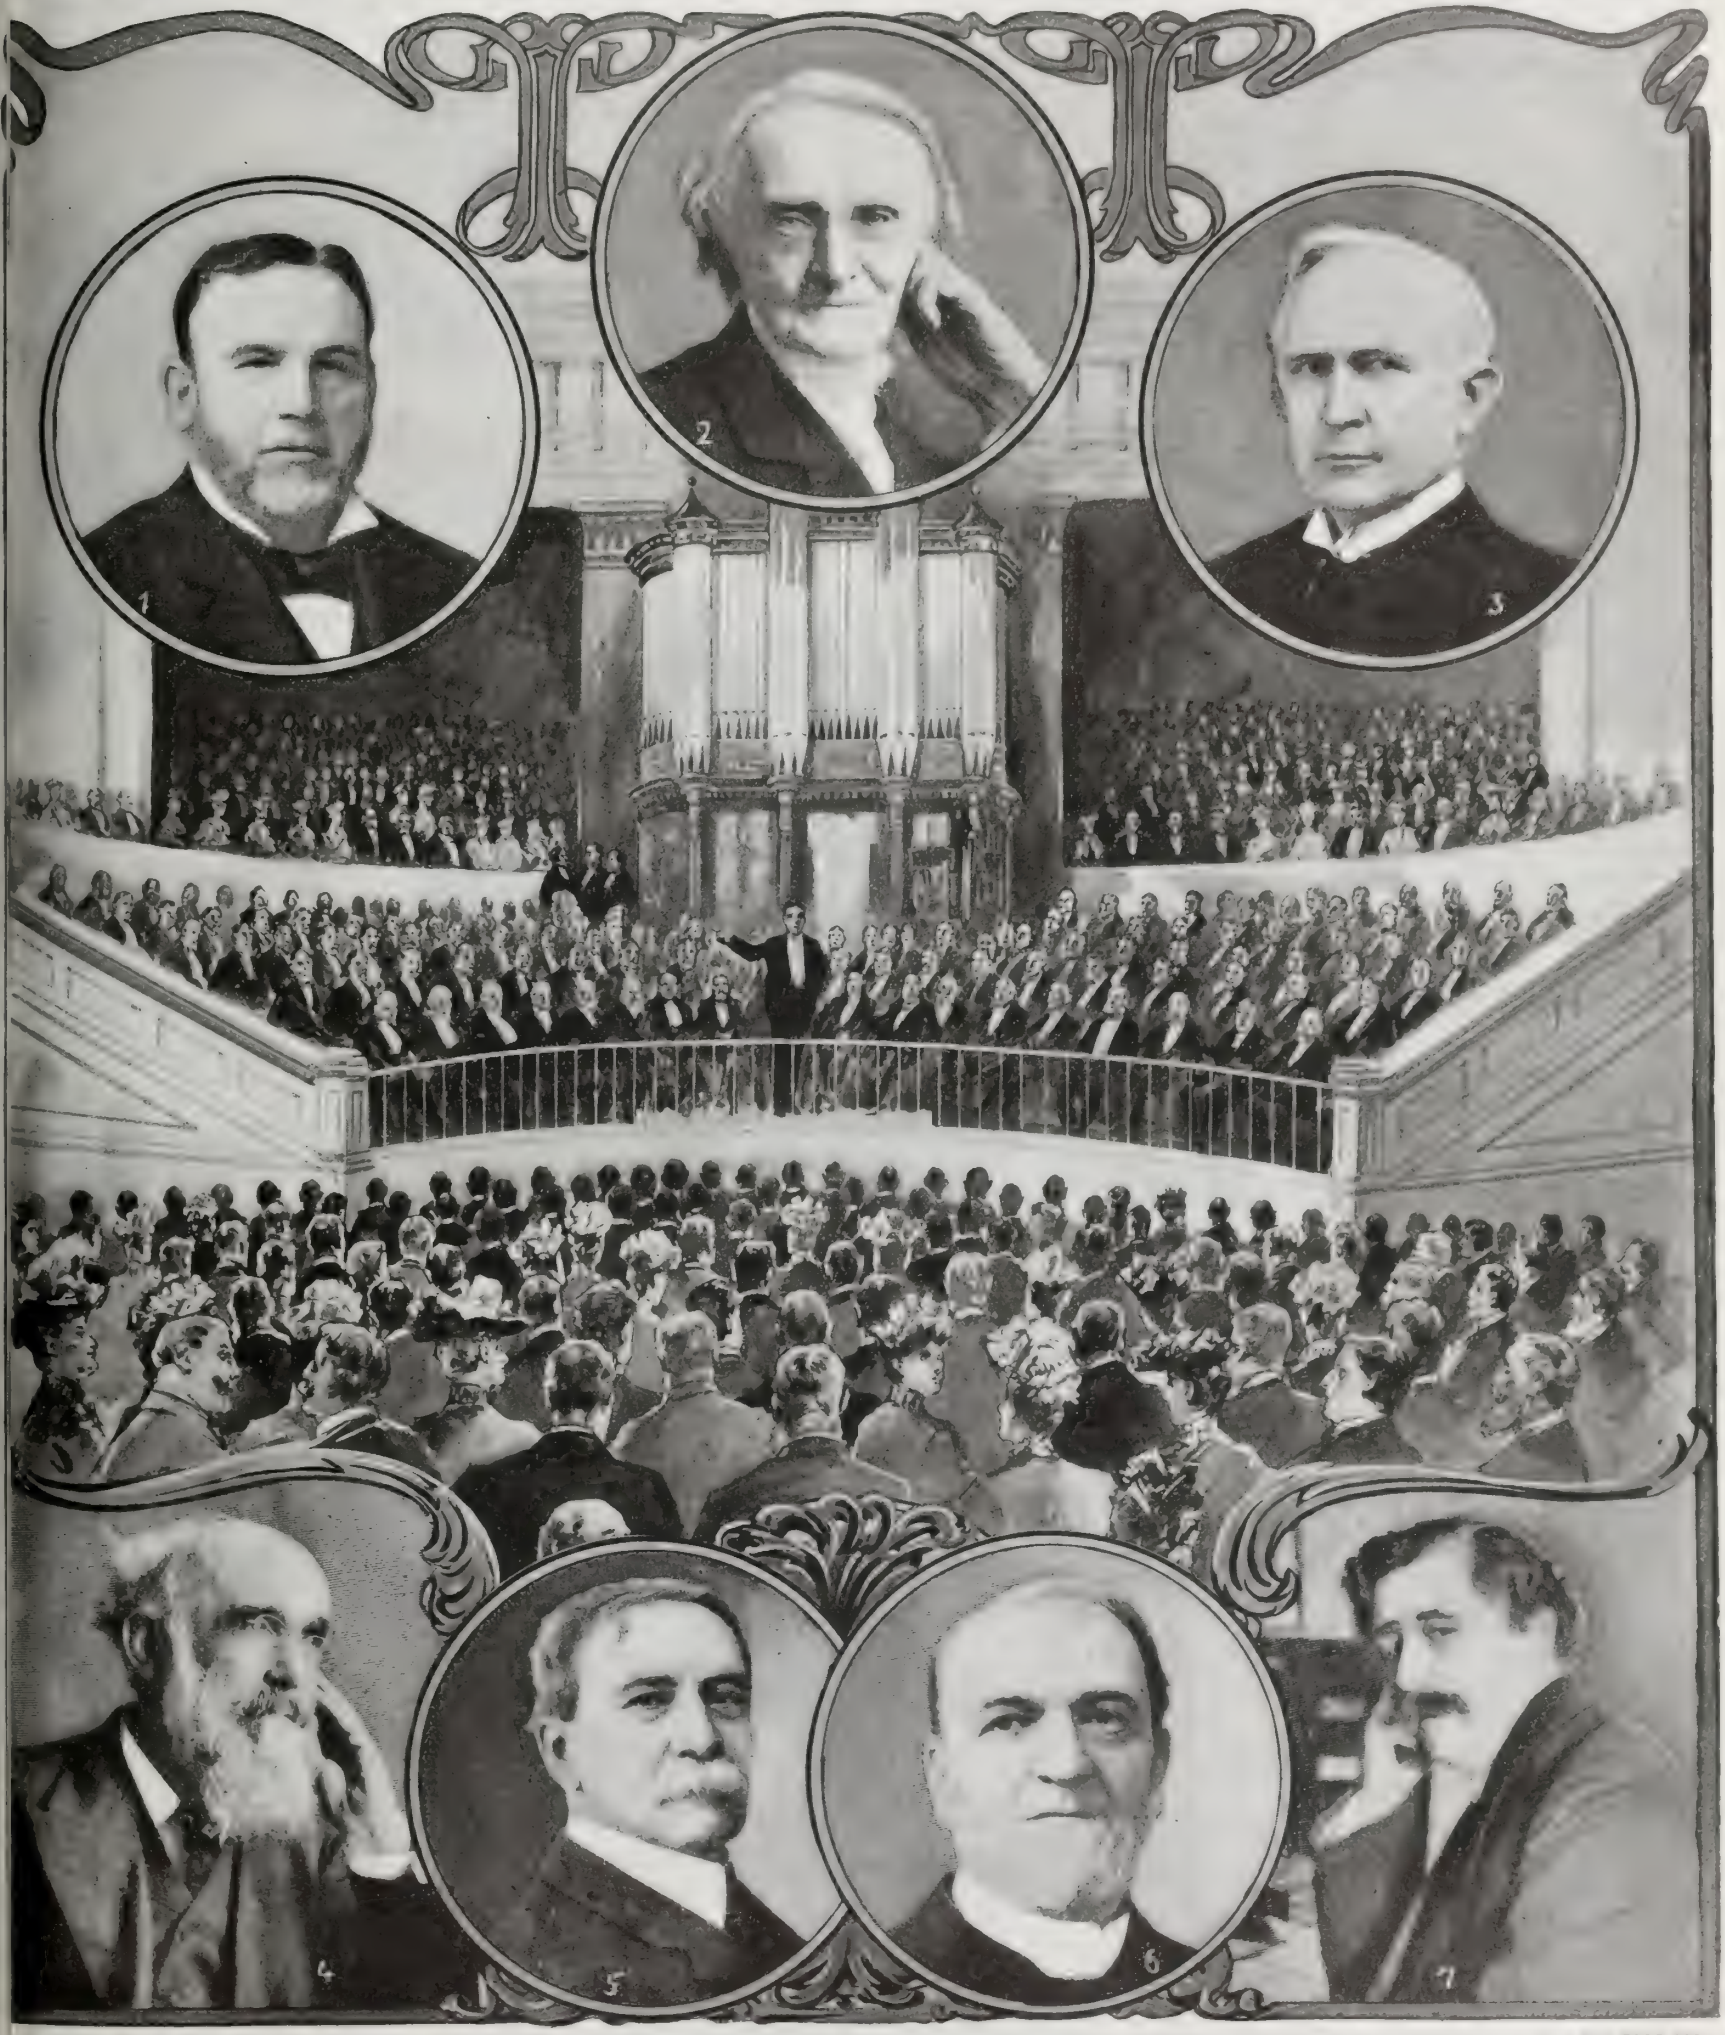
CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, AUG. 9, 1905

VOL. 28—NO. 32. PRICE FIVE CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Copyright, 1905, by Louis Klopsch



SEE PAGE 669

THE WORLD'S CONGRESS OF BAPTISTS, AT EXETER HALL, LONDON

1. JUDGE WILLIS, K. C., President of the Union. 2. REV. ALEX. MacLAREN, President of the Congress. 3. REV. J. N. PRESTRIDGE, Vice-President. 4. DR. JOHN CLIFFORD, Deputy President. 5. REV. A. H. STRONG, D.D. 6. REV. H. C. MABIE. 7. REV. J. H. SHAKESPEARE, Secretary of Congress

OUR MAIL BAG

Woman's War on Polygamy

Where the Women of Idaho Stand

Federation of Women's Clubs of Idaho.

The time has almost arrived in this State, when the question of "Mormon or Anti-Mormon" will become an issue in both State and local politics, and I feel that as soon as the women realize that it is really an issue, the ballot-box will demonstrate to the public the attitude of the women of Idaho, for all know that the sanctity and purity of every home is menaced. We must stamp out the monster if we would be safe.

Everything in the power of woman and of man that can be done should be done to eradicate the influence of the Mormon Church and individuals, for both, in my estimation, are trying not only to undermine the virtue of the land, but to set up a government in opposition to our present form. Any religion or people who try to do either of these two things is a menace to the country and should be exterminated.

MRS. EMMA E. STONE.

Caldwell, Idaho.

The Mormons and the Mountain Whites

In our field of labor among the poor of the Lookout Mountain districts, we are being greatly hindered and not a little annoyed by the malicious attacks of a settlement of Mormons, among which there are a half score or so of elders. The Mormons are reaping a rich harvest among these poor and illiterate mountaineers. The salvation of many souls depends on our vanquishing these foes of humankind, the Mormons, who defile and pollute every thing they touch, and seem to go into ecstacy when they can engender strife among Christian people. S. E. W.

Round Mountain, Ala.

Wisconsin Women Against Smoot

I am greatly interested in the campaign against apostle Reed Smoot. Send me some Memorials. We like to get good grain from Utah, that is healthful to the nation; but we must rout out Smoot.

Welcome, Wis. MRS. F. SCHOELKOPF.

Kansas Women Eager to Aid

We are wont to address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as the "Advance Guard" in every forward movement of reform, for the honor and glory of our God and his kingdom, and for the betterment and uplift of this our native land. May God bless the efforts that are being put forth to the wiping out of this great evil, which has been such a stain on our nation's history, and a menace to the homes and happiness of so many people all over the world, wherever its influence has been felt. Almost every woman is anxious to add her signature to the Memorial list for the removal of Smoot from the Senate.

Webster, Kan. MRS. HATTIE PERKINS.

A Million Women Pleading

To the leaders of the woman's campaign—who are bravely taking charge of this great movement against Mormonism, I bow in homage and admiration. It is not so much the individual man Smoot, but it is for what he represents that we shudder! It is far-reaching in its dishonor and demoralizing in every sense where its voice is heard. Let us demand the right to protect womanhood and stop forever this infamous crime.

When it is said "that the blighting influence of this disloyal, law-defying organization has become so powerful that political parties must reckon with it, as no man can be elected to any office without its consent," is it not time that the deathblow should be struck in behalf of our homes, our wives and daughters? "Reed Smoot is the chosen representative of the Mormon hierarchy, being one of its apostles, and never having objected to any of its practices."

I plead with all women who would hold to high ideals and the protection of home and purity, to send out in heartfelt appeal, urging their sister women to sign this Memorial, and do all that is possible to check this great evil, which is silently reaching out here and there, seeking to gather into its fold innocent women.

Wretched are the wives—or mistresses—of these polygamists. I wish I could describe their agony when they have a new face brought into the fold to share with them the husband's (?) affections.

I have visited among them, sat at their table, and plead with them to return to the only true marriage altar, urging them to see the wrong of polygamy, showing how it feeds the sensual and fetters the soul of every true woman.

May THE CHRISTIAN HERALD urge the work onward, calling every woman to action. It has been well said, "that when the United States Senate awakens to the call of conscience, uttering the pleadings of a million women, it will fully understand the true attitude and desire of American womanhood concerning the toleration of a sworn Mormon apostle among the foremost body of lawmakers for this nation." Startling indeed!

Avondale, Pa. VIOLA H. GILBERT.

Pennsylvania Women Aroused

I am interested in the anti-Mormon Campaign, and say God bless the work of the women of this nation that they may help stamp out this one great evil. Please send me six Memorials for signatures. Thank God for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Gillette, Pa. MRS. W. T. GUSTIN.

Virginia Women Warn Mormons Off

Fifty-three names have been signed here to the Memorial for Smoot's removal. Our women are all anxious to sign it. One lady said she wished she "could sign for a hundred." This is a small town, but most of the people are very earnest against Mormonism. Those Mormons Elders are very bold. They come through here in this place, where we have regular preaching and Sunday Schools, and they are trying to spread the Mormon doctrine. They have been ordered off by some of our best people; still they persist in coming. I think it is time people awakened to their duty with regard to keeping this great and good country morally clean. I pray the Lord to prosper, as he does so many things, what THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is now doing.

Ivanhoe, Va. MRS. MARY WALTERS.

Texas Women in Battle Line

Since reading in a late number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of the women's battle against Reed Smoot, the Mormon apostle, I thought it my certain duty to do what I could in helping such a vital cause, for the present and future happiness of our women, their homes and their children. We have had a revival meeting in Taylor and we want Memorials. We can send you five hundred names of ladies in Taylor, besides ladies in the country and other towns. Send the Memorials soon as you possibly can. MRS. ELLA MORROW.

Taylor, Tex.

EVAN ROBERTS' GREAT REVIVAL MEETING AT BEAUMARIS CASTLE, WALES

Wales is still in the throes of the Revival Movement. For the past month, Evan Roberts has been in North Wales, holding gatherings in the open air—in the fields and on the mountain sides. Our illustration shows such a meeting at Beaumaris—a pretty little village near the northeast corner of Anglesey. The population of the village is about three thousand, and yet at this service, held in the courtyard of the old castle, there was an attendance of ten thousand people. This gives some idea of the attitude of Wales toward religious matters to-day. The same scenes of enthusiasm, of conviction of sin, and of conversion that marked the early revival proceedings in the South were witnessed in North Wales also. God's blessing has been abundantly poured forth. J. K. M.

Michigan Women in the Campaign

I am glad to add my voice and influence to unseat such a man as Smoot. Every right-minded mother ought to see that we have good, moral influence and example for our boys and girls.

Bay City, Mich. HARRIET YALE ORTON.

Western Women Enthusiastic

Enclosed find twenty-five names of our Home Missionary Society, of Coffeyville, who all, without one dissenting voice, signed the Memorial. May your good work go on, and righteousness and purity prevail with the members of our National Senate. MRS. SOPHIA A. SWAYZE.

President of Missionary Local Society.

Coffeyville, Kan.

Pray for Reed Smoot's Removal

I am very much interested in the Memorial and will send you the signatures of 168 of my neighbors and friends, and ill ask you to send me two more Memori

Pray God to help us remove Ree Smoot so we can have clean, God-fear and God-loving men in the Senate.

Walworth, Wis. MRS. E. A. SPE

Illinois Women to Do Their

I am Superintendent of Laws, tion and Petition in the W.C.T.U ization of El Paso. If you wil forward me the Memorials, with signatures, I am confident that I two or three hundred signatures. grave question, and calls for all continued efforts.

El Paso, Ill. MRS. C. M. M TS.

A Reproach to American Woma

As an American citizen, and as has ever enjoyed a free and inde government, I realize its benefits. feel the sting of reproach which h cast upon us American women by crept into our Senate and has scandalized our name as a nation. send in the names of all my ho to plead with our men in authorit all they can to cleanse our gove from the disdainful slur that has be upon us by polygamy.

Perth, Kan. ELEANOR JOHN N.

Knows the Dark Mormon Hist

I feel very deeply interested in th Mormon war that is now raging. than sixty years ago I learned som of the early history of Mormonism since then I have read everything subject that has fallen in my way advanced age deprives me of mak much physical exertion as I would li I will try to enlist the services of y people whom I can think of. Pleas me by return mail five or six Mem

Spring Creek, Pa. MRS. L. A. BR

Miscellaneous

T. H. B., Haddonfield, N. J. We belie statement, as published, to be correct.

Wesley H., Irving, Oreg. See answer to "R Salem, N. J." in last week's MAIL BAG.

M., Minneapolis, Minn. 1. Don't know tary Taft's religious affiliations. 2, Buyi tions on grain is a species of gambling.

Lerona S., Hartford City, Ind. Your pas doubt, is the better judge, and assured him examination of your son's fitness.

If Inquirer, Pennsylvania, will send hi name and address to S. M. Stillwell, Mesh Wyoming County, Pa., he will receive a co the verses he wants.

W. H. R., Ironwood, Mich. There is no n way on the question. The divine comma "Thou shalt not do any work." Furthe firmly uphold the good old-fashioned belie Sunday work never prospers.

C. F. H., New Lexington, O. 1. The best cations only print the advertisements of concerns as they believe to be thoroughly re It depends largely, therefore, upon the ki paper in which you saw the advertisemen Address Bradstreet's, New York.

J. J. J., New Jersey. New Mexico as a pl permanent residence is desirable in every re especially if either one's self or any of one's ily has lung trouble. Santa Fe, of course, every facility of a large modern city. Two —Las Cruces and Soccoro—have good sch Methodist Church, railroad station and post These towns are preferable if one wishes to in a small community. For complete inform concerning either town, write Dr. E. R. McB Las Cruces, New Mexico.

Mrs. S., and others. We have received qu number of letters asking about the fund f tired professors and their families, that wa tablished last spring by Andrew Carnegie. are unable to give any more information a the fund than we have already published, a committee that has the matter in charge will meet until fall. At that time it is expected the conditions will be arranged under which pensions will be given. Mr. Carnegie himself be back from Scotland at that time, and wishes will, of course, be consulted. We will lish in this column any new facts in regard to pension fund and its method of distribution should be remembered that the fund was e lished for the benefit of teachers in college schools of equal rank, with this exception, no teacher in a State university can be a b ficiary.

NEW YORK, AUG. 9, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

THYATIRA AS IT IS TO-DAY

A VISIT TO THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA

LIBRARY OF 92 A.D., RECENTLY EXCAVATED AT EPHESUS

By Prof. MARY MILLS PATRICK

Of Constantinople, Turkey

SMYRNA has become quite a modern city. In ancient times the Ionian influence was always strong in the Greek nation, and at present the most vigorous Greek life in the Ottoman Empe is found in the same region. Smyrna is in some rpects the most civilized of the Turkish cities. It has aeautiful quay on the bay, and many ndsome modern buildings. It is intereing to notice how many of the ancient ces have kept their ancient names, and s l have an existence as cities which ve been continuous, although the sites ve been gradually changed during the st centuries.

The first city which we visited after lving Smyrna was Ephesus. Nothing nains now of the ancient city of Ephesj except a small Turkish village near , containing only about one hundred d fifty people. This village is, perlps, two miles from the site of the cient city, but very near the ruins of e Temple of Diana of the Ephesians. e ancient name has been lost, and it is w called Ayasolouk. The site of the d city may be visited on horseback, hough it is not too far to walk. Excations have been carried on extensively Ephesus, and the ruins are among the est to be found in Asia Minor. One en reads in books the fact that all the ies among the ancient Greeks were ovided with theatres, built in the open , on the side of an acropolis, in which e best of the ancient Greek literature s presented to the common people. In these theatres e tragedies of Æschylus, and Sophocles, and Euripides, e comedies of Aristophanes, and the writings of many hers of the great men of the past, were acted in the ght of all classes of the population.

In traveling in Asia Minor, one passes acropolis after ropolis, with the ruins of the ancient out-of-door eatres still visible. I remember one small hill in rticular that our train passed just as we were leavg the boundaries of ancient Lydia, the hill standg by itself without any vestige of an old city, and t with its out-of-door theatre still visible on the llside. The theatre at Ephesus is the finest of all ese ruins, and the pathway approaching it has tely been excavated. It was formerly a straight, arble-paved street, leading through the city to the eatre on the side of the hill. This street was lined ith great columns on both sides, the bases of which ill remain. One cannot visit Ephesus without any thoughts of the great philosopher, Heraclitus, hose words of wisdom have proved such a strong fluence in subsequent development of thought. here are also in Ephesus the remains of a gymnaum and of many interesting temples. The site of e Temple of Diana of the Ephesians is being exavated by Mr. Hogarth of the English School of rchæology in Athens, and some valuable results ave been obtained during the present year. Comg down to later times, Ephesus is closely connected ith church history, and the ruins of the church here the Council of Ephesus was held are among e interesting features of the place. Carvings, bits f pottery, coins and little lamps are often found.

CAMELS AND DRAGOMEN EMPLOYED ON OUR VISIT TO THE SEVEN CHURCHES

The next trip after leaving Ephesus was to Pergamus. This is one of the most interesting spots in Asia Minor. To reach this town one passes through the ancient Magnesia, which is at present called Manissa, and which is a small enterprising town, mostly Greek. Later on, the road leads through Thyatira, another of the Seven Churches of Asia. Thyatira has kept its site and its existence as a city, but has changed its name, being called at present by the Turkish name of Ak Hissar.

The terminus of the railway line en route to Pergamus is at Soma, a small Turkish town, in which the accommodations are of a very doubtful character, although the hotel there, or khan, is one of the kind in which the landlord claims that the sheets on the bed have been slept in only once, or have been changed on purpose for the distinguished visitors now before him. If doubt is expressed as to this fact, in view of the appearance of the sheets, he may perhaps answer: "What can I do when people will come in and sit on the beds!" After spending the night in Soma, one drives to Pergamus, the road passing through a very interesting part of the country for a distance of about twenty miles. Pergamus still retains its name, as it is called by the Turks Bergama. The Turkish town Bergama, lies at the foot of the acropolis of the old city. The ruins here are the most extensive among those of the Seven Churches of Asia Minor, and still testify to the brilliant history of Pergamus before the time of the Christian Era. There is a wonderful street which winds its way up the acropolis in four tiers, back and forth on the side of the hill, and which still bears marks of the chariot wheels of the kings of old. The grade of this road is so gradual, that in walking up one is hardly conscious of the steepness of the ascent. At the top of the hill there is a wealth of ruins belonging to all the periods of the history of the city. These ruins are surmounted by the remains of a rough stone temple to Jupiter, in which there are deep passages for the flow of the blood of the victims sacrificed. One sees here the place where the thrones of Eumenes and Attalus stood, and the ruins of their palaces. The ruins that are perhaps the most impressive are those of an old gymnasium. The gymnasium signified a school among the Greeks, as in Europe at the present time. This school at Pergamus was perhaps typical of the schools in all the Greek cities. It consisted of a beautiful marble hall in three divisions, the floor paved with marble, and the columns and architecture were very impressive. On the floor are fragments of the statues with which the hall was ornamented. The gymnasia among the Greeks were largely schools of philosophy, and, doubtless, in this marble hall, on the acropolis in Pergamus, overlooking one of the finest views in the world, the works of Plato and Aristotle were often read.

RUINS OF THE GYMNASIUM AT PERGAMUS

From the palace of Attalus there is a private staircase cut through the side of the hill down to the theatre, which stood somewhat lower. The remains of the theatre are very extensive, and the stage still exists in its old position. The acoustic properties are so fine that if one stands on the stage and speaks in an ordinary tone of voice, every word may be heard far up the hillside in the highest row of seats. One can still see in this theatre the private box of the king, some of the marble walls of which are still standing. Those who have visited the Museum at Berlin, may be somewhat familiar with the beauty of the buildings in Pergamus, from a study of the Pergamon marbles to be found there.

After leaving Pergamus we returned to Magnesia and took a train on another line of railroad, crossing

CONCLUDED ON PAGE 678

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY

Rev. Wallace McMullen, D.D.*

THE USE OF VISIONS

TEXT: Acts 26: 19:

"I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision"

PAUL was a man of visions. That one at Damascus transformed all his life. The one at Troas, on the shores of the Ægean, when Macedonia appealed for his help, changed the field of his ministry, and affected the whole future of the Gospel. Once he was caught up into the third heaven and heard unutterable things and assured the Corinthians that glorying in such an experience was a quite legitimate proceeding. This capacity for visions may be overworked. Its subjects may become its victims and give exhibitions of the veriest religious clap-trap. The old pagans believed that delirium was religious power; convulsions, hallucinations, inarticulate sounds were signs of the divine spirit. To-day they are signs of disease.

Visions are vital things. Counterfeits assure us of the value of the genuine coin, and could have no power to deceive if the genuine coin were not current and in free circulation. It is easy to distinguish the real from the false. Paul lacks the marks of the cheap visionary. He is no recluse, he is not a man of the desert but of the cities, not content unless in the great throbbing centres of population. His visions are not born of an unwholesome solitude. He is not poor. His original vision comes when he is prosperous with independent means and social standing, so that we have no emaciated body in his case to serve as a basis of nervous frenzy.

The Vision Paul Saw

And he was no idler, but a tireless toiler; no ignoramus, with scanty, pitiable intellectual life, but a child of the university, with immense and original intellectual power. So that we need not desert legitimate treasures in order to have visions. Neither poverty, nor solitude, nor ethereal body, nor empty brains are prerequisites. Certain peculiarities of temperament may determine the form of our perceptions of things unseen, but sincerity, earnestness and obedience are the qualities which invite God to make us see. "It shall come to pass in the last days," said Joel, "that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh and your old men shall dream dreams, and your young men shall see visions."

Let us inquire concerning the contents of Paul's vision. The first item in it is the triumphant love of Jesus Christ. Nothing but the sight of the risen Christ could have convinced Paul of the truth of his claims. "Who art thou, Lord?" is the query. Paul may have seen Jesus in his earthly life, but even so, his question proves, not a confused memory, but an overwhelmed, incredulous judgment. The vision was an earthquake to Paul's theology. It has been well suggested that Paul's bitter antagonism to Jesus was not because of any antipathy to the character of Jesus. Paul's whole latter life showed sympathetic affinity for that character, likeness to it, rapturous admiration of it; his own fundamental qualities, his beautiful unselfishness, his superb self-sacrifice made him peculiarly susceptible to the charms of the Man of Nazareth.

A Mistake Rectified

Paul's original opposition, his furious persecution of the new religion, was not because of what Christ was personally, but because of what he claimed to be officially. Not his character, but his office, was Paul's stumbling block. It was exasperating to the last degree to make a crucified man the Messiah. It was a religious absurdity, a theological impossibility, and Paul, as a religious zealot, unswervingly orthodox, fought the heresy. Death to a Jew was not a merely physical horror from which he shrank with æsthetic daintiness, it was a moral shame. Its sting was sin, God's wrath was in it. To assert it of the Messiah, God's fellow and man's king, was to drive God into partnership with evil. Now that which caused Paul to see that death was no denial of the claims of Jesus and no proof of the wrath of God, was not a process of reasoning, but a vision—a certainty that Jesus was alive. At first it seemed incredible, but it proved indubitable, and life was changed for Paul. Jesus in his experience was declared to be the Son of God, with power by his resurrection from the dead. And if the death of Christ was not sin's doom, it was love's triumph, the suffering was love's servant. The cross was not something to be ashamed of, but something to glory in—the accepted method of the King. That truth transformed Paul. It will or ought to transform anybody. When we know, absorbed by the glory of the risen Lord, that the Cross was not submitted to, but chosen, then it ceases to be a stone of stumbling and becomes the symbol, the summit, the everlastingly satisfying expression of radiant love, and we, no longer ashamed to be seen in the company of Jesus, adore him.

*Preached in Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, New York.

The Supreme Revelation

And in the vision there was for Paul the everlasting Lordship of Jesus. Paul later came to understand the nature of the rule of his Master, came to know that it meant not the annihilation of anything worthy, but the incorporation of all things worthy. This is an ideal with which he must have been somewhat familiar from the political policy of Rome, which was not to destroy conquered peoples, but to make them corporate parts of the Empire, and find in its Pantheon room for all gods. This interpretation of the universality of Christ's Lordship was not reached by Paul immediately, but the germ of it was in the Damascus vision. Such an experience as the cross could not be chosen for petty ends. Paul had been trained in the idea of a busy God. There have been religions which have conceived of God as absorbed in the contemplation of his own perfections apart from all universal concerns, eternally motionless. Sometimes the gods have been thought of as occupying their time in feasts, breathing the incense offered them by countless worshipers, drinking ambrosial cups.

Such gods were not givers, not workers, but idlers. But the God of whom Paul had knowledge differed from all these; he was perpetually busy, was occupied in perfecting large plans, made room in those plans for the welfare of all souls ultimately. Although Paul had been exclusive and regarded his own people as God's elected favorites, nevertheless through his people the grace of God was to reach all men. All nations were to be blessed in Abraham. The Messiah was to have the heathen for his inheritance, the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession, so that Paul was acquainted with the notion that the Messiah was to bear universal rule. But the vision proves to him that the sovereignty of the Messiah is not to come through Jewish mediation. The fetters were broken from the Messiah's power. The vision which shattered Paul's Jewish theology emancipated him from his Jewish exclusiveness. These two elements, the sacrificing love and the universal Lordship of Jesus, were the items of truth in the vision which made Paul a missionary. He goes everywhere proclaiming the cross and the sceptre of the risen Christ.

Under the Vision's Power

And let us inquire concerning the power of the vision in Paul's life. The vision might have provided for him an interesting problem. He might have thought curiously and convincingly about his temperament and his preceding mental states, to say nothing of his bodily health, and scientifically, and perhaps to his own satisfaction, explain the whole thing. But it did not occur to him that his experience needed to be put under the microscope before it could be accepted as legitimate. That has all come since from men who have lost the open vision of God, and to whom anything heavenly, religiously splendid, is something morbid and a mark of degenerate life. That vision of Paul has been a problem to a lot of psychical experts and medical materialists in our day, but to Paul it was not a problem but a power. If he had become an emotional mystic, devoting himself to the cultivation of religious states of soul, relying upon feeling, carelessness of reasoning, independent of outward devotion, he would have been quite unimportant to Christian history.

Paul was a mystic as certainly as was John, but his mysticism drove him to duty rather than to study. It made him a minister and a witness exactly according to the terms of the vision. Religious experience is not a thing to be fondled, but to be obeyed. To stay on the mountain-top with the transfigured Master in celestial company, is not a divine suggestion but a human, implying the thoughtless selfishness of a very defective sanctification. Queen Esther was set on the throne [illegible] to revel in royal robes and royal banquets, but to int[illegible]ere in that Persian crisis in the affairs of her own threa[illegible]ed people and save them. Human souls are admitted [illegible]he presence-chamber of the King to see his glory in [illegible]ed, but also to receive his commandments and be his a[illegible]as-sadors. The Son of the Highest came to dwell [illegible]ith men, and sent those who knew him after the Spir[illegible] to tell of him. Galahad said, concerning the Holy G[illegible]il,

> In the strength of the vision he rode > Shattering all evil customs everywhere.

To get a rapturous sight of the Lord and then sing

> My willing soul would stay in such a state as this is not to be like him who left heaven and glory to [illegible]ve and die. Such willingness to sing is only laziness.
> And sit and sing herself away to everlasting bliss.

There is a law that as we are, we see. Characte[illegible]e-termines vision. But another law might be formul[illegible]d, and we might say, as we see, we become. Vision sh[illegible]es character. That is the function of vision, the right it [illegible]s! One of Bunyan's minor characters is a man busy wi[illegible]a muck-rake. Over his head, as he stoops, an angel is po[illegible]l, offering the man a crown. He does not even see it, so[illegible]-sorbed in the straw and stubble he is raking together, [illegible]t he has become earthy. John Ruskin had a vision of t[illegible]h in art, and wrote out his vision in his Seven Lamps of Architecture and his Stones of Venice. Moral laws [illegible]e his lamps, and by them he explained the glory and [illegible]e shame of Venetian buildings. Later he became a so[illegible]l reformer. Critics have mourned for the change in [illegible]'s work, but he was only true to his vision. Men w[illegible]e better than paint and stones, and because of his sincer[illegible], and because of his humanity, he had to apply the l[illegible] of God, which he saw, to the needs of men. Jacob [illegible] a vision at Bethel, and was untrue to it. He saw G[illegible], and then thought most in later years, not of Go[illegible] power and graciousness, but sordidly of the things [illegible] wanted God to give him. "I was not disobedient u[illegible] the heavenly vision," said Paul. Thank God for [illegible] brave, chivalrous, constant, sacrificing obedience gi[illegible] by this clear-eyed apostle to what he saw.

The Source of the Vision

And let us notice with a word of emphasis the sou[illegible] of this vision. Paul said it was heavenly. One meml[illegible] of this particular audience to which he was speaki[illegible] said he was mad—driven crazy by learning. But P[illegible] never varied his story. The vision was from abo[illegible] given by the triumphant Christ. What is the cause religious experience? Cold, lynx-eyed students a[illegible] asking that. Taine, in the introduction of his Histo[illegible] of English Literature, has said, "Whether facts be mo[illegible] or physical, it makes no matter, they always have th[illegible] causes. There are causes for ambition, courage, ver[illegible]city, just as there are for digestion, muscular movemen[illegible] animal heat. Vice and virtue are products like vitri[illegible] and sugar." Which confession of belief on the part the great literary critic, is like the assurances we g[illegible] from some quarters that the experiences which sha[illegible] human souls and make them certain of God, are mere[illegible] matters of torpid livers or excitable nerves.

The origin of a vision ought to be determined by i[illegible] results. "By their works ye shall know them." S[illegible] Theresa said: "Some accuse my visions of being th[illegible] work of the enemy of mankind, and the sport of m[illegible] imagination; but I show them the jewels which th[illegible] Divine hand has left with me—they were my actua[illegible] dispositions. All those who knew me saw that I wa[illegible] changed. This improvement, palpable in all respect[illegible] far from being hidden, was brilliantly evident to a[illegible] men." Paul was changed by his vision—morall[illegible] changed. His life became divine. He lived for Christ became like him, declared him, exalted him, enthrone[illegible] him; established his dominion in Syria, Cilicia, Galatia and Macedonia, and Rome, till Nero took his head, an[illegible] God took his flaming soul home. Heavenly result[illegible] have heavenly causes. If we declare we have seen th[illegible] Lord, and are selfish, cynical, cruel, unclean in life men have a right to doubt the source of our inspiration But if we are sincere, full of truth, full of gentleness full of mercy, gracious, and kind, and pure, our Christly lives will argue powerfully for the genuineness of ou[illegible] Christ's vision.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 676

A World's Congress of Baptists

SEE COVER PAGE ILLUSTRATION

IMPOSING in numbers and in the eminence of its leaders, was a great conference recently held in London. For the first time in the history of the denomination, Baptists of all nationalities assembled in one meeting, to take counsel and report progress in their respective countries. The Congress must have been a surprise to the citizens of the British metropolis. That four thousand men, representing a constituency of twenty millions, all animated by one faith and hope, should have come together in the spirit of brotherhood, was a most impressive spectacle. It used to be said that the Baptist who visited the Metropolitan Tabernacle during Pastor C. H. Spurgeon's ministry, came away feeling taller than before. The sight of that vast congregation, drawn to hear the great preacher, was one never to be forgotten. More significant from another standpoint was the assemblage of so many men of the same creed from far distant lands, to rejoice together in the toils and victories of their church. It was not a legislative congress—for each Baptist Church is a little republic acknowledging no authority but that of Jesus Christ himself—but simply a fraternal gathering of men of one heart and spirit.

America had the honor of originating the idea of the Congress. So many churches and religious organizations have held Ecumenical Councils and International Conventions, that it was about time, thought Dr. Prestridge, of Louisville, Ky., that a denomination whose churches are in every land, should hold a representative assembly. The idea, once expressed, caught hold of leaders here and abroad, and after being discussed in the American and English unions, was heartily adopted. America might have justly claimed, on the score of number, the privilege of entertaining such a Congress, but courtesy to age and history prevailed, and London was chosen as the Mecca of the gathering.

It was an imposing spectacle to the Baptists of England, that was witnessed at Exeter Hall when the "welcome" meeting was held. If, in the past, they had regarded themselves as a small contingent of Christ's Church, in spite of statistics, they must have felt a new sense of power when they saw the vast assembly, and remembered what it represented. Statistics cannot make the impression that is made by the actual presence of the people themselves. The report presented by Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, the Secretary of the Baptist Union of Great Britain, however, supplied the statistical element, which was no mean showing. It stated that the Congress represented a mass of adherents, including the families of communicants and attendants on Baptist Churches, estimated at twenty millions. The actual membership of the Churches throughout the world, is seven and a-half millions, of whom 7,190,400 are English-speaking; more than six and a-half millions—white and colored—being in the United States. There are 394,811 members in Baptist Churches of the United Kingdom; 131,000 in the British Colonies; 150,342 in non-English-speaking foreign countries, and 143,029 in pagan lands.

When the roll-call was made at the first meeting, it was found that the following countries were represented in the Congress: Austria, Hungary, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Russia, Sweden, United Kingdom, China, India, Japan, Congo, South Africa, National Baptist Convention, Southern Baptist Convention, Regular Baptists, Lott-Carey Convention, Canada, Mexico, West Indies, Australia, New Zealand, and Brazil. Each head of delegation was allowed three minutes to respond. The replies were full of enthusiasm, in many cases thrilling and memorable, some full of humor.

One who was present at that memorable meeting writes: "Of the foreigners, perhaps the remarkable speaker was Pastor Hom, of Kristiania, one of four delegates sent by the 3,000 Church members of Norway, who sang with much sweetness a charming melody. But the roll-call produced nothing more impressive than the Russian response. There were four men from Russia—tall, well-set up, long-bearded veterans. In broken English, Gospodin Pavloff, of Tiflis, told how he and his friend had been banished time and again, because they would not pledge themselves to refrain from preaching.

JOHN BUNYAN'S COTTAGE AT ELSTOW, ENGLAND

This friend was a beautiful, saintly-looking old gentleman, with mild eyes, and a simple and gracious bearing. He had been imprisoned in thirty different prisons for preaching the Gospel. Dr. Timothy Richard gave a striking message from China, "the eldest sister of the nations"; Rev. M. C. Mason told how the 8,000 native Christians of Assam, were observing Congress by means of a week of prayer; Dr. Brick, a negro preacher, sang a beautiful song, which was acknowledged the musical triumph of the evening. The Canadian delegate, Daniel Thompson, Esq., K.C., LL.D., referring to the grand future before the great colony; and oratorical triumphs were achieved by the two American leaders, Dr. Curtis Laus, and Dr. Lathom A. Crandall."

Most impressive was the ovation accorded to Dr. Clifford the eminent Baptist preacher, whose name is known the world over. Many references were made to the heroic stand he is taking in defiance of the British government on the question of the payment of the education rate. More than once the agents of the government have seized his property and sold it, and have threatened him with imprisonment. The delegate from Australia greeted him as the "Modern John Knox." Notwithstanding this, the Convention paid a tribute of respect to the king by passing the following resolution, which was urged by Dr. Prestridge, representing the American delegation:

> May it please your Majesty—We, Ministers and Delegates of Baptist Churches in the United Kingdom, the British Colonies, America, and various other lands, assembled as the Baptist World Congress, representing over seven millions of communicants, desire to express our joy at meeting in this land, so dear to all lovers of religion and freedom. We wish to express our deep appreciation of your Majesty's efforts in the cause of peace, the prime condition of prosperity and progress. And we desire to commend your Majesty to the grace of God, earnestly praying that your reign may be long and full of blessing to yourself, to her Majesty the Queen, to the royal family, and to every part of your extended empire.—ALEXANDER MACLAREN, President.

Scarcely less enthusiastic than the ovation to Dr. Clifford, was that accorded to the President of the Congress, Dr. Alexander Maclaren. Wearing lightly his eighty-two years, but pleading indulgence, which was not needed, on the ground that he was in the sixtieth year of his pastorate, he delivered a ringing address, in the course of which he referred to the charge brought against the denomination of being erratic. "We will answer that charge," he said, "in a conclusive way. The world wants to know where we stand. Let us answer it by reciting the Apostles' Creed." Thereupon the entire assembly rose and repeated the Creed after him.

The first paper before the Congress was an exhaustive address by Rev. J. D. Freeman, M.A., of Toronto, in which he showed how in every struggle for religious and political liberty, which had taken place in three centuries, Baptists had always been to the fore. This note was emphasized by the speech of Judge Willis, a distinguished English occupant of the bench, who is President this year of the British Baptist Union.

The Congress sermon did honor to this side the Atlantic. It was preached in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, the scene of the labors of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, by Dr. Augustus H. Strong, President of the Theological Seminary at Rochester, N. Y. The vast building was crowded to suffocation by delegates eager to listen to the learned American preacher, who chose as his subject the influence of the vision Paul had on the way to Damascus.

Two tributes were paid by the Congress to the memory of men who have made the Baptist faith eminent wherever the English language is spoken. One was the visit to the home, still standing, at Elstow, of that famous Baptist John Bunyan, who wrote the Pilgrim's Progress. The other was the unveiling in the Baptist Church House of a statue of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, whose memory is cherished in all denominations of the Christian Church.

FOR MACEDONIA'S CHILDREN

SOME two years ago, the American missionaries stationed at Salonica—ancient Thessalonica—decided to establish an industrial school for boys on the Hampton or Tuskegee plan. They were driven to it by the crying need. Borrowing $500, and receiving a contribution of $500 from a friend, they purchased fifty-two acres of excellent land, beautifully situated, five miles from the city, and erected a small, mud-walled farmhouse with stable attached. Fifteen boys—of whom ten are orphans—now room over the stable, and rejoice in the privilege. Three of them are strong enough to steady the one-handled native plough; others can drop corn and plant potatoes; two are semi-expert with a cobbler's kit; some are learning to sew, and all are ambitious to do something to prove that they are fast becoming men. An excellent native farmer, with his equally excellent wife, and an efficient young teacher—a gypsy—are with the lads day and night.

This happy home is under the immediate supervision of the Salonica station. It is called The Thessalonica Agricultural and Industrial Institute, and is incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, with a Board of Directors, including such representative names as Leander T. Chamberlain, Charles Cuthbert Hall, Josiah Strong and Irving W. Metcalf.

After living twenty-two years in Macedonia, the writer does not hesitate to affirm that this Institute—properly backed by the prayers and contributions of God's people—will open up to the youth of Macedonia and contiguous provinces in European Turkey, the very best opportunity for becoming self-respecting, labor-respecting and God-respecting men. The Institute is non-sectarian. Enlargement is imperative, and $11,000 is needed for that purpose. This Institute is the only one of its kind for a district as large as all New England and containing a population of about five million. Mrs. Adeline B. House, of Salonica, writing of the Institute, says:

A VILLAGE MERRYMAKING IN MACEDONIA

> Our little grove of four hundred mulberry trees, planted two years ago, has done so well that we have been encouraged to set out seven hundred more, anticipating the time when they will be needed for the feeding of silk worms. Six thousand cuttings of grape vines have been set out; and some currant bushes and a small strawberry bed.
>
> Here in Macedonia the gifts are beginning to come in. Any child can pay for a brick or a tile. One Sunday School class in Providence, R.I., paid for the dining-table for the boys.

The treasurer of the Institute in the United States is Mr. William B. Isham, Jr., 27 William Street, New York City.

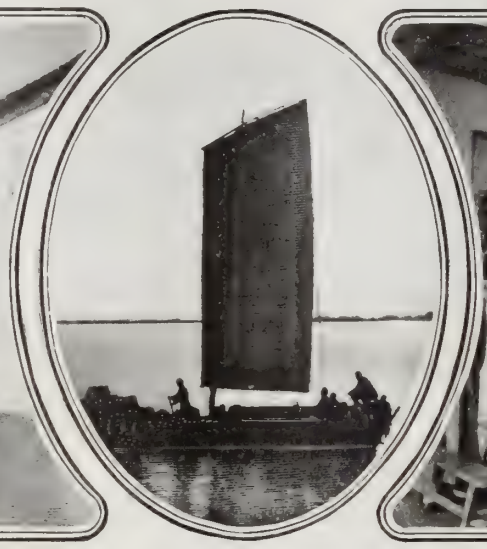
LEWIS BOND.

The Bible in Japanese

Since the outbreak of the present war in the Far East, the Japanese Empire has been opened to Christian evangelization as never before. Consequently the demand for Christian literature is daily increasing everywhere among all classes in that country. Among the native Christians it is felt that they should have a more pure and adequate version of the Holy Scriptures than the present translation. The Rev. Yoshitoyo Samuel Sacon, of Japan, has undertaken this needed revision. He is now in New York, where he can more easily avail himself of access to the libraries and all necessary helps than in his own country. During his stay in the United States he is making addresses to congregations on the religious progress of Japan. Missionary meetings, Young People's Societies or churches in general desiring his services can address Rev. Y. S. Sacon, 1296 Webster Avenue, New York City.

Our Mission House-Boat in China

SCHOOL CHILDREN AT CHAO-HSIEN



ON THE MIGHTY YANG-TSZ

IN THE LITTLE CHURCH AT HUANG-LO-HO

CHINA is making great progress now. The Japanese are coming in by the thousands, and they are accepting positions in the new Chinese public schools as head teachers, for a salary about half what any other nationality would accept. In this way, Westerners will be forced out; for John Chinaman wants things cheap. I have been asked to write something more about our house-boat, called "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD," and the work we are doing with her. I will give you our experiences on our last trip into the interior. The boat itself is very commodious, so we invited Miss Dow, of Nanking, to accompany us to our outstations. The party, therefore, consisted of Miss Dow, Mrs. Beals, Miss Bertha, our son Victor, and myself. We left our anchorage one afternoon, and swiftly glided down with the current of the mighty Yang-tsz river until we reached the mouth of the Chao river, one of its tributaries, which enters the Yang-tsz eight miles below Wuhu. As the wind was light, we anchored very soon for the night. Next morning we were away before daylight, and soon reached Huang-lo-ho, our first out-station. Here the river is about one hundred yards wide and twenty feet deep. It is very pretty, winding in and out around hills, which are dotted here and there with pagodas or shrines, giving a very pleasing effect.

As we landed, we were met by hundreds of the people, who gave us a hearty welcome. Four years ago we were cursed and reviled. Now all has changed. The great suffering from flood, which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers did so much to alleviate, had first shown them that the foreigner cared for them, and since then they have listened to our preaching, and many of them have found Christ as their saviour.

Our house-boat can anchor right near the church, as it is on the river bank, which makes it very convenient for the women to come aboard, and visit Mrs. Beals and the mission ladies. We have a most interesting school here, and it gives one great delight to watch them bay-shu (recite lessons). As we think of what this place was like, and what God has done in these last two years, we rejoice and take courage.

We left Huang-lo-ho next day, and soon passed Turtle Mountain. This is a noted hill with a pagoda on top. The natives have a legend that once an immense turtle tried to block up the river, but a good priest got the people together and built a pagoda on his back and pinned him down, thus stopping him and saving the river. The pagoda has two sides fallen out, and is very much weather-beaten, showing great age.

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" GOSPEL HOUSE-BOAT

We reached Chao Hsien next day, and had the pr- lege of preaching to many people. Our school th is large, and the scholars very bright. Our sch l building is low and hot, and we sadly need a new la one. One hundred dollars would be sufficient for t Many have entered the Church here, and we have r sixty members and as many inquirers.

All our work up this river is in a most encourag condition. We only wish we could travel oftener. has been our wish to keep an evangelist going on boat all the time; but, so far, the funds have not co in to do so. Ten dollars per month would be su cient to keep this useful boat going all the time amo these many rivers and canals of Anhuei Province, wh the Gospel is not yet being taken.

As we see the great need, our hearts cry out to G So many of his dear children do not understand t need of these people who are in such darkness. M he make it more clear to many hearts, is our prayer.

Wuhu, China, Z. CHARLES BEALS.

Fifty Years in China

FIFTY years in the Master's service in foreign lands a record of which any missionary may well be prou and one in which the Christians of all lands are intereste

Rev. Griffith John, one of the pioneer workers in t China field, is now celebrating his jubilee year. He w born in Wales, in 1831, and is now seventy-four years age. Guided by devout parents, he early gave his hea to Christ. At fourteen he began to preach the Gosp and gained the title of the "Boy Preacher." Dr. John greatest achievement was the founding of the Hanko Mission, over six hundred miles from the sea. Ten tho sand converts have been baptized in the two provinces Hupeh and Hunan. At present the mission has a staff eighteen men and sixteen women.

Twenty-nine years ago Dr. John founded the Centr China Tract Society. Its influence has been felt throug out China, and it is the earnest desire of those in th mission field to extend its work. The London Religiou Tract Society has promised to support a suitable age as soon as a building can be secured for the work. Th building will cost $15,000, and its erection will fitting commemorate the jubilee of Dr. John.

THE PROGRESS OF ARBITRATION

ARBITRATION is beginning to be generally appreciated. Chancellor McCracken, of the University of New York, has recently asked that the history of arbitration shall be required for admission to college. Though a classicist, he believed that a knowledge of the wars of Rome and Carthage was of less consequence than such recent history as vitally concerns the welfare of mankind. A most hopeful movement has been begun this month at Mohonk, for special instruction in colleges regarding peaceful methods of ending international difficulties. When such men as Pres. Gilman, Pres. Eliot of Harvard, and Ex-Mayor Low, take up this question, they are likely to bring something to pass. Ambassador White estimates that the work will require an endowment of $100,000, and is hopeful of its being obtained. As President Roosevelt recently said to a delegation of trades unionists: "You must remember that arbitration isn't everything. You must also consider conciliation."

The Second Hague Conference, which will be called by President Roosevelt as soon as the Eastern war ends, will not only extend the use of arbitration, but consider a very important measure in the nature of conciliation. A general arbitration treaty will be proposed, which will avoid such difficulties as were raised by our Senate last winter, when they refused to ratify the eight treaties which Secretary Hay had signed. The other measure to be proposed will be the formation of a World Advisory Congress, composed of delegates of all the nations, to meet every two or three years to consider international questions and to recommend international laws. Eventually, such a World Congress would doubtless consider the question of a common coinage, and the removal of artificial and wasteful restrictions on international commerce. It would consider coming to a mutual agreement to neutralize various territories, as Switzerland and Belgium are now neutralized. If in a few years our Philippine possessions could be thus neutralized, it would enable us to lessen our navy by one-half.

The economic aspect of these world problems ought powerfully to impress every woman who wants to see the colossal sums wasted in armaments, which new inventions speedily make worthless, turned to the wiping out of the causes of poverty. The price of one battleship would establish seventy industrial or trade schools o farm schools, at $100,000 each. It could turn thousand of young potential vagabonds and jail birds into usefu citizens, and be a better national defense than armo plate. Had Canada and this country a hundred for tresses on our northern frontier and dozens of battle ships on our great lakes, we should not be so well pro tected from each other as we are now.

Few subjects are so fascinating and so easy to grasp as the elements of this question. No diplomas in mathematics, science or language are required to master it. Some knowledge of history and psychology and a logical mind, combined with a passion for justice, are the only qualifications necessary to enable any woman, in the time which she would spend in reading a dozen novels, to learn enough to teach her children, her Sunday School or club, something of this important question.

Let women remember that some of the best reform work is done by tactful women in chats over the tea-cups, on summer outings, and in a thousand places where they make their opportunity. LUCIA AMES MEAD.

Boston, June, 1905.

Winning Souls Through Song

By GEORGE T. B. DAVIS

MR. CHARLES M. ALEXANDER, the famous Gospel singer and conductor, has come to this country at the conclusion of the great London revival, to spend three weeks conducting the musical side of the Moody Summer Conferences at Northfield, Mass. Mr. Alexander is accompanied by his wife, and his wife's mother and sister, Mrs. Richard Cadbury and Miss Beatrice Cadbury.

Mr. Alexander looked hale and hearty as he alighted from the steamer, making it almost needless for him to deny the false report that his voice had been strained during the London revival. With much enthusiasm, he told how his revival songs had taken the world's metropolis by storm—how they were sung and whistled on the streets, hummed by policemen on their beats, played by strolling German bands and by street-organs, and ground out in phonograph and gramophone stores.

One of his new songs has created a furore abroad and will doubtless be in great demand here in Gospel gatherings. It bids fair to rival the famous "Glory" song. It is entitled, "Oh, What a Change!" and both words and music were written on the inspiration of the moment. One day, an English hymn-writer—a lady, who was a worker in the London revival—heard Dr. Torrey preach a sermon in which he spoke of the wonderful joy we will experience when we look upon the face of Christ. This lady, Miss Habersham, went at once to her home, sat down, and wrote the words of the song. She then handed them to Mr. Robert Harkness, the pianist of Mr. Alexander. He was delighted with them, and even while Dr. Torrey was preaching, the entire tune flashed into his mind and he jotted it down at once. After the meeting, Mr. Harkness sat down at the piano to run over the notes, and so infectious was the song that even as he played it over, the choir gathered round and it became an instant favorite. From that night until the close of the London revival the song was sung one or more each day. At the great closing meeting of the London campaign, when ten thousand people assembled in the Royal Albert Hall to thank God for the success of the revival and to bid the evangelists farewell, the new song, "Oh, What a Change!" completely captivated the vast audience. They sang it again and again, with such effect that it thrilled and electrified the multitude in a manner that was extraordinary to behold.

It is worthy of mention that, during the last year, Mr. Alexander's chorus choirs have been the largest ever organized for a regular revival campaign. His choir at Liverpool numbered 3,856; while in London, at each of the three centres, the choir numbered 4,000, with an average attendance each night of 1,000. The singing produced by these huge choirs, and by the vast audiences under his magnetic and inspiring leadership, was thrilling in the extreme. Hon. John Wanamaker, who recently attended some of the London revival meetings, likened the singing to "an angelic chorus."

MR. AND MRS. ALEXANDER, WITH FRIENDS, IN CENTRAL PARK, N. Y.

The London revival, which has continued under the leadership of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander for five months, and which recently ended, resulted (as stated in last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD) in over 14,000 persons publicly accepting Christ. It will be remembered, however, that Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander have been conducting revival campaigns in the largest cities of Great Britain during the last two and a half years, during which between 70,000 and 80,000 converts were recorded. But even the English work of the American evangelists is only a part of the world-wide revival crusade they have been conducting since 1901, during which nearly 100,000 persons have accepted Christ. This world-revival tour of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander stands without a parallel in the modern history of the Christian Church

Mr. Alexander and Dr. Torrey—the latter is in Germany with his family this summer—return to England in the fall, to hold revival meetings for three more months. In September they will be at Sheffield, where they hope to reach the employees in the great cutlery factories; in October they will be at Plymouth, where tens of thousands of soldiers and sailors have their headquarters. Their work in England will conclude with a carefully planned campaign among the students at Oxford University, in November.

Next December, the evangelists return to America to begin an extended revival campaign in this country. It has just been decided that their first meeting in this new campaign will be held in Toronto, Canada, during January, 1906; and it is possible that they will go from Toronto to Philadelphia, though the matter has not been finally decided.

Readers of this paper are asked to pray for the divine blessing upon the evangelists during their closing work in England, and upon their coming labors in America. Already tens of thousands of Christians all over the world are praying for the work, and that it may be made the means of a still larger spiritual ingathering. Doubtless in these earnest prayers lies the chief reason for the wonderful success that has attended the labors of these men in winning souls.

AN "OPEN DOOR" FOR POLYGAMISTS

Our Immigration Laws Need Amending to Shut Out Those Coming Here From Abroad

TO the average intelligent American citizen it would seem, after a casual reading of our Immigration Laws and Regulations, in which polygamists are classed with anarchists and other obnoxious, dangerous, and undesirable persons, that Mormon missionaries, with their bands of avowed converts, would not be allowed to land in our country. Such a conclusion, however, would be very far from the actual fact. In spite of this law they do land, and proceed unhindered on their way to Utah and other States where polygamy is practiced. They take with them numbers of presumably innocent women and girls, who would shrink with horror from the life awaiting them when they arrive at their destination did they know what "full revelation" means.

To obtain further light on this extraordinary evasion of the laws, a representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD visited the U. S. Commissioner of Immigration, at Ellis Island. On being asked if he did not think that the law relating to polygamists should be stronger, Commissioner Watchorn replied:

"It could not be much weaker. It should be so comprehensive as not to allow a loophole of any kind through which any polygamist could land in this country. The polygamy section should be amplified, as the section regarding anarchists has been amplified. To discover an anarchist, we do not inquire of a man whether he has assassinated a king, or any public official, but what is his belief regarding such acts? A Mormon may never have practiced polygamy, and he may say that he never intends to have but one wife; yet if he believes in polygamy, and admits that belief, he should not be allowed to land in this country. And not one of them should land if I had the power to keep them out."

It is the law, then, which is defective, and not the officials who are slack or negligent. No smooth-tongued proselyter would escape the Commissioner, were he invested with sufficient power in the matter. The law as it now stands is no better than a dead letter on this point. On being asked if any Mormon ever acknowledged to being a polygamist, when questioned, Mr. Watchorn replied:

"No, they will never own up to being polygamists, that is, to practicing plural marriage, and the law as it now stands does not justify us in keeping a man or woman out because of their religious belief. And even if such a belief on their part would prevent their landing, they would not hesitate to disavow it. The law should read in such a way that every person who believes in polygamy could be kept out of our country if he acknowledges such belief."

The Commissioner was asked if, in point of fact, any Mormon had ever been deported under the law as a polygamist. His answer was in the negative.

"They shuffle and evade, in every way," he said, "always declaring they are not polygamists, although always willing to acknowledge themselves Mormons.

"A few Turks have been deported because of their polygamous relations," continued Mr. Watchorn, "but these Orientals did not deny either their belief or practice, and they had nothing to do with the Mormons."

A law which is simply an open door for Mormon polygamists to slip in, and which sends one man back to his own country because he tells the truth, while it allows another to land because he lies, certainly seems to stand in need of "amplifying," to use the Commissioner's own term.

"Would it not be within the scope of the Commissioner's powers to fully explain to the women brought over by Mormon elders from European countries their perils, and to give them at least an opportunity to escape the danger if they so desired?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Watchorn, "if the law were strengthened. This is needed to enable the Immigration Bureau to co-operate effectively in the movement to suppress polygamy.

"I am with you heart and soul," continued the Commissioner; "you cannot put in too strong terms my approbation of this movement. It is a noble effort, and there is not a man in the land worthy of the name, who will not do all he can to back up and strengthen the women in their fight. I study this book," and he laid an emphatic hand upon the copy of the Immigration Laws. "I study it as earnestly as the Christian teacher does his Bible, but I cannot transcend its regulations. It needs strengthening, and I hope it will yet be so amended that by no manner of stretching can a loophole be made large enough through which the most insignificant polygamist may slip into this country."

The Anti-Mormon Campaign Fund

The following additional contributions in aid of the Anti Polygamy Campaign have been received:

Mrs. Frederick Billings	$1 00	Gertrude A. Barrett	1 00
Mrs. F. K. Cushing	08	J. E. Watts	25
Mrs. Albert Bowden	1 00	Mrs. M. Goldsmith	10
Friend, Charlton Depot, Mass	1 00	Mrs. A. M. Boulware	06
J. H. Durfee	1 00	Mrs. Henry Knoch	05
Mrs. Mina A. Lesh	04	Mary E. Hanley	06
Mrs. Susan Rowe	50	Electra J. Crow	50
		Mrs. Robert Bacon	1 00

All contributions in aid of the work, and for defraying the expenses incident to the "Memorial" campaign will be gratefully acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, Associate E[illegible]r

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly, Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRIST[illegible] HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class [illegible]

The Peace Conference

NOW that all the preliminaries have been arranged for the Peace Conference at Portsmouth, between the plenipotentiaries of Japan and Russia, and even the doubters are becoming convinced that peace is at last a probability, the diplomatic wiseacres here and abroad are busily speculating as to the terms that are likely to be agreed upon. Up to the present time, official utterances from the only authoritative source—the Japanese Government—have afforded no light on the matter. But while it is true that the Mikado's government has not announced its claims in formal fashion, there have been intimations from Japanese statesmen that leave little doubt as to the nature and extent of the demands. These will probably be as follows:

1. The retention of Port Arthur and the Liao-Tung Peninsula by Japan for a reasonable period, afterward to be restored to China and Port Arthur declared an open port.
2. The restoration to China of the whole of Manchuria.
3. The recognition of Japanese paramountcy in Korea.
4. The disarmament and neutralization of the port of Vladivostok and the restoration to Japan of the island of Sakhalin.
5. The payment by Russia of an indemnity sufficient to cover Japan's war expenses.

Japan's commanding military and naval position, by virtue of which she is now enabled to dominate Vladivostok and coastal Siberia, will not be relaxed pending the negotiations, although there will be no more battles of importance, unless the Conference should fail. In the latter event, the victorious sons of Nippon will press the war to a point that will involve far heavier territorial sacrifices for Russia than if peace should be concluded now. Oyama's next blow, in all probability, would cut off a tremendous slice of the Czar's Asiatic empire.

One of the gravest and most far-reaching results of the war—which though it does not come within the range of the Conference, will be of more moment to the civilized world than any mere exchange of territory—is the inevitable Japanization of Korea and China. This has already begun. With their resources energetically developed, and their teeming millions awakened to new and vigorous life under the inspiration of Japanese leadership and example, the power and status of these Asiatic peoples will undergo a startling transformation. All the skill and trained diplomacy of the Western nations will be taxed to deal with the new situation, when united Asia assumes the dignity of a real world-power, with the strength and the will to uphold her rights and to maintain the integrity of her soil, which in the last hundred years has been so often a prey to the "barbarians of the West."

An Unusual Reception

ONE of the cities in Ohio was the scene recently of a remarkable demonstration. A gentleman, on his return from a trip around the world, was greeted at the station by a committee representing all classes of citizens, bands played and the air vibrated with the cheers of thousands. The returned traveler, accompanied by a large escort, proceeded through a magnificent "court of honor" to his home. A reception was held, and a loving cup was presented. What was the reason for all this? He had been elected to no public office; he had not returned as conqueror of a stricken field; nor had he done any one of the usual things for which men received honors, medals, or have the joy of seeing their names constantly in the papers.

He had, first of all, been one of the most active citizens of his town, building up her prosperity, and the prosperity of many of her workers. There was not a boy old enough to read that did not know that that man's name stood for business success, business integrity, and interwoven with these such kindness of heart that it seemed to be without limit. It was this man who originated the "welfare movement" for the employees of his great factories, about the largest of their kind in the world. The movement was started twelve years ago. Everything that could make work safe and attractive was provided. Lunch rooms, comfortable chairs and a dormitory were built for the women. The factory buildings were beautified. Vines were trained upon the walls, and lawns were made. Medical treatment was given free. Recesses were arranged for; clubs organized for the girls. At the present time, it is said, no woman leaves her employment except to get married.

The interests of the men have been equally well looked after; and one of their clubs is the lever by which many a municipal reform has been lifted to success. Gardening has been encouraged and prizes have been given for the best results. The city is now called the city beautiful. The factory district, instead of being the most undesirable as in most cities, is one of the attractive residential neighborhoods. Lectures and schools and public entertainments are the best that can be obtained.

In this spot it has been shown that capital and labor, together, can accomplish great good for the community; and the honors bestowed by employees and citizens on the returned traveler, were none too great for the man who has brought this about.

An Open Door to Polygamy

TO those who have been watching the course of the campaign begun by the women of America against polygamy, the extraordinary interview with Immigration Commissioner Watchorn, which we publish elsewhere in this issue, must come with something of the force of a revelation. That official frankly admits that the law of March 3, 1903, which was passed for the purpose of shutting out undesirable aliens from this country, is a dead letter as far as polygamists are concerned. Those clauses of the law that refer to polygamists are inoperative, because they are impossible of practical application.

This is Commissioner Watchorn's own judgment of the law as it stands:

> The law could not be much weaker. It should be so comprehensive as not to allow a loophole of any kind, through which any polygamist could land in this country. The polygamy section should be amplified, as the section regarding anarchists has been amplified. A Mormon may never have practiced polygamy, and he may say that he never intends to have but one wife; yet if he believes in polygamy, and admits that belief, he should not be allowed to land in this country. And not one of them should land if I had the power to keep them out.

Alien polygamists are coming to this country from Europe in large numbers. They come by cabin and steerage. As the result of this loosely-drawn law, which was devised to keep them out, they slip in unhindered. There is not a single instance of a polygamist being excluded, from the time the law was passed until the present moment. It is a law which effectually defeats the very object it was meant to accomplish.

Our Constitution guarantees to all within our borders, freedom of worship and the right to the unmolested enjoyment of their own religion. It would appear, however, from the statement of Commissioner Watchorn, that in the present case these polygamous aliens have ceased to be regarded by the immigration officials as religionists, pure and simple. To the officials, a Mormon is synonymous with a polygamist. He is a constructive offender against the law, and an enemy of our social and domestic system; not because of his religious belief, but because, lurking behind and concealed by that belief, is the secret purpose of polygamy. He comes here to practice polygamy, just as it is being practiced in secret in Utah and other Mormon States at the present time.

That this conclusion as to the particular class of immigrants in question is the outgrowth of experience and observation on the part of the immigration officials, can hardly be doubted. There can be no room for even the shadow of bias in the matter. They know the law better than most men, and they also know the facilities it affords for wholesale violation. It should be the duty of Congress, early in the coming session, to so amend the law of 1903 in this particular, that it will be sufficiently explicit to deter converts to polygamy from coming here. With their religious belief we have nothing to do; but it should be made clear that every man or woman who comes here with even the slightest taint of this moral leprosy, polygamy, is not wanted. Congress must protect the homes of the nation at all costs, from the menace of this most undesirable immigration, which has been flowing hither in a steady stream these last three years.

Conditions in Utah

As Described in the Great Speech by Senator Kea[illegible], Salt Lake City, Utah

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, early in July, i[illegible]rted a notice that anyone desiring a copy of S[illegible]ator Kearns' speech on "Conditions in Utah," [illegible]ould have it by sending to the National League of W[illegible]en's Organizations, as Senator Kearns had placed [illegible]eral hundred thousand copies at the disposal of the N[illegible]onal League.

If there was any doubt as to the interest of Am[illegible]ican citizens in these questions, no one who has seen [illegible]re-sponse to this offer could doubt their interest any l[illegible]ger. The requests for the pamphlet have come from [illegible]ery State in the Union, from cities and rural districts [illegible]rom men and from women, and all earnestly expressing [illegible]heir desire to help in the campaign against the M[illegible]non hierarchy.

Oregon sends many requests for the pamphlet [illegible]ith letters telling of the rapid increase of Mormon res[illegible]nts in that State, and of the strong desire of Gentile res[illegible]nts to prevent the growth of practices which they lo[illegible]on with fear and horror. The letters from many So[illegible]ern States tell of those who have been enticed to Ut[illegible]by Mormon missionaries, and of the strong wish t[illegible]top further work of this kind among those who, th[illegible]gh ignorance, are led to Utah under false representati[illegible].

Canadian men and women write for the speech [illegible]nx-ious to know of conditions in Utah, for as one man w[illegible]s:

> We are fighting the same thing in the Mormon settleme[illegible]in our Northwest territories, and we are hand and heart with [illegible]in the movement.

One lady, an invalid, in a Southern State, writes

> I got Ex-Senator —— to read the letter of the National L[illegible]ue and the Memorial to the crowd at the Fourth of July celeb[illegible]on in our town, and every man and woman there was eager t[illegible]gn the petition. I want Senator Kearns' speech on "Conditi[illegible]in Utah," and our papers will print it. I know something [illegible]he Mormons, for they have been to my house. They got som[illegible]n-verts whom they took to Utah. There is a church and Mi[illegible]on settlement sixty miles from here, and I have learned much [illegible]he heartrending sorrow of some of the wives. Now I say, "L[illegible]ur petition to Congress be strong enough to blot out this evil fore[illegible]."
>
> I am sick, and liable to die any day; but I want to do what [illegible]n to help, and I'm sure this campaign is for good.

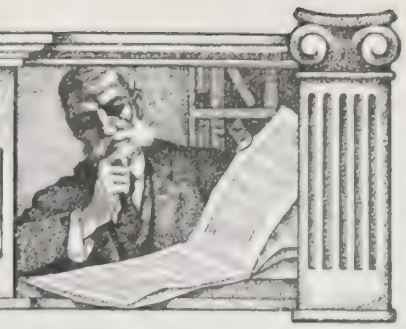
The speech given before the Senate by Senator Ke[illegible]s is the clear statement of a business man who has l[illegible]d many years in Utah; who thoroughly understands co[illegible]i-tions there; who is not an alarmist, but one who see[illegible]e great danger, commercially and politically, that exis[illegible]n the present power and increasing aggression of the M[illegible]-mon hierarchy. He leaves the moral or immoral asp[illegible]s of the case to others to relate. His speech is to busi[illegible]s men, to politicians. It convinces them of the gravit[illegible]f the situation from a point of view which especi[illegible]y appeals to them. It is cool, clear, and without sentim[illegible], being a statement of cold facts.

Senator Kearns has granted the request of the wo[illegible]n of the country, who feel that the removal of this terr[illegible]e blot on our civilization can only be compassed by [illegible]e education of the people as to what it really is, and [illegible]s placed another hundred thousand of these pamphlets [illegible]t their disposal. Until September, they are franked, [illegible]t cost nothing for postage. They are enclosed in an [illegible]-velope, and can be addressed and mailed free. Th[illegible]: who wish to aid in this campaign can do so by distribut[illegible]' this pamphlet on "Conditions in Utah." Every busin[illegible]s man, every teacher, every clergyman should have a co[illegible]. How many will you address? The National League [illegible]' Women's Organizations desires to place them in ev[illegible]e village and town in the United States. Send in y[illegible]r orders for them. You can have them in large or sm[illegible]l numbers as you can use them.

Those who desire to know what Mormonism really [illegible] can learn its inner workings by reading "The Morm[illegible] Menace." It was written by Bishop John D. Lee, t[illegible] official assassin of the Mormon hierarchy, who expiat[illegible] his crimes by death, being shot by order of the Unit[illegible] States Government. He was in prison awaiting executio[illegible] and wrote the history of his whole life, with all t[illegible] secrets of Mormonism, and entrusted it to his attorn[illegible] for publication. He confesses to having nineteen wiv[illegible] and fifty-four children. He married two sisters and th[illegible] mother "for her soul's salvation," he said.

The National League of Women's Organizations [illegible] anxious to have this book in every library and to give [illegible] wide circulation, for its perusal is a revelation of fac[illegible] which will make the work of Mormon missionaries [illegible] little effect. The National League wishes it could di[illegible]- tribute this as freely as the pamphlet, but the publicati[illegible] was expensive. It will fill orders received through reade[illegible] of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one dollar per copy, whi[illegible] is a reduction of a third on publisher's price. Orde[illegible] should be sent to the National League of Women's O[illegible] ganizations, Box 4043, West Philadelphia, Pa., Mr[illegible] Frederic Schoff, Chairman Executive Committee.

The BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

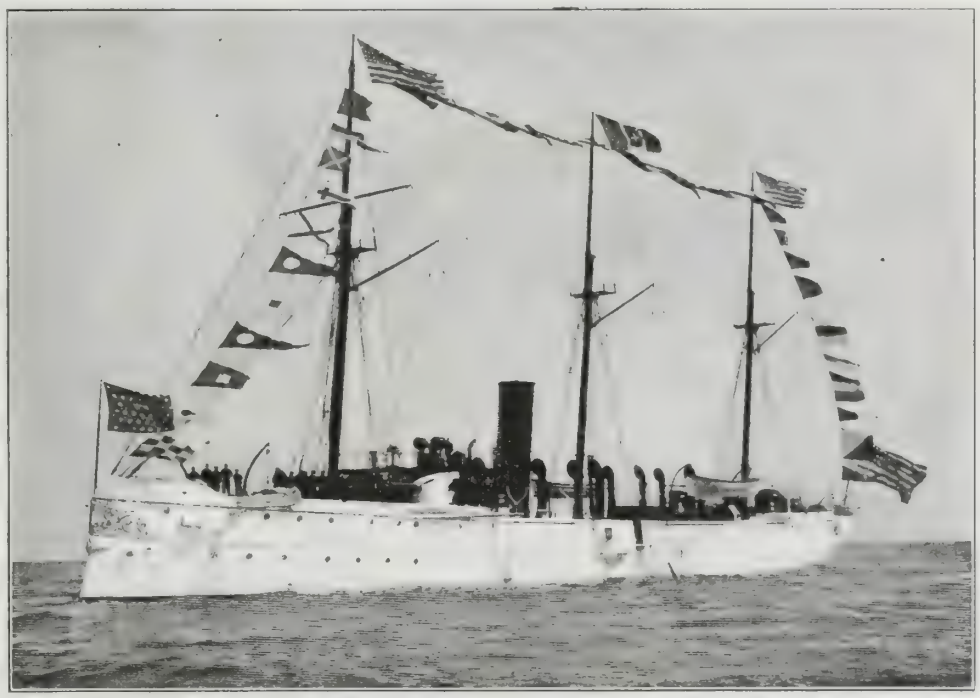


The Naval Horror

SELDOM has a catastrophe occurred on a war vessel of our Navy that has so shocked the country as that on the Bennington, on July 21. The fact that it is charged to the category of preventable cidents, has aroused public feeling, and produced a mand that a thorough investigation be made. At the me of the disaster, the gunboat was at San Diego, lif. She was about to sail for Port Harford, to convy the Monitor Wyoming, which had lost its propeller, the Mare Island Navy Yard to be repaired. Steam s up, and preparations were going on for departure, en there was a deafening explosion. People on ore saw a huge cloud of steam rise from the vessel, umns of water were forced upward, and some dozen llies of sailors were blown into the water. One of m was hurled more than a hundred feet upward by e force of the explosion. When the haze cleared away y few men could be seen on board the ill-fated ves- . Of the 190 men on board, 131 were either killed o right or badly wounded. Hats were at once hurried to e scene to pick up the dead d dying in the waters of the bor. The wounded were ken to the hospitals, where e best attention was tendered em.

On board the Bennington the ne was horrible. Bodies had en forced between stanchions d under debris, some so manged as to be recognizable only by their clothing. Some were ave and their cries added to e terrors of the scene. The ong steel decks were ripped , and there was a hole in the e of the vessel through which e water was pouring in vast lume. The vessel was listing s badly that though the comrtment doors were promptly osed, it was deemed wise to n the vessel into shallow ter to prevent her sinking h all on board. It appeared t there had really been two plosions. One boiler in burstg, had forced another out of place, which in its turn blew , completing the tale of disas- . All kinds of rumors are rrent as to the cause of the astrophe, and as all those o could give authoritative information were killed, are lying in the hospital wounded, it may be some e before the truth is known. One thing, however, clear, that the boiler was defective, otherwise it uld not have exploded, and it is evident that the icers were aware that it was not in good order, as the der had been given to reduce the strain upon it from 0 to 145. Whether there was any one on the vessel mpetent to know the condition of the boiler, and ether its defect should have been discovered at the t inspection, the Board of Inquiry will have to deterine. Secretary Bonaparte promises that the investigtion shall be thorough, that no guilty person shall be itewashed, and none made a scapegoat. It may be ped that the promise will be kept. If so many men ve died through the negligence of any officer, he ould be punished. The divine law is in accord with e national opinion in this.

f the people of the land take a man and set him for their watchn . . . . and the people be not warned and the sword come and e any person from among them, his blood will I require at the tchman's hand (Ezekiel 33 : 2, 6).



THE U. S. GUNBOAT "BENNINGTON," ON WHICH THE RECENT DISASTER OCCURRED

rty Years Separated

A long search for a missing sister has ended in a ppy reunion in Boston, Mass. Early in the sixties a rkingman living in Cambridge, Mass., died, leaving widow and two children, a boy of fifteen and a girl of elve. The boy left school and went to work to add his small earnings to those of his mother, for the support of the family. For nearly four years the three managed to maintain themselves, but at that time the mother caught cold, pneumonia set in and she died. The boy, unable to support his sister, wrote to a relative in the West, asking him to take care of her, until he could make enough money to keep her. The relative consented and the girl went to her new home. The boy came to New York and for some time found it difficult to obtain employment. Eventually he succeeded, but for several years it was hard times with him. Slowly he rose in his service and began to earn a comfortable living. Then he wrote for his sister, but his letters came back to him through the dead letter office. He could not find her or their relatives. Since that time he has continued to make inquiries, but was unable to leave his business for a personal search. Three weeks ago he tried the experiment of inserting an advertisement in a New York newspaper having a country circulation. To his delight, he has received a letter from Boston informing him that his sister, whom he has not seen in forty years, is still living. She is married, and is longing to meet him. Had the boy found time to write periodically to his sister, instead of waiting so long, he would not have had so much difficulty in finding her. There are many who neglect prayer so long, that when they do feel their need of God they have great difficulty in finding him.

They have turned their back unto me and not their face, but in the time of their trouble they will say Arise and save us (Jer. 2: 27).

Honor to an Ancestor

Some curiosity has been excited by a gift from President Roosevelt, which has been sent to Savannah, Ga., to be used for the maintenance of a burial ground at Sunbury, a neighboring village on the banks of the Medway. It has been discovered that the reason for the President's liberality, is that a certain grave in the old cemetery is occupied by the body of Gen. Daniel Stewart, who proves to have been the great-grandfather of the President. General Stewart was a man of importance in the community. He fought in the Revolution, served under Sumpter and Marion, and rendered great service to the State, by the judicious measures he took to protect the frontier against the attacks of the Indians. During the War of 1812, the small seaport was often threatened by the British ships. A committee of safety was organized, and General Stewart took a leading part. This committee had charge of the local defense, and had power to call out the citizens of the county if necessary. They voluntarily repaired and garrisoned the old fort of Sunbury, and gave it the name of Fort Defence. Cannon were mounted, but the little garrison was not called upon to fire a shot. How delighted such a man would be if he knew that his descendant had been chosen head of this great nation. The President does honor to himself in honoring so worthy an ancestor.

His seed shall be mighty in the earth: the generation of the upright shall be blessed (Ps. 112: 2).

Trinkets Cost a Life

In the course of a description of a fire which occurred in Brooklyn a few days ago, a painful incident is mentioned, which shows how a life may be lost for a very slight cause. The fire occurred in a tenement house, the ground floor of which was used as a grocery store. In the early morning hours a person passing by noticed a gleam of light beneath the side door of the house. Pushing it open, he saw that the staircase was on fire. He gave the alarm to the tenants on the three upper stories and then ran to the nearest fire-box and turned in an alarm. The tenants roused one another, and their escape by the staircase being cut off, they took refuge on the fire-escapes, whence they were all safely removed by the firemen. One tenant, however, was missing. He had been seen on the fire-escape on his floor, but had run back to his rooms to save some trinkets he had left behind. There, while searching for them, he was overcome by smoke, and fell to the floor insensible. His body, terribly burned, was found after the fire was brought under control. How foolish we think him in risking his life for a few trinkets, yet how many of us are risking the soul, which is of an infinitely greater value, to gain riches.

What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? (Mark 8: 36).

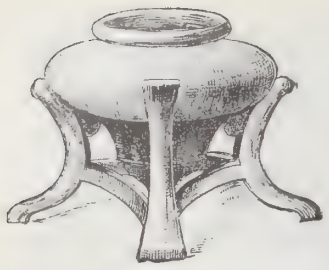
A Fortune on Conditions

An extraordinary will was filed at Pittsburg, Pa., recently. It was made by a maiden lady who was fifty-five years old when she died. After making provision for her relatives by legacies that absorbed half her estate, she leaves the remaining half to a business man of the city, to whom she had been engaged in her youth. The condition she attached to her bequest was that he get a divorce from his wife. It appears that the man left the testator to marry his present wife, and that his former fiancee never forgave the woman he married, who, she believed, must have enticed him away. She never married, and evidently has taken this means of getting revenge. The property she leaves to her former suitor is worth half-a-million dollars, and there is considerable curiosity as to whether he will qualify to receive it by discarding his wife. If he really loves her, the money will not tempt him, large as the sum is. It will be a glory to her if her husband stands the ordeal. She will feel as the apostle felt in describing the surety of God's love for his people.

I am persuaded that neither death nor life . . . nor height nor depth nor any other creature can separate us from the love of God (Romans 8: 38, 39).

BRIEF NOTE

Hearty good wishes for success will go from Christians everywhere, to the officers of the Christian Endeavor [illegible] in the project they have launched for the erection of a memorial building to Dr. F. E. Clark. He has given himself heart and soul to the Christian Endeavor movement, by which all the societies have profited. He has spared neither labor nor money in developing it. It will be a graceful thing to give this signal expression of gratitude to him. A gift of twenty five cents from each Endeavorer is all that is needed and will suffice for the purpose. That it will be gladly and cheerfully given we have no doubt.



AN ORIENTAL BRAZIER

The Unconquerable Book

Sunday School Lesson, By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

THE lesson story suggests that we consider how the Bible has survived the penknife of scepticism and the fire of persecution, but, as the latter is mostly a thing of the past, and the former a present peril, we will treat them in reverse order.

1. The Ineffectual Fires of Persecution. When Moses saw in Mount Horeb a bush that burned and was not consumed, he knew that God must be in it, and turned aside to hear his voice (Exod. 3: 2). By a more wonderful survival of many fires of persecution, the Bible proves God is in it, and if there were no other proof that it is the very Word of God, we should reverently turn aside to hear and heed its message. The mightiest of earth's rulers have vainly sought to destroy the message or messenger of God by fire or sword, or to bind it with chains, or hide it in dungeons. Queen Jezebel sought to silence the living "Voice" of God, Elijah, when he condemned the heathenism of that day by which she exalted sensuality as a religion, but she "went to the dogs," in a literal sense; while Elijah, after delivering the whole counsel of God, went in triumph to heaven. The King of Syria, when he found that God was speaking through Elisha to his foe, the King of Israel, sent an army to silence that living word of God, but the army was smitten with blindness, while the Word of God grew stronger in Elisha's wonderful career.

Jeremiah's written message from God was burned, only to be reproduced in "words that burn," and his spoken message from God another king sought to silence by sending him to the dungeon, but not one whit did fire or prison weaken the coming judgment he proclaimed. The pursued ostrich that hides its head in the sand, thinking to escape its enemy by refusing to see him, is not half so much to blame for his folly as the man endowed with brains, who thinks to escape the judgments of God by refusing to see or hear them, whether he burns or ignores the Bible, whether he imprisons or only avoids God's living messenger. Herodias, unable to hide her own ears from the "Voice" of God in John the Baptist, who condemned her adulterous divorce, successfully plotted to have the head of John cut off, but the silent tongue spoke louder than ever, for when Herod soon after heard of Jesus going about doing miracles, his guilty conscience, God's voice in himself, cried out, as he ran frantically among his servants: "It is John the Baptist whom I beheaded; he is risen from the dead."

The scribes and Pharisees were even less successful when they crucified the living "Word," only to make the cross a sounding-board that threw his words out to the ends of the world. They failed again almost as signally when they caused the arrest of Paul in Jerusalem, only to get him a prisoner's free passage to Rome, the world's capital, which he probably would never have been able to reach at his own charges. There, in prison, about to have his voice silenced by Nero's sword, he wrote the victorious watchword that might well have been the golden text of this lesson, "but the Word of God is not bound" (II Tim. 2: 9).

After a few centuries, the persecutions of pagan Rome were repeated by the Church of Rome, that gathered in England all English Bibles that could be found and burned them in the public squares, and burned the living messengers of a Scriptural faith also by thousands, only to find that the truth could no more be destroyed in the furnace in the new Babylon than in the old. It was those who threw Bibles and Christians into the fires that lost, while the pure faith came out of the fire triumphant, adopting the unconsumed bush of Horeb as its emblem of victory.

There is a Bible in Lucas County, O., which at one time escaped burning by baking. It belongs to Mr. Sheboldt, a native of Bohemia. It was formerly the property of his grandmother, who was a very devout Protestant. During one of those periods when religious persecutions were common in Austria, a law was passed that every Bible in the hands of the people should be surrendered to be burned. Mrs. Sheboldt determined to save hers, and when the party came to search her house, she had just prepared a huge batch of dough for the oven, and, taking her precious Bible, she wrapped the dough around it and quickly deposited it in the oven. Here it was thoroughly baked; but it was saved uninjured from the fiery furnace.

Persecutions by fire and sword have not wholly ceased. Martyrs, as brave as any of old, have been faithful unto death in recent years in Armenia, in China, and in Russia. In the latter country, the Czar's Easter proclamation of toleration, is at least the beginning of the end. It is not likely there will be any renewal of proclamation of persecution in China or anywhere in Asia, with tolerant Japan dominant. Let us hope that even in Turkey, this pagan and mediæval survival of thumb-screw theology will not much longer be tolerated. But mental persecutions, no less painful, such as edicts of toleration cannot touch, will exist so long as sinful hearts hate the truth. Sneers that hurt more than a blow, especially if they must be met daily in home or shop; social ostracism, because one will not join in popular sins; withdrawal of support or salary because of faithful testimony against sins of the rich; scorn of the poor because their vices or violence is justly condemned; these and other forms of persecution remain and are all of them tests needed by the faithful, and also new illustrations of the vain efforts of the sinful to escape condemnation by persecution rather than repentance.

"HE CUT IT WITH THE PENKNIFE AND CAST IT INTO THE FIRE THAT WAS ON THE HEARTH"

2. The Ineffectual Penknife of Scepticism. The chief attacks on the Bible to-day, are not those of persecutors, who would burn it, but of sceptics, who, under the pretense of improving it, would mutilate it, destroying confidence in it all by cutting out the passages that do not suit their fancy, especially the miraculous stories and the judgments against sin. Really the penknives of the sceptics have only served to prove the truth of the Bible, for many of the keenest intellects of the world have attempted to cut up the whole Bible or some part of it, only to prove that not one jot or tittle can be destroyed. After the Tom Paines, and Voltaires, and Wellhausens had all done their worst, such a statesman and scholar as Gladstone could call the Bible, "The Impregnable Rock of Scripture."

So many passages held up in the eighteenth century as errors, were by nineteenth century explorations proved to be wonderfully true, that Greenleaf, the standard authority among lawyers on the laws of evidence, in his great work on The Testimony of the Four Evangelists, declared that it was logical to assume that wherever seems to be an error of Scripture, we should assume it is but another case where fuller knowledge would move the discrepancy. Many of the most scholarly in the world, hold to-day, that in the Bible interprete history, not an error can be proved against it, and that the translations of it have been marvelously, if not mi lously preserved against any material errors. Many scholars hold, that in all its distinctively religious te ings it is divinely true, although they are willing to mit, even before any proof requires it, that it may error in some minor statements of science and histor

The short, sure path to assurance for those too bus study every challenged text, is to climb the "Holy Mou where God says to men of Christ, "Hear ye him." W did Jesus think of the Old Testament? What did he of it? And what did he say of the New? Not alone but reason also assures me that the most rational t any one can do, is to accept as final, whatever was by him whom the civilized world regards as "the pu among the mighty, the mightiest among the pure."

quoted from every part of the Testament, and he quoted its tory as unquestionably true, its l as divine and authoritative. We not need to have a theory of ev passage, though we may well study But he had the whole Old Testam in his hands and heart; it was " Saviour's Bible," and he found fault in it, and therefore I will find fault. He quoted as true the v stories men most sneer at, about No and Lot's wife, and the brazen serp and Jonah, and even quoted an imp catory psalm as messianic.

My faith and my reason both s What he accepted as true cannot absurd, and what he quoted with criticism as a divine word of righte wrath, I will not assume to be an pression of personal cruelty. As the New Testament, Jesus decla that the men who were to write largely from memory of his own wo and deeds, should be "guided into truth." I will, therefore, read whole Bible as guaranteed by hi not to find faults in it, but to find wh God bids me be, and do, and say. will not come to it with open penkn to cut out what a sin-blinded heart m dislike, but with open eyes to find t will of God and do it.

The very best modern illustration this lesson that we have found, is t story of a Russian nobleman unjust accused of treason, in the days Nicholas I. In suppressing a plot the nobles, this innocent man had be sent to prison without a fair trial, a was smarting under the injustice. H was visited on the ninth day by a sy pathetic clergyman who bade him tru in God, and left a Bible. When l was left alone he kicked it across h cell, saying to himself, "If there we a God of Justice, he would not allo me to suffer this unjust imprisonment But in his loneliness after some day fearing he would become insane wit brooding on his wrongs, he picked u the book to while away his time. H eyes fell on the words in the Fiftiet Psalm: "Call upon me in the day trouble; I will deliver thee." The ap propriateness of the text startled and touched him, bu he resented this feeling and threw the Book aside. Bu loneliness again drove him to the Book, and this time h read on and on. He found the Book, as so many hav done, a comforter in sorrow, and gradually accepted th faith and hope and charity it brings to human hearts He became resigned to his lot, and even forgave his ac cusers. Hardly had his mind reached this state of quie trust in God, which he expressed in a triumphant lette to his family, when, one day, the very day he was to b executed, his prison door opened, and there stood th Czar himself, bidding him go free, with abundant recom pense, for intercepted papers had shown another guilty of the offense charged against him. And so a kicked Bible has often come to be a book beloved. And in spite of kicks and penknives and flames, the Bible goes right on in its world conquest, the king-book in the literature of knowledge, and the literature of power.

But let us not forget that we ourselves, like Jeremiah, even though we are not inspired, are to be messengers of God to others in what we write and what we say, and we must not shrink even when the message God gives us is one that will be unwelcome to those to whom he sends us. But let us be careful not to represent our own message as the message of God, and also that there is in our conduct nothing inconsistent with our message.

*International Sunday School Lesson for August 20. Jehoiakim burns the Word of God. Jer. 36: 21-32. Golden Text: "Amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the Lord your God." Jer. 26: 13.

IN MY COOL VERANDA NOOK

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Family Picnics

THE thought of a picnic carries with it something breezy and pleasant, on these hot midsummer days, when we are making such efforts to keep cool. A picnic, of course, involves a little cursion to a grove or a beach, and a meal out-of-doors. he luncheon basket should be furnished with plenty to t, for the picnic appetite may be depended upon to sert its claims, even though at home and at the ordiry daintily spread table, the family come declaring at they cannot eat a single thing. If an early start to be made, it is as well to make some of the preparaons the day before. A ham or tongue should be oiled in time to be cold and firm before it is cut. For ndwiches, ham should either be sliced to an exceeding inness, or else finely chopped and minced. The crust ould be removed from bread, and the slices cut very noothly. Like the ham, they should be very thin. ave a variety of sandwiches. hey may be made of chicken or veal loaf, of lettuce or of jam, cream cheese or peanut butr. They should be carefully icked and wrapped in paraffin per before being carefully coved with a fine napkin.

If the picnic is to be on the ore, and there can be a fire, you ay have clam or fish chowder, or oiled corn, served hot, and hot ffee or tea. Usually, it is as ell to carry a good supply of ld tea along, to have lemons ady squeezed, with the sugar lded for lemonade, and if it is ssible, to take also a generous pply of ice. Thus furnished, ou need not fear that the inner an will fail of sustenance.

Children amuse themselves on picnic and need very little help om their elders. But older peoe, who are beyond the season of aying hide-and-seek among the ees, who do not care for swingg or fishing, and whose romanc love-making was all over long go, ought to provide themselves ith something to do, so that if e picnic begin in the morning d continue all day, time shall t hang heavily. The elderly dy may take her knitting or r book. Somebody whose hair is not yet gray may ring with her an entertaining story and read it aloud.

The minimum of trouble should be considered so far dishes and napkins are concerned. The one may be bark and the other of paper, and all may be reduced ashes before the picnic ground is left. A word is in ason here about leaving a picnic ground in good order. is most thoughtless and unkind to scatter about on round which other people will occupy later, the debris a feast, to leave empty bottles rolling about, and to tter any place with paper-bags and peanuts-shells. A dy housekeeper carries her neat ways wherever she es. Naturally, in busy times, the men of the family nnot often get away for an all-day picnic, but they ay have this pleasure if occasionally there be an exrsion by moonlight. On the Long Island shore, for stance, it is a common thing for families to set out in boat late in the afternoon, find a pleasant spot to take a, and return along the shining track of the waters in e glory of the silver moon.

One of the most delightful festivities the writer can call was a picnic in a garden in a beautiful Western town. The garden was surrounded by a wall of brick, over which luxuriant vines trailed, and there were terraces and beds of lilies and hollyhocks and great clumps of honeysuckle diffusing perfume. Courtly men and gracious women had been invited to the outdoor supper, and from the veranda, from time to time, came the sweet strains of a violin. The hour was a dream of beauty, and fragrance filled the atmosphere.

The Season of Outdoor Festivities

The summer months invite to outdoor pleasure. It would be for the advantage of most of us to make a business of our recreation in the open air. Breakfasts and dinners in the garden are luxuries unattainable by many, because some of us have no gardens, others do not wish the additional fatigue of carrying dishes to and from the kitchen to the arbor or the terrace, and others, alas! reside where mosquitoes abound. But if we have a screened veranda, or a lawn covered by velvet turf, in some happy arcady where mosquitoes have not penetrated, let us try, two or three times a week, to have a family picnic without much elaboration.

A FAMILY PICNIC ON THE BANKS OF THE HUDSON, NEAR NEW YORK

A DIFFERENCE

IT wasn't so much the thing you said,
'Twas the way you looked when you said it;
The scornful lip, and the toss of your head,
And your smile; for a sneer she read it.
You hurt a heart that had need of cheer;
You made a bright day dark,
And—the wing of a dove was drifting near,
You bolted the door of the ark.

There's wonderful help in a gentle word
If the truth of love go with it.
It's like the pool by the angel stirred,
If the strength of faith flow with it.
A tone, a glance, a touch of the hand,
The thought of the common bond,
They aid one on through the desert land
To the rest of the home beyond.

About Answering Letters

MOST of us are sinners in the matter of answering letters. If a letter comes from kindred or stranger it ought to receive the courtesy of a reply as promptly as possible. When one has a very large correspondence and has many things to do besides writing to her friends, there is always the temptation to put aside this duty until a more convenient season. Sometimes questions are asked and the information they require in the answer is lacking. Sometimes there is the good intention to find out what was wanted and send it later. Alas. procrastination is the thief of time.

Letters have a strangely perverse way of slipping under papers and hiding themselves, and consequently they are often forgotten. I suppose we have all read or heard of tragedies due to the failure of letters to reach the person for whom they were meant, or through the failure of the postman in delivering the replies. For instance, I somewhere read of a lady to whom a proposal of marriage was sent in a letter, the man who had been paying her devoted attentions not liking to put the question of questions in person. He was going away on a long journey to engage in work in a foreign land. In the letter he asked her to share his lot, but said, "If you do not love me enough to become my wife. or if you feel that you cannot leave your parents and make a home with me on a distant shore, do not answer this letter at all. I shall understand your silence. Whatever may happen I shall continue to love you." That was all. The letter arrived on a day when the young lady had been seized suddenly with an alarming illness. Somebody thrust it carelessly into a work-basket. By the malevolence of fate that particular work-basket was pushed into a dark corner of a top shelf, and, though the closet was repeatedly cleaned, the basket was always set back again and never investigated. Twenty years passed before, quite by accident, the lady found her lover's letter. She then thought it too late to send him an answer, although she happened to know that he had never married. Perhaps it was just as well. After the lapse of so many years the two would hardly have come together on the footing where they stood in their youth. Both would have formed fixed habits. Habits are hard to break.

Writing on this subject, William Rossetti comments on the marriage of his gifted brother Dante Gabriel, with the beautiful Elizabeth Siddal. The engagement of the poet-artist and his bride lasted more than ten years. He was not twenty-three, and she but seventeen when they first met, and soon loved one another. But Rossetti was thirty-three, and Miss Siddal twenty-seven when they were married. The husband was altogether devoted to the wife. He had no other love except for her, and he was entirely free from coarse and vulgar vices. But he had formed habits of independent living, of inattention to regular hours, and of working fitfully, or for many hours at a time, just as he liked. These ways were opposed to the calm routine of domestic life. The couple lived happily during the two short years that Elizabeth was spared to her husband. She died from an overdose of laudanum, and the poet, in despairing grief, put into her coffin the poems which, during their marriage, he had written under her inspiration. Some years later the casket was opened, and the poems taken out. This seems rather a digression from the subject in hand, but in weather so warm as that of this summer, people who are sitting in a shaded veranda must be pardoned if they wander a little in their talk. One subject always suggests another, and it is never a far cry from writing letters to reading books.

The Present Russian Situation

THE KNIAZ POTEMKIN SHELLING ODESSA

THE above picture of the Kniaz Potemkin, the insurgent Russian warship, shelling Odessa, is one of the first photographs of the event to reach this country. Since the Kniaz was given up to the Roumanian authorities, and the crew dispersed, quiet seems to have been restored in the Black Sea districts. From various parts of the empire, however, come reports of local upheavals, accompanied in many instances with much loss of life. The operations of the Russian Revolutionary party have extended recently to Finland, where a prominent government official has been assassinated.

The Russian army in Manchuria has again been flanked, it is reported, and in consequence, another withdrawal of the Russian troops will probably take place. A dispatch from Gadzgadani, Manchuria, says that two torpedo boat destroyers appeared at the Isthmus of Dekastries, and hoisted the Japanese flag at the lighthouse. Later, a battalion of troops landed to prevent the escape of the Russian garrison from Sakhalin, across the Straits of Tartary. The Isthmus is seven hundred miles north of Vladivostok. The Japanese army intends to advance until a permanent armistice is arranged by the peace envoys, as the Japanese generals say they do not intend to give the Russians time to strengthen their forces while waiting for a peace that may not come. There has been no recent reports from the forces under Oyama; but there can be little doubt that the investment of Vladivostok will soon be a fact instead of a rumor. An ominous silence has always preceded some important move of this general.

The eyes of the world are turned upon the building in the Portsmouth Navy Yard where the Peace Envoys are holding their sessions. The envoys went first to see President Roosevelt at Oyster Bay. They were received with great ceremony, being escorted by a squadron of warships.

AN IDEAL CAMP FOR BOYS

GENERAL A. C. KENYON, manager for a decade of the Kenyon Institution for the training of boys, has proved himself worthy of his title and deserving of the high regard of his fellow-citizens. His summer encampments have won for him the favor of the thousands of lads who have enjoyed them, and the thanks of anxious parents and guardians.

YOUNG BUILDERS AT BOYS' CAMP

The idea of forming boys into military companies originated, it is said, with Capt. William A. Smith of Glasgow, Scotland, in 1883; and General Kenyon organized a brigade in New York in 1892. Henry Drummond, whose Natural Law in the Spiritual World gave his name a lasting fame, saw the value of enlisting the interest of boys in military drill and discipline as a means of moral and religious culture. He urged its importance everywhere. Different denominations have been working with more or less success along this line in every part of our country. Christian and patriotic men in New York saw the fitness of General Kenyon for this special work, and have aided him in his endeavors.

At the present time, the work assumes an interdenominational form, and large experience has resulted in increased effectiveness. General Kenyon's work as instructor in the schools of the Children's Aid Society, has given him large opportunity to become acquainted with the needs of the boys, and very important indeed has been his influence in shaping the destiny of thousands. Clergymen and laymen, noble men and women, have stood faithfully by him and have rejoiced in the success of his undertaking.

Mr. Holly, the proprietor of Brush Island, recognizing the excellence of the General's work in behalf of boys, most cordially placed the island at the disposal of his old friend, and is delighted with the success of the summer camp. There are some twenty acres of land, commanding a fine view of Long Island Sound, as well as inland waters bordered by magnificent residences, excellent fishing, safe bathing and boating, a fine baseball field and drill ground, see-saws, swings and merry go-rounds; three commodious buildings, consisting of mess-house, headquarters and quartermaster's buildings, and, to complete the military appearance of the camp, twenty-five handsome wall tents with fine floors and lockers. Upwards of nine hundred boys enjoyed the advantages of the camp last summer, a considerable number of these remaining through the entire two months.

The musical department has trained a considerable number of the boys in band music, in which many have become proficient. Stereopticon lectures by Rev. E. T. Sanford, who has traveled extensively in the Bible Lands, are an established department, while Chaplain E. Seabury Wheeler, a soldier from New York in the Civil War, regularly looks after the moral tone of the camp. Rev. Messrs. A. Cole, of Millville, N. J., and M. G. Coker, of New York, also contribute by their cheery presence and words to the pleasure and profit of all. The veterans of the Connecticut Soldiers' Home, near by, frequently visit the boys, and relate to attentive listeners the incidents of those days when the integrity of the nation was on trial. The commissary has always provided a satisfactory supply of rations. The rule has ever been, well-cooked food and plenty of it. The water for drinking and culinary purposes is from a deep artesian well, bored into the rock a distance of seventy feet. Special care has been taken to make safe the bathing and boating, in which the boys are permitted to indulge, and to so adjust the proportion of play and camp duty that there should be no good ground for reasonable complaint.

(Rev.) R. S. MacArthur.

The Use of Visions

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 668

Paul's was a vision of the triumphant Christ. And this is what we need to-day, and what there are signs of our getting. We have passed through our period of doubt and negation, and are coming again into a life of certainty. A few years ago Dr. Van Dyke gave us his book called Gospel for an Age of Doubt. A little later Dr. Gordon of Boston gave us his New Epoch for Faith, and the suggestions of both titles are true. We have had our age of doubt, and are not wholly clear from its shadows; but we have unquestionably entered a new epoch for faith, and men in multitudes will again become certain of God. In order that our vision may keep bright and steady, let us adopt Paul's method. His vision was confirmed by his own activity. At the end of his life he was able to say; "I have kept the faith." His brave testimony and his busy ministry guaranteed perpetual brightness in his vision. He wrote to Timothy: "That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep." He gloried in the "faith" once for all delivered unto the saints. This sacred deposit left to the guardianship of the great saints will be kept intact, and the saints' own vision be kept clear, if they fail not in service and in prayer. Above all things we need a new emphasis on the necessity of conversing with God. Says Dr. Robertson Nicoll: "No really great theologian, no really great believer, has ever lived to whom prayer was not infinitely more important than any mere exercise of the intellect." Our Christian life will lose its feebleness, and our spiritual vision lose its dimness if we spend much time in direct communion, and use the strength given in patient, sacrificing service.

History in Mormon Schools

From the Salt Lake Tribune

"I get so filled up with impotent wrath sometimes," said a Gentile schoolmistress of this city to me the other day, "that for a minute or two I can't see straight. We'll do it this way. You play you're my class in history—they're all youngsters. Ready? Now: 'Children, who was the first President of the United States?'"

"George Washington," said I, quite promptly.

She smiled sadly. "Well?" said I.

"That's the right answer," said she, "but it doesn't sound natural to me."

"That's funny," said I; "why not?"

"They always say 'Brigham Young.'"

"They do?"

"Yes. And when I ask them who is the President of the United States now, what do you suppose they tell me?"

"Teddy?" I suggested.

"I can see you're a real tenderfoot in Utah," she smiled. "Their answer is 'Joseph F. Smith.'"

"And you've been teaching in the public schools of Salt Lake for—"

"Fourteen years," she supplied. "Do you see any hope?"

I made further inquiries, and was given to understand that, take the lower grades of the schools running, eight youngsters out of every ten may be depended on to maintain that the first President of the United States surely was Brigham Young, and that the President to-day, is certainly Joseph F. Smith; so thoroughly has Mormonism impregnated the atmosphere.

ROYAL
Baking Powde
is renowned for making finest cake, hot biscuit and rolls. Made from pure grape cream of tartar.

Park Ave. Baptist Church Zobo Band, Paterson, N.

ZOBO
The Musical Wonder
Solid metal (brass finish)
Sample sent Prepaid for 25c.
Everybody Can Play It. No Musical Knowledge Required.
Illustrated Zobo Entertainments for Home, Church Sunday Schools and Missionary Societies sent FREE with each instrument.
STRAUSS MFG. CO., 395 Broadway, Dept. 19, New Yor

The Wonderful new self-heating
Thermalite Ba
Better than a hot water bag because it gives a even, long-continued, vitalizing heat at just the right degree of temperature. It also stores heat, which can be instantly turned on at hour, day or night, summer or winter. Will last for years without filling or renewing of contents. Will not crack or burst at the seams, scalding the user, as so often happens with the hot water bag. Perfected in Germany. Eight recent European highest awards.

John Wanamaker says: "This will be a Thermalite bag in every home in the land."
No. 1. gives heat 3 hours—$1.
No. 2. gives heat 6 hours—$2.
No. 3. gives heat 8 hours—$2.
No. 4. gives heat 10 hours—$3.
Money back if not satisfactory. We deliver post paid on receipt of price if the druggist cannot supply you. Free descriptive book.
THE THERMALITE CO., 164 Elm Street, New York, U. S.

WOODBURY'S SOAP CREAM POWDER DENTAL CR
FOR THE FACE

Into the skin where the irritation starts—not a sticky surface covering—This is one of the features that popularizes Woodbury's Facial Cream.
Send 10 cts. for samples of all four preparations.
The Andrew Jergens Co. Sole Licensee, Cin. O

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief For PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.
Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free
GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

Learn to Knit
An extremely fascinating pastime for pleasure or profit. All it costs for instruction is 15 cents for the new Columbia Book of Yarns 6th edition. The information enables you to knit all kinds of pretty things and shows pictures of 106 different articles. 160 pages, beautifully printed. Worth $1 but sold for 15 cents at dealers' or by mail.
Important to use the best yarns and the book tells why COLUMBIA YARNS are the best and most economical
Look for the Columbia trade mark on the label around every skein.
Columbia Yarns, Philadelphia

NEARLY 700,000 SOLD
CHURCH HYMNS AND GOSPEL SONGS
New Edition—30 cents, by mail; $25 per hundred.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.—Chicago-New York.

MELLIN'S
For the Baby
FOOD

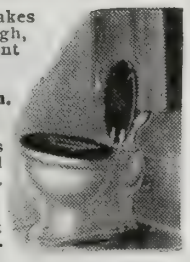
"I give him his Mellin's Food and he sleeps 'til morning." How many mothers can say this of their babies? If your baby does not sleep well it may be that he is not properly fed. A poorly nourished baby is a poor sleeper. Mellin's Food babies are good sleepers. Our book the "Care & Feeding of Infants," sent free of charge.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

NATURO

After 1,000 Years of mistakes you still using the old, high, closet, 17 inches high front rear?



The NATURO is 14 in. in the front and 11½ in rear.

Book F, mailed free, gives further details. Surely you'll write for this important book.

The NATURO is a action Jet, also, the highest section in sanitary earthenware. But send for Book F.

THE NATURO CO., Salem, N.J., U.S.A.

DON'T SHOUT!
"The Morley"

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials.

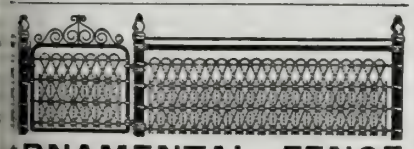
THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E, 34 South 16th St., Philadelphia

PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE
IN JARS AND TUBES.

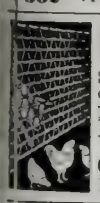
For photo or general use. Dries quickly—never discolors print. Very strong—corners will not curl. Largest tube now sold for 5c. (by mail, 10c.) In bulk for large users, carton work, etc.

L. PAGE'S MUCILAGE
2 oz. size retails 5c.; by mail, 10c.

PAGE'S GLUE—1 oz., 10c.; by gal. 12c., bot. or tube, RUSSIA CEMENT
CO., 154 Essex Avenue, Gloucester, Mass.



ORNAMENTAL FENCE
Overly combining Grace, Strength, and Durability. Moderate in cost. Sold direct to you. Catalogue Free.
302 KITSELMAN BROS., Muncie, Ind.



FENCE Strongest Made
See how closely it is woven. Sold direct to the farmer at factory prices, on 30 Days Free Trial. Your money back if not satisfied. Write today for free Catalogue.
COILED SPRING FENCE COMPANY
Box 47, Winchester, Indiana.

The "Best" Light
is a portable 100 candle power light costing only 2 cts. per week. Makes and burns its own gas. Brighter than electricity or acetylene and cheaper than kerosene. No Dirt. No Grease. No Odor. Over 100 styles. Lighted instantly with a match. Every lamp warranted. Agents wanted everywhere.
THE "BEST" LIGHT CO.
3—70 E. 5th Street, CANTON, OHIO.

GINSENG
Culture is the "Only Way" to make big money on little capital. One acre is worth $25,000 and yields more revenue than a hundred-acre farm. My Co-operative Plan enables you to take life easy and live in comfort on the income from a small garden. Write to-day.
SUTTON, 530 Sherwood Ave., LOUISVILLE, KY.

STARK FRUIT BOOK
shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's. Louisiana, Mo.

PROMINENT MEN OF THE HOUR

Copyright, 1904, by Pach, N. Y.

HON. DANIEL S. LAMONT ADMIRAL SIGSBEE

REAR-ADMIRAL CHARLES DWIGHT SIGSBEE, is at present our most prominent naval officer. He was recently sent to France as commander of the squadron that brought Paul Jones' body to America. The French Government made him a Knight of the Legion of Honor, and bestowed decorations on his officers. It was a portion of Admiral Sigsbee's fleet that convoyed the Peace Envoys of Russia and Japan, to Portsmouth. He entered the navy in 1863, and took part in the battle of Mobile Bay, and in both attacks on Fort Fisher.

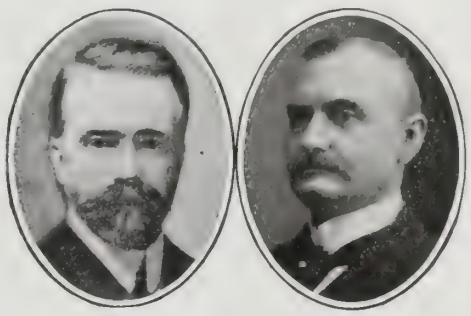
* * *

DANIEL S. LAMONT, who died recently, was one of our most progressive and efficient Secretaries of War. He was born in Cortlandville, N. Y., in 1851. He was educated at Union College, and later became a journalist. In 1885 he became private secretary to President Cleveland, and during Mr. Cleveland's second term became Secretary of War. After Mr. Lamont retired from the public service, he was Vice-President of the Northern Pacific Railway.

DR. LUTHER H. GULICK, Director of Physical Culture in the New York Public Schools, has started a series of investigations and experiments in regard to backward children that are attracting widespread attention. He has found that over 10,000 are mentally deficient, out of an enrollment of 600,000. He believes there is a remedy, and this year will start special classes for their instruction. These classes will not contain more than twenty five pupils each, and an especially qualified teacher will be in charge. Mr. Gulick was appointed Director of Physical Training in New York, two years ago.

* * *

THOMAS F. RYAN is at present of interest to everyone who has a life insurance policy, by reason of his control of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, that has been passing through such a crisis in its affairs. Mr. Ryan has now the controlling interest, it is reported, and people are watching to see what the result will be in the life insurance business. He is a Virginian, but makes his home in New York.



DR. LUTHER H. GULICK THOMAS F. RYAN

Children Help Mont-Lawn

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is in receipt of a number of most interesting letters from little contributors to the Children's Home Fund. Among these are communications from a little brother and sister who live in New Mexico. The little girl writes as follows:

DEAR CHRISTIAN HERALD: I am a girl seven years old. I have read about Mont-Lawn. I want to send you three dollars, for you to use for a little girl seven years old, to go to Mont-Lawn for ten days, out of the heat of New York City. I have a brother six years old, and we play together, and we would not like to be separated, so if you find a girl seven who has a brother six, please let her be the one who gets my three dollars. I would like if you would tell me the name of the girl and the days she will be at Mont-Lawn, so I can have the pleasure of thinking about her the days she is having a nice time. I thank you for giving the pictures of Mont-Lawn in the paper. Your friend,
ANNIE.

The little brother writes:

DEAR CHRISTIAN HERALD:—I want to have the brother of Annie's little girl to go with his sister for a nice time in the country. I am six years old, and if he is six, then I will know about what he likes. I am a little Sunday School boy, and I love Jesus, and I want to make this little boy happy, and I hope if he knows Jesus, and has been asking Jesus to give him this pleasure, that he will believe that my three dollars has come to answer his prayer. Please tell me if you find such a little boy, and what his name is. Good-bye, your friend.
EDWARD.

Glancing down the long list of children's names who have met in the Bible House to start on their journey up the Hudson, aboard the Chrystenah, we find the names of Helen G—— and Arthur G——, two of a family of thirteen children, whose mother has to work very hard to take care of them. Annie and Edward would be very happy indeed could they have seen this little brother and sister, marching away so proudly with the others, joyously chatting and laughing about the good times they would have for the next ten days.

From Sewaren, N. J., comes this letter, addressed to Mont-Lawn Home, care THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

DEAR FRIENDS:—We are two little girls, aged eleven and twelve, and live in Sewaren, N. J., which is on the water. It is usually cool here, and it made us think that while we were enjoying ourselves, the poor city children were suffering from the heat, so we got up an entertainment called "The Fairy's Christmas Joke." We charged five cents admission, and made ten dollars and seventy-five cents. Enclosed is a money-order for that amount, and we hope that it will help to give some children a few weeks' pleasure.
Yours truly, TERESE AND MONA.

Such letters as these gladden the hearts of those who are interested in the Mont-Lawn work, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD wishes to express grateful thanks to these children who have given with such kindliness and from loving hearts. During the long hot days of summer, they will remember the little guests at Mont-Lawn, some of whom, but for their gifts, would have had no holiday this year.

These children, who send their little savings, as many of them do, and those who work for the money, as Terese and Mona did, know the blessedness of giving, and certainly set a beautiful example to those of larger growth.

It costs $3 to send a little weary city child to the Home among the hills; and $21 endows a bed for the whole season, thus ensuring a vacation of ten days each to seven children.

Increasing the Earth's Capacity

Experts have figured that the food-producing area of the United States can be doubled by the solution of the two problems—which engineers alone can solve—drainage and irrigation. Within the area of the United States, Professor Shaler of Harvard University, has estimated that the fields improvable by drainage would add to the tillable area of the country more than 100,000 square miles, with a food-giving value greater than that of the State of Illinois, wherein the producing power of the soil would be far greater than that of any uplands. The complementary process of irrigation promises to afford yet larger gains, including the area of the South and Middle West.—Tech. World.

Get the heating outfit now!—before Winter comes.

Now, before Winter—not then, when it's here—is the time to put in steam or water warming, when makers and fitters are not rushed as in the Fall. Be ready to make your own weather in your own home, store, church, school or hotel—in country or city—at the turn of a valve.

AMERICAN RADIATORS & IDEAL BOILERS

automatically follow the weather up and down—all rooms, nooks and hallways are uniformly, healthfully warmed. Anyone can take care of an IDEAL Boiler. The fire keeps all night—the house is cozily warm in the morning. Any fuel may be used, even to cheapest soft coal screenings. The fuel and labor savings pay for the outfit, which outlasts the building it heats. The freedom from ashes in the living rooms saves much housework. You will need our catalogues to select from—sent free, on request, stating size and kind of building you wish to heat.

AMERICAN RADIATOR COMPANY
Dept. 29. CHICAGO

MAKES GOOD COOKING A PLEASURE
BY USING THE
$2 and Up Easy to Clean O-HI-O Combination Steam Cooker—Baker

Guaranteed to save 50 per cent. in fuel, labor, time and provisions. A whole meal, from soup to dessert, cooked over one burner on any style stove. No intermingling of odors or tastes. Insures you deliciously cooked, easily digested, never spoiled, steaming hot meals. Thirty days' trial. Fine for summer cottages. Grand for Canning Fruit.

Handsomely Illustrated Catalogue FREE.

It Whistles. $1 Cook Book for 4 cts. Postage.
WE WANT GOOD AGENTS.
OHIO COOKER CO., 727 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, O.

TRAINING SCHOOL for CHRISTIAN WORKERS
Prepares women for Christian Work. The full course requires six months and includes Bible Study, English, Commercial, Nursing, and Domestic Science.
A Diploma will be given each person completing the full course and passing satisfactory examination.
POSITIONS GUARANTEED TO GRADUATES
Tuition low and payments may be easy. Only a limited number of students can be received. Commencement dates. Apply to Miss F. M. Gordon, National Training Christian Mission, 21 Third St., N.W. Washington, D.C.

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL
71ST YEAR. Opens Sept. 28, 1905. Day Classes, sessions 2:30 to 6 P. M. Evening Classes, 8 to 10 P.M. Degrees LL.B., LL.M. and J. D. Tuition, $100.
Address L. J. Tompkins, Sec., Washington Sq., New York

CLEAN CUT CAKE TIN
FREE TO AGENTS
Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T.
HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

EDUCATION FREE Gordon Bible and Missionary Training School, Boston, Mass. Address for Catalogues, REV. J. B. THOMAS, D.D., Newton Centre, Mass.

BIBLE PICTURES Send 2c for sample of Beautiful Pictures, Suitable for Sunday School prizes, Class gifts, etc. Mounted on card. CARL RENARD, Rochester, N. Y.

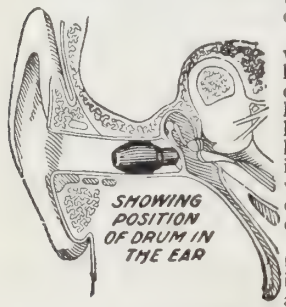
THE DEAF ARE ALWAYS LONESOME

Why Be Deaf When this Remarkable Invention of Mr. Geo. P. Way Can Make You Hear?

No one appreciates the lonesome, miserable existence of the deaf more than Mr. Geo. P. Way, the well-known inventor of the WAY EAR DRUM.

Mr. Way was deaf for over 25 years, and during all this time felt his lonesome position extremely. He was cut off almost entirely from enjoying the society of his fellow-men. He could not even talk to his own family freely and easily as he should like to have done.

About six years ago, Mr. Way, while connected with the Y. M. C. A. of Detroit, in his capacity as chief electrical engineer, made an astonishing discovery.

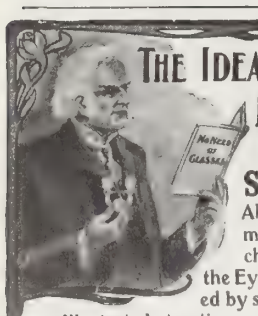


He found a way by which his deafness could be relieved. Patiently and slowly he perfected his invention, working it out on strictly scientific lines.

The result of these years of investigation and research is the WAY EAR DRUM, a remarkable little instrument which makes the deaf to hear, and which has caused thousands to rejoice over the blessing of having their lost hearing restored.

THE WAY EAR DRUM is very small and is placed inside the ear, entirely out of sight. It is made of the softest silk rubber, and is worn with entire comfort. It can scarcely be felt when in position, and no one but yourself need know you are wearing it. And yet this little contrivance makes all the difference in the world to the one who is using it. It enables him to hear distinctly sounds that he could never hear without it.

All who are deaf should write at once to Mr. Geo. P. Way, Room 803 Majestic Building, Detroit, Mich., and he will tell you if in his opinion your hearing can be improved. Do not delay, but write at once, giving all particulars as to the cause and extent of your deafness.



THE IDEAL SIGHT RESTORER

Is Your Sight Failing?

All refractive errors, muscular trouble and chronic diseases of the Eye successfully treated by scientific MASSAGE.

Illustrated treatise with affidavit testimonials free. Address

THE IDEAL COMPANY, 239 Broadway, New York.

No Money Required

until you receive and approve of your bicycle. We ship to anyone on

TEN DAYS FREE TRIAL

Finest guaranteed 1905 Models $10 to $24

with Coaster-Brakes & Puncturelss Tires. 1903 & 1904 Models of Best Makes..... $7 to $12

500 Second-Hand Wheels All makes & Models good as new $3 to $8

GREAT FACTORY CLEARING SALE.

RIDER AGENTS WANTED in each town at good pay. Write at once for catalog and Special Offer.

TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. B 71 CHICAGO

A Visit to Asia's Seven Churches

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 667

Asia Minor from Smyrna to Constantinople. A careful computation of the distance and the time required for this journey shows that the train travels just ten miles an hour, and on reaching any suitable station early in the evening, the train always rests over night. During this journey we passed through two of the remaining Seven Churches of Asia Minor: Sardis, in which there is little of interest to see, but which still retains its site and partly retains its name, as the Turks call the city Sart; Philadelphia, which was one of the more prosperous cities of Asia Minor, and is called at the present time Ala Shehir. The journey across Asia Minor from Smyrna to Constantinople is interesting, because of the beautiful scenery. There are mountains covered with snow to be seen in the distance much of the way, and as one descends from the heights of Old Phrygia to the Sea of Marmora, the canyons, rushing streams and wild hills, remind one of the scenery in Colorado.

The region of ancient Ionia being more civilized than that around Constantinople, European time is used, and one forgets in traveling there, the double time computations that are necessary in Constantinople. At the hotel at Eski Shehir, which is a city in ancient Phrygia, we told the garcon to bring our breakfast at half past eight the next morning. He replied that half past eight was too early, but that he would be willing to bring it at half past nine. An hour or two later it occurred to us that he had, perhaps, understood the order according to Turkish time, and going to the kitchen—for there are no electric bells in these hotels—we found that that was indeed the case, and our order stood—breakfast at a quarter of three the next morning!

Six hours from Eski Shehir there is a valuable meerschaum mine, and beads and pipes made of meerschaum are sold in the hotel at Eski Shehir for small sums, from ten to fifty cents each.

The descent to the Marmora brings the traveler into the picturesque and fruitful environment of Constantinople, back to the region familiar to the travelers of the present time, and adorned during this spring season by all the colors of the rainbow, in its views of sea, and sky, and flowering fields.

WINSOMENESS

MOST successful of all the apostles in the art of soul-winning, Paul gives us the secret of his method. It might imply that he was changeable and set little value on principle, but his life contradicts such an assumption. Deep down in his heart was intense devotion and ardent love for his Lord, firm in his purpose and resolute in his design, was the desire to win souls for him. To this, he was prepared to sacrifice his preferences and to subordinate his cherished habits. "That I might by all means save some," was the aim he set before himself and he counted everything well lost that he might attain that.

The method was successful, and it teaches us a lesson. It is as if a conquering general explained his tactics of approach. To win a citadel, he adapts himself to his surroundings. He studies the attitude and prejudices of his opponents, and as far as he is able, identifies himself with them. He does not open his campaign with a reproof, nor with any proposition that will shock long established principles. But he tries to show them how, proceeding from their position, they may reach something higher and better. To the Jews he talks of Moses and the prophets, showing how Jesus fulfils the law, and is the end of the law. To the Athenians, who despised the Jews, he talks, not of Moses, but of their own poets, and shows that the Gospel is in harmony with the thoughts of their leaders and teachers. To the pagan Galatians he speaks the strong language of men struggling to rise out of degradation, and tells them how they may overcome the lusts of the flesh. To men of all classes and of all creeds, he comes with something that appeals to them, and offers them that which he knows they need.

The lesson is not uncalled for. There are people who approach others like dogs, with growls and gleaming teeth. Their manner is menacing and they breathe out threatenings and warnings. Their first words are directed to show that the person they address is inconsistent and foolish. It may be that there is need for just such treatment, but it should not be the opening of a campaign designed to win such persons. It provokes antagonism and a hostile attitude, which is fatal to the object sought. The old saying that more flies are caught by molasses than by vinegar, applies to the herald of the Cross. The sweetness of disposition that disarms opposition, wins confidence and invites trust. The Christian needs to adopt the tactics of the world, if he would win the worldling. There is no need to surrender principle, no need to say or do anything that is inconsistent with his profession, but at the outset, he should abstain from expressions that indicate patronage or disapproval. More than all, he should wear a smiling face and have a loving heart, lest those whom he would win think that religion sours a man and robs him of his happiness.

All this is on the assumption that the Christian desires to be a soul-winner. And is not that the primary object of the Christian's life? He was converted that he might bring others into the Kingdom. The idea that soul-winning is a business that should be left to the ministry is diametrically opposed to Christ's teaching. "Go home," he said, to one whom he cured, "and show how great things have been done to you." That is his command to those whom he saves. The Christian should be the light, and the joy of the home, the most patient, helpful, cheerful person in it. He may and perhaps must take his pleasure in a different way from the others, but he should show that it is pleasure he takes, and that he gains joy from his faith. And why should he not? He has the highest pleasure this world affords, and pleasure without alloy, while in the next world he has hope of endless delight. How many a husband has been won for Christ by the patience and love of a godly wife; how many men can trace to a cheerful, godly home, the influence that has made them Christians!

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society. Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for Aug. 20. Prov. 15:13-15; 17: 22; I. Cor. 9:19-22.

MECHANIC AND COFFEE

The old Coffee Troubles Left When He Quit.

"Since quitting coffee I am hearty and well at 63 and go to my work every day and feel stronger and better in every way than I used to when I was considerably younger.

"I am a mechanic and have been a great lover of coffee and used it all my life until a few months ago when I made up my mind that it was hurting me. I suffered from constipation, indigestion and kidney troubles and I used to bloat up and have pains in my back.

"Something had to be done, and I quit coffee, the old kind, I mean, and began to use Postum Food Coffee. In a few weeks I was a well man again. My bowels became regular, my food digested comfortably, the bloating, and pains in my back no longer troubled me and my kidneys resumed healthy, normal action. That improved condition remains, I am sure I owe it to Postum Coffee, for I have used no medicine.

"I like Postum much better than the old kind. It seems to be much more satisfying and I and my whole family drink it morning, noon and night. This is my honest statement of what Postum has done for me." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Get the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in every pkg.

PAINT 6 MONTHS TO PAY

You can use all of my paint you need and me in 6 months. My paint is so good that you try 2 FULL GALLONS FR (600 square feet—two coats) on your build before you even decide to buy my paint, a pay the freight, too, on six gallons or over. sides, I give you a straightforward pen and 8-YEAR GUARANTEE. My paint is mad the best materials—but unlike any other pa every ingredient is fresh and freshly groun your order. The pigment and oil come to yo separate cans, and you simply stir them toge and get the full life of every element. Just me how much paint you need or the length, wi and height of your buildings and I will send paint book, a copy of my guarantee, sam colors, and tell you how much your paint will cost. Write now to O. L. Chase.

O. L. Chase The Paint Man

407 A North Sixth St., St. Louis, Mo.

The "Ocularscope" Free

Get Your Glasses at Wholesa

Examine your own eyes without an ocu... Send for our "Ocularscope," the latest inv... tion of the 20th century. Sent Free, with ... beautiful Il... trated Catalo... of spectacles ... eye glasses. Mail order on... Send to-day.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIA...

402 Houseman Building, Grand Rapids, Mich.

RHEUMATISM

Relieved Without Medicine

We Want to Send our Great New External Remedy to Every Sufferer TO TRY FREE.

Send Your Name To-day

Don't take medicine for Rheumatism—Nature provided millions of pores for carrying off impurities, and our new external remedy, Magic Foot Drafts, possesses the power of absorbing through the largest of these pores the uric acid and other poisons which cause rheumatism. Already over 100,000 persons have found relief through this simple, harmless appliance, which it costs you nothing to try if you write at once. Send your name to-day. The Drafts come by return mail. Then if you are satisfied with the benefit received, send us One Dollar. If not, they cost you nothing. The risk is ours. A valuable book on Rheumatism (illustrated in colors) comes free with the trial Drafts. Magic Foot Draft Co., R A 12 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich.

SUMMER HOMES IN GREEN HILLS F...

Vermont and Lake Champl...

Terms, $4 to $10 per week.

New trains between Boston, New York, Spring... and Vermont points. As good as any on the conti... 150-page illustrated brochure mailed free on re... of 6c. in stamps or postage.

Address A. W. ECCLESTONE, So. Pass. A... 385 Broadway, New York City.

BOMOSA BEST GROWN COFFEE

BIG INCOME

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WE...

for getting orders for our Celebrated ... Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, an... tracts. For full particulars and S... Terms address at once Mr. P. B., c...

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA C...

P. O. Box 289. 31-33 Vesey St., New ...

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

Four Little Bee Books FR...

All intensely interesting and helpful in a hundred diffe... ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-...

A. I. ROOT COMPANY, Medina, O...

A DEGENERATE SON

By Mrs. M. Baxter

THOUGH Josiah's son, Jehoiakim, who came to the throne after him, had d the example of a good father, he did il in the sight of the Lord. God sent essengers to warn him, but he took no ed, but continued to worship idols and to nore the holy God. Evidently the lading of the Word of God, which had en re-established by Josiah, was again scontinued, and Judah was going from d to worse (Jer. 35).

But Jeremiah, the prophet, had a mis- n to Jehoiakim whether he would hear whether he would forbear. It was a itical thing to speak to such a king; the ophet took his life in his hand. Jere- iah did not speak or act until he had ceived the express command of God to so. Oh, how often have some of us ne forward in a critical moment, and ted in the light of some former experi- ce, instead of leaning on the Lord at e moment for the right judgment and e right word! And we have found terwards the mistakes we have made. is when we have ceased to trust our- ves that God is able to direct us fully. hoiakim had already reigned four years nen God's word came to Jeremiah: Take thee a roll of a book, and write erein all the words which I have spoken to thee against Israel, and against dah, and against all the nations, from e day I spake unto thee, from the days Josiah even unto this day. It may be at the house of Judah will hear all the il which I purpose to do unto them; at they may return every man from his il way; that I may forgive their ini- ity and their sin" (Jer. 36: 1-13).

Oh, how our God yearns to forgive! dgment is indeed "his strange work" sa. 28: 21). He longs, with all the art of a most loving Father, that his ildren may be reconciled to him. "He th not willingly afflict nor grieve the ildren of men" (Lam. 3: 33), and oh, w he has proved this in giving his only- gotten Son to suffer and to die, that ners, believing, may not perish, but ve everlasting life! So Jeremiah called aruch, the scribe, and dictated to him, d Baruch wrote at his dictation some nsiderable part of this book of Jere- ah. It must have taken some time to ite. It was slow work to write on the pyrus or the parchment rolls which form- the books of those days. How much ese two men of God may have prayed gether for their people at this time, and ayed that the reading of this message m the Lord might be greatly used of m to awaken some at least of the people know their God and renounce their sin!

"Then Jeremiah commanded Baruch, ying, I am shut up; I cannot go into e house of the Lord; therefore, go ou, and read in the roll which thou hast itten from my mouth the words of the rd (not my words) in the ears of the ople in the Lord's house upon the fast- g day, and also thou shalt read them in e ears of all Judah that come out of eir cities." We see by this that the use of the Lord was not "shut up," as the time of Ahaz, and that sufficient ligious liberty still existed, in spite of e re-establishment of idolatry, to make ch a reading of the Lord's words possi- e. Then a fast was proclaimed, no ubt through Jeremiah's influence; and aruch read the roll in the ears of all ople who had been gathered into one of e chambers of the temple (ver. 10).

One young man, Micaiah, grandson of aphan, whose son, Ahikam, had pre- ously befriended Jeremiah (chap. 26: 24) nt down to the king's house, where he und many of the princes, who had evi- ntly not responded to the call issued to tend the fast. Micaiah told them the rds which he had heard read, and a ep impression was made amongst them. the princes sent for Baruch to come and bring the roll with him, and when he was come, they begged him to read it to them. The impression deepened; "they were afraid, both one and another," and one desire took hold of them all, that the king should hear it.

Among the Workers

—The Third Annual Conference of the Training Institute and Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip will be held at Pocono Pines, Pa., August 8 to 14.

—A Summer Conference for Christian workers will be held on Oneida Lake, South Bay, Madison County, N.Y., August 23 to September 3.

—On July 10, the Winona Bible School opened at the Winona Lake Assembly. Dr. Wilbert W. White is conducting the school. The Bible courses are proving especially popular.

—Evangelist E. A. Fergerson writes: "In our Salvation Park Camp-Meeting, at Cincinnati, O., just closed, there were fully nine hundred seekers, nearly all of whom confessed Christ."

—The display of handiwork by the children of Rev. Dr. Sheldon's negro kindergarten at Tennesseetown (which Dr. Sheldon founded in a suburb of Topeka, Kan.), won for the children a silver medal at the St. Louis Fair.

—The Eleventh Annual Winona Bible Conference will be held at Winona Lake, August 20 to 30. It is under the direction of Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, of New York, the well-known evangelist, and with him are associated some of the ablest preachers and teachers of this and other lands.

—Pastor C. C. Haworth, of the Friends Church, Holguin, Cuba, writes that the work there was opened in July, 1902, and in three years there has been much development of interest and a much better understanding of the evangelical doctrines. Almost sixty members have been received, many of whom are proving faithful. The church lately laid the corner-stone of a new church building. Rev. S. Jones, of the Friends Church in Gibara, gave the principal address, and the stone was laid by the Superintendent of Friends Missions in Cuba, Rev. Z. L. Martin.

Chinese Sing Sankey's Hymns

Evangelist Ira D. Sankey, though now incapacitated through blindness from doing active Gospel work, still retains his interest in the efforts that are being put forth, at home and abroad, to win precious souls to the Master. In a letter to The Christian Herald, Mr. Sankey writes:

"In connection with the death of Rev. Hudson Taylor while on his way back to China, it may interest your readers to know that in a letter I have received from Miss Edith Higgs, a young lady of London (a sister of Rev. Thomas Spurgeon's leading deacon at Metropolitan Tabernacle, London), there is the gratifying news that, though I cannot go to those distant lands, my songs are doing good work there for the Lord. Her letter is dated at Lu-an-Lu, Shan-si, and says:

"'I am glad that there is even a slight improvement in Mr. Sankey's health. We are singing his tunes so often to Chinese hymns that we cannot forget him. Perhaps the most familiar to the natives are these: "I am praying for you," "Simply trusting," "Jesus, I will trust thee," "Thou did'st leave thy throne," "In the land of Strangers," "Tell it Out," and "Who is on the Lord's side?" The Chinese are not musical naturally, but quickly pick up these tunes. They often sing for hours if someone leads them.'"

Mr. Sankey is improving in general health.

BABY'S INSTINCT

Shows He Knew What Food to Stick To.

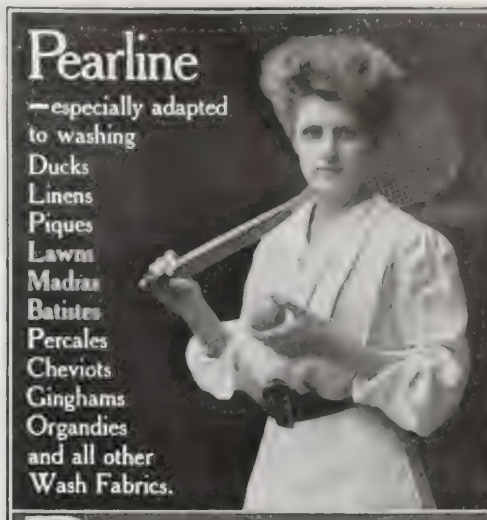
Forwarding a photo of a splendidly handsome and healthy young boy, a happy mother writes from an Ohio town:

"The enclosed picture shows my 4 year old Grape-Nuts boy.

"Since he was 2 years old he has eaten nothing but Grape-Nuts. He demands and gets this food three times a days. This may seem rather unusual, but he does not care for anything else after he has eaten his Grape-Nuts, which he uses with milk or cream, and then he is through with his meal. Even on Thanksgiving Day he refused turkey and all the good things that make up that great dinner, and ate his dish of Grape-Nuts and cream with the best results and none of the evils that the other foolish members of the family experienced.

"He is never sick, has a beautiful complexion, and is considered a very handsome boy. May the Postum Company prosper and long continue to furnish their wholesome food!" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in every pkg.



Pearline —especially adapted to washing Ducks Linens Piques Lawn Madras Batistes Percales Cheviots Ginghams Organdies and all other Wash Fabrics.

SUMMER EXERCISE requires frequent washing of many gowns — Don't wear them out by destructive rubbing with soap and washboard.

Pearline does more than soap can do —WITHOUT RUBBING. That's why the most delicate wash fabrics last twice as long when

Pearline Does the Washing

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

Low Rates West and Northwest

Chicago & North-Western Railway.

The following rates and dates of sale are for strictly first-class round-trip tickets from Chicago, with liberal time limits.

$62.50 To San Francisco, Los Angeles and return. Daily August 6 to 14 account International Conventions Christian Church Special Official Train leaves Chicago, AUGUST 11.

$56.50 To Portland and Puget Sound Points and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$65.00 To Yellowstone Park and return, including stage transportation ($85.00 also includes hotel accommodations in the park). Daily until September 16.

$30.00 To Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colo., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$25.00 To Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colo., and return. Daily August 12 to 14, inclusive.

$20.00 To Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colo., and return. Daily August 30 to September 4, inclusive.

$27.50 To Hot Springs, S. D., and return. $30.70 Deadwood and Lead and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$20.00 To Duluth, Superior and Ashland and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$17.25 To Marquette, Mich., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$16.00 To St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

First-Class Personally Conducted Tours to Portland, California, Utah, Yellowstone Park and Colorado, all expenses included, leave Chicago July 27 and August 10.

CORRESPONDINGLY LOW RATES ARE IN EFFECT FROM ALL POINTS.

For further particulars address

NW572 W. B. KNISKERN, Passenger Traffic Manager, CHICAGO, ILL.

The Best Cooking Range

Sold for Cash or on Monthly Payments.

$10 to $20 saved

Freight Paid

Your money refunded after six months' trial if

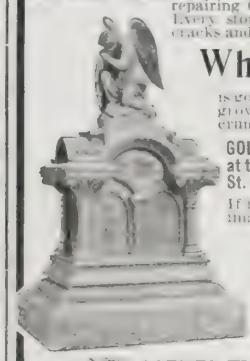
Clapp's Ideal Steel Range

is sent on 30 per cent better than others. My superior [illegible] Fire Pot, which burns coal, coke, chips and [illegible] Range [illegible] a TOP NOTCH Steel Range at a price [illegible] $18 to $25. Send for free catalog [illegible] Five different sizes, with or without [illegible] for [illegible] in [illegible].

CHESTER D. CLAPP, 620 Summit Street, Toledo, Ohio.
(Practical Steel Range Man.)

Thousands of Dollars

have been wasted in Marble headstones now lying flat and overgrown with weeds. Thousands more are being wasted for cleaning, refinishing and repairing Granite monuments. Every stone gets moss-grown, cracks and crumbles.



White Bronze

is good for all time. Moss growth, cracking and crumbling are impossible.

GOLD AND SILVER MEDALS at the Universal Exposition, St. Louis, 1904.

If interested give approximate size you can afford and we will select a variety of

Beautiful Designs,

[illegible] deliver

AGENTS WANTED

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

Of all the famous things made by the National Biscuit Company none surpass Social Tea Biscuit in those high qualities which mark superlative excellence.

Temptingly attractive in appearance, delightfully flavored and touched with sweetness, they meet the demands of every occasion.

They improve a poor dessert, make a good one better, and are just the associate for an afternoon cup of tea.

Serve from the beautiful box—identified by the Trade Mark in red and white on each end of the package.

The old-fashioned Graham Crackers of Dr. Graham were a wholesome article of food, but so tasteless and uninviting that it almost required a prescription to get people to eat them.

Since the National Biscuit Company revolutionized the making and baking of Graham Crackers, everybody eats them and loves them for their own intrinsic goodness.

Take a toothsome munch whenever you feel that way. You'll be surprised at the increased physical comfort and ease with which you perform your tasks.

Protected by their moisture proof package they come from the oven to you in all their original freshness and purity—a gift of health.

Ask for the Graham Crackers of the National Biscuit Company with their Trade Mark in red and white on each end of the package.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Polished 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, AUGUST 16, 1905

VOL. 28—NO. 33. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

SEE PAGE 687

HARVEST-TIME ON A GREAT WESTERN WHEAT FARM

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

Amos K., Pleasant Hill, Md. How many States in the Union are Prohibition?

Kansas, Maine, North Dakota, are full Prohibition, and Iowa all except twenty-five cities, and Tennessee except eight cities. North Carolina and Virginia have had local option since 1903, and South Carolina has a dispensary law for the whole State. Many of the other States have Prohibition territory.

L. L. B., Cawker, Kan. Was Ogier, the Dane, a real person or a character of romance?

He was a character of romance, and is referred to in the Orlando Furioso, of Ariosto, and in the Earthly Paradise by William Morris. He was one of the paladins of Charlemagne, and had a fairy attendant named Morgue and an enchanted horse named Papillon, a magic healing ring and a crown which, when worn, made him forget all his troubles. He slept 200 years, and was awakened to drive the heathen invaders from France, after which he was mysteriously transported to Avalon, the terrestrial paradise. So runs the old-time legend.

T. C. B., Garmond, N. C. 1. Did Jason ever recover the "golden fleece?" 2. What was the "golden fleece?"

1. Yes, he recovered it during his famous Argonaut expedition, by the aid of Medea, daughter of the king of Colchis. 2. The fleece was the wool of a ram upon which Phryxos, son of Athamos, made his escape over the sea when he was about to be killed by his father's order, to appease the gods and allay a famine. When Phryxos reached Colchis, he sacrificed the ram to Zeus and gave the fleece to King Æetes, who hung it on a sacred oak. Roman history, in any good encyclopedia, will give all the information desired in your other questions.

J. W. L., Plymouth, Mass., writes:

In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of July 5, I note your answer to J. G. W., Westfield, Mass., to the question "Is the house in which William Bradford, Governor of Plymouth County was born, still in existence?" For his or her information, I beg to say it is still standing and occupied. I was in it three years ago, and made photographs of it and the church close by where he was baptized.

J. D., Baltimore, Md. Is the record of the Flood confined to the book of Genesis, or can it be found in any other records of remote times?

The earliest secular account is that of Alexander Polyhistor, presented by Josephus, Eusebius and Syncellus. Dr. Stephen H. Peet, in a recent issue of The American Antiquarian, reviews all the earliest authorities and sources of information. He cites Berosus, whose classic writings frequently refer to it, and who says that the Deluge occurred in the reign of Xisuthrus in Chaldea, that king being divinely warned of it in a vision. Xisuthrus, in obedience to the vision, wrote a history of the world's progress up to the date of the Flood, and buried it at a place called Surippak. He then built an ark, and entered it with all his relatives. A Chinese writing, called the "Shu-King" (Dr. Peet informs us), states that in the reign of Emperor Yao (estimated about 2357 B.C.), the land was covered by a great and devastating flood. This writing is a venerated historical work, thousands of years old. Then the Greeks have the familiar classic story of Deucalion's flood; the Phrygians, Syrians, Hindus, Australians, Scandinavians, and even the American Indians, have each their version of the Deluge. We also find it corroborated in some of the oldest Babylonian and Assyrian tablet inscriptions, some of these writings being from 3,000 to 4,000 years old. Modern science no longer disputes the Flood, but contents itself with the claim that it did not extend over the whole earth, but only over that portion of it which was then inhabited, with the valley of the Euphrates and the great Mesopotamian plain as the centre.

A. A. A., Mansfield, O. How do the French pronounce the word "chauffeur?"

It is prononnced sho-fer.

E. H., South Bend, Ind. On what base is the Fahrenheit thermometer graded? Why does he call the freezing point 32 degrees, when the centigrade calls the freezing point zero?

The difference between the zero point and the boiling point of the centigrade scale is divided into 100 equal parts, while the difference between the zero point and the boiling point on the Fahrenheit scale is divided into 212 equal parts. The highest point on both scales is the same, namely, the boiling point. The difference arises in the zero test, which in the centigrade is melting ice, and in the Fahrenheit (which was invented in 1714), the zero was obtained by mixing equal weights of sal-ammonia and snow, which was thought to represent absolute cold; but the Fahrenheit placed in melting ice stands at 32 degrees, hence the point 32 degrees on the Fahrenheit compared to the zero point on the other scales.

F. O., Manitou, Can. 1. Tell us about His star (as in Matt. 2: 2). Some writers say it was a comet, others say it was a meteor, others say it was an angel. Has this star ever been seen since that night? 2. Will it appear in the confusion that is to be among the stars in 1931? Is His star one of the Pleiades or clusters? Where will we see it?

1. This beautiful story of the Star of Bethlehem, has long been the target of erroneous conceptions. The Bible speaks of six kinds of strange lights: sun, moon, stars, planets, lightnings and rainbows. Other lights, whether celestial or terrestrial, they had no names for, and were called simply stars, as northern lights, borealis, shooting stars, comets, etc. Comets and meteors are in the Bible called wandering stars. What the wise men saw was simply a miraculous light, doubtless when alone, as no one else saw it, which indicated to them, by a process unknown to us, that the Saviour was born. As the light had no name, they, of course, had to call it a star. They were in the East when they saw the miracle. East of what? A thing cannot be in the east, unless it is east of something. In this case, east of where they were—Jerusalem. 2. To the second question, I answer Yes, at Bethlehem, where it reappeared, and guided them to the house where the Saviour was. Here, and not elsewhere, was the guiding done.

The nearest star to us (Alpha Centauri), is a bright, first magnitude star, just below our southern horizon, it is distant twenty-four billion miles (24,000,000,000). To count the miles at the rate of five a second and ten hours a day, would take 160,000 years, and car time at forty miles an hour, nearly 67,000,000 years.

Marathon, N. Y. (PROF.) LEWIS SWIFT.

G. H. M., New Haven, Conn. What will be the government of Norway? What is the area and population of Norway? What will the new flag be like?

As Norway has been looking for some one to occupy the throne, it is likely to have a constitutional monarchy. The area of Norway is 124,129 square miles; population 2,240,032. The flag we have seen is a red flag with a blue cross, the perpendicular bar starting from the lower edge one-third of the length from the pole. The blue cross was edged with white. This flag also had a square in the upper corner next the pole, containing the union colors, but this, we understand, has been removed. We do not know if this is the one to which you refer.

Subscriber, Sanford, Fla. If I buy a bill of goods from a merchant and, in making out the bill, he forgets to put down some articles, is it not my duty as a Christian to tell him, and pay for articles not on bill?

To withhold payment for goods received would be dishonest.

Mrs. J. D. H., Eldon, Mo. A friend says the characters mentioned in Bunyan Pilgrim's Progress, represent Christian traits of character. I say, they represent the different kinds of people we meet as we go through this world. Will you please give me your opinion?

They represent not only the various kinds of people that are encountered by one who is striving to lead the Christian life, but also the trials and temptations, the seductive pleasures and the spiritual dangers that surround us on every hand. The book is an allegory, presenting the most vivid, truthful and altogether remarkable panorama of Christian experience that has ever been written for the encouragement of believers.

Reader, Leavenworth, Kan. What is meant by the "death card" of the Japanese soldier?

You probably mean the postal which each soldier wears when going into battle. He fastens to his coat a special postcard provided by the government, announcing the fact of his death, and addressed to the person he desires to be notified. After a battle, these cards are gathered from the bodies of the dead, and are taken to regimental headquarters, where they are stamped with the seal of the regiment, which officially certifies to the fact of death, and mailed to the various addresses.

Reader, Supply, N. C. I belong to one denomination, my husband to another. He is a Sunday School Superintendent and I believe a Christian. Is it my duty to join his church, so that we may both worship together?

If you desire to do so, there is no good reason why you should not do it. It is always the wiser way for husband and wife to worship together, if one is agreeable to make the change. In the present instance it is especially advisable, in view of his active church work, in which you may be able to greatly assist and encourage him. We believe in loyalty to one's denomination, but never to the extent of dividing husband and wife.

Mr. Arthur Meachen, Minneapolis, Minn., sends to THE MAIL-BAG a plea for the creation of small public parks in cities where there are none at present. He writes:

We fill our large cities with young men who have obtained their health and vigor from the fresh air of the country town, and let us in return, as far as possible, give them the same privileges in the cities.

Mrs. David W., Norwalk, O. 1. Dorcas was a pious and charitable Christian widow of Joppa (or Jaffa), whom Peter restored to life. She is mentioned in one passage as "a certain disciple named Tabitha, which, by interpretation, is called Dorcas"—that is, she was probably a Hellenistic Jewess, and was known to the Greeks as Dorcas, and to the Jews as Tabitha. Lois was the maternal grandmother of Timothy, and lived about A. D. 64.

A SERMON ON A NEW HAMPSHIRE MOUNTAIN TOP

Rev. Louis Albert Banks, the well-known preacher, was recently the central figure in a remarkable Gospel service. Pinnacle Mountain is a lofty peak in Grafton, N. H., where Dr. Banks owns a good sized estate and makes his summer home. For several seasons past, he has preached on the mountain top to the assembled farmers and other neighbors, who come in their conveyances from many miles around. Our photograph shows a recent service on "The Pinnacle." There was a goodly attendance and almost every variety of conveyance was represented, including even an ox-cart. The latter was driven up the mountain because the man had an invalid wife, and so took his oxen up to the summit in order that she might hear the sermon. The music for the service was led by a phonograph, which gave a number of sacred songs from famous singers.

Miscellaneous

E. J. M., Fresno, Calif. We have no means of knowing.

G. C. C., Chicago, Ill. The man was a humbug whose advice should not be heeded.

H. E. C., Meeker, Colo. 1. See any Dictionary of Mythology for the Story of Odin. 2. Never heard of the other.

Miss F. F., Junction, Ill., writes to inform an inquiring reader that there is a Drunkards' Wives Home in Kansas City, Kan. Miss Edith Short is the Secretary.

W. G. E., Enderlin, N. Dak. Your friend is probably supersensitive. She seems to have complied as far as possible with the spirit of the law at least. If she is still in doubt, she might write to the Land Office, and state all the facts.

The Anti-Mormon Campaign Fund

The following additional contributions in aid of the Anti-Polygamy Campaign have been received:

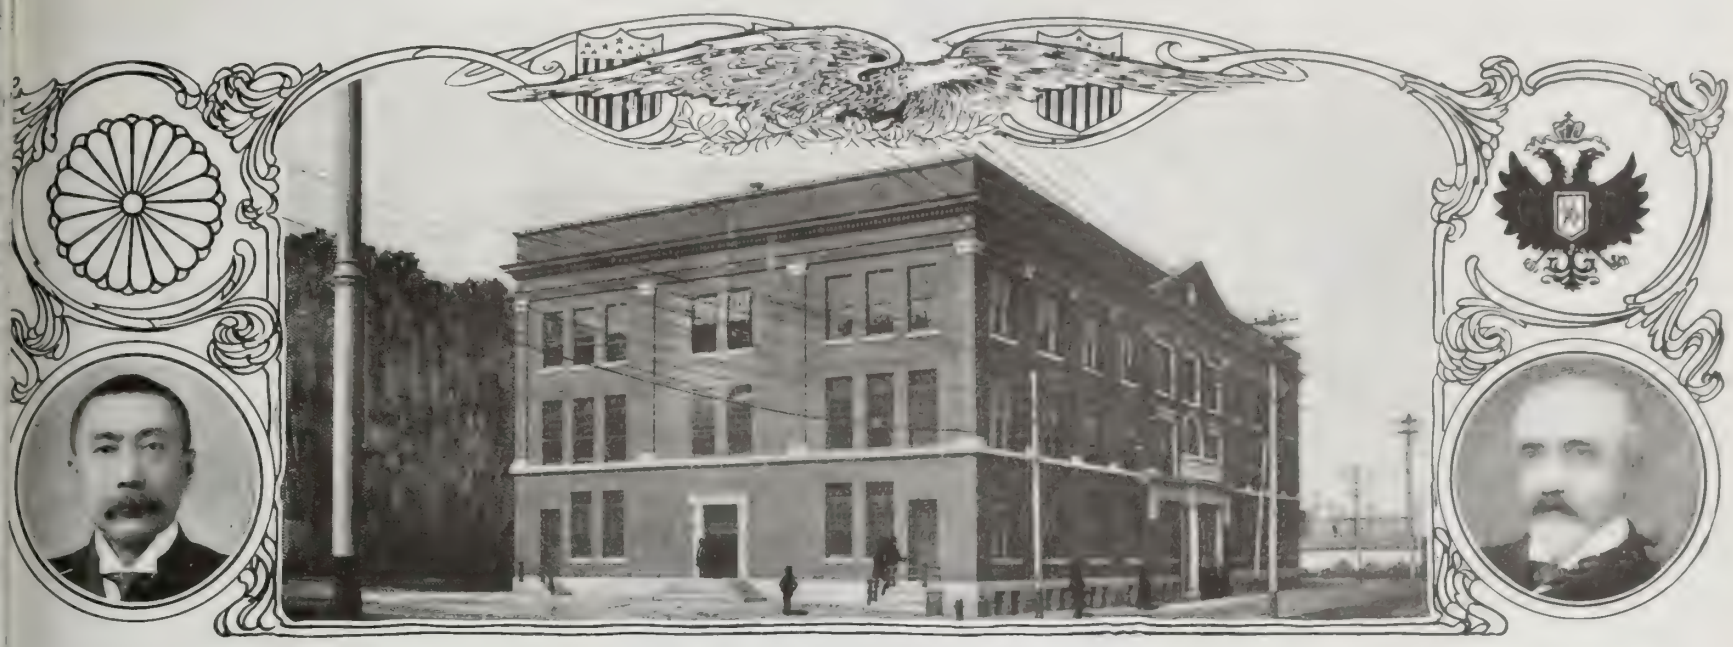
V M Alden	$1 00	Mrs W P Andrus	1 0
Miss F C Robbins	1 00	Mrs E G Graham	0
R W Jones	50	Mrs H C Richmond	1 0
A Subscriber, Shawnee, Okla	10	Mrs C J Fales	0
Mrs P A Decker	08	Miss L A Parker	0
Mrs Chas R French	04	Louisa P Sherrill	0
Mrs M F Fisher	1 00	S A Carman	0
Mrs M E McAdams	50	A H McConahie	0
Mrs M L Romdey	12	Friend, Toledo, Ia.	1
Mrs J B Perkins	04	Mrs A E Murphy	0

All contributions in aid of the work, and for defraying the expenses incident to the "Memorial" campaign, will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 16, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE



MINISTER TAKAHIRA — BUILDING WHERE THE ENVOYS MEET AT PORTSMOUTH — BARON ROSEN

The Peace Conference Begins

THERE is being enacted in this country what is probably the closing scene in the great historic drama that has deluged Manchuria with blood, lowered the prestige of one of the most powerful nations of the Old World, and caused the "rising sun of Japan" to shine so brightly in the constellation of the Powers. In the future no step will be taken in the world's politics without the premiers of the nations first training upon her their diplomatic telescopes, to see if she yet beams brightly or is about to suffer an eclipse.

Despite many rumors to the contrary, there is good ground for hope that the representatives of the warring nations will, in their present conference at Portsmouth, N. H., find the way to terminate the Titanic contest in the Far East. Perhaps even before these lines strike the eyes of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, both Japan and Russia will be turning their attention to the great question not of war, but of the restoration of normal conditions.

The real issues will be settled by M. de Witte, the special representative of the Czar, who took Baron Muravieff's place as plenipotentiary, and Baron Komura, who has been sent here by the Mikado. Each will be assisted by the diplomatic representative of his country at Washington. Baron Komura was the first to arrive, and, accompanied by Minister Takahira, paid a formal visit to President Roosevelt at Oyster Bay, when, without doubt, the President was made acquainted with the general tenor of Japan's conditions.

M. DE WITTE — BARON KOMURA

Baron Komura made a most favorable impression. Although short in stature, he has a most distinguished bearing. His face is that of a student and a thinker.

M. de Witte did not arrive until August 2nd. When he came down the gang plank, the first thing that struck the attention of the waiting crowds, was the great size of the man. He is nearly twice as tall as the envoy from Japan. He was dressed in gray, wore a Panama hat, and Russian boots that reached beneath his trousers to his knees. Calm, dignified, smiling, one would think he came to dictate terms of settlement, rather than to receive them. On the pier was a large delegation of the Slavonic Alliance, which, in accordance with the ancient Russian custom, presented the envoy with a silver salver, on which were placed bread and salt. He was greatly pleased, and the cheering of a crowd of five thousand people who carried small Russian flags, caused him to smile and to bow repeatedly. He seemed somewhat astonished at the warmth of the greeting. On Friday, August 4th, M. de Witte paid a formal visit to the President, at Oyster Bay. He was accompanied by the recently appointed Russian Ambassador, Baron Rosen, who, until the outbreak of hostilities, served in the same capacity at the court of the Emperor of Japan.

A good illustration of the difficulties in the way of the "peacemaker" was shown when the question of precedence came up for settlement. After long consideration it was decided that as Baron Komura arrived first, he should be received first by the President. The whole ceremony of the introduction of the envoys was carried through in the most stately manner. On Saturday morning they were driven to the foot of East Twenty-Third Street, in New York City, where two warships, the Chattanooga and the Tacoma, were waiting. The Japanese embarked on the former, the Russians on the latter. The Chattanooga took the lead by an hour, and proceeded to the entrance of Oyster Bay where the yacht Mayflower, with the President on board, was at anchor. The Japanese waited until the President's flag, with its blue field and spreading eagle, was broken out on the Mayflower and floated proudly from the flagstaff. They then went on board and were soon followed by M. de Witte and his party. As the launches came alongside, there was a puff of smoke from the leading cruiser, and the shores echoed and re-echoed with the seventeen guns of the Ambassador's salute. The President introduced the envoys, who in turn presented their suites. Some time was spent in conversation, and lunch was served. The Japanese at its conclusion, went on board the Dolphin; the President left the Russian party on the Mayflower, and the cannon of the ships booming twenty-one times in his honor as his launch drew away. In the afternoon the Dolphin and the Mayflower set sail, still accompanied by the warships as a guard of honor, for Portsmouth, arriving there Monday morning.

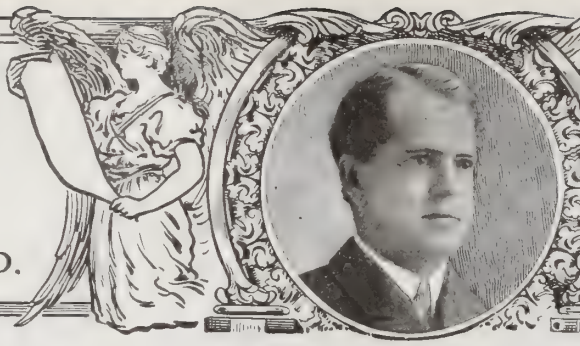
No better setting for such an event could be selected than the ancient and picturesque city that was the scene of so many stirring events in Colonial and Revolutionary days, and has since been the happy hunting-ground of the artist and the novelist. The envoys called on Governor McLane of New Hampshire, who had come

CONTINUED ON PAGE 686

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY

Rev. F. DeWitt Talmage, D.D.



THE CONQUERING CHURCH

TEXT: SOLOMON'S SONG, 6:10:

"Terrible is an army with banners"

DIFFICULT is it "to keep sweet and keep moving," as a poet once wrote. Difficult not to look upon the dark side of life and be impressed by the meannesses and the contemptibleness of men, rather than by man's good qualities and by his nobilities. Almost all people every day of their lives have some injustices or selfishnesses practiced upon them. Unless very careful, we are prone to become pessimistic and to entertain disparaging views of our fellow-men. It may be that the conduct of some with whom we come in contact leads us to think them as worthless as that man whose life Paul Boyton saved a few years ago. Mr. Boyton was spending a few weeks in Atlantic City, on the New Jersey coast. One day the cry of "help!" was raised. A bather, who was a very wealthy man, had been swimming far out beyond the life-lines. Caught in the currents, he was being swept out to sea. Mr. Boyton at once jumped into the water, and, at the peril of his own life, brought this millionaire to shore in an unconscious condition. Next day the rescued man hunted up Paul Boyton. After thanking him for what he had done, he took out of his pocket a big roll of bills. He turned them over and over. Then he put the bills back into his pocket—not one was small enough for his fancy. Then he took out a fifty-cent piece and handed it to the rescuer. "What is that for?" asked the great swimmer. "Why, for saving my life." "Oh," said Boyton. Then the swimmer took out his own pocket-book and counted out forty-nine cents and handed them back to the millionaire. "Here is your change," said he. "For what?" "Why," said Boyton, "you have overpaid me. Any millionaire like you, who would offer a man fifty cents for saving his life, has a soul so mean and small that it is not worth more than a penny, if it is worth even that." It was the reproof of a justly incensed man; but we have to beware, lest under provocations similarly contemptible, we come to entertain too low an estimate of human character as a whole.

Pessimistic Outlook

The pessimistic way in which some of us regard men is very similar to the estimate some of us place upon the spiritual movements of the day, especially those which find expression in the work of the church of the Lord Jesus Christ. We try to honestly and intelligently read "the signs of the times." There we find much to discourage us. We do not see the children of this generation loving the Word of God and the House of God, as did the fathers and mothers of the past generation. We find our Sabbaths looked upon as holidays, instead of holy days. We find the "golden calf" the shrine at which the human race is anxious to worship, and that the saloon is being intrenched everywhere. We find the Bible being driven out of our public schools, and that many of our State colleges have men in their professorial and presidential chairs, who never darken the doors of the church, and whose whole influence, direct and indirect, is to lead their students into the paths of "free thought," and not into the paths converging at the feet of the Lord Jesus Christ. "Yes," some of you say, "it is all well enough to talk about a coming millennium, but where are the signs of its coming? The world is growing darker and darker."

Hope in the Church

Is it, my brother? I would not have you take such a depressed view of things. I am to-day going to take my stand upon the prophecy of my text, I am not only going to show you a vision of a conquering church in the years to come, but a conquering church in the years that are now at hand. Because Paul Boyton saved the life of a millionaire who offered him a fifty-cent piece for his service, it does not follow that all men are misers and ungrateful. Because the morning sun for some of us seems to be obscured by the fog-banks of mist, that does not prove that these mists shall never be cleared away. Listen to the prophecy: "Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners?" exclaims the sacred writer. "This is the church," comes the answer. "This is the conquering church of the Lord Jesus Christ, which shall usher in the millennial morn of a Saviour's earthly enthronment."

The future of the conquering church, in the first place, is not to be estimated by the myriad numbers of her soldiers, nor the costliness of her barracks, nor the lofty altitude of her watch towers, nor the inexhaustible gold of her treasury, nor the sharpness of her steel weapons. The text does not ask: "Who is she that cometh forth, leading on an armed host like that with which the invading conqueror, King Darius, overthrew the Babylonian walls, or like that with which Xerxes bridged the Hellespont, or like that with which Alexander the Great conquered the Persian Empire?" Oh, no. But it does say: "Who is she that cometh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun?" Thus the first great essential of the conquering church of Christ to which I would call your attention, is that she must be "clear as the sun." That means — as all the light and all the heat of the earth come from the great orb which rises in the East, so all the teachings or tenets or beliefs or creeds of the conquering church, must radiate from the Sun of Righteousness, the risen Christ. Christ must be the centre, the circumference, the nadir, the zenith, the beginning and the ending and the all of that conquering church, or there shall be no triumph ahead of her. What the rising sun is to the natural world, the Sun of Righteousness is to the spiritual world.

The Might of the Sun

A true conception of Jesus Christ is as necessary to the church as is the sun's radiance to the earth. Cannot you grasp it? Cannot you discern it in the beautiful panorama you witnessed many years ago, when you arose one morning very early on Mount Washington, to see the sunrise in old New England? You went forth in the darkness and took your position on "Sunrise Point." The whole world seemed dead as you left the hotel piazza. The servants were asleep. The night clerk or the watchman was the only person around to speak to you. The trees, tall and grim in outline, seemed like gigantic highwaymen, with their black hats drawn down over their foreheads, and their black cloaks thrown about their shoulders, under which they were concealing the fatal dirks. Off in the distance, by the dim light of the stars, you could see the mountains sinking lower and still lower, as stepping-stones leading to a gigantic throne. Slowly, almost imperceptibly, the light of the stars dwindled, and the blackness of the night was changed into a dull gray. Then the tops of the eastern hills became rimmed with a golden covering. The sun's head lifted itself as though one of the huge rocks, touched by God's finger, had been changed into a huge, living coal. Higher and higher rose the sun, as the glowing headlight of the oncoming locomotive off in the distance is seen coming out of a Hoosic Tunnel. Lakes become burnished mirrors of light, and the mighty sea off in the distance becomes a reservoir of light, and the rivers, as parts of a great network spread at your feet, become silver threads. The heavens drip with light and the earth is flooded with it. The birds begin to sing and the cocks begin to crow. Off in the distance, the farmers are seen starting for the fields, and the cattle for the pasture. The sun has at last risen, and morning has lighted her many conflagrations. "Who is she that cometh forth as the morning, fair as the moon and clear as the sun?" Cannot you grasp it? The church, the conquering church! The church, clear in her divine beliefs, clear in her conception of Jesus Christ. In order to have a conquering church we must hold fast to Christ, as the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, which is and was and which is to come, the almighty and omnipotent Christ. The conquering church must be clear in reference to her belief in the atonement. What the sun rising in the East and setting in the West is to the natural world, the Sun of Righteousness is to the conquering church.

Promise of Triumph

Do not Christ's own words prove that the more we exalt him the more we shall conquer in his dear name? Read his promise as recorded in the twelfth chapter of John: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." What does that mean? You find the connection between that statement and another in the third chapter of the same book: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of M be lifted up." Methinks I am wandering about in Israelitish camp in the "land of Edom." On acco of the sinful dissatisfaction of the people, God has s them the plague of serpents. We can hear their h everywhere. The people, with clubs, and swords, a spears are killing the serpents by the hundreds and t thousands; but the more they kill, the more the s pents seem to spring up. Suddenly, one of these s pents buries its fangs in the naked leg of a man on t outskirts of the camp. "Come," cry his companio at the brazen serpent which, by God's command, Mos has lifted, and you shall live." But the deadly poison doing its work. Like a man benumbed by the blizzard cold, and determined to lie down in the snow-drifts a sleep, this Hebrew wants to lie down and sleep the sle of death. "Let me alone," he mutters, "let me sleep." His friends rouse him. They beat him to keep up t circulation. But it does no good. Sleep he will. The by main force, as a drowning man is pulled out the surf, they drag him over the sand to the fo of the brazen serpent. "Oh, God!" they cry, "is it t late? Will he not open his eyes and look? Man, yo are dying. Look, look and live." At last, as in drowning stupor, he half way opens his eyes and look A tremor, a life-giving tremor, shoots through his body He has looked, and he will live. So, my friend, th church of the Lord Jesus Christ is to be a conquerin church when she lifts high the Cross.

"Come and Look

To that Cross we must lead, and, if necessary, eve drag, those who are drugged, and poisoned, and stupe fied by their sins. That does not mean that we shoul make a shrine out of a sectarian creed. That does no mean that we should struggle to make Episcopalian out of Methodists, or Presbyterians out of Baptists But it does mean that we shall bring men and women benumbed by sin, no matter how far they have wan dered away from God, back to a Saviour's love and a Saviour's redemption. Hear ye not the divine assurance: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." Oh, God, give us a conquering church, clear as the sun. Make the light of our church shine from the loving, pardoning eyes of Christ, who has died that sinful man might live. "Clear as the sun," ay, clear as the Sun of Righteousness, which will scatter every black mist out of the dark night of every sinful horizon.

Power and Purity

But we cannot picture the conquering church as a great invading army, with her banners flying in the winds and her soldiers singing their hallelujahs of triumph as they tramp along, until we find her "fair as the moon" as well as "clear as the sun." The "queen of night," here offers her symbols, as well as the "golden chariot of the day." The moon has just as much a part to play with the advancing hosts of the conquering church as has the clearness of the sun. As the children of Israel were led through the wilderness, in the long journey of forty years, by the pillar of fire, as well as by the pillar of cloud, so we now find the "fair moon" and the "clear sun" are concomitants. They must move along side by side. They must continually be seen at the same time by a watching world.

Now, where does the moon gather her light? I find this old earth stretching out her arms and warming her body by the blazing fires of the sun's furnaces. When I think of the sun, I picture the old New England Puritan coming in out of the January snow-storm, chilled and cold, and hugging the old-fashioned andirons to get warm. But when I approach the moon, I find she has no fires. Here are only deep caverns and a burnt-out grate. Then I cry out in amazement, "Oh, moon, from whence cometh thy light?" "Man, I am not a blazing furnace like the sun," I hear the moon answer. "I am simply a burnished mirror. All the light I have is reflected back to earth, because the sun's rays beat upon my sides." Then I say to myself, "Oh, yes! I know what the Old Book means when it declares that the conquering church is to be 'clear as the sun' and 'fair as the moon.' It means that the church of the Lord Jesus Christ shall conquer the world for Christ when she does two things: She must preach Jesus and Jesus alone. Secondly, all the members of that future church, in their private lives, must be reflecting the light of the Gospel as found in the life of Jesus Christ."

Most of us see this symbol to our own shame. Oh, moon, thou fair-cheeked, laughing-eyed, golden-lipped moon! O moon, thou beautiful queen of the night, who doth carry no lantern, yet whose face is aglow with light because the sun's rays have kissed thy forehead as the skin of Moses shone when he descended from Mt. Sinai, after talking face to face with God! In every word I speak, every thought that is cradled in my brain, every hope, every desire, every deed, an echo, a reflection of my Saviour's life, who gave up his life that sinful man might live? The moon is speaking to the church members to-day. With her mellowed light she is signaling this message: "Church members: when you preach Christ and live Christ, then Christ's church shall be a conquering church." Men and women, as church members, will you in the daytime be clear as the sun and in the night be fair as the moon, whom God has sent as an evangelist to us to teach us the need of purity.

But we must not stop here. Having a clear-voiced pulpit and a consecrated pew, what shall we find? At once the outside world will begin to crowd the church doors, even as doves flee to their windows. The new converts will come to Christ by the hundreds and the thousands. There is absolutely no doubt about it. The chief reason why men and women are not coming to Christ to-day, is because most of the men of the world believe our profession of religion to be a sham and a mockery. Give us a purified church, and an honest and consistent church membership, and the new converts shall crowd the seats in such numbers that whole communities will be born in a day.

The scenes of a great church triumph, which shall yet be witnessed in our land if church members are true to their discipleship, will be marvelously witnessed in the triumphs of the church of the Lord Jesus Christ in foreign lands. The reason our foreign missionaries are not accomplishing what they should, is not due to their lack of faithfulness and consecration. It is not due to any defect in the doctrine they are preaching. It is due almost entirely to the sinful white man who enters heathen lands alongside of the Christian missionary. With every ship that sets sail from our shores carrying the white man's Bible, there goes also the white man's cask of whiskey and the white man's sins. If the white man were true to God, it would not be fifty years, nor twenty years hence, before the whole world would be captured for Christ.

Now, my friends, as church members, are we ready to start forth this church of ours as a conquering host? Are we ready to say, "Lord, like the moon reflecting the light of the sun, I will from henceforth live for thee and reflect thee"? Are we ready to say, "Lord, I will give myself to thy service in mind and body and spirit, so that wherever I may go and whatever I do, the world at large will say, 'There goes one who has been communing with God,' and I would have his peace and joy"? Are you ready to do this, my brother? Then, wherever you go, you will find not a dead church but a living church. For, like Peter at the Beautiful Gate, in the name of Jesus Christ you shall make men who are spiritual cripples rise up and walk.

May God move us church members, one and all, to resurrect this day our church for his glory and his honor, into the conquering host of an invincible army.

SHUT OUT OF "FREEDOM'S LAND"

"IF there is one thing in which I am interested more than another in connection with my work at Ellis Island," said Immigration Commissioner Watchorn, to a representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who visited him a few days ago, "it is that justice shall be done the immigrants. Not one shall land, if I can avoid it, who is a menace in any way to our country, owing either to physical, moral or mental conditions.

"I think you may be interested in some of the cases which are to come before me this morning. There were twenty yesterday, and only one immigrant passed; the other nineteen are now on their way back to their native land.

"About $100,000,000 were expended last year in this country," he continued, "in caring for alien paupers, and as I do not propose to swell the list, I try and exclude all who are likely to become public charges. The State of New York alone spends $7,000,000 for the support of insane pauper aliens."

Here the first case was called. This proved to be a tall, elderly, rather bony Irishman, who answered the Commissioner's questions with the greatest volubility.

"What does the doctor say about this case?" asked the Commissioner of the record clerk. "Senility," was the answer.

It came out that the old man had been in this country before, and was returning from a protracted visit to Ireland. He had paid his own way, and had a little money left. He had relatives in Ireland, but none here. This much the questioner gathered, by shouting at the top of a very strong pair of lungs, for the old man was quite deaf, although this deficiency was more than made up in his copious speech, as he rambled on with his long story.

"Now, what," asked the Commissioner, turning to the writer, "in your opinion, sent this old fellow here, when all his relatives are in the old country?"

"Probably they got tired having him around, and thought it an easy way to get rid of him," was the answer.

"I guess you are right. He would be sent back but for the fact that a man of means has come forward and given a bond not only to support him, but to produce him at any time when called upon, otherwise he might be an inmate of an almshouse in a short time. So he stays as long as his bondsman is good." And the old man passed out to make room for an interesting family group, consisting of father, mother, and their grown daughter.

"What's the doctor's report?" the Commissioner asked.

"Senility in the case of the man. They have very little money, and they wish to go to the Far West, to a son who works a farm," was the clerk's reply.

TYPICAL CASES BEFORE THE IMMIGRATION TRIBUNAL

Through a Swedish interpreter it was learned that they had paid their own passage and had tickets for the West. The old man glanced apprehensively around the room, while his wife answered the usual questions. She was an honest-faced, thick-set, middle-aged woman, evidently not a stranger to the hardest kind of work, kindly eyed, and dressed with the utmost care and neatness. The daughter was the replica of her mother in everything but years. Her face, youthful and pleasant, was now rosy red, as she stood between father and mother, waiting for the Commissioner's verdict.

THE IMMIGRATION COURT HEARING CASES WITH A VIEW TO DEPORTATION

"What do you think of this case?" again the visitor was asked.

"The old man may be past usefulness," was the reply, "but those women are able and willing to work and will take care of him."

"I think you are right," said the official. "They shall have the opportunity."

Then came several peculiar cases of more or less interest, in which each individual immigrant, by wildness of eye and manner, or by dull, uncomprehending stare, raised very natural doubts as to his mental fitness for citizenship.

Next appeared a little old Scandinavian woman, who instantly, upon entering, became the focus of every eye in the room. Curtsying in the most respectful manner, she stood before the Commissioner, answering his questions through an interpreter. She was dressed in her best, and was neat as a pin; not a hair was out of place under the fine fringed black silk square which covered her head. There was not a speck upon her tightly-fitting brown woollen dress. She was a widow, whose husband died four years ago, leaving her a few thousand dollars. She had had nine children. Three boys were at sea. She did not know from what port they sailed or where they were bound. She had no money now — only a few dollars. Yes, she had children here; some were dead, and some were living in New York, she thought. Poor old soul! They had not come to meet her. She had waited in vain. Her money had evidently been given to her boys at home. Now there was nothing left for her but deportation. She did not understand the Commissioner's decision, which he seemed loathe to give, and which she would be told later; but she trotted hopefully toward the door, where she paused to give a final queer little curtsy.

And so the mill grinds on every day at Ellis Island, the wheat being separated from the chaff of immigration. Many thousands are welcomed to our shores, and go their ways, with high hopes of what the future has in store for them; but every outgoing steamer carries heartaches and heartbreaks within the saddened breasts of little bands of unfortunate deported aliens, who have been turned back when they had reached the very gate of the Land of Promise.

MAYESVILLE, A NEW TUSKEGEE

AT WORK IN THE BLACKSMITH SHOP

BUSY STUDENTS IN THE GIRLS' SEWING CLASS

MOST gratifying are the reports that are now received of the success of the work at the Industrial Institute at Mayesville, S. C. Visitors from the North, who have been there recently, corroborate the statements issued by the management of thorough and efficient practical training that is being given to the pupils. There is order and clear evidence of administrative ability on the part of the faculty, and earnestness, industry and enthusiasm on the part of the young people. The Institute is recognized throughout the district as a boon to the colored race. Some of the pupils who have graduated are now teaching in the public schools of Georgia and South Carolina, which is strong testimony to the excellence of the methods adopted. Others have found ready employment in the trades acquired at the Institute and their employers speak highly of their skill and intelligence.

The enrollment of last session was 522 pupils, of whom 100 were boarders. It would not have been possible to accommodate so many boarders at the low rate charged, but for the small farm attached to the Institute. In spite of doubts and sinister predictions, the farm proves to be a valuable addition to the Institute's resources. Though it comprises little more than fifty acres, it has furnished all the vegetables required for the boarders, besides other produce. It has also been a source of help to the pupils of the Institute. Many boys, who are anxious for an education, but cannot command all the necessary fees, are allowed to make up the deficiency by working on the farm. Certain hours of every day are devoted to farm work, and during the remainder of the day they study in the schools. To do them justice, it must be admitted that these pupils, though given a shorter time to study, usually keep well up with their competitors, who are in the school all day. Whether it is that their work invigorates their minds, or that the intense desire for an education, that incites them to contribute by their labor to its cost, prompts them to more vigorous effort when they do get to their books, is a question. Certain it is that the most hopeful pupils are those that pay half in money and half in labor, for their board and tuition. The same rule applies to the girls as to the boys. All the household work, the cooking, and the cleaning is done by the pupils, who rise at an early hour, and get everything trim and clean and neat before settling down to their studies. Many a young man, getting as a wife a pupil from the Mayesville Institute, will have more reason to be proud of his home and more reason to be thankful for his home comforts, through the training she received in her few years in the Institution. It is a pathetic thing that should appeal to families in the North, that these boys and girls crave so earnestly the advantages that come so easily to white children, that they gladly labor to eke out the small sum demanded by the managers of such an Institution as this. It shows how bitter was the need that the Institute supplies.

We are glad to learn that generous friends in the North, appreciating this effort of the colored race to help their little brothers and sisters, have come to their assistance. The chief difficulty in organizing the technical branch of the work at the Institute, was in raising money to purchase tools. The tools for the blacksmith's shop have now been provided by Mr. Frank Wood, of Boston, Mass. The tools for the carpenter's shop have been given by Mrs. Wm. J. Merwin, of New York. These are kindly acts of true Christian charity, of the best sort. Better than direct gifts of money to needy people, is the generosity that enables a boy to earn his own livelihood. It may be that other friends will follow their example on the girls' side of the house, and that a sewing machine or two may find their way to the Institute in the near future. The success of the effort that has now been clearly demonstrated, encourages the hope that the apparatus needed in the various departments will be furnished, so that the teachers will be able to give the pupils a practical education of the most useful kind.

YOUNG CARPENTERS AT WORK

It is gratifying to know that while these efforts are being made to equip the boys and girls with a secular education, the managers and teachers give special attention to the moral and religious training of their pupils. After all, character is the main hope of the elevation of the race. This fact is thoroughly realized, and a close watch is kept on the development of e[very] child. The Institute is in no sense sectarian, but [re]ligious teaching common to all evangelical denominat[ions] is given, the Bible is studied and sound moral princi[ples] are inculcated.

A conspicuous illustration of this care has been [wit]nessed in the Institute. Among the pupils last year [was] a bright, intelligent boy, who was mischievous to [an] uncommon degree. Singularly studious and succe[ssful] in his work, he was nevertheless so full of animal s[pir]its that his pranks were a source of vexation to [the] teachers, and of trouble for his fellow pupils. He [was] so good humored and merry that it was hard to be [se]vere with him, yet he was continually breaking [the] rules, and violating discipline. At last it bec[ame] necessary to get rid of him for the sake of the oth[ers]. Henry pleaded to be forgiven, and promised amel[ior]ment. Another chance was given him, but with[out] much hope. During the winter there was an opp[or]tunity to hold special services at the Institute. Un[der] the preaching of an earnest friend of the Institut[e], many children were led to consecrate themselves [to] Christ. Among them was Henry, the mischiev[ous] boy. He broke down completely, and seemed tr[uly] changed. This year he has given evidence of his [sin]cerity. No complaints have been brought against h[im], and there is in all the school no more docile, obedi[ent] pupil. He has asked to be employed in the Sund[ay] School as a teacher of the little ones, and has pro[ved] a most valuable help.

There is little doubt that the Institute will eventua[lly] become self-supporting. It has done so much and [is] well under its present management, that there is ev[ery] reason to hope for still further success. At prese[nt] applications for an education are continually be[ing] turned away for lack of funds. Only five dollars [a] month is asked for the board of a pupil, but even th[is] small sum is beyond the means of the parents of so[me] bright children whom it would be a pleasure to adm[it]. Thirty-five dollars for the seven months' term, or h[alf] that sum for the pupils who are willing to work part [of] the day, would give many a child a training that wo[uld] raise him above the idle, loafing, unskilled class [in] which so many of the colored race drift. It is a p[ity] that the opportunity to rise should be denied to a[ll] who desire it, but the funds of such an Institution ha[ve] their limits, and more than one experience of a tre[as]ury absolutely empty, has compelled the managers [of] the Mayesville Institute to be firm in their mod[est] requirements. If the friends of the negro in the Nor[th] will extend their aid, the beneficent work being done [in] the Institution may easily be doubled.

THE PEACE CONFERENCE BEGINS

Continued from page 683

from Concord to receive them. By Tuesday morning all formalities were over, and the envoys met in the building in the Portsmouth Navy Yard, which had been fitted up for the Conference.

It has been known as the general store, but in the future it will be one of the historic buildings, not only of this country, but of the world. All of the proceedings were strictly private, the plenipotentiaries being constantly guarded, and a picket line of marines being stationed about the meeting place.

The navy yard and city have both taken on a most busy air. Never, in the history of the country, have so many prominent journalists been brought together. The papers of St. Petersburg, Berlin, Paris, London, Tokio, and of the American cities, have sent their best writers. Photographers stand on every corner, attempting to get snapshots of the distinguished visitors. The reports sent to St. Petersburg by Russian correspondents, concerning the warm reception accorded the Czar's envoys, has caused a great change of feeling throughout Russia. The Russian papers have been particularly bitter against the people of this country, but now refer to America as the friend of both Russia and Japan, and declare that no better place could have been selected for a fair and impartial conference. M. de Witte said in an inte[r]view: "I need hardly point out, that it is my earnest desi[re] that the two chivalrous foes, who first became acquain[t]ed on the field of battle, may have found in each other [the] sterling qualities, motives powerful enough to cultiva[te] a lasting friendship."

This country can take just pride in the fact th[at] when all Europe hesitated, and was filled with drea[d] she, through her Chief Executive, put forth the oliv[e] branch with such success; for, regardless of the resul[t] it was a great tribute to America to have her invit[a]tion for a Conference accepted.

HARVEST-TIME IN THE WEST

A HARVEST OUTFIT ON A WESTERN FARM

THE GREAT HARVESTER AT WORK

THE harvest time is the period of supreme activity throughout a large proportion of our great West. It is in a sense the climax and test of the whole year's work, and not only does it ccessitate the hardest labor for the farmer and his lpers, as well as for his wife and daughters, but it is a ason of worries and anxieties, for the ever-dreaded rain ay play havoc with the gathering of the sheaves. The ways interesting story of the harvest finds its most turesque portrayal each year on the great wheat ms of the West—sources of the world's food supply. East of the Mississippi, the average farmer has not en wont to put all his eggs in one basket. He raises eat, of course, perhaps putting ny acres into this most imrtant grain; but he also raises it and vegetables. He may ve several fields of corn, and y also give some attention to ck raising and to poultry. Not the "bonanza farmer" of the eat empire. His entire holdg—and it may be as large as a re of Eastern farms—is put into eat and nothing else.

The owner or manager of a big eat farm in the West has his nds full. The only way he n ever hope to get through with s gigantic harvesting successlly, is to make the most careful d detailed plans long in adnce. This is especially necesry, because thousands of acres wheat must be harvested alost simultaneously. Of course, e grain must not be cut ere it ripe, yet, on the other hand, allow it to stand after it has pened, means a loss both in eight and quality. The only ay out of the difficulty is to ovide harvesting outfits so powerful and so numerous at the whole herculean undertaking is accomplished less time than the old-fashioned farmer devoted to eaning the yield from a few small fields.

Most marvelous of all the methods for rapid harvestg is the employment of the ponderous steam harvestrs which are now used, to the exclusion of all slower ilities, in many notable wheat-raising districts, such as e famous San Joaquin Valley, in California. One of ese wonderful machines, cutting a swath eighteen feet ide, will harvest 150 acres per day. Not only does it cut e wheat and thresh it, but in the one operation it also cleans the grain and sacks it. The reader can readily imagine that with a number of these powerful steam harvesters co-operating, no great length of time is required to get in the grain, even on farms where the 5,000 acre wheat field is not unknown. Moreover, it is customary to have two "shifts" of men, so that the harvester does not cease its operations at nightfall; but goes on its devouring way by the light of the moon, or the illumination of torches, and thus, within twenty-four hours the wheat may be shorn from nigh three hundred acres by a single harvester.

The steam harvester, however, requires reasonably level land, and this impels many wheat growers in the more or less hilly country of the Northwest to continue their allegiance to harvesters drawn by horses. These machines, however, would hardly be recognized as even big brothers of the time-honored, crimson-hued threshers that have been a familiar sight, time out of mind, on the small Eastern farms, not one of which requires more than two, or at most four horses for its operation. The up-to-date monarch of the Western wheat fields requires from thirty-two to forty horses to draw it, and when these giants advance several abreast upon the golden stronghold, they clear a path with a width equal to the height of the average church steeple.

A CREW OF HARVEST HANDS AND THEIR FIELD KITCHEN

The thirty to forty-horse harvester ranks with the steam harvester in its ability to save time and labor; it cuts the standing grain, threshes it, throws the straw into a receiver at the back of the machine, and pours the grain into sacks, which men, sitting inside the machine, sew up and toss into wagons driven alongside the harvester as it moves forward, and which in turn hurry the sacks of grain to the elevators or to railroad cars on some nearby siding, to rush the wheat to the flour mills or to the ships that will carry it over sea. One of these harvesters will cut and thresh about forty acres per day. It is not unusual to see diagonal lines of two dozen or perhaps double that number of machines eating their way across the waving yellow sea. Whatever be the means employed, the owner of a bonanza wheat farm can scarcely expect to complete his harvesting in less than ten days.

The farmers of the wheat empire beyond the Mississippi pay each year, to have their wheat harvested, an aggregate of nearly $4,000,000. This goes, for the most part, to an army of upward of fifty thousand harvest hands. Some of these harvest workers are college boys, earning money during the vacation to pay for their education; but most of them are husky young fellows from the towns and villages of the Middle West. They make a business of this harvest work, starting in early in the season in the South and gradually working northward, so that they manage to keep busy during the greater part of the summer. Sometimes the wages paid reach as high as $5 per day, but $2 per day and board is the usual rate. The thrifty hand can save practically all his money.

Harvest time makes much extra work for the women folk on a great wheat ranch. The owner of a wheat farm that is too big for one man to look after, has his lieutenants or division superintendents to direct the work of the various harvesting crews, and these officers of the grain-gathering army are usually entertained at the ranch house. The rank and file of the harvest hands "camp out" around kitchens on wheels, which are moved from place to place, after the fashion of gypsy habitations, as the crews travel from one farm to another.

WALDON FAWCETT.

THE MORMON BLOT ON OUR CIVILIZATION

IT is more than passing strange, living as we do in this wonderful twentieth century—when progress, philanthropy, universal education, and the betterment of humanity generally distinguish it, is an epoch in the history of the world—that so little is known, or might say realized, of the great Mormon blot on our air civilization. We experience spasmodic movements, now and then, towards the extinction of polygamy. The women of the various large women's organizations have worked hard and with acute intelligence and insight to bring the true situation to the attention of the American people, the most recent action focussing about the attempt to prevent the seating of Reed Smoot in our United States Senate. But, ever and anon, these movements die out, not because the zeal of the good women lags or grows aweary, but because the powers that be are so wound about with red tape that definite action is stayed. The votes in the Electoral College, controlled by the Mormons, have to be considered. If it were not a political question, how long would polygamy live and grow under the American government? Especially now that reform in the marriage relation is so much talked about, press and pulpit everywhere cooperating in the condemnation of the great divorce evil that threatens to undermine the bulwarks of our national home life. Reprehensible as divorce may be, it is moral, compared with the marital conditions obtaining in the Mormon States. In one of these States, in a district school of fifty pupils, forty-five are the children of one man, the teacher bearing witness of their mental, moral and physical degeneracy. Divorce at least seeks to comply with the civil laws of the various States; polygamy defies, evades, and eludes the law of our government. To fight an open foe is easy, but to rout a secret enemy that is dodging and lurking behind every shadow for concealment and protection, is quite another matter.

. . .

Though the issue be resolved into one of politics and policy, it cannot be that the moral horizon of the American people is so befogged that they will sit complacently by, and allow this question of the extinction of polygamy to remain unsolved. It is quite true that many believe the law is complied with, and polygamy is a thing of the past. A very superficial investigation will prove to the contrary. The complete subjugation and tyranny under which the Mormon subjects are held, insure secrecy. Any complaint or revolt against conditions, is summarily dealt with and worse follows. Even the Gentiles living in their midst, dare not openly betray the actual facts. Help must come from the outside; there is not strength enough within to reform the situation.

That so revolting a theory of life should be called a religion is one of its saddest attributes. To read such a meaning into our holy scriptures, would be to pervert the kingdom of God.

We may each and all do our best in thought and prayer to fight the sin of Utah and her sisters in shame.

Bridgeport, Conn. LILLIE L. P. BRONK.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter.

Money Mad

OUR country appears to be passing through an epidemic of financial crookedness. Scarcely a day passes without a startling exposure of swindling, or rumors hastily suppressed of peculation on a gigantic scale. There has been a plethora of money, and where the carcass is, there the eagles are gathered together. The poor man who tries to borrow a hundred dollars to tide him over some period of domestic stringency, is amazed at the ease with which bold operators get possession of thousands. Dignified and judicious blackmail, the manipulation of official reports, struggles for seats at a Board where there are opportunities for controlling a huge surplus—all these methods, in addition to the old vulgar plan of defalcation and flight, with which we have long been familiar, find their votaries in these days. To get money, honestly if possible, but to get money, is the supreme and overmastering passion of our time.

The struggling storekeeper and the plodding clerk look with dissatisfaction at their modest savings, as they read of a man who clears as much in a day as they do in a year. These brilliant successes breed a contempt for honest work that is not good for the national health. So the plodder proceeds from his work to speculation, and, like other gamblers, he believes that if he can keep in the game, he will win in the end. So his own money goes, the money he has reserved for his wife and children in case of his death follows, and still the demand continues. Then if he happens to be the custodian of trust-funds, or if he has access to money belonging to other people, he must pass through an ordeal. The temptation to borrow some is fierce. He calls it borrowing, because he intends to replace it from his winnings. But if he loses, as is probable, then he is branded as a defaulter. A single turn of the market may save him and none will know. But even if that happens, if the crime be concealed, it is a crime still, known to God and to himself. The curse of the prophet follows him: "He that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end, shall be a fool." It is an old trouble, old as the days of avarice, but it has culminated in our time.

Is there no remedy for a craze that produces such ruinous results? Must the idol Mammon claim its victims in every age? Not till we change our ideals, our methods of education, can we hope for relief. Only when our children learn in the home and in the schools that character is higher than riches, that a man is more than his possessions, that there are things more to be desired than wealth, can we hope for improvement. The race will be no poorer then. The money that changes hands in Wall Street, like the money passed at the race course, brings no gain to the world. By so much as one becomes richer, another must become poorer. It is only by production, never by speculation, that the world's wealth increases. It is the struggle of the dog for the other dog's bone, and not till men rise from the animal into the glorious liberty of the children of God, shall we see the end of this soul-destroying conflict.

Should Smoot Resign?

FROM Salt Lake City the intimation comes that Reed Smoot, the Apostle of the polygamous Mormon hierarchy, is contemplating resignation from the United States Senate. It is more than hinted, in the Salt Lake Tribune's article quoted elsewhere, that the leaders are convinced that not Smoot alone, but the whole fabric of the false and un-American hierarchy—whose rule-or-ruin domination has become intolerable in Utah—is in peril. They fear that with the fall of Smoot the pillar, the entire structure may topple with a crash in general ruin. President Smith and the rest of this remarkable aggregation of mediæval humbugs, are represented as almost panic-stricken and ready to sacrifice the Senatorial Apostle to popular indignation, in order to avert the greater disaster.

This conjecture that Smoot thinks of retiring may or may not be well founded. Few men, however bold, would care to stand in the open, in defense of an unworthy cause, and face the onset of a vast army of resolute and righteously indignant women. Should he really conclude that discretion is the better part of valor, and abandon the field, his "voluntary retirement" would scarcely come as a surprise to those who have watched the course of recent events. He might pass into obscurity with the halo of martyrdom on his brows without raising a ripple of excitement. He is merely an incident—a step by the way over which the mighty procession is now passing. The most surprising thing about the whole matter is that the sovereign people of Utah should not have shaken off the oppressive grasp of the un-American, unpatriotic, polygamous hierarchy long ago.

But whether Senator Smoot retires under fire or remains to demonstrate his courage at the moment of the critical shock when the forces meet, is not now material. Soon or late, the result will be the same. There is an end to all things that are at war with public morality, good government, sound patriotism, and common sense. The Mormon hierarchy, as Lincoln would have said, cannot fool even all the people of Utah all the time, much less the whole American nation; and it does not need the prescient eye of a prophet, nor the occult skill of a revelator, to foresee the end of all of its political plots, its daring immoralities and its picturesque mountebankism. In the calm and dispassionate judgment of the American public it stands self-condemned. Smoot may be made a scapegoat, but even his sacrifice will not avail to save the tottering hierarchy. Only those who are stubbornly blind will fail to see the handwriting upon the wall.

The Cost of Funerals

UNFORTUNATELY, nothing in life is so expensive as death. Even flowers, which in summer may be found by the handful in gardens and fields, are almost worth their weight in gold when they are needed for the coffin or the grave. Every separate item about a funeral, from the casket which holds the remains, to the cemetery lot in which they are laid, is of a costliness disproportionate to other functions in life. The house of mourning is much more expensive than the house of feasting. If the bereaved lay aside their ordinary clothing and assume garments of gloom, these, too, cost large sums of money.

The rich have no monopoly of expense in funerals. A poor family often uses up in the last obsequies almost the entire amount of a scanty provision which a deceased husband has made by great self-denial. Remonstrating with a widow who sat in a very lowly and poverty-stricken home, with five little children clinging wofully about her, a visitor said, "Do not spend quite so much on John's funeral, Annie. You will need the money to pay your rent and buy food. John would not like the waste and show." The answer came quickly. "It's all I can do for John. I could never hold my head up among my neighbors if I gave him a stingy funeral."

Ostentation and vanity may clasp hands above the vacant chair in the home of poverty quite as cordially as in the home of wealth. In the one particular of flowers at funerals, we have gone very far beyond the beauty of simplicity. A few loose flowers, laid by loving hands on a coffin-lid are in good taste; but stacks of flowers stuck on wires and tortured into diversified shapes, with mottoes and sentiments inscribed upon them, are simply tokens of glaring display.

Our Shaker friends go too far in another extreme. In their retired lives spent in monastic seclusion, they often survive to extreme age. Death apparently forgets them and slips past their homely habitations, while he enters other and more beautiful earthly residences. But at last, in some midnight or some gray dawn, he takes away a brother John or a sister Eunice, and in that singular and ascetic family life of the good Shakers there is a vacant chair. A coffin is nailed together of plain pine boards, a pall is made of cheap black muslin, and the body is lowered into a grave which costs nothing for digging except the labor of fraternal hands. The monument, such as it is, is of the most inexpensive sort, containing only a name and a date. Something between this almost squalid austerity and the lavish profusion of the world would strike a wiser balance in the matter of the funeral. It ca[n]ot be right that it should take years of crippled financ[e] on the part of a home to pay the accounts contracted [for] a funeral. Love makes no such demand. Death sh[ould] not so mortgage life.

The best way to remember those who have left [us] to take up their work and carry it on. Whatever [they] wished to do, let us do in their stead, so far as it [is] our power.

Among the Workers

—MRS. J. ELLEN FOSTER is now traveling in Jap[an], China and India. She was lately in the Philippines [with] Secretary Taft's party.

—CHARLES M. ALEXANDER, the singing evange[list], who has been conducting revival services with [R. A.] Torrey, in Australia and Great Britain, is now assist[ing] at East Northfield, where his singing is an attract[ive] feature of the Gospel gatherings.

—DR. GRENFELL, of the Labrador Mission, lately co[m]pleted the erection of a small mission hospital in conn[ec]tion with his work, the cost being defrayed by a gener[ous] donation of $5,000 from a friend of the mission. Th[ere] is no doctor within five hundred miles of the miss[ion] station.

—ROSE HARRIET PASTOR, the East Side Jewish wo[rk]ing-girl, and Mr. James G. Phelps Stokes, the wealt[hy] philanthropist and sociologist, were married at Noroto[n], Conn., on July 18. They will continue their settlem[ent] work in New York, through which the young cou[ple] first became acquainted.

—MISS LAURA OEHME, a missionary of the "C. and A.," at Wuchow, China, writes to a friend in Lanc[as]ter, Pa., an interesting account of a boat journey on t[he] Fu River, in Kuang-Si province. Thirty-five missio[na]ries lately met in conference at Wuchow, where t[he] Gospel is making excellent progress.

—THE FOURTH INTERNATIONAL Summer Traini[ng] School for Sunday School Workers opened at Wino[na] Lake, Ind., August 7, and closes August 19. The d[is]trict includes the Sunday School Associations of Mich[i]gan, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Ontario and Kentuck[y]. The school has been permanently established at Winon[a] Lake. It is open without tuition fee to Sunday Scho[ol] workers.

WILL SMOOT RESIGN?

From the Salt Lake Tribune

WORD comes to The Tribune that Apostle Smoot and h[is] master, the chief of the Mormon Church, have at la[st] arrived at a realization of Smoot's actual peril before th[e] country, and that they are raking their brains for some plan b[y] which he may be saved from expulsion—with resignation as h[is] only alternative so far apparent.

The women of the United States are responsible for the hie[r]arch's present fear. Representatives of the leading organization[s] and of the great alliance of organizations in this country, hav[e] made a careful inquiry into, and a conservative statement of th[e] grounds of objection to Apostle Smoot as a Senator. THE CHRIS[TIAN] HERALD, acting for the wives and mothers of the land, ha[s] spread the information to millions of homes, and in its latest issu[e] says that signatures to the Memorial praying for the unseating o[f] Smoot continue to pour into its office. THE CHRISTIAN HERAL[D] adds: "With these lists come letters which tell in unmistakable terms how deep is the feeling of women all over the country against polygamy, and especially against one who upholds the monstrous doctrine taking his place among those who make the laws of our blessed land."

What the apostle-Senator and the chief of the church would not grant as a service to the State of Utah, as a benefit to the Mormon people everywhere, as a concession to the sentiment of the nation at large, they may grant from a sense of fear of the consequences soon to ensue. From the beginning of Reed Smoot's candidacy for the Senate until this hour, the warning has been plainly before the hierarchy concerning the dangers, and even the certain disasters attendant upon the gratification of his selfish ambition. There has never been a time when patriotism did not demand his retirement from the field. With the warning given by the President of the United States before his election, he should have vacated his candidacy, knowing well that tribulation would flow unto Utah if he persisted.

* * *

When the great movement among the women of the country shall have finally expressed itself in the form of a Memorial to the Senate of the United States, with millions of signatures, the hierarch and the apostle may conceive that self-interest requires that Smoot shall capitulate and retire "voluntarily" from the scene of the conflict.

While the case originated in the election of an apostle to the Senate, and while the retirement of that apostle would be a most gratifying thing, the matter has gone, because of the appalling revelations which have been the result of the investigation, far beyond that individual case, and there must come a general reckoning.

The BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Sweden and Norway to Separate

AFTER long and patient negotiation, both Norway and Sweden appear to have reached the conclusion that separation is the only possible solution of their difficulties. On the surface, the mere wish on the part of Norway to have her own consuls in foreign lands, does not seem a sufficient cause for dissolving a union that has existed for nearly ninety years, but as in domestic quarrels, a small matter may bring about a separation, when there is back of it an irritation of long standing. The two nations have never been, at heart, in really cordial union. Sweden is aristocratic and conservative; Norway is democratic and progressive. Norway has always suspected Sweden of taking the position of the senior and predominant partner in the union, and of a disposition to regard Norway as a territorial dependency. Whether Sweden has done this, is a question that is answered differently by each side. Norway can never forget that in 1814, she was transferred from the crown of Denmark to that of Sweden, without her own consent, and that she entered the union on equal terms. She has retained her own language and her own customs, and in little more than loyalty to the same king has there been union with Sweden.

The occasion of the separation, which can scarcely be said to be its cause, is the demand by Norway for separate consular representation. It seemed for a time that this had been conceded by Sweden, but when the details were worked out, it was found that the consent of the Swedish Minister was required to a consular appointment, and that he could remove a consul at his pleasure. Then ensued further negotiation, in which it was seen that Norway really desired separation, and that Sweden had made all the concessions that she was disposed to make. Norway passed a law organizing a consular service according to her own ideas. This placed the King in a difficulty. No Swedish Cabinet would support him in approving the law, and no Norwegian Cabinet would bear his vetoing it. He took the better course of the veto, acknowledging at the time that he could not form any other Norwegian Cabinet. The Norwegians chose to regard his utterance as a confession of his inability to govern constitutionally, and as a practical abdication. Thereupon they passed a law of secession, but as a proof of loyalty to the reigning house, they invited King Oscar to allow a member of his family to become their king. He has had the good sense to decline the offer, as being likely to lead to complications; but he intimates that he will not force the Norwegians to remain under his rule, providing fair terms of separation can be made.

The terms as arranged by the Swedish Parliament are that the forts between the two countries shall be razed and shall not be rebuilt; that alliance be made by which either shall go to the help of the other if menaced by a foreign foe, and that a fair agreement be made for trade relations. If these terms are granted by Norway, Sweden consents to a separation if the desire for it is confirmed by a popular vote of the Norwegian people. Of this there can be no doubt. It is not expected that Norway will become a republic. The suggestion has been made that a member of the royal family of Denmark be made king. King Christian's grandson, Prince Charles, who married a daughter of King Edward of England, is the popular selection, but further negotiations will be necessary before such a choice can be ratified. There is ground for thankfulness that neither the king nor the Swedish parliament appears to entertain an intention of coercing the smaller nation. In fact the king says that in his opinion union can never prosper unless it is voluntary. In this he is in accord with the Hebrew prophet:

Can two walk together except they be agreed? (Amos 3: 3).

MEMBERS OF THE SWEDISH PARLIAMENT ON THE WAY TO CHURCH

Well Rewarded Hospitality

A story, vouched for as true by a respectable Western newspaper, is quite a romance of philanthropy. A lady living at Omaha, Neb., has frequently been blamed for her kindness to undeserving tramps. Her reply has been that if we were all treated according to our deserts, we should be in sad case. So she has gone on helping as far as her means would permit all who came. One day a man, who was exceptionally ragged, and who looked ill, came, begging shelter for the night. He had applied at the hotels of the city, but none of them would receive so miserable-looking a creature as a guest. Her heart went out to him in pity. Eventually, at some inconvenience, room was found for him for the night. The next day he was too ill to rise, so a doctor was sent for, and his hostess nursed him. As the case grew more serious, the man became fearful that he was going to die. One day, while his hostess was alone with him, he asked for his old coat, and when it was handed to him he took from beneath the lining a greasy package, wrapped in a newspaper. This he gave to his kind friend, with the remark that if he recovered he would like to have it again, but if he died he wished her to keep it. His fears were justified, for in a week afterwards he was dead. Then the package was opened, and in it was a thousand dollars, apparently the savings of many years of a hard life. It was very welcome to his hostess, whose many gifts had impoverished her. He did not look, when she admitted him, like a man who had so much money to give away; but men do not always show by their appearance what they are.

Some have entertained angels unawares (Heb. 13: 2).

Seeking Homes

An interesting spectacle was witnessed during the first part of this month when the registration began of citizens seeking a settlement in the Uintah Reservation. Reports from Grand Junction, Col., and Vernal, Price, and Provo, Utah, indicate that the work of registering applicants for homesteads in the Uintah reservation was beyond all expectation. The registration continued twelve days. Thousands of people were in line at the registration places. At Grand Junction fully five thousand strangers arrived in that city to register. About four hundred men spent the night in line, but afterwards an arrangement was made that those left in line when registration closed at six o'clock each evening, should receive tickets entitling them to resume their places in the line the next day. Several of the churches were converted into sleeping apartments for strangers in the city. One can but wish that this churchly hospitality might remind them that there is a better home than that they are seeking in the reservation, to which they are freely invited.

Now they desire a better country, that is a heavenly: wherefore God hath prepared for them a city (Heb. 11: 16).

At Sea on a Log

A notable rescue was effected at Rockaway, N. Y., last week by a powerful swimmer, who was fortunately down there for practice. As he was taking his evening swim, he saw a strange object nearly a mile from shore, that looked like a man on horseback. Thinking it would be good exercise, he swam out to it. To his surprise, he found it was a man astride of a log. The man told him he could not swim, but that he had gone to the sea for a plunge. Finding the log floating near the beach, he had rested on it, as it kept him afloat. He was enjoying the easy position and did not notice when the tide turned. Looking back, he saw to his consternation that the waves were bearing the log out to sea and that already he was a long way from land. He was almost exhausted, having been six hours on the log. The swimmer, pushing the log, swam to shore, where he arrived, almost worn out by the exertion. The man he had rescued was deeply grateful. He had almost given up hope when rescue came. It is safe to predict he will never do such a thing again, and we may hope that his experience will be a moral lesson to him. There are some pleasures and amusements that carry people away whence it is difficult to return.

He found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears (Heb. 12: 17).

Zionists Cling to Palestine

The Zionists who assembled in conference at Basel in Switzerland, two weeks ago, had a stormy debate on the question of accepting Great Britain's offer of land in Africa. The British Government, seeing the difficulties the Hebrews met with in persuading the Sultan to let them settle in the Holy Land, invited them to accept a home in Eastern Africa. The place is a fertile tract on the line of the Uganda railroad, between Nairobi and Mau. They were promised absolue self-government, with a pledge of British protection. The offer was welcomed by the Socialist wing of the Zionists, who perceived the advantages of freedom, rich homesteads, and absolute security under the British flag. They pleaded and argued for the acceptance of the offer, but were outvoted by the Conservative section, which is composed principally of Russians. These contended that the organization had been formed for promoting settlement in Palestine, and ought to be faithful to that object. They were unable to see that a home in any land would be better than their present scattered condition, and would demonstrate their capacity for self government. The divinely given home of the Jews, they said, was in the Holy Land, and there could be no blessing or permanency, or rest, anywhere else. However sensible men may deplore their persistence, in the face of their own interests, their devotion to their ideal, and their love of their own land must compel admiration. Like their national poet they say:

If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget its cunning, if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy (Ps. 137: 5, 6).

Slavish King and Regal Prisoner

Sunday School Lesson, By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

WE may stand at a well in broad sunlight, and looking down, see the stars of the heavens above, reflected in the waters below. We look down into the miry pit in which the prophet Jeremiah had been cast, and see one of God's shining ones. How came he there? Ask Zedekiah the King. He looks upon his evil admirers and replies: "Jeremiah was a trouble in Israel, even from the time of his early youth until now, more than forty years. When my brother Jehoiakim was King, he had Jeremiah put in the stocks, but that did not silence him. He was continually at work writing rolls, and sending them out to be read to the people, alarming them by reports that a great national calamity was about to come upon them. He is where he is now at the earnest request of some of our best citizens, who came to me with a charge of treason against him, saying, that in the court of the Temple and in the streets of Jerusalem, he was calling on the people with a loud voice to surrender to the Chaldean forces that were besieging our city. His plan was, that by such an act, Jerusalem would be saved from destruction, otherwise it would be reduced to a heap. He appealed to the people in a most fanatical way, putting a wooden yoke about his neck, and telling them, if they tried to hold out against the Chaldeans, they would have such yokes put on them. He seemed about to act upon his own advice, as he made his way toward the Gate of Benjamin, when he was arrested by the officer of the guard on the charge of deserting to the Chaldeans. It was then that the good citizens came to me urging that he should be put into a pit as the best way to get rid of him. I readily gave my consent."

There is a lamentation in the pit, a cry to God for help: "Deliver me out of the mire that I sink not; let not the well shut its mouth upon me. Reproach hath broken my heart; I am sick, and I looked for some to take pity; but there was none, and for comforters, but I found none."

It was told Ebed Melech, one of the chief servants of King Zedekiah, what had been done with Jeremiah. He came to the pit to satisfy himself that it was true. He looked down and saw the Lord's shining one, and immediately determined upon a relief expedition. He sought the King in his palace and made a plea for Jeremiah, on the ground that he would starve to death if left in the pit. The King gave Ebed Melech a squad of thirty men to rescue Jeremiah. Ropes are provided by which to draw up the prophet. In his kindness of heart, Ebed Melech has also brought old garments with which to cushion the ropes under the arms of Jeremiah while he is being drawn up, so that they would not cut his flesh. When once Jeremiah is out of the pit, Ebed Melech takes him to the King's palace, and places him where he may cleanse himself, and await the summons of the King. Yes, the King wishes to see Jeremiah. He would have Jeremiah prophecy smooth things. But nothing daunted in the presence of the King, Jeremiah reiterates the words of advice that Israel shall surrender to the Chaldeans. The King seems impressed, but confesses that he is afraid that he will be mocked and perhaps killed by his own people if he does such a thing. Jeremiah pleads with him, urging him to trust in the Lord and do his will. But Zedekiah does not rise to the occasion. In a cowardly manner he dismisses Jeremiah, urging him not to tell what has passed between them. He does not dare to set Jeremiah free, but returns him to the prison in the palace, and there Jeremiah abides until Jerusalem is invested by the Chaldean army.

"THEN TOOK THEY JEREMIAH AND CAST HIM INTO THE DUNGEON"

Illustration and Application

1. Vain Efforts to Silence the Voice of God. What King Jehoiakim tried in vain to do with penknife and fire, his successor attempts in vain by the dungeon. So every age repeats this folly of trying to suppress unpopular truth. A recent report comes from Italy, where a Protestant missionary was holding a meeting in a hall. At five Roman Catholic Churches near by, he had been denounced at the morning masses, and the people warned not to attend his meeting, and at the appointed hour for him to preach, the bells of those five churches clanged their loudest to drown his voice. But all this violence aroused curiosity to know of the doctrine. No wonder mediæval errors are defended by mediæval methods!

2. A Slavish King. Zedekiah wore a crown, but he was more a slave than a king. "Unstable as water" he first put Jeremiah in a dungeon at the bidding of one clique, and then took him out at the bidding of another. Like Pilate, he knew his prisoner innocent, but dared not set him free for fear of the people. Like many a so-called "leader," he was really led. The monarch reigned but the mob ruled.

It must not be forgotten that the King and the other persecutors of Jeremiah were "religious leaders," as persecutors have often been, reminding us that nominal membership will not save us. Whittier the poet, and several friends once attempted to hold an anti-slavery meeting in a Massachusetts town, where the churches were exceptionally numerous and flourishing. They were mobbed and stoned for their pains. Prominent church people were among the leaders of the mob. When Whittier expressed his surprise at this fact, a godly old pastor of the town replied: "By the time you are as old as I am, you will realize that it is a mighty sight easier for people to be pious, than it is for them to be good."

"It is better to be right than President," said Henry Clay. It is better to be a hero prophet than a coward king, says the lesson of to-day. Offices in church and State and many societies, are much coveted in all ranks to-day, but let us learn to think rightly of them, not as "honors" but as opportunities. A Christian man, elected to the Governorship, said, "I am called to be the most useful man in the State." He who "came not to be ministered unto but to minister," has made "service" a word of honor. He said: "He that would be great among you, let him be your servant."

3. The Heroic Witness. Jeremiah in Jerusalem illustrates James Russell Lowell's lines in the Bigelow Papers:

> I honor the man who is willing to sink
> Half his present repute for freedom to think:
> And when he has thought, be his cause strong or weak,
> Will risk t'other half for freedom to speak;
> Caring naught for what the mob has in store,
> Let that mob be the upper ten thousand or lower.

He also embodies Matthew Arnold's noblest lines:

> Calm soul of all things, make it mine
> To feel amid the cities' jar,
> That there abides a peace of thine
> Man did not make, and can not mar.

Contrast his course with Erasmus, the coward companion of Luther, who knew the truth as well as Luther, but as persecution gathered about him, said: "I intend to be true to the truth so far as the times will permit." We despise such a coward witness, and yet is not that the very position of many of us to-day? At the opening of the Sepoy mutiny in India there were eight new cadets at one of the military posts. The bugle call sounded from the parade ground a siren call that brought British officers and men into the midst of the mutineers to be shot down. One of the cadets, wounded, and supposed to be dead, crawled to a ravine nearby. He was found when nearly starved, and imprisoned in a hut with a native missionary. He told the cadet they were torturing him daily to make him deny Christ, and his courage was almost gone. "Never deny Christ," said the wounded cadet. Deliverance was near, and both were rescued.

A traveler who suddenly found himself in a ca bal village in New Guinea, and expected nothing but or- rible death, saw a white man come out of the chief hut followed by natives, and ran to him for protection. He was amazed to find the white man was a colport of the American Bible Society, and the chief one o his cordial supporters. "Surely," said the new come all missionary work here must have been given over ter Chalmers and his companions were clubbed to death h he cannibals." "Episodes like that never stop us," wa he calm reply. Dungeons and martyr fires do not sto he grand march of God's heroic witnesses in any ge. There are many good people who defend lying in o- ments of seeming peril for themselves or others.

Here is a story of a hero who would not even p it others to lie to save his life, but saved it by his h ic devotion to the truth: "In the French Revolution he people of France thought to trample out all religi as well as put down the monarchy. Churches were n- sacked and despoiled. Among others who had to ee for their lives was a good schoolmaster, distinguishe or piety and learning, called Monsieur Peillon. He a a friend passed Bayonne safely and as far as Urru e. There used to be a little inn there, where they took f- uge. While they were eating a repast spread for t n, the sound of marching soldiers were heard. The land rd in dismay bade them crawl under a bed that stood i he apartment, and said he would tell the sergeant tha is guests had gone away. "You tell the truth" said Pei n. "If you do not, I will crawl out and confute you." he sergeant and his men entered an e- manded the guests. The landlord d to avoid telling, but at last said y had crawled under the bed. "You ," said the sergeant, "you have hi n them in some garret." So he sen is men to search the house. Not fin g them he departed, after warning e innkeeper against receiving disl al guests. After they were gone Pe n and his friend crept out. "God n protect his servants," he said to ie innkeeper, "without the help of a "

Though life seldom hangs on te g the truth, it still takes courage to l it especially to tell unwelcome tr , that condemns our own country, ur own city, our own set or sect or pa : And it takes equal courage to k p clean lips when foul talk is all al t us, as one of Tennyson's Knight f King Arthur, Prince Gareth, rem s us. When he was a servant in K g Arthur's kitchen, he was happy eno h when the talk was about the King d Lancelot:

> "How the King had saved his life
> In battle twice, and Lancelot once the > King's."
> But, "If their talk were foul,
> Then would he whistle rapid as any lark
> Or carol some old roundelay, and so loud
> That first they mock'd, but after reverer > him."

How can we in little things cultiv courage, to be ready for great oppo nities? The habit of swift decision is help to courage, and perseverance is other. To decide right, and stick t day after day, in little things, is the b preparation for courage in great matt Some girls who wish they had the cha to be a Grace Darling, haven't courage enough to tak surf bath when taking a costly vacation, to get the bl ings of the sea. Some boys who wish they might hav chance to rescue some one from fire or flood, have courage to rise promptly at the call in the morning.

And perseverance is even rarer than decision. Oli Wendell Holmes said that Motley told him that on when he was all worn out in his work on The Dutch public, these two lines braced him up:

> Stick to your aim; the mongrel's hold will slip,
> But only crowbars loose the bulldog's grip.

Courage is most of all, based on faith. Let us say ourselves every day: "Why should we fear anythi with God looking at us?" Such moral courage as Je miah's is the best answer to scepticism, and the b evangelism. Stanley, the great traveler, said that wh he went to Africa to find Livingstone, he was the bigg atheist in London. He found Livingstone, and behi Livingstone he found Christ. For as he stood day day beside Livingstone in the Dark Continent, and s the simplicity and love of man, and how he lived up the things he professed, he asked himself, "Is he cra what's the matter with him?" Until finally, throu Livingstone, something of Christ came into the heart Stanley, and he says: "Livingstone converted me, b he never meant to." And a few months ago this m who described himself as "the biggest atheist in Londo dies, saying to his broken-hearted wife, "Do not wee we shall meet again."

*International Sunday School Lesson for August 27. Jeremiah in the dungeon. Jeremiah 38: 1-13. Golden Text: "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for their's is the kingdom of heaven." Matt. 5: 10.

IN THE GOLDEN SUMMER DAYS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

With an Interrogation

E midsummer issue of one of our popular magazines contains an interesting short story by one of ur st known writers, the subject of which is Marriage. t frankly opens to discussion a question which certainly as o well defined sides. A busy lawyer, his family t t seashore for the summer, an hour's ride by train, nd commuting disagreeable and the daily trip back nd rth something of a burden. The days are intense- h, even at the lofty altitude of one of the higher ors in a sky-scraper. He pictures his wife at home ith the children playing about, she nd hey at ease, and a vague irrita- on eals over his mind at the thought f h in cool muslins and laces, enjoy- g sure and luxury while other wo- en ave to drudge and toil. This is ar the attitude of most men in ei thought of the wife at home. ut in this case, husband and wife ave been imperceptibly drifting apart ti heir life is superficial rather than al The writer's aim in the story is th to point a moral and to show ha rought about this state of affairs.

T proceed, the lawyer necessarily ad private secretary. She was a lle graduate and had been a class- at of his wife. As a stenographer, e as faithful and efficient, and ap- re ly well satisfied with her posi- on At all events, she was not wast- g ir time in self-pity. Her employer, w er, pitied her deeply as she toiled re ittingly at her little ticking ma- in through the fearfully hot days, g gers ceaselessly flying over the ys while unconsciously a gesture now d en indicated fatigue and exhaus- on om the heat.

It rossed his mind that it would be ea nt and there would be no harm, p sible harm, if she would go upon s i itation and dine with him some eng in a cool corner of a roof gar- n. He was debating whether or not ight ask her on the evening of the y the story, when suddenly who ou appear on the scene but his wife, o explained she had business in town at ay. Her business did not imme- at unfold itself, but it presently ans red that, utterly weary of her e home and longing somehow to t i o fuller touch with her husband, e d privately studied stenography d pewriting. She invited the sec- tar and her mother to spend a on at the seaside cottage, and installed herself in g sband's office as a substitute.

Sh was not very willingly accepted, but she proved pa e and tactful, and during the month of intimacy ic ensued, she won her husband back. "Inciden- lly this wife had borne two children, and obviously e ld kept house successfully and fulfilled every duty h life in society and at home to perfection. All is ad seemed to her and her husband nothing but la -work," and the moral skilfully interwoven by a wit who is a practiced special pleader, that marriage b happy must imply equal comradeship, that this un be obtained when the two, husband and wife, are pa ted for many hours of every day, while he is ab- rb in business or a profession, and she is merely om tic. It is perhaps not in the writer's mind to ggt that there is anything undesirable or perilous in e ecessary companionship of a man with a young om who occupies the place of his paid secretary. t ere is a hint at least that such companionship, en nd women being what they are, may sometimes ad unfortunate complications.

It is more than implied that children should not monopolize the whole attention of mothers, that it is enough if the mother shall see them at stated intervals, and delegate their care to responsible subordinates. They and she, it is imagined, will be the gainers if husband and wife both sally forth into the open, and in some way have co-partnership in work and co-partnership in earnings during working hours.

A woman who limits herself wholly to domestic lines, whose entire interest centres in the kitchen and the sewing-room, and who neglects to keep pace mentally with her husband, will certainly fail of complete comradeship. On the other hand, a woman who is not domestic runs a great risk of losing her husband's approval and admiration. A tired man appreciates a clean house and a good dinner. A tired-out woman can neither be a good mother nor a good wife.

Copyright 1905, by Underwood & Underwood

IN THE FIELD WITH A FRIEND

Good Rex, a faithful shepherd dog,
Is Arthur's comrade every day;
They rush through dell and dingle, and
Are never tired of merry play.
A safer comrade could not be
Than Rex in boyhood's company.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—JESSIE. If a young man has shown you very plainly that he would like to be considered your friend, there is no harm in your asking him to call. By strict conventional rules a man asks a girl if he may call on her, but some men are bashful.

A Case of Presence of Mind

ON one of those terrific days in mid July, when the heat of New York was like the blast of Nebuchadnezzar's furnace, seven times heated, a horse just released from his harness fell to the pavement with sun-stroke. Just at the crucial moment, a young woman, who happened to be a trained nurse, and who also happened to have a large quantity of that useful article, presence of mind, came down the street. She saw the predicament of the horse, and knew what was to be done. Without an instant's delay she sent somebody for a stimulant, which she poured down the horse's throat. She sent for ammonia, which she applied to his nostrils, and very quickly she had bags of crushed ice on his head and neck. By the time that a veterinary surgeon had arrived, the horse was well on the way to recovery. The plucky young woman went off about her business as if she had done nothing unusual. She had brought common sense and training to bear on the case of one of God's suffering creatures; and she deserved as much praise for saving the life of a horse—man's faithful friend and servant—as if she had saved the life of a man. Some horses are superior in good character and behavior to some men.

What About Opportunity?

A reader of this page wrote the other day declaring his opinion that some people in this world never have an opportunity. He had heard a public speaker assert that sooner or later opportunity knocked at every door, and that if only we were ready to seize it, our opportunity would meet us. The friend who wrote controverting this idea, declared with emphasis that some people never have any opportunity for improvement, success, or even development of the best that is in them.

It depends a good deal on the definition we give the word. Every one has not the opportunity for personal advancement, or for shining in a brilliant sphere. Some of us must always be obscure, some of us no matter how strenuously we toil, will never get beyond a certain point. Circumstances will hamper us, or inherited tendencies hedge us round and bar our way. Some people regard the opportunity to make and keep money as the only one worth having. It is, in fact, the least needful of all, since life is short and money-bags cannot be carried across the river of Death.

The best opportunities are those which come to us to help others, to perform acts of kindness, to make the world better.

The Tragic End of Black Dick

Every one who lives in a big city is familiar with the splendid sight of the strong, trained horses that rush at the top of their speed through the streets, whenever there is an alarm of fire. In New York, not long ago, an automobile took fire on the thoroughfare, and at the same time, or almost immediately after, the horses from the nearest fire station came dashing up. In their pathway were an old woman and a little child. To save them from being trampled under the hoofs of his horses, and ground to pieces under the wheels of his engine, the driver sharply turned the horses' heads. They responded at once, but poor Black Dick, the off-horse, struck his head violently against a pillar of the elevated road, and fell dead. The children in the neighborhood had been very fond of Black Dick, the strong, gentle steed, so quick to gallop to the fires, and so amiable when they fed him with bits of cake or a stray lump of sugar. As the poor horse was carried away from the scene of his death, a long procession of children followed him, and some of the poor boys took up a collection among themselves and their friends, and bought a few flowers to lay upon him as their votive tribute.

Black Dick was worthy. Though only a horse, he had done his work nobly, and was worth more honor than many men.

KITTY'S ALLOWANCE

By ELEANOR H. PORTER

WHEN Kitty was naughty, she was "Katherine Chandler Norton"; at other times she was just "Kitty"—that is, except when her Uncle Max was at Hillcrest farm, then she was "Puss," or "Kittykins," according to his whim at the moment.

To-day Kitty's ruffled skirts of embroidered cambric and dainty gingham stood out crisply above dustless shoes and smooth-stretched stockings. Kitty was going to New York with Uncle Max for a visit to Aunt Kate, and old Dolly was even now being harnessed into the buggy to take them to the station.

Kitty's trim little shoes were beating a tattoo of excitement on the veranda steps when Mrs. Norton came hurriedly through the hall-door.

"Oh, Kitty dear, I nearly forgot," she began. "I shall send the check off for the Mont-Lawn Home before you come back. You were going to give something toward it, weren't you, dear?"

In the Norton family the children had an allowance, and out of that allowance they were expected to make such gifts as they thought proper.

At the question, all the brightness fled from Kitty's face, and left two fretful little lines between the eyebrows.

"Certainly not," said Kitty, decisively. "Why, mamma, the very idea of paying money to send little boys and girls into the country! Humph!" And Kitty's small chin rose aggressively.

Mrs. Norton smiled.

"But, Kitty, dear," she remonstrated, "perhaps you do not understand. Just think how they'd love to see the grass and trees and flowers!"

"Pooh!" sniffed Kitty. "As if grass and trees and flowers counted! Why, mamma, anybody can have such things! If it was to send poor little boys and girls into the city, why that would be something like. There's the cars, and the fire-engines, and the windows all fixed up with lights and pretty things, and the trains running on bridges right in the streets, that Uncle Max told about. Why, mamma, ain't I just crazy to see them!—crazy!"

From the barn came a rumble of wheels and the clatter of a horse's hoofs.

"Come, Puss," called a jovial voice; "kisses all around and we're off!"

With a skip and a shriek of joy, Kitty flung herself into her mother's arms. Checks, Mont-Lawn, and even the fire-engines themselves fled from her mind, and left only the joyous realization that she was actually started for New York.

At five o'clock that hot July afternoon, Kitty found herself alone in the doorway of a big office building on Broadway.

"I've just got to run up to my office for my mail, Kittykins, before we go out to the house," her uncle had said. "Want to come?—or will you wait for me down here?"

"Oh, here—please," Kitty had breathed, her eyes wide and fascinated as they gazed at the chaos of cabs, cars, and automobiles in the street.

"All right," Uncle Max had laughed. "I'll be back in a jiffy."

For the first minute after Uncle Max had gone, Kitty stood quite motionless, her back pressed hard against the great stone pillar at the right of the big door; then a joyous burst of music set her feet to tapping the stone steps, and her lithe young body to turning and twisting and stretching itself, for a possible glimpse of the source of those wonderful sounds.

If only she could see (Kitty stepped one step down), there was a man in the way now (Kitty stepped two steps this time), there, now, if only she could (Kitty reached the sidewalk). There were a clang of bells; a sudden scurrying of the cabs and carriages, a scattering of people. In an instant she knew—the fire engine!—the subject of her dreams, the embodiment of her dearest anticipations. It was one thing, however, to sit on the farmhouse steps with the song of the crickets in her ears, and listen to Uncle Max's stories of this wonder, and quite another to be on Broadway alone, with the clattering, smoking, snorting monster, coming full tilt down the narrow, canyon-like street. With a frightened cry Kitty turned and fled. Straight down Broadway she ran. Not until weariness and lack of breath made further progress impossible, did Kitty pause and come to a sudden realization of her position.

"Oh!" she cried, in quick terror. "I—I forgot Uncle Max. I must go back. He'll come down stairs and I won't be there!"

She turned sharply, and hurried back by the way she had come. At the second corner she paused, and at the third she stopped altogether. Tears sprang to her eyes and rolled unheeded down her cheeks.

"Oh!—oh! I'm lost! I'm lost!" she whispered. At that moment, from far down the street came the sound of bells.

The fire engine!—and it was on her uncle's street, almost in front of her uncle's door that the fire engine had been. Surely, it would be but a simple matter to find Uncle Max now! But, had Kitty only known it, it was another engine and another fire, and she was hurrying straight away from the anxious man, who, on Broadway, was already sweeping the street with apprehensive eyes.

Kitty brought up finally against a rope. She was breathlessly crawling under this to the open space beyond, when a big blue-coated man laid a heavy hand on her shoulder and pushed her back.

"Come, come, none of that!" he said sharply.

"I—I was going to Uncle Max," panted Kitty, made suddenly brave now by the nearness of her goal.

"And where's Uncle Max?" demanded the policeman.

"Down there," pointed Kitty, confidently.

"Humph!" grunted the man. "Well, you can't go now. You'll have to wait."

And Kitty did wait. She waited until the fire was out, the crowd gone, and the rope removed; then she stumbled down the street toward what she was sure was her uncle's office.

Half an hour later a ragged, uncombed girl of twelve found her in a doorway on Third Avenue crying softly.

"Hullo, kid—what's up?"

Kitty stopped crying and stared in silent amazement at the dirty-faced, hollow-cheeked apparition before her.

"I say, what's up?" demanded the girl again.

Kitty was still silent.

"Lost yer tongue, mebbe," suggested the girl, in mock sympathy. "Want me ter help find it?"

"It isn't my tongne—it's my uncle," retorted Kitty, with all the dignity she could muster.

"Gee! now I was sure 'twas yer tongue," said the small girl; "an' it's only yer uncle? Wall, I hope ye finds him." And she turned away.

Kitty was positive that she did not approve her questioner, but she coughed and raised her voice.

"Er—say—er—" she paused, and gazed helplessly at the girl, who had stopped and was looking back.

"Reckon yer'll have ter say it yerself, kid" interposed the girl, good-naturedly, "seein' as how I ain't one of them what reads thinkin'."

Kitty frowned, and hesitated. Surely, she thought, this was a most extraordinary little girl.

"Well, I was going to—to—that is, I thought maybe you knew him," she ventured at last.

"Know who?"

"Uncle Max. You—you live here, don't you?"

The child on the sidewalk stared for a minute, then her face worked convulsively and her stunted little figure bent nearly double with silent laughter. The next instant she stood erect with an exaggerated dignity and grave countenance.

"No, miss, I hain't had the pleasure. What might be your business now? The Gov'ner? or, maybe it's the Pres'dent, he is?"

Kitty threw a sharp look into the girl's face, but she saw not so much as an eyelid quiver.

"Of course he isn't the Governor," she said haughtily. "He's Mr. Maxwell Norton, and he's got an office on the street where the fire was to-day."

"Well, will you help—help me find him?" faltered Kitty.

The other frowned; then she cocked her head curiously to one side.

"Wall, considerin' thar's more'n one fire ter-day," she began whimsically, "an' seein' as how most the streets hereabouts has got more'n one house on 'em, why mebbe we can't locate him right away."

"But we must," urged Kitty. "I—I haven't any place to sleep."

"Sleep whar ye be," suggested the other.

"Oh—oh-h!" shuddered Kitty, unconsciously pressing her fingers against the hard stone, as one would a mattress to judge of its springiness.

The other girl eyed her sharply. After a minute something very like softness came into her face.

"Look a' here," she began, "that ain't no use in doin' anythin' ter-night. Ter-morrow we'll git the police ter hunt him up fur ye. But now ye—" she paused doubtfully—"ye might come home with me."

Visions of a soft bed, cold milk to drink, and probably a kind woman's sympathy to comfort her, came to Kitty, and made her voice more than eager.

"Oh, please," she begged. "I—I'll be very good and not make any trouble or—or work."

The girl sniffed disdainfully.

"Work!" she scoffed. "What ye take us fur? I'll be all right if dad don't turn up. If he does—can I run?" she broke off suddenly.

"Why, yes—no—I mean—er, what did you say?" stammered Kitty.

"Nothin.' Come on," said the girl shortly, "I'll show it."

Narrower, dirtier, and more evil-smelling grew the streets as Kitty followed her guide's leadership. She stumbled, and almost fell, when her companion darted down a flight of steps into a dark hallway.

"YOU DON'T MEAN—YOU—YOU DON'T LIVE—HERE?" GASPED KITTY

"Oh, please, where are you going?" she called tearfully

"Somewhere," sang a cheerful voice, "we've got thar. Mind them steps, now." And a freckled little hand reached out of the gloom and pulled Kitty down to a limestone flagging. "Thar, here we be!" announced the girl a moment later, as she flung open a door at the end of a passage, and dragged Kitty into a low-ceilinged room lighted by a sputtering candle and a feeble ray from the street lamp outside, so placed that it shone in through the narrow window below the sidewalk's level. "Brought a friend home ter supper, maw," she chuckled; "a kid what's lost her uncle."

By degrees Kitty's horrified eyes became used to the place. There were an old cook stove, two broken chairs, a packing-box, a table propped up on two legs and a board, and a wash-bench holding one tub. In the corner was a bed, upon which lay a white-faced woman and a tiny baby. The air was hot and breathless, and there was a constantly recurring little moan from the ill-nourished, fever-stricken child on the bed.

"You don't mean—you—you don't live—here!" gasped Kitty.

The candle flared and showed an angry flash in the little girl's eyes.

"Mebbe ye don't like," she challenged. "Mebbe ye want a house with green grass an' 'lectric lights. Mebbe ye think this ain't good 'nuf fur ye. It's good enuf fur me. I has ter——"

There was a shuffle of feet outside and the door burst open with a bang. The girl stopped short in her sentence and darted behind a chair. The woman on the bed gave a low cry and caught the baby close to her breast. Into the room strode a man, big-boned, powerful, and angry-eyed. His huge body swayed from side to side, and his words came with an utterance thick by rum.

"Here, who are you?" he snarled. "An' what ye doin' here?"

Kitty waited for no more. She dodged under the outraised hand, sped through the passage-way and up the steps. The next instant she was blindly hurrying down the street.

It was quite dark now. The electric lights threw strange shadows into doorways and made the faces of the passers-by look weird and terrible to Kitty. At the corner her way was crossed by a wide street, lined from curb to curb with cars and cabs and people. Kitty stopped aghast.

"I—I'll have to wait until this crowd gets by," she murmured, looking fearfully about her.

Five, ten, twenty minutes passed, and the "crowd" was not "by." Kitty shifted from one tired, aching foot to the other, and tried not to think of mamma and home. Her whole body throbbed with pain, and there was a fearful gnawing at her stomach. Kitty thought she had been hungry before, but now she knew she had not.

Gradually she was forced back against a doorway, and it was there that she was sitting, too tired to cry, when she saw a little girl about her own age coming slowly along the street, carrying a paper bag and a large unwrapped loaf of bread. Her face was thin and pale, with eyes that glowed dully from great hollows; but there was something in its expression that made Kitty spring to her feet and touch the girl's arm.

"Oh, please—I'm so hungry! Won't you give me just a—bite?"

The girl stopped short, and turned frankly wondering eyes on Kitty.

"Hungry! You!" she exclaimed, her gaze on the pretty dress and neat shoes which, in spite of recent dust and dirt, spoke so loudly of love and care.

"Yes, yes; oh, so hungry," sobbed Kitty. "You see, I—I lost my uncle, and I'm afraid I can't find him until to-morrow."

"There, now, don't ye take on so," comforted the other, with the motherliness that a life of baby-tending had made hers. "I'm jest a-goin' ter take ye home with me. Come on."

"Oh!" breathed Kitty, joyfully; then her face fell. "Do you—do you live—down cellar?" she asked timidly, as they hurried along.

"I reckon ye won't think so when we git there," retorted the girl with a sudden laugh.

"And will your father—mind if I come?"

"Hain't got none," returned the little girl cheerily.

"Oh!" said Kitty in a shocked voice, "And your—mother?"

A cloud flitted across the girl's face.

"Mumsey's dead," she said softly. "Mos' two years ago."

"Oh, I'm sorry," said Kitty, giving the arm near her a little pat. After a minute she added: "But who takes care of you?"

"I takes care of myself, sure."

"Alone?" gasped Kitty.

"Humph! 'Alone'!" sniffed the little girl. "Why, there's Tommy, he's nine, an' the twins, they's six, an' Tootsey, he's mos' four. That ain't bein 'lone, is it? This is their supper. I've been out ter git it."

"And you take care of them?" demanded Kitty.

"Sure!" nodded the other brightly. "Who would if I didn't—eh? There, here we be," she finished, stopping before a shabby door. "Now go easy. These 'ere stairs are risky in spots."

Up, up, up, flight after flight climbed Kitty. Strange noises assailed her ears, and stranger odors greeted her nostrils. At last the child ahead of her threw open a door.

"There, this ain't no cellar, is it?" she beamed hospitably, turning to her guest. "Come in."

Their entrance was greeted with joyous shouts of "Betty—Betty—here's Betty!" which subsided to a dazed silence when Kitty came into the light from one candle placed high on the shelf.

"Come, Tom, set the table," began Betty briskly. "An' you, Tilly, git the water. I've bringed somebody home ter eat, an' she's awful hungry. Jest think what a treat I've got ter-night!—a whole loaf o' bread an' some frankfurters hot from the cart. Ye see," she explained to Kitty, "I had great good luck to-day, an' I've got extry."

It was not until after supper, when Tom, Tootsey, and the twins had been put to bed on the straw mattress in the corner, that Betty drew a long breath and dropped on to a small box at Kitty's side.

"There, now we'll git 'quainted. What's yer name?" she asked.

"Kitty—Kitty Norton."

"Where'd ye live?"

"Hillcrest farm."

"My!—ain't that pretty!" Betty drew a long sigh.

"Trees an' grass?" she asked almost reverently. Kitty nodded again. There was a queer tightening coming into her throat which she could not understand.

"I never saw 'em," resumed Betty, after a moment; "not that way, ye know, where ye could pick 'em. They're shut up inside o' fences with signs on 'em. Maggie Mahoney has seen 'em," she said musingly. "There's a place where rich folks send city boys an' girls so as they can play on grass all the time for more'n a week. Maggie's been there. I hain't. She's tryin' ter git me a chance ter go—she spoke for the lady 'bout me—but if she gits it, 'course I shall let Tootsey or one o' the twins go. 'Course I wouldn't take it."

"Couldn't—couldn't you all go?" Kitty's voice was very faint.

For a moment Betty's face fairly glowed, then it suddenly grew thin and old. "'Taint likely they'd take four of us," she sighed. "It costs money—a heap. Maggie said folks had ter pay three dollars ter send jest one."

"Where—where is this place?" Kitty's voice was still more faint.

Betty shook her head.

"I can't remember. It's Mount something, I think."

"Was it Mont-Lawn?" Kitty's voice was only a whisper now.

Betty clapped her hands. "Sure, that's the very place! Maggie says they have beds ter sleep in. There don't anybody have ter sleep on the floor. There's heaps o' things ter eat, too. She said she wa'n't hungry one night. I—I wish Maggie could git two chances, then both the twins could go."

The ache in Kitty's throat was very big now. Kitty could not speak at all. After a time Betty sprang to her feet. "Did ye see my flowers?" she asked, leading the way to a tiny window where two dandelion plants strove their best to put forth green leaves in a pair of tomato cans. "Ain't they pretty? One's got a bud—see? I found 'em growin' in Maggie Mahoney's back yard, an' she let me have 'em. They don't git much sun," continued Betty, touching the leaves with tender hands.

Kitty turned away her head. Betty saw, and thought she understood.

"They ain't very big, 'course," she apologized. "Like 'nuf ter you they ain't nothin'—but with me it's diff'rent, 'course. Maggie says she's seen it where 'twas all green, jest trees an' grass. Have you seen it that way?"

The ache in Kitty's throat had grown to a lump that would scarcely let her breathe. "Yes, yes," choked Kitty, her arms around Betty's neck, "I have. I think I'm the wickedest girl that ever was!"

Betty escorted her guest to the police station the next morning, and, before noon, Kitty was in the midst of her uncle's terrified, but now rejoicing family. Not twelve hours later, Mrs. Norton at Hillcrest farm, read this letter:

DEAR MAMMA:—I want all my allowance money, please, right away, and I'm going to have next month's and I don't know how many months after that. I've fixed it up with Uncle Max, and I'm going to borrow of him, and he says I can pay it back every month. You see I can't wait. I've got four that I want to have go to Mont Lawn, and there mustn't one of them stay at home. Uncle is going to take me down to the Bible House, and he thinks it can be fixed all right after they have looked up about the case. There's another little girl that I want to have go awfully. I don't know her name, but I guess I can find her—she's the one that lives down cellar. Please send the money right off. I'll get the rest of uncle. Your loving little daughter, KITTY.

THE STRANGEST PEOPLE ON EARTH

COLONEL J. J. HARRISON, who has just returned to London after a four months' expedition to the Congo Forest, has received permission from the British Foreign Office to ship for England six of the pigmy denizens of the forest, who have accompanied him of their own free will, as far as Cairo. Naturally, the adventurous explorer did not get into touch with this strange tribe without some interesting experiences, which he has related as follows:

"When once I had gained their confidence they were quite friendly, and eventually six of them — four men and two women—volunteered to come with me to England. They freely conducted me to their little villages, and at night time retired to leafy structures, under which I slept. They are of an extremely low order of intelligence, and know absolutely nothing of what goes on around them. They seem to have no religious instincts, and have no idea of a Supreme Being. Their average height is from four feet to four feet three and a-half, and, curiously enough, as a rule the women are taller than the men. The women have also better physical development.

"Darkness was just setting in at the end of our first march in the forest when, during a terrible thunderstorm, we came upon a small clearing among the trees, and knew that a pigmy village was not far off. One of the party was dispatched into the neighboring bush to see the pigmies, and to tell them of our approach. The actual village was some distance from the clearing, the tiny huts being hidden away between the trees, sometimes in almost inaccessible places. It consisted of some dozen little leafed-in arbors seven feet in diameter, and less than four feet high at the highest point. In front of these burnt a bright fire, while within each of the dwellings crouched from eight to ten of the pigmies. Later in the day, at my request, they came to my camp and danced. They are tremendous dancers, and they will perform for hours at a stretch without fatigue. Their movements are in perfect time, and by no means ungraceful. About a hundred form in a line and dance around a couple of native drums. These, and shrill whistles, appear to be their only musical instruments.

"On the first night only thirty-five came out to dance, all the women being kept in the huts, but on subsequent occasions I have had as many as a hundred performing before me. A striking characteristic of the people is their extraordinary silence; they will sit for hours without uttering a word. They are nomadic, and their only wealth is in spears. The number of spears determines the number of wives these people can afford. They are practically nude. The women's only clothing is a few leaves, while the men's attire consists of a scrap of skin round the waist. Their whole personal belongings consist of a poisoned spear or two and an old clay cooking-pot. The women carry their infants slung across their sides.

"They are fearless hunters, and will boldly attack an elephant by rushing up to it and planting a poisoned spear in the brute. They are also a very warlike little people, and only a short while before my arrival in the forest they had sallied out, attacked and looted a Belgian caravan, and killed seventeen porters. There were no white men with the caravan, and the native soldiers bolted. They eat like animals, even gnawing the bones of their prey. When an animal is caught they cut it up, skin and all, and put it in the cooking-pot."

Answered Prayers

M., Minn. "I have had heavy burdens, and the future looked dark. I had reached the point where I could do nothing but pray and trust, and my faith has been strengthened by direct answer to my prayers."

Mrs. M. E. McK., North Dakota. "I was stricken with almost blindness and great suffering. I promised Him if he would remove the affliction I would publicly acknowledge it, and I most gladly keep my promise."

C. N., New Hampshire. "I took my troubles to the Lord in prayer, and he sent deliverance. I believe the Lord is always faithful to his promises and will help us if we go to him in faith and trust him."

C. D. J., New Jersey. "I put my care and trust in God, telling him to do the work for me [illegible] no earthly help could have done. I should have failed had I trusted in earthly friends. He answered me to the utmost."

M. E. W., Illinois. "I cannot tell the number of times my prayers have been answered. I pray all will trust and believe in true prayer."

Mrs. C. F. M., Pennsylvania. "I not only believe, but know, that God has answered [illegible] prayer for me. Surely God is not slack concerning his promises."

SAVING THE LEPERS' CHILDREN

A Beautiful Charity Which "The Christian Herald" Readers Have Helped to Establish

REV. ANDREW BEATTIE, of Canton, China, writes under date of May 29th: "I am sending you a paper giving an account of the formal opening of the Canton Boys' Home, a Home for the untainted children of leper parents. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a partner in this work. It is about a year since the Hon. R. M. McWade, U. S. Consul-General at Canton, requested that the unused balance of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Kwansi Famine Relief Fund, be used for the benefit of the lepers of Canton and vicinity. In a statement to Consul McWade, I said that our work was of three kinds:

THE NEW HOME FOR LEPERS' CHILDREN

1. Feeding and clothing the destitute and helpless lepers. Many of these lepers are half starved and half naked, The majority of them never knew what it is to have enough to eat. Their clothes are rags. Day after day they walk miles begging, and often return with scanty supplies of food. Ill or well, they must beg. When too ill to walk they must either starve or be fed by some kind-hearted fellow sufferer. It was to help these suffering fellow beings, that contributions were solicited.

2. Among the lepers were a number of children without taint of leprosy. These children eat and sleep in the leper village, and in the leper homes. In the village where our work is, there are over 100 of these little children. To save them from a leper's fate, we determined to build a Home and separate them from all contact with lepers. In this way we hope to save many from this horrible disease.

3. We want to build a small hospital or refuge for the sick and helpless lepers. Many of the lepers are sick. They have no one to care for them in their village. If they become ill they must suffer alone without medical aid, and often without food. Their homes are not suitable for sick people. So we want to built a refuge where the sick and the helpless may be received, and receive care and Christian sympathy. Their lives are short and miserable, and if a little brightness can be brought into it, surely any effort in this direction will be well repaid.

"While we were making plans for this work and were without any money to use in realizing our plans, the U. S. Consul suggested that the balance of the Famine Relief be used. This was an unexpected, but very welcome gift. Ever since the money came, we have been using it for relief work among the lepers. In addition to the relief work, we put a part of it into the Home, which has just been opened. The Home cost us $4,600 Mexican. We hope to enlarge this building as contributions come in. We want also to build a Home for girls. Our relief work goes on, and help is given when we have money. We are very thankful for the aid received through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Contributions will be gratefully received. We have over 100 Christians among these lepers."

WOMAN'S HELP*

WHEN Lilavati Singh, a beautiful Hindu girl, rose in the Ecumenical Conference, in New York, and told what the life of Hindu women was before the coming of the missionary, and what it had become, the object lesson she herself furnished, thrilled all hearts. Ex-President Harrison, who was present, exclaimed, "If I had given a million dollars to foreign missions, I should be satisfied, if it had led to the transformation of that one woman." Wherever Christianity goes, the condition of woman is improved. She ceases to be a slave, a mere creature of pleasure, and rises to the condition of an intelligent companion of man. The religion of Jesus restores her to her lost position and redeems her from subjection. Men have gained beyond computation, but woman's gain passes their's by all that there is in this life worth having, as well as the joy that is to come. It is a duty, therefore, laid upon her by solemn grateful obligation, to carry the blessings of the faith to her sisters in other lands who have not yet heard of Christ.

There are, however, other reasons beside that of gratitude, why women should engage in the spread of the Gospel in heathen lands. There is an obligation in opportunity. She can go where men cannot, and there she can do a mighty work that no one else can do. The custom in Christless lands of jealously secluding women, is a barrier to the influence of men who go out to preach the Gospel. There are few heathen lands in which a man would tolerate the visits of the male missionary to his wife and daughters. The result has been that the women are ignorant of the Gospel as they are of almost everything else. Being ignorant, they are prejudiced, and they arouse prejudice in their husbands, and create it in their sons. The missionary has often found that the opposition to his work that is manifested in a country by the men, is based on the attitude of the women whom he has not seen. The influence of the mother on the boy, who remains under her care until he has grown up, is not easily overcome. The missionary's hands are tied and he can do nothing. Even in cases of illness, the care that a man will accept for himself, he denies to his wife, and many women suffered and died of diseases that a medical missionary could have easily cured. The call for woman's help as teacher and healer was loud and importunate, and right nobly has she responded to it. Upwards of five thousand women are now laboring in heathen lands, not only upholding and strengthening the work of the men, but doing work that the men could never have done.

It was an eloquent summary of woman's work that was uttered by Mrs. Badley as she had seen it. She said: "I have known devoted women isolated for months and years in hostile cities, often hungry, sick and in prison. I have seen her braving the plague, small-pox, cholera and famine that she may comfort and help the sick and the dying, and point them to Christ. The rusty locks of zenana doors have opened to her, and she has entered to tell the Gospel story, to wipe away the scalding tear and soothe the aching brow. She has snatched girlhood from degradation, has saved infant girls from being murdered, and rescued the widow from her misery. To do this she has had to enter noisome chambers, to sit on earthen floors, to bear abuse and encounter prejudice—all that she may pour at the feet of Jesus the ointment from the precious alabaster box of her self-sacrifice."

Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop, the famous traveler, witnessed scenes in Persia and other Eastern lands, which were thrilling in their testimony to the blessings that have come from women's work. She described the miseries of the women's quarters as she had seen them, the jealousy, the malignity, the frivolity of woman at her worst; and later, when the woman missionary had entered, the same women purified, elevated, kind, and helpful. It is the grandest harvest in the world, and none can reap so well as woman herself.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for August 27. "Woman's Work for Foreign Missions," Mark 14: 3-9; Acts 16 : 13-18; Rom. 16 : 1, 2.

A "Door of Hope" in China

A letter from Bing-yie, China, states that a "Door of Hope" has been dedicated to God there lately. Before the Home was completed, some poor unfortunate women (who were to be cared for there) came to the worker in charge, and offered to go without one portion of rice a day, so that the money thus saved might be used in furnishing the home. This self-denial, however, was unnecessary, as money had already been sent to China from the Door of Hope Gospel Mission in New York for that purpose.

Several years ago, the Door of Hope Gospel Mission began to "extend its borders." Within the last four years it has three other Doors of Hope—one in Kangunda, one in Kikayu (both in British East Africa), and now this Shelter in the very heart of China, where no work of the kind has ever been attempted for women.

Miss E. M. Whittemore, founder of the Door of Hope, and those associated with her, request the prayers of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, that much may be accomplished for the glory of God in the midst of these long-neglected people, and that many other Doors of Hope may be yet erected in needy localities.

To Clean Dress Goods:

Carefully brush the goods until all dust and lint have been removed. Wash in hot water with plenty of Ivory Soap (two washings may be necessary). Rinse and allow to become about half dry, then iron on the wrong side.

There is no "free" (uncombined) alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

Ivory Soap
99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

HEART RIGHT

When He Quit Coffee.

Life Insurance Companies will not insure a man suffering from heart trouble. The reason is obvious.

This is a serious matter to the husband or father who is solicitous for the future of his dear ones. Often the heart trouble is caused by an unexpected thing and can be corrected if taken in time and properly treated. A man in Colorado writes:

"I was a great coffee drinker for many years, and was not aware of the injurious effects of the habit till I became a practical invalid, suffering from heart trouble, indigestion and nervousness to an extent that made me wretchedly miserable myself and a nuisance to those who witnessed my sufferings.

"I continued to drink Coffee, however, not suspecting that it was the cause of my ill-health, till, on applying for life insurance I was rejected on account of the trouble with my heart. Then I became alarmed. I found that leaving off coffee helped me quickly, so I quit it altogether and having been attracted by the advertisements of Postum Food Coffee I began its use.

"The change in my condition was remarkable, and it was not long till I was completely well. All my ailments vanished. My digestion was completely restored, my nervousness disappeared, and, most important of all, my heart steadied down and became normal, and on a second examination I was accepted by the life insurance Co. Quitting Coffee and using Postum did the work." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason, and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.

5% a Fair Retu on Your Savi s

PER YEAR

We desire the accounts of conser ve investors who seek profitable earnings n money while being assured of its safet or twelve years our business conducted er

NEW YORK BANKING DEPARTMENT SUPERV N has been steadily progressing. During this time w never paid less than 5% per annum on savings entru our care, distributing to holders of our certificates amounting to nearly three-quarters of a million d while materially adding to our surplus.

OUR PATRONS ARE PROTECTE by assets amounting to almost two million dollars. Ou are made upon the best class of New York and Sub Real Estate—to home-buyers, who pay us interest an of the principal each month, which is in turn rein

We Pay 5% PER YEAR On Sav s which bear earnings for every day in our care. money is always subject to your control if requir other purposes. START NOW. Earnings be soon as your money is received, and are mailed y check semi-annually, or compounded, if desired.

Full particulars with letters of endorsement from prominent clergymen, professional and business men—some, doubtless, in your locality—to whom we are privileged to refer you, will be sent to any one interested.

Assets . . . $1,750,000
Surplus and Profits, $150,000

Industrial Savings and Loan Co.,
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, N. Y. City

INDUST 5% PER ANNUM SAVINGS

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL

71ST YEAR. Ope 28, 1905. Day C sessions 3:30 to 6 Evening Classes. P.M. Degrees LL.B. and J. D. Tuitio

Address L. J. Tompkins, Sec., Washington Sq., N

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER SWEETER, MOR ABLE, LOWER OUR FREE CAT TELLS WH

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincin

In a world where "Cleanliness is next to Godliness" no praise is too great for SAPOLIO

MELLIN'S
For the Baby
FOOD

If you want a good food for your baby, — a food that is endorsed by physicians, a food that contains a large amount of digestible constituents, a food that feeds, a food that will nourish, sustain and promote the growth of your baby, — try Mellin's Food. We will send a sample for you to try.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

AGENTS $20 to $50 weekly Entire or spare time Selling STANDARD
SELF-Filling -Cleaning Fountain PENS
Quick dropper. No smeared fingers "No-blow" No taking apart to clean No twisted rubber No valve or piston No awkward hump No complication FREE LESSONS in Successful Salesmanship make experience unnecessary. Write for new plan and do it NOW.
Standard Pen Co., 1506 Spitzer, Toledo, O.

Fills Itself instantly at any ink-well, THIS WAY.

CAN MUSIC BE TAUGHT BY MAIL?
We make you judge and jury. We teach by mail only, beginners or advanced pupils to play any instrument by note. Nothing to pay until you have had two weeks' trial. If these lessons do not convince you that you will succeed, then they are free. Do not write unless you want to learn and are in earnest. Mention whether a beginner or advanced pupil. Send 2-cent stamp and get the first lesson, Booklet and testimonials. Estab'd 7 years. Address U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 7 F, 19 Union Sq., New York, N.Y.

GINSENG BOOK FREE
Do you realize the large amount of money that can be made in raising Ginseng? Our book, which is free, explains this carefully. On small investment you can get big returns. While the edition lasts we will send our Ginseng Book absolutely free.
UNION SEED CO., Inc.,
Dept. 14, 104 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Stewart Hartshorn
HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS
Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label.
Wood Rollers. Tin Rollers.

WANTED—Ladies to Take Orders for the Latest Novelties in Foreign and Domestic Dress Goods. Liberal commission. Profitable work. Write for particulars giving responsible references, to A. M. Mosely, Manager, 373-375 Broadway, New York City.

STATE MANAGERS WANTED
By an established Ohio corporation; good salary, office expenses and commissions paid to men of character and ability. References required and given. Address, MANAGER, 176 Ontario Bld'g, Toledo, Ohio.

STARK FRUIT BOOK
shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's. Louisiana, Mo

DEATH TO HEAVES Guaranteed
NEWTON'S Heave, Cough, Distemper and Indigestion Remedy. A veterinary specific for wind, throat and stomach troubles. STRONG RECOMMENDS. $1.00 per can, of dealers, or Express prepaid
THE NEWTON REMEDY CO., TOLEDO, OHIO.

$8 SALARY WEEKLY $3.00 per day for expenses
Paid energetic man each county to post signs, advertise and distribute samples. No Capital required. Honesty and Sobriety more essential than experience. Also a few ladies wanted to do demonstrating. NATIONAL CO., 720 Chestnut Street, Phila., Pa.

Our Little Bee Books FREE
Intensely interesting and helpful in a hundred different ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-day.
A. I. ROOT COMPANY, Medina, Ohio.

SUTHERLAND SISTERS
Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

IMPORTANT that every reader of this magazine should write at once for particulars of vital importance to every one.
The New Jersey Mfg. Co., Jersey City, N. J.

Agent's Outfit Free.—Delight, Biscuit, Cake and Doughnut Cutter, Apple Corer, and Strainer. 5 articles in one. Sells on sight. Large Catalog free
RICHARDSON MFG. CO., Dept. 6, BATH, N.Y.

THE PENALTY OF FIDELITY

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

IMAGINE the position of God's chosen people in the days of Jeremiah! The people, as a people, were fast going to destruction. The heaped up sin of kings and priests, elders and prophets, had come to its fulness. It could not go on. The people chosen to be God's witness had become worse than the heathen, and the heathen must learn that God was no party to their sin, that he hated sin, and judgment must come, and could not longer be put off. Individuals might obtain mercy, but the judgments of Jehovah, which had been foretold by Amos, Hosea, Micah, and Isaiah, as well as by Habakkuk and Zephaniah, who were living at this time, were on the eve of their fulfilment. And Jeremiah might not pray for them! His only resource was cut off; he saw the gathering thundercloud, and knew that it must break over their heads. Like the Lord, who wept over Jerusalem when she rejected him, because she knew not the time of her visitation in mercy, so now Jeremiah could only weep that she knew not, and would not know, the time of her visitation in judgment.

"Oh, that I had in the wilderness a lodging-place!" Elijah, when the tension was the most extreme, fled to Mount Horeb, where he could be alone with God, but the weeping Jeremiah must stay with his people to the bitter end, and see with a breaking heart his prophecies accomplished before his eyes. He must see Jerusalem, and even the Temple, burned to the ground, and his people taken captive, and he might not have the relief of even being taken prisoner with them as was Ezekiel. And added to this, he must find that because he told them the truth they looked upon him as a traitor and an enemy. "The men of Anathoth," the city of the priests, with whom the prophet was nearly related (Jer. 1:1) sought his life, and devised devices against him, and said, "Prophesy not in the name of the Lord, that thou die not by our hand." The very priests with whom he was connected would shut his mouth or slay him!

And so Jeremiah could only weep. "Hear ye, and give ear," he said, as though it might be a last appeal, "be not proud; for the Lord hath spoken; give glory to the Lord your God, before he cause darkness." And he cried in his agony of soul, "Hast thou utterly rejected Judah? Hath thy soul loathed Zion? Why hast thou smitten us, and there is no healing for us? We looked for peace, and there is no good; and for the time of healing, and behold trouble." And then, like David, he confessed his people's sin, and declared his obstinate faith, "We will wait upon thee." He would seek no other refuge.

And God heard him, and opened his eyes to see the coming King, "the Lord our Righteousness." And though he must see a still more terrible "tempest of the Lord" he saw also the future repentance of his people, their full deliverance from captivity and restoratton to the Lord and to their land. May he not also have seen something of that which God showed to his friend Ezekiel, how God set a mark upon the foreheads of those which sigh and which cry for the abominations done in the midst of Jerusalem? And he may have known how, in seeing from God's standpoint, he was permitted to have sympathy with the Most High. This must have been no small solace to the weeping prophet; and it must have more than made up for the persecution which he suffered at the hands of men.

In the New Testament, "all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (II Tim. 3:12). It may be only family persecution, or business persecution, or the persecution of slander; but it is as true that he who is friend of God is the world's enemy, as that whosoever will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God (James 4:4). So the worldly priests of Anathoth counted him their enemy, and sought his life, and Pashur, who was also chief governor in the house of the Lord, because he prophesied the coming siege and destruction of Jerusalem, smote Jeremiah, and put him in the stocks. Probably no man in Jerusalem had such true love to Pashur as Jeremiah had. Was there one man who had prayed with tears for the priests as he had? But God charged Jeremiah with a solemn message to Pashur, that he, his house, and all his friends, should die as captives in Babylon (Jeremiah 20: 1-6).

MEN AND WOMEN OF THE HOUR

DR. N. C. SCHAEFFER SENATOR M. C. C. BRADFORD MRS. M. BYERS, LL.D. SECRETARY WILSON

DR. NATHAN C. SCHAEFFER, State Superintendent of Public Instruction for Pennsylvania, was elected President of the National Educational Association, at the recent convention held at Asbury Park. It is the greatest honor that can come to an American educator, and has been held by such men as President Eliot and President Butler. Dr. Schaeffer was born in 1849, and educated in America, and in Germany. He began college teaching in 1875, and now holds the degrees of LL.D., D.D., and Ph.D. He is a clergyman of the German Reformed Church, and a prolific writer on educational and religious topics.

* * *

MRS. MARGARET BYERS, founder and principal of Victoria College for Women, in Belfast, Ireland, has received, in recognition of her services, the degree of LL.D., a unique honor for a woman of any land. Mrs. Byers is the widow of Rev. John Byers, who for a number of years was a worker in the China mission field. Mrs. Byers has been principal of Victoria College since 1859. Her college has been the pioneer institution for the education of Irish women, and has given a status to women teachers in that country. In 1881 the University opened its examinations to the college. Mrs. Byers, with others, was the founder of the Christian Workers' Union, and of the Victoria Homes for Neglected Girls, and the Belfast Women's Temperance Association. She was the first president of the Irish Women's Temperance Association.

* * *

HON. JAMES H. WILSON, Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, has begun a rigid investigation into the workings of the Statistical and Crop-Reporting Bureau. An official of the Bureau, it has been alleged, gave advance information concerning the condition, and amount of this year's cotton crop to certain speculators in New York City. Although the bureau is only one of many in the department, not important enough to put the affairs of the department out of joint, yet he desires it to be brought to a greater state of efficiency, even if some house-cleaning is necessary. Mr. Wilson, since he entered the cabinet, has won the respect not only of the great agricultural population of the country, but also of the general public as well. He is a man of wide information on all topics of the day, and his advice in the cabinet has been often followed. Mr. Wilson comes of sturdy Scotch ancestry, having been born in Ayrshire, Scotland, in 1835. He settled with his parents in Connecticut, but later moved to Iowa. He was a member of Congress in 1873-7, and 1883-5. For six years he was Director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, and Professor of Agriculture in the Agricultural College of Iowa.

* * *

MRS. MARY C. C. BRADFORD has the unusual distinction of being a State Senator of Colorado. She is at present in New York organizing the various leagues connected with the Business Women's National League. Although born in New York, she has been in Colorado for a number of years, and has just finished her term as clerk of the Senate, the first woman, it is said, to hold that office in any State.

Fresh Milk
is always obtainable. Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is absolutely pure cows' milk combined with the finest grade of granulated sugar. For sale at your grocers. Avoid unknown brands.

FALL SUITS
MADE TO ORDER... $6 to $25
Our New Fall Style Book and Samples mailed FREE on request.
Every lady who wishes to dress well at moderate cost should have a copy of this beautiful book, together with a line of samples of the materials from which we make our garments.
Our Catalogue illustrates over 150 of the Latest New York Styles in Visiting Costumes, Tailor-made Suits, Separate Skirts Jackets, Fur-lined Coats and Rain Coats. We carry a stock of over 400 materials from which you may select.
WE KEEP NO READY-MADE GARMENTS, BUT MAKE EVERYTHING TO ORDER.
Our garments, made to order, cost less than other houses sell ready-made garments.
We have a successful method of our own for making ladies' garments to order from measurements sent us by mail.

We Guarantee to Fit You. If we fail to do so, we promptly refund your money.
Our Style Book explains how we can fit you by mail, and illustrates
VISITING COSTUMES . . . $6.00 to $20
TAILOR-MADE SUITS . . . $7.50 to $25
NEW FALL SKIRTS . . . $3.50 to $12
RAIN COATS . . . . . $9.75 to $20
JACKETS AND COATS . . $5.75 to $25
We prepay express charges to any part of the U. S.
We Send FREE to any part of the United States our new Fall and Winter Style Book, showing the Latest New York Fashions, a large assortment of samples of the newest materials, and simple directions for taking measurements correctly. Write for them to-day. Kindly state whether you wish samples for a Suit, Skirt, Cloak or Rain-coat, and about the colors you desire, and we will send you a full line of exactly what you wish.
NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York
Mail Orders Only No Agents or Branches Est 17 Years

FALSE HUNGER
A Symptom of Stomach Trouble Corrected by Good Food.

There is, with some forms of stomach disease, an abnormal craving for food which is frequently mistaken for a "good appetite." A lady teacher writes from Carthage, Mo., to explain how with good food she dealt with this sort of hurtful hunger.

"I have taught school for fifteen years," she writes, "and up to nine years ago had good, average health. My diet was always generous, comprising whatever I took a fancy to. I ate freely. Nine years ago, however, my health began to fail, and continued to grow worse, steadily, in spite of doctor's prescriptions, frequent changes of residence and everything I could do. During all this time my appetite continued good, only the more I ate the more I wanted to eat—I was always hungry. The first symptoms of my breakdown were a distressing nervousness and a loss of flesh. The nervousness grew so bad that finally it amounted to actual prostration. Then came stomach troubles, which were very painful, constipation which brought on piles, dyspepsia and severe nervous headaches. The doctors seemed powerless to help me, said I was overworked, and at last urged me to give up teaching, if I wished to save my life.

"But this I could not do. I kept on at it as well as I could, each day getting more wretched, my will power alone keeping me up, till at last a good angel suggested that I try a diet of Grape-Nuts food, and from that day to this I have eaten it, finding it delicious, always appetizing and satisfying. I owe my complete restoration to health to Grape-Nuts, and my persistence in using it. My weight has returned, and for more than two years I have been free from the nervousness, constipation, piles, headaches, and all the ailments that used to punish me so, and have been able to work freely and easily." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

BOMOSA COFFEE
BIG INCOMES
$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK
Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices and Extracts.
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO
P. O. Box 289 31-33 Vesey St., New York

100 NEW SONGS IN YOUNG PEOPLE'S SONGS OF PRAISE
30 cents per copy, by mail; $25.00 per hundred
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.—Chicago-New York

The Art of Knitting and Crocheting continues its universal popularity. It is a pastime, which combines profit with pleasure. A machine cannot give a garment the distinctive elegance, as will the human fingers.

To produce satisfactory results, however, only the best yarns should be used. The "Fleisher" Yarns are the acknowledged standard of excellence—uniform, lofty, elastic—the colors bright and lasting. Your dealer should carry them.

If you use The "Fleisher" Yarns, you can be sure that the working will be a pleasure and the finished result satisfactory. A garment made of The "Fleisher" Yarns will stand the test of wear and wash.

Knitting Worsted	Germantown Zephyr
Dresden Saxony	Spanish Worsted
Shetland Floss	Ice Wool
Cashmere Yarn	Shetland Zephyr
Pamela Shetland	Spiral Yarn

Every skein bears the "FLEISHER" trade-mark ticket.

Free booklet, "A SHORT TALK ABOUT YARNS," mailed up a request.

"FLEISHER'S KNITTING AND CROCHETING MANUAL" mailed for four tickets from The "Fleisher" Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making all the new style and staple garments

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER
Department "B," PHILADELPHIA

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

Low Rates West and Northwest

Chicago & North-Western Railway.

The following rates and dates of sale are for strictly first-class round-trip tickets from Chicago, with liberal time limits.

39th Encampment G. A. R. at Denver.

$20.00 To Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo and return, August 30 to September 4. Special Personally Conducted trains leave Chicago and the East September 2.

$67.50 To San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego and return, on certain specified dates throughout the Summer.

$56.50 To Portland and Puget Sound Points and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$65.00 To Yellowstone Park and return, including stage transportation ($85.00 also includes hotel accommodations in the park). Daily until September 16.

$27.50 To Hot Springs, S. D., and return. $30.70 Deadwood and Lead and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$20.00 To Duluth, Superior and Ashland and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$17.25 To Marquette, Mich., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$16.00 To St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

CORRESPONDINGLY LOW RATES ARE IN EFFECT FROM ALL POINTS.

For further particulars address

NW579 W. B. KNISKERN, Passenger Traffic Manager, CHICAGO, ILL.

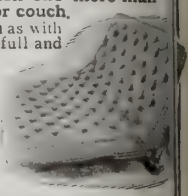
"Rest for the Weary

If you are tired and want rest, or if you are just beginning to sit up after a long illness you will find

Dr. Day's Comfort Spring

is just what you need. The most perfect bed for all ordinary uses besides its distinctive feature, the Hinged Head and lifting device which permits any desired adjustment. It raises the entire body from the hips and supports it restfully at any angle. In this way there is perfect relaxation. A few moments so spent will rest and refresh one more than hours on a lounge or couch.



No slipping down as with pillows; breathing is full and natural. Asthmatic patients or others who cannot lie down, can sleep all night every night on a Comfort Spring. It is the only successful device for this purpose

It lifts easily. The weight of the body is balanced by springs. A child can lift a man. The mechanism is concealed. The bed when made up looks like any other, can be used flat like an ordinary spring.

Do you enjoy reading in bed? Get a Comfort Spring and learn what real comfort is.

Don't wait for sickness. Order now and enjoy the best bed you ever slept on. Should sickness come you will be prepared and will find the adjustable feature invaluable. Users say: "Worth its cost every day in case of sickness;" "I prize it more than any article in my home;" "A great comfort," etc. Endorsed by physicians and trained nurses.

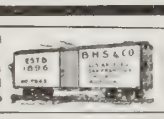
Dr Day's Comfort SPRING

This Trade-mark on every Spring.

Fits any bed. Costs about the same as any other good springs. Write for Catalog. Address

Comfort Spring Company, 455 Benton St., Joliet, Ill.

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago



ARE YOU DEAF?

We have 25 kinds of Instruments to Assist Hearing. Sent on approval. Write for Catalogue.
WM. C. WILLIS & CO., 134 S. 11th St., Philadelphia

Loftis System Diamonds On Credit

A Diamond is a shrewd investment to-day. Buy a Diamond on credit now. Diamonds win hearts. Write for our Catalog, 1000 illustrations. Select your Diamond. We will send it for examination. One-fifth the price to be paid when you receive the article. Balance in eight equal monthly payments.

The Old Reliable Original Diamond on Credit House.

LOFTIS BROS & CO. EST'D 1858

DIAMOND CUTTERS
Watchmakers, Jewelers.
Dept H 95 92 to 98 State St.
CHICAGO, ILL., U. S. A.

WE WANT AGENTS

in every town to ride and sell our bicycles. Good pay. Finest guaranteed 1905 MODELS, with Puncture-Proof tires, Coaster-Brakes 1903 & 1904 Models of Best Makes..... $10 to $24

500 Second-Hand Wheels All makes & Models good as new $3 to $8

CLEARING SALE at half cost. We SHIP ON APPROVAL and TEN DAYS TRIAL to anyone without a cent deposit. Write at once for Special Offer on sample bicycle.

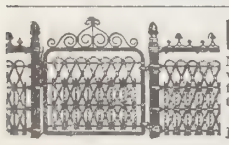
TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H 71 CHICAGO

GINSENG

Detailed advice and special instructions regarding its culture. It will pay you to investigate our practical and common sense methods. We supply choicest American Roots and Seeds, at most reasonable prices, help you towards successful cultivation, and pay you highest market price for your Dry Roots. Send stamp for illustrated booklet "E."

NORTH AMERICAN GINSENG CO., Station C, Louisville, Ky.

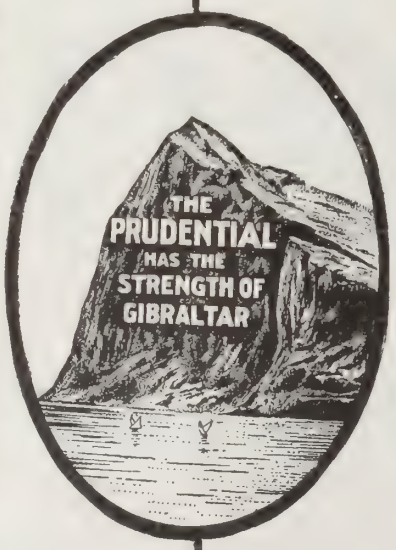


LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches. Address

COILED SPRING FENCE CO. Box D Winchester, Ind.

"What a pity, he was not insured." "What will his family do?" You hear the above very often, and later you see the mother go out to work and the children leave school with half an education.



Is it right to neglect your most urgent duty of providing for the future of those dependent on you? If you live, an Endowment policy will be a means of saving money for your own future as well.

Don't Delay!

Fill out and mail the coupon to-day.

The PRUDENTIAL Insurance Co. of America

Incorporated as a Stock Company by the State of New Jersey

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President

Home Office: NEWARK, N. J.

Without committing myself to any action, I shall be glad to receive free particulars and rates of Endowment Policies.

For $.....

Name ..... Age ...

Address .....

Occupation ..... Dept. 70

Which? 3% 4% 5%

You are surely not going to be satisfied with only 3% or 4% interest on your money, when you can just as safely get 5%.

We allow 5% interest, compounded semi-annually, for the exact number of days the money is deposited, and nothing could be safer

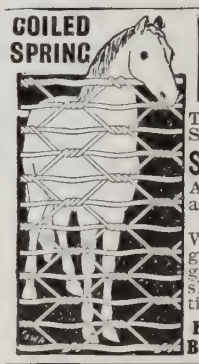
We loan money only on improved real estate, and the interest and part of the principal is paid back to us each month. The security gets larger as the principal is reduced. As fast as we get the money back it is again invested. We have done this for the past 11 years.

You can immediately withdraw your money at any time.

Glad to send you our interesting booklet.

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
Dept. E. Calvert Bldg. Baltimore Md.

COILED SPRING



FENCE

That is Horse High, Bull Strong, Pig-chicken tight.

SOLD DIRECT TO YOU

At less than dealers' price and we pay the Freight.

Our Catalogue tells how Wire is made, how Wire is galvanized,—why some is good and some bad. You should have this information. Write for Catalogue.

KITSELMAN BROTHERS, Box 297, Muncie Indiana.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

25 designs, all steel. Handsome, durable. Cheaper than a wood fence. Special inducements to church and cemeteries. Catalogue free

KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO., 415 North St. Kokomo, Indiana.

UBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
UBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, AUG. 23, 1905
Copyright, 1905, by Louis Klopsch
VOL. 28 NO. 34. PRICE FIVE CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

CHRISTIAN HERALD

Stereograph [illegible]

THE PEACEMAKER AND THE PLENIPOTENTIARIES

President Roosevelt has on his left, Baron Komura and Minister Takahira, and on his right, Baron Rosen and M. de Witte, the four principals in the Peace Conference at Portsmouth, N. H.

OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

H. E. P., Sewanee, Tenn. 1. What is meant by the latter part of the verse, Micah. 7: 6: "A man's enemies are the men of his own household?" 2. At what time is a child supposed to reach the age of accountability?

1. The state of unnatural lawlessness here described, is to characterize the last times before the Messiah returns. See Luke 21: 16, and II. Tim. 3: 1-3. 2. When moral and spiritual perception become apparent—the power of distinguishing between right and wrong. It is earlier in some cases than in others, but generally speaking, a child of twelve under ordinary training, has begun to be accountable.

R. L. P., Johnston, S. C. Does the expression (Isa. 55: 6), "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found," imply that otherwise he may withdraw where he cannot be found?"

A far more probable contingency is that the seeker, who postpones his search, may lose his power or disposition to seek. There are many instances of men who have put off seeking until they have made a fortune, or done something else, and then the time they set, having arrived, discover that business habits and long time associations absorb them. They are out of touch with God. Even in church their thoughts are running on worldly concerns. It is very rare for an old man who has been indifferent, or careless, or wicked, to turn to God. Not that God is unwilling to be found, but that the man has become incapable of seeking him. None who really seek ever fail to find.

F. P., Stanford, Conn. Are there any printed copies of the old English Doomsday Book?

A copy of the Doomsday Book was published in two folio volumes, in 1783, in England. We believe there is a copy in the Boston Public Library. Write to the librarian.

B. E. S., North Hope, Pa. 1. Is it necessary to take a special course of study to become a librarian? 2. Where is the nearest school where such a course may be taken?

1. No, not necessary; but the tendency is toward such a preparation. 2. Drexel Institute, Philadelphia, and Pittsburg Public Training School for Children's Libraries, are among the best training centres. Write to the directors.

J. B., New Haven, Ind. 1. In what year was the longest session of the United States Congress held? 2. Who was President at that time?

1. In 1873. It was the third session of the Forty-second Congress, and lasted from Dec. 2, 1872, to Dec. 3, 1873—over a year. 2. Grant was President.

Subscriber, Illyria, O. When a person's prayers are not answered, ought he to accept it as a sign that he is not in God's favor; and should he stay away from taking the sacrament?

That would be a very foolish inference to draw. God may show his favor to you by not answering your prayers. He knows better than you do what is best for you, and may have refrained from answering in pure love. You must not suppose that, either for yourself or others, that you know best what should be done. Tell God what you desire, and leave it to him to grant or withhold, as he in his wisdom deems best. Do not sulk or stay away from the means of grace, if you do not get what you want.

H. G. C., Amelia C. H., Virginia. What is the origin of idolatry?

Its beginnings cannot be traced. It existed before the Flood. In the primeval period it is supposed that man had a revelation or knowledge of God, as well as a natural law. The first outcroppings of idolatry were manifested, no doubt, in fetishism—the barbaric worship of animals, trees, rivers, hills, and even stones. Images and symbols, representing so-called deities and powers in nature, were a later evolution. The extensive systems of the ancient nations: Egypt, Greece, Rome, Persia, Babylonia, the Aztecs, etc., were doubtless, very similar in their beginnings, and were expanded by the ingenuity of priests in the course of long generations. Read Poole's Genesis of the Earth and Man, for the beginnings of idolatry.

Reader, Ames, Iowa. What does Paul mean by his apparently reluctant consent to his converts marrying (I. Cor. 7: 36)?

It was a time of persecution and hardship, and as the apostle said in the same chapter, unmarried persons were more free from care than the married. They could devote themselves more exclusively to the Lord's service, and could act without any thought of what would be the result of their death or imprisonment to wives and families dependent on them. But these Corinthians were living in a licentious city. Marriage was infinitely preferable to immorality. Paul said there was no sin in marriage, it was simply, on account of the stress of the time, a matter that might be a constraint. We do not think that any of his remarks on this subject apply to our time.

Rev. W. P. Elwood, Palam, South India, writes:

In your issue of April 19, a lady inquires about Mrs. Anna Shipton and her books. Mrs. Shipton was an English lady, an earnest Christian worker. She went hither and thither over the British Isles and the Continent, as the Lord directed. Some of the accounts she gives in her books of God leading and working through her, are remarkable. She died November, 1901, aged eighty. Some of her earlier books are Tell Jesus, Waiting Hours, Asked of God, The Secret of the Lord, God's Messengers, Sure Mercies of David. Her latest books are God With Us, The Upper and Nether Springs and The Hearing Heart. My own faith received its first great impulse through reading Asked of God, and all her writings have been very helpful to me Reader, Schenectady, N. Y. I am told there are four great heresies as to the nature of Christ in the early Church, do you know what they were?

The first was the Arian, which was that Christ was inferior to the Father, and that the Holy Spirit was not divine. The second, the Apollinarian heresy which was that Christ was not human in a strict sense; that the divine nature took the place of the mind in him, and that his humanity was absorbed in divinity. Third, the Nestorian heresy, which was that Christ was a union of two distinct persons. Fourth, the Eutychian heresy, which was that Christ was divine, and in no way human.

Mrs. M. C. Webster, Albert, W. Va., writes, with reference to a recent query in THE MAIL-BAG:

Rev. Dr. Paton (the famous missionary to the New Hebrides), is a very dear friend of mine. His wife has just passed away. He has five sons and one daughter living, and "five are with Jesus, where at last we hope all to meet." I quote from one of his letters. His eldest son is a minister at Drum, Gipp's Land, Australia; the second, a missionary on Malienla, New Hebrides; the third, another missionary; the fourth has entered a university, and the fifth is at college, all preparing for the mission or ministry.

Student, Los Angeles, Cal. Are not the Popes of Rome always Italians? A friend says that one was an Englishman.

Nicholas Breakspear, born in England, about the year 1100, became Pope under the title of Adrian IV. In early life he was very poor, and his education was so defective that the Abbot of St. Albans refused his permission to Breakspear becoming a monk. He begged his way to France, where he was admitted to the monastery of St. Rufus. Here he studied hard, and rose to be Abbot. He had good natural ability, and was appointed a cardinal, and then Pope, at the age of fifty-four.

Mrs. E. M. G., South Westport, Mass. Is not life of more account than truth? Is it not more sacred? If anyone is in a very critical position where, by lying, they could save themselves and others, would it be wrong to save life by sacrificing truth?

You have alighted on what is truly one of the great "questions of the ages," one that has excited centuries of discussion, and which has been taken up by leaders in almost every religion under the sun. We advise you to procure and read Dr. Trumbull's little book, A Lie Never Justifiable ($1), Wattles & Co., Philadelphia, publishers. In it you will find the principle laid down that there is no such thing as a harmless, pure lie, and, therefore, that is justifiable in the sight of God, who is Truth, while Satan is the father of lies. If our faith in God were strong and absolute, we would tell the truth at all times and under every condition, and fearlessly leave the consequences in His hands, who never abandons those who put their trust in him.

O. M. H., Kalamazoo, Mich. Christ said: "He that asketh of thee turn not thou away;" yet the five wise virgins in the parable are quoted as refusing to give their oil (Matt. 25: 9). Did they do right?

The imagery of the parable is symbolical. It is difficult to understand what is meant by the foolish virgins represented. The most probable explanation is that they represent a people whose religion is not deep and heartfelt. Like the rocky ground hearers (Matt. 13: 20), their religion soon evaporated in the period of waiting or persecution. They had not the reserve store of the oil of the Spirit. Therefore, when they asked the others for the oil, they were refused. It was impossible. No man has more grace than suffices for his own needs. He cannot transfer it. The same source from which it comes to him is open to others, and there is no other way of obtaining it.

Mrs. V. M. C., Snohomish, Wash., writes:

I want to tell you the good that is being done by just one number of your paper. I have taken it for a good many years, and it is eagerly read by our family of six. Then I send it to a dear friend in Oregon; she, in turn, keeps it for her family of five, then sends or takes it to the "Farm," where it is eagerly sought for by a number of the inmates and then sent back to the original lady, and sent to her young married daughter. So some twelve or fifteen persons read it and it is doing good all along the line.

In our issue of July 26, we published an answer containing an account of the eagle "Old Abe" that accompanied the Eighth Wisconsin campaigns of the Civil War. We have been informed by Mrs. F. S., of Welcome, that "Old Abe" died of pneumonia in 1881, and that his stuffed body was burned in the fire at the State capitol in 1[illegible]. She also informs us that her husband was one of the company that bought the eagle from an Indian, and that when the bird was taken to Madison, Wis., where the regiment assembled, the Governor ordered that a perch be made for him and a man detailed to bear him in battle. He was carried next to the flags, and, whenever he was released, would return after a short flight to his post. After the war, he was taken to many reunions of the war veterans.

THE BREAD RIOTS IN NEW YORK

Not since the report of the Kishineff massacre reached New York City, have the Jews of the "East Side" been in such a state of wild excitement as in the last few weeks. The kosher bread makers went on strike for the purpose, it was reported by their leaders, of securing better wages and better sanitary conditions in the bake-shops. As many of them work in cellars, they received a large measure of public sympathy. Unfortunately the strikers took the law into their own hands, and attacked the flour wagons, which brought them into collision with the police. Order was soon restored by the blue-coats. The people in the district do not make their own bread and will eat none that is not strictly "kosher." Our photograph shows a group of the striking East Side breadmakers.

Miscellaneous

Grace W. B., Dayton, O. No trace of the authorship.

Subscriber, Osage, Ia. "Witte" is pronounced, we believe, in two syllables.

Reader, Fort Washington, Pa. It was the wife of Adoniram Judson, the American missionary to Burmah, who wrote the lines you refer to.

F. H., Gallatin, Tenn. We believe it is a device used by charlatans and humbugs, who profess to tell the future by divination. Better have nothing to do with it, Subscriber, Atlantic City, N. J. Bishop William Taylor is dead, but the work he founded still goes on. It is under the care of Bishop Joseph Hartzell of the M. E. Church.

M. H., Brinkleyville, N. C. 1. Don't know. 2. It is from Young's Night Thoughts, night 3, line 118. The same expression is found in Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield, stanza 8.

Will subscriber from Mount Pleasant, Ia., who asked how to "gain faith," send his or her name to Miss Grace Willson, 820 Burling Street, Chicago, Ill., who would like to send something helpful on the subject?

The Anti-Mormon Campaign Fund

The following additional contributions in aid of the Anti-Polygamy Campaign have been received:

Gardiner, Mrs S L, N Y	$5 00	Billings, Julia, Vt.	2[illegible]
S B, Ia	1 00	Hazen, MrsG N, Pa	1[illegible]
Taylor, Mrs A B, N Y	4	Troutman, Mrs J H, Pa	1[illegible]
Warner, Mrs H A, Calif	6	Smith, Mrs J M, Mass	1 0[illegible]
Friend, Mo	2 00	Campbell, Mrs H L, N Y	1 0[illegible]
Whitman, Mrs F J, Mass	1 00	Horton, Mrs H L, N Y	4
Taylor, Mrs W A, Tex	50	Shepper, Mrs C., O.	1[illegible]
		Carson, Mrs S A, Ia	4

All contributions in aid of the work, and for defraying the expenses incident to the "Memorial" campaign, will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 23, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

IGHT YOUNG GOSPEL TEACHERS

NATIVE EVANGELISTIC WORKERS IN CAMP

JALMO AND RAJEE, HIS SISTER

OUR "SUBSTITUTES" IN INDIA

NE of the most gratifying results of the splendid benevolent work done in India by the readers of this journal in the last few years, is now coming light. Many of the missionaries write us that numrs of the orphans who have been trained under their re, and whose support was provided by generous HRISTIAN HERALD readers, have become efficient religus workers, and are now spreading the Gospel nong their own people in the numerous towns, vilges, and small native settlements. Some are preach's of the Word, and are building up churches and ngregations; others are trained evangelists and rry the message of salvation to their countrymen ith a force, an eloquence, and a consecrated zeal at have been blessed to the conversion of many. till others are Bible readers, and there are many ore who are doing Christian work in a humble and ndistinguished way.

Some of the letters recently received from missionries on this subject are full of encouragement, and ow that the work done by the Christians of America r India was far deeper and of much greater spiritual gnificance than any one could have dreamed.

Above and beyond this, there must come to all who ave had a share in this work of training these young ative teachers and preachers, a deep sense of gratiude, when they reflect that these young native workrs are, in the most literal sense, their "substitutes" the mission field. Thus, the seed they sowed with rayer and hope, and which they have watered and ended so faithfully, is bringing forth fruit in abunant measure.

Some of the recent letters from missionaries are specially interesting in this connection: "Jalmo nd Rajee," writes Rev. D. H. Lee, of the Bengali Mission, Calcutta, "were skeletons indeed when they ame to us. The boy witnessed the proceedings as he orphans were taken from the famine field, and aw how the girls were being sent to one place and he boys to another. He was struck with a plan to eep his sister Rajee with him. He took Rajee by he hand, until we had them safely in our camp amid company of boys, and then he came and said: This is not a boy, but my sister,' and he imploringly ell on the ground and begged us to keep the 'boyirl,' which we did. Now she is training as a teacher, nd he (Jalmo), is one of the most useful young hen I have . . . . One of the photographs sent you hows a group of three workers. Two of these were supported by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD when they irst came. These work as Bible women, colporteurs nd in evangelistic work. During the past year they ave sold over 1,000 copies of the Scriptures, besides as many copies of the story of the Gospel and other books, n addition to the circulation of many Gospel tracts. This work has been done in four or five languages of the people around us. They have met them at the 'ghats,' on the Hooghly River, at the 'melas' somewhat distant from the city, and at railway stations."

Mrs. Ada Lee writes: "We have now thirteen schools and fourteen Bible women." One of the brightest girls at this mission is Kajuri, who is described as being

ONCE FAMINE WAIFS, NOW GOSPEL WORKERS
Chitnio, Magda and Shundiri, young workers of the Bengali Mission

"as sharp as a needle," and as having in her the making of a good teacher.

Bishop J. E. Robinson, of the M. E. Church Missions in India, writes: "In my deliberate judgment, no development in the work of our missions in recent times is likely to count for more in the building up of the Church of Christ in India, than that by which this large number of promising young people have been added to the Christian army. All praise to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers for the magnificent part they have played in this important development."

Rev. E. A. Chute, American Board Missionary at Palmur, India, writes: "I think I should be within the limits if I should say that 99 out of every 100 of these orphan children will become Christians. Much the large majority of them will develop into Christian workers, preachers and teachers. In my department of the work, as many as nine-tenths promise to become such. Who can estimate the amount of Christian work and the stimulus toward the establishment of the Kingdom of God in this benighted land!"

From many other points comes similar news of young men and women, supported at the orphanages, who have already entered or are about to enter the field as workers for souls. One missionary at Raipur writes that he has three Bible readers and many more are in training; at Borsad, in Bombay Presidency, a number are preparing for Christian work; at the Borach Orphanage, Gujerat, thirteen young men have felt a call to spiritual labor among their people; at Kaira, Gujerat, seven girls are preparing as Christian workers; at Cumbun, two are already pastors in active service and several more are preparing; at Vinukonda, Guntur, there are five teachers from among the orphans and more to come; at Khandwa, five will shortly become teachers and two preachers; at Sholapur, thirty-two girls are in training as Bible women; at Cawnpore, seven will be evangelists, teachers, and pastors; Poona, from one orphanage alone, will place in the field thirteen spiritual workers; Neenweh has sixteen in training for Bible women; Baroda reports ten teachers and fifteen Bible women. Besides, there are reports from a large number of other stations, including Ahmednagar, Surzalla, Gulgarh, Sirur, Seoni, Mauwa, Narsinghpur, etc., where there are either already in the field or preparing for active service many bright consecrated young men and women, who will be part of the mighty army that is now being recruited to bring India to Christ. In Dholka, Gujerat, there is a class of thirty, nearly all orphans, taking the full Bible course and qualifying for the highest of all callings. These young workers are even now preaching the Gospel in some thirty villages. In Ajmeer, in the Bowen Orphanage, there is a large training class doing a similar excellent work. In Akola, Berar, thirteen young men have heard the call to the ministry. They are all supported by CHRISTIAN HERALD patrons, and even in the early stages of their career are doing good service. Thus, on every hand does the blessing multiply, and the seed sown in India by Christian America is growing to a glorious harvest.

HOW TO BECOME A CHRISTIAN

A SERMON BY REV. DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D., LL.D.*

THE name by which the early Christians were familiarly known was "The People of that Way." In the year 36 the Sanhedrin issued a commission to Saul of Tarsus authorizing him to arrest any whom he might find "of the Way, whether they were men or women, and to bring them bound unto Jerusalem" (Acts 9:2). In the year 58, twenty-two years later, the same Saul, now an apostle of Christ, made a defense from the steps of the Castle of Antonia, in which he said, "I persecuted this Way unto the death, binding and delivering into prison both men and women" (Acts 22 : 4).

The name thus given to the followers of Christ is significant for many reasons. The question has been raised in some quarters as to whether religion is dogma or life. In fact, our religion in the last reduction is neither dogma nor life; it is a way from sin into the Kingdom of God. Its bedrock is truth, its pavement is character, its destination is eternal life.

It is a plain way; as indicated in the prophecy, "A highway shall be there and a way, and it shall be called the Way of Holiness; the wayfaring man though a fool shall not err therein." Nevertheless, to the unsaved no question is more bewildering than this: "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" In the Pocono Mountains, last Summer, I found it very difficult to keep in the old Indian trail; though it was easy enough for my comrade, who had been bred and born in that vicinity. A letter lies before me, written by a man of affairs, in which he says, "All my life I have been an attendant at church; I would like to be a Christian, but I confess that I have never yet learned how to set about it.

First Steps

It is my present purpose to make this matter as clear as I can. Let it be said at the outset that one thing only is needful in order to become a follower of Christ; to-wit, that one shall believe in him, but, before we come to that, we must touch upon a matter of preliminary importance.

A man must repent before he believes in Christ (Mark 1 : 15). Now repentance is not a saving grace, having value only as it leads to something further on. The pain of a physical malady has no curative virtue; but it is this pain that inclines the patient to ring the doctor's bell. So John the Baptist goes before Christ with his cry, "Repent ye!" since without repentance there is no adequate sense of need, nor disposition to accept Christ.

Let us get a clear understanding of repentance. It suggests at the outset, an apprehension of sin as a fact; not a figment of the imagination, not "a belief of mortal mind;" not an infection due to environment, and therefore involving no personal accountability; but a distinct, flagrant violation of holy law, by which the sinner is brought into rebellion against God.

And sin must be apprehended, furthermore, as a calamitous fact, that is, involving an adequate penalty: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." A true penitent recognizes the justice of the punishment which is imposed upon him; as did the repentant thief, when he said to his comrade, "We indeed are condemned justly." One who spends his time in trying to explain away hell and "the unquenchable fire" and "the worm that dieth not," is not a penitent man.

To Realize the Need

And sin must be furthermore recognized as a concrete or personal fact. It is not enough to acknowledge the incontrovertible presence of sin in the world around us. The important thing is, that this sin inheres in me. So David prayed, "Have mercy upon me, O God, according unto thy lovingkindness; for I have sinned and done this evil in thy sight." He had always known, in general terms, that adultery was a fearful thing; but when it pointed its gaunt finger at him in the watches of the night and hissed, "Bathsheba!" it brought him to his knees.

And this conviction of sin must be followed by a resolution to forsake it. The true penitent fears his sin, hates it, loathes it, abhors it, and determines to quit it. But observe, all this is merely preliminary to the one thing needful. There is no virtue in repentance per se. The penitent is not saved; he has only discovered his need of salvation. He knows his malady; now how shall he be cured of it? To pause here is death. One in a sinking boat must not be satisfied with stopping the leak; the boat must be baled out. A man head-over-ears in debt cannot recover his credit by resolving to pay cash in the future; he must somehow cancel his past obligations. If a penitent were never to commit another sin, the "handwriting of ordinances" would still be against him. The record of the past remains; and it will confront him in the Judgment unless it be disposed of. The past! The mislived past! What shall be done about it?

Christ's Own Statement

This brings us to the matter in hand: What shall I do to be saved? or How shall I become a Christian?

Our Lord at the beginning of his ministry said to Nicodemus, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him, should not perish, but have everlasting life." And to make the matter perfectly clear to this learned rabbi, he resorted to the kindergarten method, using an object lesson: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up (that is, crucified), that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." So the one thing needful is to believe in Christ.

The same truth was repeated over and over in the teachings of Jesus and of his disciples as well. To the jailer of Philippi who, in sudden conviction, was moved to cry, "What shall I do?" the answer of Paul was, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved."

But what is it to "believe in Christ?" It is easy to say, "Come to Christ" and "Accept Christ" and "Believe in him"; but just here occurs the bewilderment. These are oftentimes mere shop-worn phrases to the unsaved, however simple they may appear to those who have entered on the Christian life.

DR. DAVID JAMES BURRELL

To believe in Christ is, first, to credit the historic record of his life. Once on a time he lived among men, preached, wrought miracles, suffered and died on the accursed tree. So far all will agree; but there is clearly no saving virtue in an intellectual acceptance of an undisputed fact.

It means, second, to believe that Jesus was what he claimed to be. And his claim is perfectly clear. To the woman of Samaria who sighed for the coming of Messiah he said, "I that speak unto thee am he." No reader of the Scripture could misunderstand his meaning, since the prophecy of the Messiah runs like a golden thread through all its pages from the protevangel, "The seed of woman shall bruise the serpent's head," to the prediction of Malachi, "The Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in his beams."

Christ's Claims

But, more than this, Jesus claimed that as Messiah he was the only-begotten and coequal Son of God. He came forth from God and, after finishing his work, was to return to God and reassume "the glory which he had with the Father before the world was." It was this oft repeated assertion which so mortally offended the Jews as to occasion his arrest on the charge of blasphemy. He persisted in his claim, and was put to death for "making himself equal to God." It must be s[ai]d, therefore, that no man can be said to believe in C[hrist] who is not prepared to affirm, without demur or qu[al]ification, that he was what he claimed to be.

It means, third, to believe that Jesus did wha[t] he said he came into the world to do. And here a[gain] there can be no doubt or peradventure. He said, "[The] Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to m[in]ister and to give his life a ransom for many." [His] death was to be the purchase-price of redemption. [In] the Wilderness he was tempted to turn aside from [his] great purpose. The adversary led him to a high pl[ace], and with a wave of his hand, directed his though[t] to the kingdoms of this world, saying, "All these are m[ine]. I know thy purpose: thou art come to win this world [by] dying for it. Why pay so great a price? I know [thy] fear and trembling—for thou art flesh—in view of [the] nails, the fever, the dreadful exposure, the long ago[ny]. Why pay so great a price? I am the prince of [this] world. One act of homage, and I will abdicate. I[f] down and worship me!"

Never before or since has there been such a temp[ta]tion, so specious, so alluring. But Jesus had covenan[ted] to die for sinners. He knew there was no other way [of] accomplishing salvation for them. He could not [be] turned aside from the work which he had volunteered [to] do. Therefore he put away the suggestion with [the] word, "Get thee behind me, Satan! I cannot be move[d]. I know the necessity that is laid upon me. I know th[at] my way to the kingdom is only by the cross. I [am] therefore resolved to suffer and die for the deliveran[ce] of men."

The Secret Disclosed

On a later occasion, on his way to Jerusalem—th[e] memorable journey of which it is written, "He set [his] face steadfastly" to go toward the cross—he spoke [to] his disciples of his death. He had been with them n[ear]ly three years, but had not been able fully to reveal [his] mission, because they were "not strong enough to be[ar] it." A man with friends, yet friendless, lonely in t[he] possession of his great secret, he had longed to give the[m] his full confidence, but dared not. Now, as they jou[r]neyed southward through Cæsarea Philippi, he aske[d] them, "Who do men say that I am?" And they a[n]swered, "Some say John the Baptist; others, Elia[s]; others, Jeremiah, or one of the Prophets." And h[e] saith, "But who say ye that I am?" Then Peter—brave, impulsive, glorious Peter—witnessed his goo[d] confession: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the livi[ng] God!" The hour had come. His disciples were begi[n]ning to know him. He would give them his full confidence. So as they journeyed on toward Jerusalem h[e] told them all how he had come to redeem the world b[y] bearing its penalty of death; "he began to show the[m] how he must suffer many things of the elders and chie[f] priests and scribes, and be killed."

At that point Peter could hold his peace no longer but began to rebuke him, saying, "Be it far from thee Lord! To suffer? To die? Nay, to reign in Messiani[c] splendor!" And Jesus turning, said unto him, "Ge[t] thee behind me, Satan!"—the very words with whic[h] he had repelled the same suggestion in the wilderness. As he looked on his disciple, he saw not Peter, but Sa[ta]n—perceived how the adversary had for the momen[t] taken possession, as it were, of this man's brain an[d] conscience and lips. "Get thee behind me, Satan! [I] know thee! I recognize thy crafty suggestion; but [I] am not to be turned aside from my purpose. Get thee behind me! Thou art an offence unto me. Thy words are not of divine wisdom, but of human policy. Thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men!"

The Vital Centre

From this we conclude that the vicarious death of Jesus is the vital centre of his Gospel, and that any word which contravenes it is in the nature of a satanic suggestion. It follows that no man can truly believe in Christ without assenting to the fact that the saving power is in his death; as it is written, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin," and, "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." He came into the world to die for sinners, that they by his death might enter into life; he came to take our place before the bar of the offended Law, to be "wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities, that by his stripes we might be healed;" he came to "bear our sins in his own body on the tree;" and to believe in Christ is to believe that he did what he came to do.

It means, fourth—and now we come to the very heart of the matter—to believe that Christ means precisely hat he says. He says to the sinner, "The Son of Man ith power on earth to forgive sins." He says, "Him at cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out." He ys, "He that believeth in me hath everlasting life." t this point belief means personal appropriation; ac-ptance, immediate, here, now. It is to make an end doubt and perplexity and all questioning, by closing with the overtures of divine mercy. It is to lay down e's arms and make an unconditional surrender. It is take the proffered hand of the Saviour in an everlast-g covenant of peace. It is to say, "My Lord, my fe, my sacrifice, my Saviour and my all!"

*Preached in the Marble Collegiate Church, New York. Text: "And there arose no small stir about that Way" Acts 19: 23.

But just here is where many hesitate and fail. They not "screw their courage to the sticking point." hey go through the intellectual process, but do not cept Christ. They come up to the line, but do not ke the step that crosses it. They do not summon solution to say, "I will!" They put away the out-retched hand, and so fall short of salvation.

The will must act. The prodigal in the far country ill stay there forever unless his resolution cries, "I will ise and go!" The resolution is an appropriating act. makes Christ mine; it links my soul with his, as the upler binds the locomotive to the loaded train. It rasps his outstretched hand; it seals the compact and spires the song:

"Tis done, the great transaction's done,
I am my Lord's and he is mine!
He drew me, and I followed on,
Charmed to confess the voice divine.

High heaven that hears the solemn vow,
That vow renewed shall daily hear:
Till in life's latest hour I bow
And bless in death a bond so dear!

Now this is all. The man who really believes on hrist is saved by that alone. He can never be lost. s Rowland Hill was accustomed to say, "Christ and I re so joined, he can't be in Glory and leave me be-hind." But salvation from the penalty of sin is not the whole of salvation; only the beginning of it.

The sequel to "becoming a Christian" is following Christ. "Salvation" is a large word, including growth in character and usefulness and all the high attainments which are included in a genuine Christian life. This is what Paul means when he says, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in you." Work it out! Work your salvation out to its uttermost possibilities! Be a maximum Christian; not content with being saved "so as by fire" but craving "an abundant entrance" into the kingdom. All this is accomplished in the close and faithful following of Christ.

This "following" is the sure test and touchstone by which a man determines whether he has really come to Christ and believes in him. Our "good works" are not meritorious as having any part in our deliverance from condemnation; but they are the acid-test of our faith; and they also determine the quality of the heaven that awaits us. And, in this sense, "they shall in no wise lose their reward." To use a rude figure; a man going to an entertainment gets a ticket of admission, but for his reserved seat he pays something more. "The just shall live by faith;" but the abundance of their life is determined by the product of their faith. Wherefore, he loses much who, while believing in Christ, follows him afar off.

To follow Christ at the best, means to regard him as our Priest, our only Priest, whose sacrifice is full and sufficient for us. We forsake all other plans of salvation and trust simply and solely to the merit of his atoning blood.

To follow Christ means to regard him as our only Prophet, or Teacher. All preachers, ecclesiastical councils, historic creeds and symbols are remanded to a subordinate place. His word is ultimate for us.

To follow Christ means to regard him as our King. He reigns in us and over us. His love constrains us. His wish is our law. His authority is final. "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it."

And to follow Christ means to do all this in the open. It may be that some who refuse to confess Christ are ultimately saved by him; but the presumption is immensely against the man who lives that way. "Stand forth into the midst!" "Quit thyself like a man!"

In closing, we return to iterate and reiterate the proposition that our salvation from sin and spiritual death is by faith in Christ and by that only. Let no side issues enter here to confuse and bewilder us. "He that believeth shall be saved."

That is final and conclusive. Our deliverance is wholly of grace: we do not earn it. "The wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life."

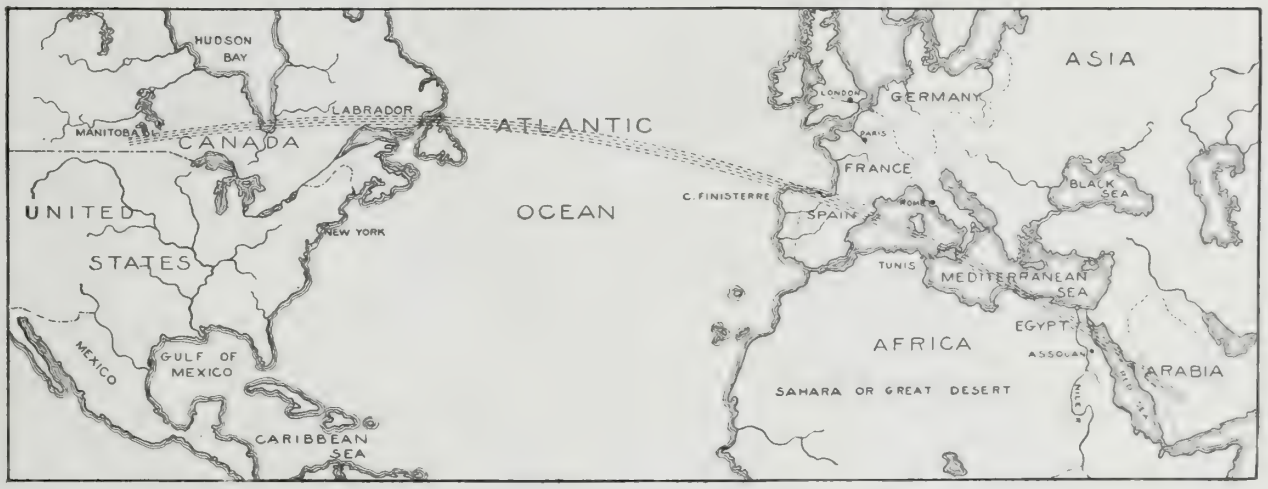
Long as I live, I'll still be crying
Mercy 's free!

And therefore all the glory is unto God: "Of whom are we in Christ Jesus, who is made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption; that, according as it is written, if any man glory, let him glory in the Lord."

Nevertheless, the benefit of the gift is conditioned on our acceptance of it. The manna lies about our feet "white and plenteous as hoar frost," but it will not save us from famishing unless we gather it up and eat it. The water gushes from the rock, but we shall die of thirst unless we dip it up and drink it. Christ on the Cross saves no man; it is only when Christ is appropriated that he saves us. We must make him ours. We must grasp his extended hand. Luther said, "The important thing is the possessive pronoun, first person singular." One of the early fathers said, "It is the grip on the blood that saves us." Christ stands waiting—he offers life for the taking. Who will have it? The worst of sinners can make it his very own by saying with all his heart, "I will! I do!"

THE COMING ECLIPSE

AN eclipse of the sun, or of the oon has always a y sterious fascina-on for most of us, nd whenever we e the dark shadow reeping onward cross their bright urfaces, we have feeling of awe, nd are reminded f the world-old ales connected ith such events. Ve remember the tory of Columbus, ho, at a time when n eclipse of the oon was near, re-luced some unruly ndians to submis-ion by threatening o take away from hem the night ight of the Great Spirit, and how when the moon eemed almost lost, the savages begged to have it re-tored, and offered food as a recompense. The people f the Celestial Kingdom to this day believe that eclipses are caused by great dragons that are endeavoring to devour the sun and moon, so they beat upon drums to drive the monsters from their light meal.



PATH OF THE COMING SOLAR ECLIPSE OF AUGUST THIRTIETH

The eclipse of the sun, which will occur on the thirtieth of this month, is attracting the attention of astronomers, and of men of science the world over. One party of excursionists sailed from Boston to the shores of Labrador, in order to be in a better position to view the phenomenon. The Canadian government has sent out an expedition of its own. It is composed of the most prominent astronomers of Canada, assisted by four members of the staff of the Greenwich Observatory, in England. The most important of all is that of the Lick Observatory, of California. It will be in charge of Professor Curtis and Professor Stebbins. They will camp one hundred and fifty miles north of the Strait of Bell Isle, on Sandwich Bay. One of the main objects of this party is to discover if the planet Vulcan really exists in the solar region. Its discovery has been claimed by several astronomers, and as often disputed. Several parties composed of professors of astronomy in American colleges, and noted amateur observers, of which this country has so many, will be camped on various inlets of the rugged, sea-beaten Labrador coast.

As the eclipse will be of the longest duration in Spain, several Americans have gone there for the purpose of getting as many photographs of the sun, and its immediate surroundings, as possible. More will probably be learned from a careful study of the photographic plates.

The total duration of the eclipse will be two and one-half minutes in Labrador, three and three-quarters in Spain, and about three minutes in Egypt.

In Manitoba, at daybreak, the eclipse will be total. Of the main body of the sun the observers will see nothing. In its place will appear an inky black ball, the shadow of the moon, from which will stream a dazzling corona, or halo, the most beautiful phenomena of the eclipse. The corona sometimes extends three or four million miles from the sun. The light of the corona, under ordinary circumstances is lost in the great glare of the sun, and can be, in consequence, only studied in the few minutes or seconds of an eclipse. The light on the earth during the total eclipse will resemble that of a beautiful moonlight night. The stars will shine brightly. From Manitoba the path of the eclipse will be eastward across the Dominion of Canada, just north of the settled portion, then along the coast of Labrador. When it strikes the Atlantic it sweeps downward in a wide curve until it strikes the coast of Spain near Cape Finisterre.

The path of the eclipse next crosses the Mediterranean, passes over Tunis and enters the African Desert, crosses the Nile near Assouan, and finally disappears in Arabia, the total time to complete the long journey being about two hours and fifty minutes.

People in the northern part of this country will probably see only a partial eclipse, only a portion of the sun's surface being obscured, the bright portion appearing as a crescent. Passengers on ocean steamers, from this country to Europe will, without doubt, have an extremely good opportunity to see the eclipse in its spectacular features. Various attempts have been made to use the sea for observations; but no instruments have been invented that will do away with the inconvenience and inaccuracies caused by the rolling and tossing of the ship.

The Mormon Defiance

I am perfectly in accord with all that is being done to suppress the terrible evil, that is a menace to everything that pertains to liberty, happiness, and the general welfare of our whole country, and that is polygamy. I believe now is the time to strike it out, if it is ever to be done, before its strength becomes greater. The Mormons are growing more defiant, and only for the reason they are growing so much stronger financially, politically, and numerically. What is done to be effectual must be done soon. I have realized it for many years; but people's eyes are blinded to the peril that threatens us as a nation. Other nations are pointing the finger of scorn at us for the recognition we have already given it.

MRS. J. O. MACMASTER,
National President of Loyal Women of American Liberty, and Vice President at the National Council of Women of the United States.

A NEW PENTECOST AT KESWICK

BY DR. ARTHUR T. PIERSON

AFTER thirty years, something comparatively new has been witnessed, at Keswick, England. Two opinions already "in the air," neither yet taking tangible form. One is that an impulsive, impetuous outbreak of "Welsh emotionalism" became infectious, and rapidly swept through the Convention. Another is that the Spirit of God, that has moved so mightily in Wales, stirred those great audiences in the Keswick tents, and, like the wind which bloweth where it listeth, bowed hearts, as that same wind bends and sways the stalks of grain in the harvest field.

Providentially brought into very close contact with the meetings where some most marked manifestations occurred, it seems incumbent on me to give such testimony as may prevent misconception and misrepresentation on the one hand, and promote a true and healthy sentiment and sense of responsibility on the other.

At three evening gatherings, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, in the tent, when the writer was a speaker, were witnessed undoubted and striking movements of

A TENT GOSPEL SERVICE

God's Holy Spirit, growing in intensity and power. The opening night saw an outbreak of spiritual interest that ordinarily would be a grand climax for the closing meeting. No "after meeting" was contemplated, yet it was not only natural but necessary, and followed inevitably, not as something that needed urging but would not bear suppressing. Yet the memorable "All-night Meeting" of Wednesday rose to a higher flood-mark than on Monday, and lasted, with growing interest, till, from motives of simple expediency, it closed at three A.M.; and yet the closing meeting on Friday exceeded either of the others in the high level of spiritual power to which it rose.

The Keswick of 1905 has had a new Pentecost. This was not the intoxication of excitement and emotionalism, but the exhilaration of spiritual infilling, the New Wine of the Spirit. There was deep feeling, unquestionably, and it found occasional vent in sobs, tears and cries to God; but it was not wild and uncontrollable. Nothing was more remarked than the holy restraint that was manifested. The heart of the meeting responded immediately and instinctively to every spiritual suggestion. There was no need of leadership. Another and greater One was in control, invisibly present and presiding.

In the closing meeting of Friday night, there were the most manifest demonstrations and illustrations of God's working. Many prayerful souls had focussed their prayers largely on this meeting. The writer was one of a company of about thirty, that met by agreement that afternoon for an hour or more of prayer. Definite requests were made that the Holy Spirit would sweep through the meeting in power, setting aside the appointed speakers, if He pleased; breaking down souls in cries and tears of penitence, compelling confession of definite sins, bursting through all needless restraints of fixed programme, leading to boldness of testimony, keeping down all disorderly elements leading to momentous decisions, inspiring new self-dedication, and constraining all his servants to remove hindrances to holiness and usefulness, and leading some to offer themselves for the mission fields of the world. Every specific request made that afternoon on the hillside, was fulfilled to the letter.

IN THE BEAUTIFUL KESWICK REGION

While Rev. E. W. Moore was giving an address on I. Cor. 3: 2-15, on "The Ordeal of Fire," dwelling with searching power on the necessity, not only of building on the right foundation, but with purified materials; and picturing the careless builder fleeing from his burning house, losing all work and reward, and himself saved only as one who has barely escaped the flame, I, who was to follow him, felt God's refining fire going through me, revealing the wood, hay, and stubble of work and motive. So humbling and overwhelming was this conviction, that when called upon to lead in prayer and address the meeting, it was quite involuntary first of all to make a confession, and ask others, w likewise had felt conscious of God's direct dealing. stand before God as those who then and there besou Him, to refine us now. In response to that invitat the whole tent full of people rose as one man, a while prayer was being offered, many joined in an dible "Amen." Not one word of my proposed addr carefully prepared for this closing meeting, was e delivered, nor was the subject even indicated.

The prayer was scarcely concluded, when a spirit penitent confession was already manifest, that co not be restrained, but broke out in every quarter; a I stood there on my feet for about two hours an half, witnessing the Holy Spirit's wondrous workin Human guidance was not needed; God was guiding t meeting. A soldier acknowledged desertion and the and left the tent to write out his confession, and so of us, later on, saw the letters he had written. A co mander in the navy grandly declared his purpose make his ship a floating Bethel. No less than fi clergymen, evangelists and leaders in Christian wo confessed to sins of avarice, ambition, appetite, lust applause, neglect of the Word, of prayer, of souls; hu dreds of other individuals confessed various sins omission and commission, sometimes a-half dozen more on their feet at once.

No improper word was spoken. All was subdue but deep, intense, searchin The meeting might ha gone on without decli of interest, had not aga motives of expediency a consideration for others pr vailed. No one became hy terical or fainted, few le the meeting, and, mean while, a great crowd ha gathered outside the crowde tent. When we closed wit old "Coronation" at 10.3 there had been no disturb ance. Penitence, confe sion, prayer, self-surrende holy resolve, had led up t praise and adoration. An the great throng quietl separated, with the profoun sense that God had visite his people.

The deputation from Wale were from the centres of th great revival, and them selves God's appointe leaders in it. Such me as Rev. Seth Joshua, Prof Kern Evans, Revs. Mr. Jones, of Carmarthen; D Wynne Evans, of Chester; Owen Owen, of Merthyr Mr. Jones, of Llwynfia and others like them came from revival scenes in their own churches, and brought with them a spirit of believing and expectant prayer.

Apart from the special meeting, Wednesday afternoon, for testimony as to the "Welsh Revival," none of them spoke, but they prayed; and the blessing borne to Wales from Keswick, in the conventions at Llandrindod and Pontypridd, and through the testimony of Mrs. Penn Lewis, Mr. Inwood, Mr. Meyer and others, came back to Keswick as ascending vapors return in showers.

The Heavenly Way---Twenty-Five Greatest Chapters in the Bible

BY C. H. YATMAN

THIS summer is my twenty-fifth anniversary of Leadership of the Young Peoples' Meetings at Ocean Grove. The secret of success, for God has crowned the years that way, has been the presence and power in all the services of the three great gifts of heaven: Inspiration, Incarnation, and the Holy Ghost. From the Inspired Book I have selected for the anniversary year's work, twenty-five of the Greatest Chapters. Each one is like a shining sun, full of good and glory that will never dim.

1. Peace and Promise Chapter, John 14.
   The sweetest words that ever left the lips of Jesus.
2. New Birth Chapter, John 3.
   Here we get the whole Bible in one chapter.
3. Victory Chapter, Romans 8.
   This is the Christian's battle cry.
4. The Safety Psalm, Psalm 91.
   Promise, Providence and Protection.
5. The Commandment Chapter, Exodus 20.
   Law and Love are wedded in the Gospel.
6. The Beautiful Chapter, Matthew 5.
   Beatitudes, blessings, brightness and brotherhood.
7. Lost and Found Chapter, Luke 15.
   Sheep, Silver and Boy, all lost and all found.
8. Pentecost Chapter, Acts 2.
   The Revival that will never have an end.
9. Charity Chapter, I. Corinthians 13.
   Love that knows no limit in power or place.
10. Heaven Chapter, Revelation 21.
    The City of Gold, with Saviour, Saints and Song.
11. Character Chapter, Job 29.
    Christ controls conduct; conduct makes character.
12. Resurrection Chapter, I. Corinthians 15.
    The chapter that takes away all fear of death.
13. Atonement Chapter, Isaiah 53.
    The greatest chapter of the whole Bible.
14. Wisdom Chapter, Proverbs 3.
    A Compendium of truth for young men.
15. Faith Chapter, Hebrews 11.
    The source of mountain-moving power.
16. Judgment Chapter, Romans 14.
    The rule of life in questions of conscience.
17. The Prodigal's Psalm, Psalm 51.
    The prayer for all penitents.
18. Work Chapter, James 2.
    The other half of Hebrews 11.
19. Convert's Chapter, Isaiah 12.
    For all beginners in the Christian life.
20. Abiding Chapter, John 15.
    Every verse a nugget of gold.
21. Come Chapter, Isaiah 55.
    The Royal Invitation and the Feast.
22. Consecration Chapter, Romans 12.
    The pathway for pilgrims to Mount Zion.
23. The Bottomless Chapter, Ephesians 3.
    Promises that passeth understanding.
24. Crucifixion Chapter, John 19.
    The old, old story, how he died to save us.
25. Ascension Chapter, Acts 1.
    His going and His coming.

Training Bible Teachers

REV. DR. SCOFIELD will shortly begin another series of Bible lectures at the Bible Teachers' Training School, Forty-ninth Street and Lexington Avenue, New York. Dr. Scofield was formerly president of the Northfield Bible Training School. For many years he was pastor of the Moody Church, Northfield, and is well known as the author of the Scofield Bible Correspondence Course.

BARON KOMURA AND TAKAHIRA IN PORTSMOUTH

RECEIVING THE RUSSIAN ENVOYS AND THEIR STAFFS

Peacemakers at Portsmouth

DAME RUMOR, the lady of many tongues and active imagination, has made the most of the first week of the Peace Conference, between the representatives of Japan and Russia at ortsmouth.

We were told that the envoys of Russia had come erely to find out the extent of Japan's demands, and at they had no power to conclude peace, or even range for an armistice. M. de Witte was said "to ave said," to some person (unknown), that the terms Japan were too heavy to be considered by his coun-y, and that war must go on. As M. de Witte did not now at that time what the terms were, he, of course, id nothing of the kind. It was held by a number of apers that the prospect of peace had faded, and that ussia, by refusing indemnity, and everything else for hat matter, would bring things to a deadlock, and re-all her envoys. The second day after the Conference pened, it was telegraphed that the zar had cabled his plenipotentiaries accept no terms that would be all humiliating to Russia. Some ess representatives of the St. Pe-rsburg press were very generous ith their views as to what Russia ould do in the case, and were per-ctly willing to settle the matter for ie American newspapers, while M. de Witte settled matters with Japan. M. Witte, on the other hand, stood mly against these false reports, and eclared that he had strong hopes of eace and was determined to bring it out.

The beautiful city of Portsmouth as made the most of this great histor-al event; and her streets have been all of a bustle and suppressed excite-ent that has probably not been seen here since the stirring days of the d French wars, when her citizens ere soldiers as well as merchant inces. In those days the townsfolk sed to cluster on the docks, to see the reat hulls and towering masts of many ips sail by the forts, and drop down-ard toward the horizon, to thunder ter at the walls of Quebec, or batter nto dust the towers and gates of Louis-urg. The wide, elm-shaded streets have een decorated with flags, Russian and Japanese, the d, white, and blue of "Old Glory," of course, occu-ying the place of honor. The building where the en-oys met has a most festal appearance, so bedraped and anner-hung it is. The summer guests at the Went-orth, and other large hotels about Portsmouth and ittery Point, seem to regard the whole affair as gotten p for their especial benefit, and made the most of it. ame Rumor aforesaid has received great assistance om these, as well as the newspaper men, for there is othing else like "wars and rumors of wars" to enliven holiday, or even rumors of peace as it is here.

The peace squadron was received at the Navy Yard y Admiral Mead, who invited the distinguished for-igners to be his guests at breakfast. The breakfast as a very informal affair, and was the first social event f the conference at which ladies were in attendance. Some represented the most aristocratic of the old families of Portsmouth, while a large number were the wives of naval officers connected with the Yard. About one o'clock carriages and automobiles were taken for the court-house, where Governor McLane was waiting. The procession was led off by the scarlet-coated marine band, the battalion of marines acting as a guard of honor. On the bridge that connects the two States of Maine and New Hampshire there was drawn up a provisional regiment of the New Hampshire National Guard. With these now leading, the procession wended its way in the midst of cheering crowds. The Russians received their share as well as the Japanese. When they alighted at the court-house it was found to be decorated with pictures of Washington and Grant. Governor McLane has, with the possible exception of the Chief Executive of Kentucky, one of the largest crops of colonels on his staff of any governor in the country. With their gold-laced uniforms they added much to the picturesqueness of the occasion.

THE HALL DECORATED IN HONOR OF THE PLENIPOTENTIARIES

For the first time since he landed, M. de Witte had the pleasure of gazing on one of his own height, Congressman Sulloway, called the "giant of Congress," and the "tall pine of the Merrimack," who stood near the Governor. From the court-house the envoys went to their headquarters at the Wentworth. The American girl was well represented here. Dressed in white, with an abundance of enthusiasm, she cheered for both Russia and Japan, shouting banzai for the latter. She even broke into song, to better express the state of her feelings.

At the first meeting of the diplomats, de Witte brushed all formalities aside, and showed his evident desire to put, what to him is a most unpleasant matter, through as quickly as possible. He asked for Japan's terms at once, in order to have them for a basis for discussion. The demands evidently staggered the Russians. It is reported that they were substantially the cession of Port Arthur and Liao-tung peninsula to Japan, evacuation of Manchuria, cession of Sakhalin, and control of the railroad to Harbin. While no specific indemnity was stated, it is said that Japan intends to have Russia pay the cost of the war. It is felt that peace would not be far off if the two Russian diplomats could work without referring matters to St. Petersburg. The Russians will submit counter-propositions to Baron Komura, the nature of which has not been disclosed. There is a strong party there that does not seem to realize that a refusal to conclude peace at this time means the loss of Vladivostok, and the possibility of a Japanese naval raid by Togo that would lay the European coast cities of Russia in ashes. The Russian envoys here can see that more clearly than their countrymen at home. A prominent Japanese, Baron Kaneko, has stated that it would probably follow a discontinuance of the present negotiations, and future terms would be much more severe.

In the meanwhile, what are the belligerents doing in the Far East? The Russian military authorities are still alarmed about Vladivostok, and the Russian armies have been receiving reinforcements by every train coming from Russian territory. Although no armistic was agreed upon, both sides have avoided any move that would bring on any battle like the one at Moukden, until they hear the result of the Portsmouth deliberations.

It is reported that at one point a large scouting party of Russian cavalry rode toward some Japanese infantry regiments that were sheltered behind breastworks. The Japanese called out, "Peace, peace," at the same time, tossing up their caps. The cavalry immediately retired. The Russians have also fortified Harbin, and the lower part of the Tumen River. This is just north of Korea.

The Japanese have not been idle, and have over half a million men south and west of Kirin. Two Japanese fleets have sailed: one for Kamtschatka, and one for the sea of Okost. This means that Japan will acquire more Russian territory.

A. Briantchininoff, the distinguished Russian writer, in speaking of the attitude of the Mikado's envoys, said:

"I do not care to speculate as to the exact nature of conditions of peace. But I would like to speak of the fact that Japan in making her terms, is doubtless banking on the embarrassment of Russia at home, on account of internal troubles and unrest.

"But Japan should not forget that international reforms are now under way in my country, and should they be hastened, as there seems a reason to expect, all parties and classes would be united. Then Russia, if she deemed the terms too excessive and unprofitable, would go ahead, and I have no doubt bring the war to a successful end from a Russian standpoint."

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, Associate Ed[itor]

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly, Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTI[AN] HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class M[atter]

The Peace Negotiations

BEFORE this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches the hands of our readers, the Peace Conference at Portsmouth may have concluded its important task. In every civilized land under the sun earnest prayers have ascended that its labors may be successful, and that the basis of a treaty may be arranged that will guarantee the peace of the Far East for many years to come.

Notwithstanding the sceptical attitude of Europe, there has been in this country at least, a growing hopefulness that the two foes could be made friends. In these later years, in spite of occasional wars, the world has been groping and reaching up to a higher appreciation of peace and a better understanding of the possibilities of arbitration. The great truth that no real principle can ever be settled by violence, has been gradually winning its way; the conviction that there is a higher statesmanship, a nobler aim than armed conquest and the extension of dominion by slaughter and oppression.

Of course it is not supposable that such considerations enter into the peace negotiations at Portsmouth. There, Russia and Japan have come together in the persons of their plenipotentiaries, to make the best bargain possible, consistent with the fixed principles that govern such occasions, and for the best interests of the governments they respectively represent. Japan, while not an absolute victor, has the superior position and can dictate her terms. There is no reason, however, to apprehend that the Japanese desire the humiliation of Russia; on the contrary, all the evidence goes to show that the Mikado's government is genuinely desirous of peace, and of doing what it can to bring about such a consummation. Russia's plenipotentiaries are no doubt equally earnest in working for a friendly adjustment; but all the brilliant statesmanship of Witte and the skill of Baron Rosen may be sacrificed to the pride of the aristocracy at home, who would bitterly oppose the acceptance of terms from Japan involving any serious cession of territory or a large indemnity.

It may be said, therefore, that the fate of the negotiations in the final instance rests in the Czar's hands. Nicholas now knows the terms upon which this ill-starred war may be honorably closed. Of course, there are those even on this side of the Atlantic who, preferring discord to the "pipes of peace," are exceedingly busy just now in finding reasons why Russia should not accept what they designate as "humiliating" terms. They point to the fact that she still has a large army in the field, and has not yet been defeated on Russian soil. All such talk is out of place, and we do not believe it can carry the slightest weight with the peace envoys or anybody else. Japan has not even suggested humiliation. Even the question of indemnity she is content to leave to later discussion, and it may become a matter of bookkeeping. The best interests of both nations demand a cessation of the ruinous war, whose principal objects have already been accomplished.

Whatever may be the outcome of the negotiations, the United States will have nothing to regret. Our government, by taking up the difficult task of peacemaker, has done its duty before the whole world, and vindicated its title to be regarded as a Christian nation. Should lasting peace result, it will be a great triumph for pacific methods, and it will not detract from the glory of the event if it should be developed that Japan has incorporated in her policy an Asiatic "Monroe Doctrine," which would effectually check Eastern exploitation by European Powers in the future.

The Courage of Youth

PROBABLY a certain ability to meet danger with indifference is part of the equipment for manhood of every healthy boy. Nobody can endure a coward or a milksop. Nobody has any use for a weakling, an effeminate youth, who shrinks from pain and peril, and who takes no share in manly games, lest he shall get hurt. We want our boys brave, gallant, ready to rush to the front in an emergency, and if we are mothers, we must put our craven timidity aside, trust to Providence, and let our boys go ahead. Danger may be ahead, but worse than danger is in the rear.

Out of hairbreadth escape and foolhardy daring, our boys emerge at last, keen-eyed, cool-headed, quick-witted and resourceful, ready for action; the life-savers in an emergency, the staunch and steady men who may be depended on to do their duty. A mother who does not want her boy to become every inch a man is exceptional. As he grows up, and reaches seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, no one takes the pride in him that his mother does, not even his father. This is her boy. She has brought him up to do his valiant share in the world's work; to stand complete in honor in the world's eye. Though she dread his daring, she adores him for it.

Yet moral courage is more necessary in a young man's outfit than physical. The courage to resist temptation, to refuse intoxicants, to turn away from the fascination of the game of chance, to frown on profanity, to live nobly, chastely, and purely among evil companions, if such there be, is a finer thing than the finest dash and bravest splendor of fearless bodily action. A grand soul in a clean strong body is the ideal to be sought in manhood. "To see life steadily, and see it whole," is the important thing for our boys to seek.

Life a Conflict

AMONG the letters that come to the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from all sections of the country, are many from persons perplexed about their spiritual condition. They tell us of certain things in their experience, and ask whether these things are not evidences that they have never been born again. One letter, which is a type of many others, contains the following:

> I am sincerely desirous of being a true, faithful Christian, but am well nigh in despair. I have a strong desire for sins that I used to indulge in before I declared myself a Christian. I have rebellious thoughts about God which I vainly try to suppress; I find it difficult to control my temper; and having led a free life for many years, I am continually being drawn back toward it, though I have not yet fallen. Worse than all, God does not answer my prayers. Must I conclude from all this that I have not been converted? Should I be in this plight if I had been?

It is impossible not to sympathize with any one living such a life. But there is this gratifying consideration, that the struggle is being made. There would be no conflict if the man yielded. He would sink back into his sins and would be at peace. The very fact that there is war in his nature shows that there is spiritual life and that the citadel of his soul is being defended against its enemies. In a higher state, a more developed state, there is peace, too, when the lower passions are subdued and finally eliminated, but for the most of us and for strong animal natures, and in the early stages of Christian life, there is struggle and conflict.

Perhaps, at this stage, the question that harasses our correspondents, of the certainty of conversion might well be left for the time in abeyance. The struggle itself, as we have pointed out, is a ground for hope. But the thoughts should turn outward rather than inward. No man can deliver himself. From the Holy Spirit alone can true help come. God might by a miracle remove all these assailants, and give rest and peace. There have been instances in which he has done this. Men have passed into permanent quiet and confidence in an hour and have known conflict no more; but that is not the common course. As Bunyan describes in his Pilgrim's Progress, the Christian meets his enemies, is harassed in his fight by suggestions to curse God, has blasphemies whispered in his ear, so that he scarcely knows whether they come from within or without, and suffers continual distress. Once he lost his precious roll, as our correspondents have done. The main duty in the conflict is not to revert to past experience and to ask was that genuine, but to continue the fight. It is distressing to think that prayers are not answered, but that may be a mistake. If prayer was really unanswered, the struggle would not be continued; it is by the grace of God we are what we are. By seeking more grace we become something better.

It may be that the fierceness of the struggle is due to the nourishment that in past years was given to the foe. It is the penalty of past transgressions that we are weak. We have undermined our own strength. The more need then that we draw on the Divine strength that is freely given. It is good to turn the thought away from natural weakness, to that Source of power. There[e] no doubt that God sympathizes with his struggling [chi]ld. He delights in the confidence that says, "Thou[gh] he slay me yet will I trust in him." It is his good pl[eas]ure to give the victory. In his last written word [to] his people he promises many good things, and the b[est] of all are those that are assured to "him that overcor[neth]."

The Will and the Way

IT is quite clear to any one who has observed t[he] remarkable progress of the movement directed a[gain]st the Mormon representation in Congress, that the w[o]men of America have made up their minds that thei[r] fair country shall no longer rest under the stigma of p[o]lygamy. They are no longer to be put off with[a] half measures; with inoperative laws; with promises [th]at are forgotten as soon as they are made; with spas[m] of national virtue that ends in nothing. They hav[e] resolved that polygamy shall go, and in pursuance o[f] this resolution, they are working and organizing on a [sca]le never hitherto witnessed in any women's moveme[nt] in this land.

From North, South, East, and West are coming [in] the signed Memorials for presentation to the U. S. Se[na]te. There are long lists of names gathered by women [wh]o have in many cases secured them at great sacrifi[ce] of labor and strength. All honor to these women. [Th]ey are fighting nobly in behalf of pure homes, [pu]re hearths, and national righteousness. So enthus[ias]tic have they become, that women, hitherto strangers [we]re stopping each other in the street, asking for Memo[ria]ls. Thus far, the campaign has been wonderfully inspi[rin]g. This great army of women signers is recruited from e[ve]ry walk in life. Every signer is a soldier, with her [fa]ce resolutely set toward victory. Such interest and en[th]usiasm are almost unprecedented, and can have but [on]e result.

The time will soon be here when the great Mem[ori]al will be presented to Congress. Then the multitudi[no]us voices of mothers, sisters, wives, and daughters [of] America will be heard and heeded.

. . .

The Recent Zionist Congress

ENGLAND'S offer to the Zionists to provide t[hem] with a tract of land in Africa, twice the siz[e] of Palestine, has caused a split in the ranks of that b[ody]. The offer was made some time ago, but the question o[f] its acceptance was left open for the vote of the Zionist C[on]gress, recently held in Basel, Switzerland.

As is well known, the object of the Zionist moveme[nt] is to establish a permanent home for the Jews, wh[ere] they will rank once more among the nations of [the] earth. The main idea was, of course, to establish fir[st] a strong colony, or colonies, in Palestine, where, accord[in]g to prophecy, the children of Israel are to return. Ne[go]tiations to that effect have not been very successful, [al]though a large number of Zionists, the Socialists am[ong] them especially, hailed England's offer with joy. [To] the idea of a return to the land of their fathers [will] probably never be given up by the main body of Zi[on]ists. It may be said that the idea seems to have m[ore] of a sentimental, rather than a practical foundation, [and] that many Jews are more willing to encourage [the] movement with money and pen, rather than go the[m]selves to make their home in Palestine.

The matter, when brought before the Congress, w[as] rejected with thanks, in spite of the protests of the [So]cialistic wing. The Socialists were indignant, and issu[ed] a circular to the Jews of the world protesting against [the] treatment accorded them. They voted to form a spec[ial] organization to take over the African lands. The m[ain] body voted in an organization committee, of which I[srael] Henry Friedwald, of Baltimore, and Dr. J. L. Magn[es] of Brooklyn, were members. Dr. Magnes, on behalf [of] American delegates, asked that England's offer be considered by the entire body.

It is On the Way

Salt Lake Tribune

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New York continues its active pro[pa]ganda against Apostle Reed Smoot and against the hierarchy [of] the Mormon Church. The effect of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S [en]deavor will be more far reaching than the chiefs of the church [are] ready to admit: for it is making its appeal to the sentimentali[ty] of every Christian home in the land. When that sentimentali[ty] shall have been fully aroused, the edifice of the hierarchy will f[all] before it like a house of cards.

The BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Burned Church

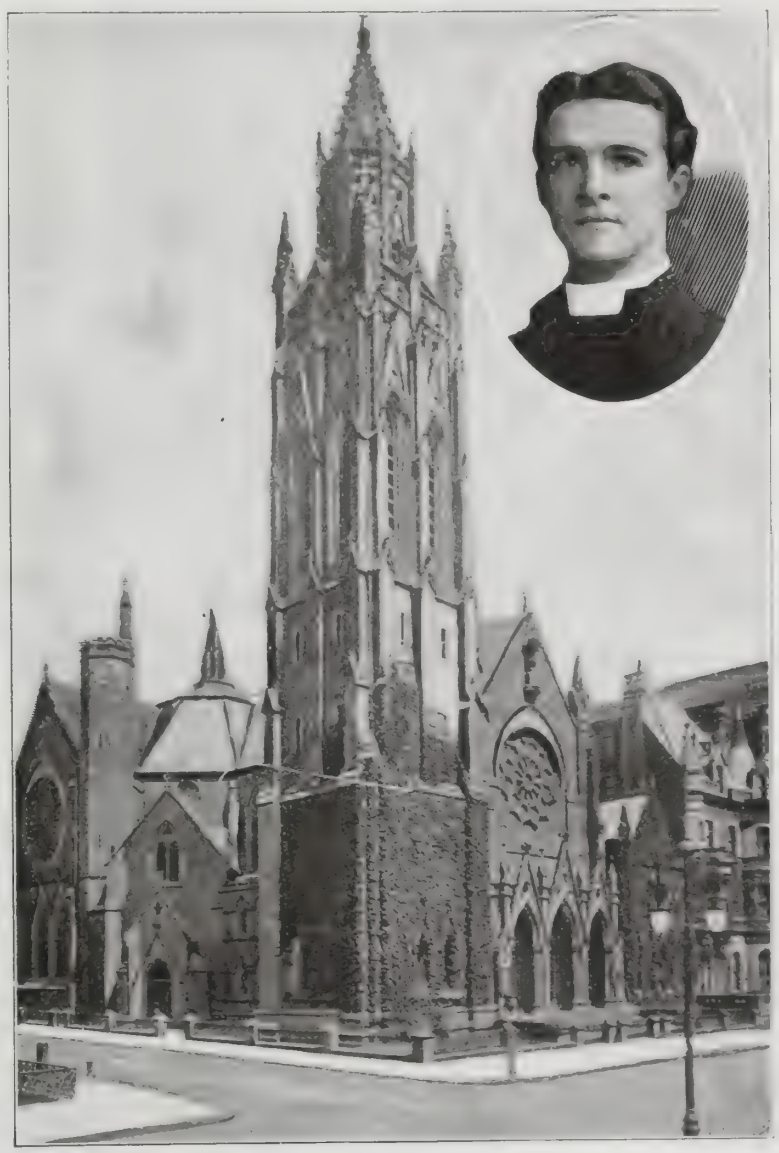
ONE of the most beautiful and costly church edifices in New York, was almost totally destroyed by fire on August 8. The Protest-nt Episcopal Church of St. Thomas, hich has stood at the corner of Fifth venue and Fifty-third Street, for thirty-ve years is now a heap of ruins. The re was discovered by a lady, who, look-g from her window, saw thin wreaths smoke issuing from under the eaves of e church. Realizing immediately what ust have occurred, she gave a cry of Fire," and a policeman who had passed e church only a few minutes before with-it seeing anything wrong, heard her and rned in an alarm. The firemen saw that he fire must have been burning some me and possibly smouldering all night. had gained complete possession of the urch, and was eating its way to the of. There was no hope of saving it, d the firemen concentrated their efforts preventing the flames spreading to the stly residences near by. A deluge f water was poured on the beautiful wer, and it was saved. But the fire had orked its will on the remainder of the lifice and had left only bare walls. The of had fallen in a heap on the floor of he church, and the fine stained glass indows and all else had become a ruin. The church was founded in 1823, with s first home at Broadway and Howard treet. Then it went to Broadway and louston Street, in spite of the protests at the location was too far uptown. The ector then was Rev. Henry W. White-ouse, afterwards Bishop of Illinois. The hurch remained there doing active work ntil 1851, when it was burned down. It as rebuilt, but the city had grown rapid-y, and in fifteen years the necessity of oving farther uptown was apparent. The t at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-third Street as bought, and in 1870, the building just estroyed, was erected at a cost of $300,-00. It was a beautiful edifice. Mono-th columns supported the roof of the ave. Mural decorations by La Farge dorned the chancel, and the reredos was he finest work of St. Gaudens. The or-gan had 5,000 pipes, and the bells in the lower cost $12,000. Under the rectorship of Dr. Ernest M. Stires and his assistants, n extensive church work has been con-ducted. No less than thirty-one organi-zations for temporal and spiritual helpful-ness have been in operation and are doing good work. Dr. Stires says that there will be but a short suspension of activity. With the insurance, and liberal offers of help from wealthy parishioners, a new edifice will soon be built. Happily, the catastrophe occurred when the church was empty, so that loss of life has not to be added, to the loss which all connected with the building, deplore.

Our holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised thee, is burned up with fire and all our pleasant things are laid waste (Isa. 64 : 11).

The Dead Archbishop

Christians of every church cannot fail to deplore the death of Dr. Chapelle, Roman Catholic Archbishop of New Orleans. He was in Avoyelles Parish when he heard that yellow fever had broken out in New Orleans. He immediately hurried to the city, without a thought of the risk he was running. He at once organized a system by which sufferers could be promptly reached, and spared no effort to relieve the suffering. His house was on the edge of the stricken district, and it is supposed that he must have been bitten by an infected mosquito. His constitution was already run down by devotion to his duties, and he succumbed to the fatal disease on August 9. His loss is severely felt by a multitude of friends who recognized the value of his services. The late President McKinley used to acknowledge the good work the Archbishop did in smoothing the difficulties in Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines. Though a Frenchman by birth, he identified himself thoroughly with this country, and won the respect of all. Protestants who differed with him most strongly, can afford to admire his manliness and devotion to duty in which he has lost his life.

Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends (John 15 : 13).



THE BURNED CHURCH OF ST. THOMAS, N. Y., AND ITS RECTOR, DR. E. M. STIRES

Arctic Explorers Rescued

The gratifying news is received that the Fiala-Ziegler polar expedition is safe. All the members, save one seaman, who died from natural causes, have been rescued and are on their way home. The expedition, financed by the late Mr. Ziegler, sailed on June 20, 1903, to try to discover the north pole. In September, 1903, a brief message was received and since that time not a word. Mr. Ziegler was intensely anxious about them and despatched two rescue expeditions in search, which failed to reach them. In his will and by verbal injunction, Mr. Ziegler gave strict orders that they must be found. Accordingly, Mr. Champ, who had been Mr. Ziegler's private secretary, sailed on May 27 to resume the search. It is only a brief telegram that reports his success, but in a week or two full particulars will be known. Mr. Fiala, the leader of the expedition, says the rescue was most timely. The America, on which it sailed, was crushed in the ice and became a total loss, with large quantities of coal and provisions. Happily provisions had been cached ahead, and Mr. Fiala knew where to find them and so the lives of the party were saved. Three attempts were made during the two years to reach high latitude, but they all failed. The farthest north attained was about 540 miles from the Pole. This is below the record made by the expedition under the Duke of the Abruzzi in 1900, which penetrated within 237 miles of the Pole. It is strange how that region of the earth's surface fascinates men. The lives that have been lost and the money that has been sacrificed in striving to reach it make a sad record. Happily these men have returned safely, though they have not tested the patriarch's description of it.

He stretcheth out the north over an empty place (Job 26: 7).

A Doctor's Surprise

A summons from Bensonhurst, N. Y., to the Norwegian Hospital, a few days ago, brought an ambulance at its highest speed. A man had been bathing with several companions and had swam out to a raft, anchored nearly half a mile away. Returning, he suddenly threw up his arms with a sharp cry. His friends went to his assistance and found that he had been taken with cramps. They tried to bring him to the shore but could not, until a passing fireman, an expert swimmer, went to their assistance. Then he was quite insensible, but was borne to land and efforts were made to restore him. Finding that they could not bring him to consciousness, the hurry call was sent to the hospital. When the ambulance arrived the doctor jumped down and passed through the crowd to the side of the unconscious man. As he knelt down, he gave a cry. "He is my brother," he cried, and began to work over him frantically. It was half an hour before the man revived, during which the surgeon's anxiety was intense. His professional attention had been quickened by the discovery of relationship. In the effort to save the lost and the fallen from eternal death, the Christian has the same incentive, that they are brother sinners and may become brothers in Christ.

All ye are brethren (Matt. 23: 8).

Wrongfully Imprisoned

A man has presented an appeal to the Legislature of Georgia for compensation for unjust punishment. Twenty-one years ago he was convicted of a murder and condemned to death. He says: "I was led to the gallows and all the last formalities were gone through with. I heard the death warrant read without a tremor. I had been afraid in the days before, but I was calm and self-possessed. I used to wonder how a man felt when about to be hanged, and I thought, as many others do, that there was a terrible fear and a fright that was horrible, but I know better now. God, who prepares a man for death, is with him on the gallows and mercifully gives him courage for the ordeal. I was made to stand on the trap-door, the trigger having been set and the noose was tied about my neck. I closed my eyes and made a short, fervent prayer. But just as the trap was about to be sprung a message came from the governor commuting the sentence to life imprisonment." Since that time he has been in the penitentiary. Recently the man whose evidence led to his conviction died, and in his last hours confessed that he had committed the crime and had perjured himself to pay off an old grudge. The prisoner was released, but twenty years have gone out of his life and he is a ruined man. All that the Legislature can do will not really compensate him. Like a man converted in old age, he must feel that the bondage has robbed him of life. His plea must be to Him who promises:

I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten (Joel 2: 25).

LIKE A SECOND HELEN KELLER

MANY readers of this journal have been interested in watching the marvelous development of Helen Keller, the Southern girl, who, though blind and deaf, has been graduated with honor by Radcliffe College, having surpassed in some of her attainments, students possessed of all the avenues through which the brain communicates with the world. Helen Keller has owed very much to Miss Sullivan, her gifted and patient teacher, from the first effort to arouse her dormant faculties, and her devoted friend in the years of her brilliant girlhood.

Dr. Samuel Howe, many years ago, was a pioneer in this most difficult enterprise of teaching the blind and deaf, who, bereaved in two important features of life, are doubly handicapped in the race. His success with Laura Bridgman was famous on both sides of the ocean, being chronicled by Dickens, who was deeply impressed when he saw Miss Bridgman.

Helen Keller, in her grace and charm, her amiability and thoughtfulness, and the many-sided aspects of her nature, has recently stood alone. It now transpires that Emma Kubicek, a child born in Carbon, Ill., January 1, 1896, promises to repeat the story of Miss Keller, while her teacher, Mrs. Helen R. Jordan, is a second Miss Sullivan. Emma became blind and deaf when three years of age, owing to an attack of cerebro-spinal meningitis. When she was six years old, she was placed in the Illinois School for the Blind, at Jacksonville. The story of her progress, as related by Rev. Dr. Charles M. Brown in the Interior, is very interesting:

> October 6, 1901, she was placed in charge of Mrs. Helen R. Jordan. To Mrs. Jordan's almost limitless patience and splendid ability is due the child's wonderful development. What a problem for a teacher! A child shut in to itself, with the world shut out. No eyes to see, no ears to hear. Fingers must be turned into eyes and ears, and be made to speak.
>
> Under these difficulties Emma's school life began. She proved herself a good deal like an unbroken colt. The first day that she was taken into the kindergarten, she was seated at a little table, with a needle, twine and a box of wooden beads. In one lesson she learned to string beads. Then taking them off she threw them all over the room. Then came the hard part of the lesson: she must learn not to throw things in that manner. She was mad to gather the beads up and place them all in the box again. Bead-stringing, bead-throwing and bead-gathering, continued many days. Each lesson was accomplished with hard struggling and many tears.
>
> Toys were given her. Everything that could be broken met its fate quickly. But in a few weeks the spirit of destruction and disorder was largely checked. She began to be orderly and methodical. Now, after three years—for she was away from school some of the time by reason of illness—she keeps her playthings with unusual care. Her shelves in the schoolroom, her doll trunk and its sacred contents, her room and her own clothes, are all models of neatness and order.

The first step in language was taken thus: A ball was placed in her right hand, and Mrs. Jordan spelled, by means of the manual alphabet, the word "ball" into her left hand. It was two weeks before the spelling in the left hand was connected in her mind with the object in the right hand. The next word was "doll." The same process was followed. The ball and the doll were then placed on a table before her, and first one word and then the other was spelled into her hand, and an effort made to induce her to give to the teacher the object spelled. It was almost a month before she could distinguish quickly and correctly between the two symbols and the objects represented. The next word to be added to her vocabulary Emma chose. She found a toy iron one day, and immediately began to use it by placing a portion of her teacher's dress on the little table and attempting to iron it. "Iron" followed as the third word. As Emma came in contact with different objects, the names were spelled into her hand. She seemed soon to understand that objects had names, and with that the first great success in her intellectual development was won.

EMMA KUBICEK AND HER TEACHER, MRS. JORDAN

Then came a great desire to know. Along with the manual alphabet she was taught the Braille—the raised-point system of writing. At the end of three months Emma had developed into a most happy and obedient child. She was able to go into the gymnasium, could keep step and march with the other children. She had made several napkin rings, woven several rugs on the Todd hand-loom, and finished a handbag out of yarn and beads. She had a working vocabulary of several words; that is, she could recognize and spell with rapidity that many.

But the first voluntary word was looked for by her teacher and friends, a good deal after the manner in which the young mother watches for the baby's first tooth. One day in February, five months from her entrance into the school, Emma raised her hand and spelled the word "b-r-e-a-d," using the manual alphabet. Hunger had prompted the first voluntary word. So she had taken another great step, having learned to make known wants known. How much that meant for that little body that must see, hear and speak with her fingers, and for the soul imprisoned within, nobody will ever be able to tell. But communication was established between that locked-up self and other minds. Her progress became more and more rapid.

Whatever Mrs. Jordan would spell into one hand, Emma would repeat with the other. At the end of eight months, with one and one-half hours instruction each day—for she does not have the entire time of the teacher, as she ought—she could command twenty-odd words. When the words "sit," "stand," "jump," "run," "clap," were spelled to her, she would respond instantly. She could use the Hall-Braille writer to a degree and could recognize a great many of the words written on it.

After twenty-seven months of actual school work Emma has now a vocabulary of over five hundred words. She is able to communicate with ease and can understand readily. For instance, when I called up her the other morning, I placed her hand upon my right which she had come to know, and instantly she spelled with her other hand, "Good morning, Dr. Brown."

Parents and teachers who are at times weary in their endeavors to teach and train normal children, who have suffered no loss of sight or hearing, might well emulate the tact and perseverance of such a woman as Helen Jordan.

AUNT MARJORIE.

CHILD PLEASURES AT MONT-LAWN

"MUSIC hath charms to soothe the savage breast," is an old saying, but the strains of a good band certainly have a most wonderful influence upon children. How they flock in crowds in the city when a street band sets up its oftimes discordant din! They will follow the musicians from block to block, sometimes traveling miles away from home, seldom losing their way, however, as they seem to have an unerring instinct which leads them right, when a grown person, unused to the crowded, devious thoroughfares, would be hopelessly bewildered. On days of celebration, when the band plays at Mont-Lawn, the delight of the little visitors is good to behold. They are fairly enraptured with the music, especially when patriotic airs, or popular songs of the day are played. The children's faces are a study, their eyes sparkling with delight as they catch the strain of some familiar tune, listening almost breathlessly. The boy or girl who cannot be reached by music would seem a hopeless case indeed; but if there are such, they have never appeared at Mont-Lawn.

A MERRY ROMP AT MONT-LAWN

Music in the open by the band; hymns, with piano accompaniment, in the Temple; the good-night lullabies, crooned by sweet-voiced, mother-hearted teachers, as the little ones are dropping off to dreamland—all these have a good share in making Mont-Lawn what it has aptly been called, "The Children's Paradise."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is in receipt of many letters written by children, expressing delight with Mont-Lawn, and the good times they had there. One gentleman received a letter not long ago, from a grateful little chap, who wrote from the Home as follows:

> DEAR MR. H——: I thank you very much for sending me to the country. We are enjoying ourselfs very much, and we are good in Health. I will tell you how we get healthy, every day we get fresh milk, and on Sunday we fresh eggs and a neice piece of pie too.
>
> Here is how we enjoy. We have Se Soars (see-saws), swings, Mar-go-round & ect. We sleep in nice rooms. The about 5 beds in the room. We have bath ing. We get loan of bats and balls.
>
> All the teachers are very good to us. W go to chapel every day at 11 o'clock. W go for walks, and when we are tired, w get cakes. We go to sleep early, and w get up early, like the proverb,
>
> "Early to bed, early to rise,
> Makes men healthy, wealthy, and wise.
>
> Your best little friend, SOLOMON M.

Solomon's spelling might be improved, but his heart is all right and he has a wise little head. When he first came to the Home, he told his teacher he wanted to be called "Eddie," as he thought that a prettier name than Solomon, but when she pointed out the fact that he bore the name of one of the wisest men that ever lived, he made no further objection to being called Solomon.

After returning to New York, one little girl wrote Housemother Collins that she and her two sisters all reached home safely. She added:

> We found Mont-Lawn such a nice place we were sorry we could not stay a little longer. Mama was delighted to see how healthy we all looked. By the time I got home, my sore throat was all better. Mama thanks you very much for the liniment which you put on, and she thanks all the teachers who were so kind to me when I was sick. The city is not half so nice as the air at Nyack. It is very warm.
>
> While we were up at the Home, we learned many nice hymns and Bible verses, and many nice little stories, which Miss Coles and the other kind teachers told us. Mama would be very much pleased if we could go for another ten days, as she goes to work every day, as papa is dead and we have to stay on the street until she comes home. Your loving friend, ANNIE.

IN THE GOLDEN SUMMER DAYS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

The Future—A Talk with Girls

EVERY boy and young man at a certain point in his school life faces the question: What are you going to be when school days are over? If a youth is preparing for college or the university, he expects to take a course there which will fit him for the duties of life, when student days shall be over. He means to be a lawyer, a doctor or a teacher, a business man, a civil engineer, a biologist or a scientist, and his preparation is made accordingly. Girls, too, are more and more keeping steadily in view the aim beyond their work. You may now be only in the high school, but you are meaning to go to college, and after college you hope to enter upon a career of usefulness. Every girl's motto should be "I serve." There is nothing in the whole world so noble and so worthy as true unselfish service, as living for others and not for self. And so spending one's time as to make the world happier.

What are going to be? Please take notice that it is much more important to be something good and fine, than to do something great and wonderful. All our doing must spring from being, or else we shall have failure and mortification and disappointment in the end. Still worse, we shall be failures ourselves.

Charles Kingsley put the whole matter for girls in a nutshell when he wrote the stanza:

Be good, sweet maid, and let who will be clever,
Do noble things, not dream them all day long;
And so make life, love, and the great forever,
One grand sweet song.

John Ruskin who had some beautiful ideas about girls, once said this, which you will find in Sesame and Lilies: "There is this difference between the making of a girl's character and a boy's; you may chisel a boy into shape as you would a rock, or hammer him into it, if he be of better kind, as you would a piece of bronze. But you cannot hammer a girl into anything. She grows as a flower does. She will wither without sun; she will decay in her sheath as a narcissus will, if you do not give her air enough; she may fall in the dust if you leave her without help, at some moments of her life. But you cannot fetter her. She must take her own fair form and way, if she take any, and in mind as in body must have always

Her household motions light and free.
And steps of virgin liberty."

You girls will be much freer than your brothers in choosing your life work. Almost invariably a girl is permitted to find her own niche. A long time before you get to the years when you have to be self-supporting as many girls must, you will know what you would best like to do, and for what you are best fitted.

I wish that the day might come when more of our young girls would deliberately choose not to go out in the open to earn money, but rather to stay at home and just be good home daughters. It is a little hard upon parents that they must lose so much of the sweetness of a daughter's girlhood. If it is your duty to help bear the household load, to assist in educating younger children, or to relieve your father of your support you are right to enter the lists so soon as you can. If there is no such pressing need, do not let the spirit that is abroad in the atmosphere, tempt you away from the fireside. A girl one day said to me that she had no bright talents to boast of, and that she seemed to herself to be wasting her life in doing little things for her father and mother; in cheering up tired people, amusing babies, and dressing dolls for little girls.

"We have a large family connection," she said, "and the cousins and aunts are always coming and going. I seem to be very busy, but it does not amount to much. My classmate, Emily, is an artist, and her pictures are exhibited in galleries. Another girl friend is a successful sculptor, and has studied in Paris. Another is in business, and is doing as well as if she were a man, while I am just filling up chinks." She was beautiful, charming and womanly, and her quiet work was of as much value as anything resplendent and ambitious and conspicuous that others were doing. Be a home daughter if you can.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—INQUIRER. You ask: "Ought a Christian to engage in the drug business?" Your point being that in that business the Sabbath is disregarded. As people are often ill on the Sabbath and in need of drugs and prescriptions, it is right that drug stores should be opened at certain hours on Sunday, for the accommodation of this part of the public. There is nothing about this which should hinder a Christian from engaging in the business. If however, a druggist keeps open all day on Sunday, and sells soda water, candy and cigars to all who ask for them, he is not carrying on his business as a Christian man should. It may be added that no one who can help it, should purchase anything whatever on Sunday. A little forethought is generally sufficient to provide for all needs on Sunday.

—ANNE. You are quite right in sending a gift in linen on the occasion of the twentieth wedding anniversary. The other guests made a mistake. This is the linen wedding.

PLAYING SCHOOL

Half a dozen boys and girls
Busy playing school,
Here's a little teacher, who Makes them mind her rule.
Jolly little scholars they,
Having fun in holiday.

THE BATTLE TO THE STRONG

"If life is always a warfare between the right and the wrong,
And good is fighting with evil for ages and æons long,
Fighting with eager cohorts, with banners pierced and torn,
Shining with sudden splendor, wet with the dew of morn.

If all the forces of heaven, and all the forces of sin
Are met in an infinite struggle the souls of the world to win;
If God's is the awful battle where the darkling legions ride,
Hasten to sword and to saddle,—Lord, let me fight on thy side,"

The General Houseworker

A READER of this page, who is a woman of more than ordinary intelligence, has spent twenty years of her life in doing general housework. She writes, that in her experience, too much is demanded of women who undertake this work. They are expected to prepare meals, as well as if they were simply cooking, and never leaving the kitchen. They are also expected to do the waiting that is usually given to a second maid. In consequence, their work is never done. It begins early and it ends late, and is all completely disheartening and a weariness to the flesh. There is no doubt a good deal of truth in this view of the case, Employers do not always behave with consideration, and too much is thrown upon a single pair of hands. The trouble could be obviated by courtesy and forbearance on both sides. Very little waiting should be exacted where only one maid is kept. Much of the passing of food should be done at the table by the family. Bed-making, upstairs work, and the daily dusting, should be attended to by the mistress and her daughters. In a large family, where there is a great deal of cooking, desserts should be either very simple, or should be prepared by the mistress herself.

This question of hired help keeps cropping up; probably it will never be settled until we women, both employers and employed, bring love and common sense to bear upon the situation. Is there any reason why there should be antagonism? Why should not the maid in the kitchen be an honored friend of the family, identified with its interests, and caring a great deal about its prosperity and happiness?

A certain indifference to the maid's comfort, entire ignorance of her concerns and her people, have much to do with making maids dissatisfied.

A lady, the other day, stepped into her kitchen to communicate a piece of good fortune to her friendly and faithful housemaid. She said: "You will be glad to know that our little girl has passed all her examinations and is promoted and has very excellent reports." The maid was delighted, and at once capped the story by telling of her own young nephew, who in his school, had had a similar triumph.

"The boy is that clever," she said, "that his teachers cannot keep him back. He just goes on learning so fast that none of us can guess where he will end."

The mistress was as pleased with this bit of news as if the boy had been a relative of hers. "Who knows, Mary," she said, "but that your sister's lad will be Mayor of the city yet."

"Indeed, ma'am, it's what we are all expecting," returned Mary.

This is a country in which everybody has a chance. It is our pride and boast that the poorest boy, who is bright and energetic, may climb to the top of the tree.

Country Guests

A lady who has a country home within convenient distance of the city, complains that her city friends show her a great deal of attention during the summer in the line of unannounced visits. They arrive singly or in groups, by train or by carriage, coming early in the morning, remaining to dinner and taking leave in the late afternoon. She makes them welcome and does her best for their entertainment, but she does not think, nor do I, that it is precisely fair for them to go away with profuse thanks, saying, "we have had such a good time. You must return this visit soon," without ever after making an intimation as to when they will be at home or when she may go to them. She has found, no doubt, as country friends often do, that if they drop in sociably on city people without sending word, their visits are ill-timed, or they find nobody at home. This proceeding on the part of the city friends savors of selfishness, and is opposed to the rules of good breeding. Only relatives and very intimate friends are in these days expected to make surprise visits, and drop in at any hour.

CAPTIVITY THE GOAL OF SIN

Sunday School Lesson, By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

IN our day, Baruch would have been called the stenographer of the prophet Jeremiah. In his day he was called the "scribe." During the first imprisonment of Jeremiah, Baruch was free to go and come, and was always ready with his roll of parchment, ink-horn and reed pen, to write the Word of the Lord which came to Jeremiah.

In the reign of Zedekiah it was different, Baruch was a fellow prisoner with the prophet, both being charged with conspiracy to bring about a surrender of Jerusalem to the Chaldeans. After Jeremiah's pit experience, from which he was delivered by the brave and kind Ebed Melech, he, with Baruch, was confined in the prison connected with the King's palace. There they continued to work together, one to receive the Word of the Lord, and the other to write it down. The providence of God was in it, for otherwise they might have died of starvation, so terrible was the conditions in Jerusalem on account of the siege of the city by the Chaldeans, which lasted about one and a-half years. Ladies of high degree gathered morsels of food from the highways, and parents ate the flesh of their own children, while Jeremiah and Baruch were being fed from remnants of the King's table.

Let Baruch tell the story of what befell them there and afterward: "It was on the ninth day of the fourth month, Tamuz (July), that the sound of falling walls and the roar of shouting reached our ears in the prison, and we knew that the Chaldeans had entered the city. It was not long before we were seized with rude hands, and bound with fetters and dragged out into the street, where were thousands more like ourselves. Smoke and flames and hurling stones, and the screams of women and children were on every side. We were hurried along like driven cattle as a band of captives bound for Babylon. Where was our king? We were told that he had escaped, but he was afterward captured in the Jordan Valley, and taken to Babylon in chains. At Ramah, the first halting place, the message came to the prophet Jeremiah, that because of the counsel he had given that Jerusalem be surrendered to the Chaldeans, he should have release, and was free to choose whether he would go on to Babylon and have a place of high favor in the court, or remain a free man in his own land. And he chose the latter. I was granted permission to remain with him. We were told that the captain of the royal guard had come to Jerusalem with strict orders to deal kindly with Jeremiah, his fame having reached the Babylonian King.

"What befell us after our release shall now be my story: My master and I took up our residence in a grotto on the side of a rocky hill, and day by day I wrote down his lamentations over Jerusalem. Gedaliah was appointed Governor of Judah by the conqueror, King Nebuchadnezzar. Gedaliah was a man of kind and generous temper, but he was in a short while assassinated by Ishmael, who coveted his position. The people were utterly crushed in their hopes, and determined upon returning to Egypt, from whence their fathers had come long years ago. How deep was their desperation to think of such a thing. The word of the Lord came to Jeremiah against such proceeding, but the people did not take heed. They not only went back to Egypt themselves, but they forcibly carried Jeremiah with them, literally their captive, not in ill-will, but because of their high esteem for him and desire not to be parted from him. He was indeed considered by them their patron saint. I was with him to the last, and now the world is lonely to me without his comradeship, and without the work I was privileged to share with him."

THE PLAIN OF THE JORDAN

"THEY BURNT THE HOUSE OF GOD AND ALL THE PALACES OF JERUSALEM WITH FIRE"

Illustration and Application

As we stand at the entrance of any path we should ask, Whither does it lead? "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man but the end thereof is the way of death." This would be a suitable golden text for this lesson, with particular application to Sabbath breaking, which Nehemiah tells us was the start for captivity—its chief cause (Neh. 13: 17, 18). In every age the way of Sabbath breaking is falsely marked with the guide post, "To Liberty," but in reality it is always the way to captivity.

1. Results of Sabbath-breaking to Individuals. In a prison cell where a condemned murderer waited the day of execution, he penciled as steps to the gallows, "Sabbath-breaking, Impurity, Theft, Murder." Not every Sabbath-breaker becomes a criminal, or jails would be more numerous than churches, but Sabbath-breaking very often leads to impurity and drunkenness. Sin usually begins with the easiest and most respectable step. A Sunday excursion is entered upon "to worship God in nature," and then, in a rough crowd, one is swept on to low shows and beer gardens and flirtation and eternal death. One who would not go on a Sunday excursion will often make a start in Sabbath-breaking by Sunday golf—the most inexcusable form of Sunday pleasuring because its very costliness limits it to those leisure classes who already have amusement on other days, and need more than anything else to avail themselves of that divine purpose of the Sabbath, to wean man from selfishness in order to which we must give up for one day in the week at least selfish pleasure as well as selfish work (Isa. 58:13, 14).

It is these rich idlers, whose chief occupation is pleasure, who cry out for repeal or nullification of Sunday laws in behalf of "the workingmen who have no other day to play." They need to be reminded that in the United States the workingmen have proved their ability to speak for themselves: but it will be found that Labor Unions have seldom, if ever, asked for a weakening of the Sunday laws, but very often have appealed for stricter laws and better enforcement against the "Sunday slavery" that has been put upon them in the name of "liberty" by those who believe the Sabbath was made for money. The workingmen who violate the laws of God and man by making their fellows work for their amusement on the Rest Day, are the very ones whose hardships increase by their own vices; while the Sabbath-keeping workmen have, many of them, become the great capitalists, and few if any, of them are not enjoying more of this world than those who make reprisals on God by following forbidden Sunday pleasures because they—full grown men—have "no other day to play." There is no law of God or man that cuts off any one from true rest on the Rest Day.

What is condemned on the Sabbath is the "pleasure exertions," as they have been aptly called, that dissipate rather than re-create, and make work for one s men in order that another set may have the more lic forms of amusement that involve both labor and iness, and open the way for all kinds of labor business. This is not theory, but sad history in many, where a Government report shows that than half the factories, and more than three-fo of the establishments of trade and transportatio seven days in the week. The Sabbath-brea camel first put in his thirsty nose, and his loaded soon followed. What folly for clerks and work to patronize and so encourage Sunday theatres Sunday trains in the name of "liberty," when involve "Sunday slavery" to actors and trainmen, inevitably lead to the opening of shops. Manufact have even claimed that if their men are to be sp for Monday work by Sunday beer, as they often a the extent of serious loss, it is better to keep them i factories on Sunday. As in Holland, every man boy, every woman and girl, is expected, as a patr duty, to prevent even the smallest break in dykes that shut out the ocean, which soon br through disastrously if even a little leak is negle so every one who believes in the Lord's Day, or the Day, should, by example and influence, resist even s breaks in this divine dyke of protection against ocean of greed. One day, at least, let us devote t truism under the motto: "Rest and let rest on the Day." Mr. Will C. Wood, of Boston, tells this story was sauntering down Park Street, on the way to ch one Lord's Day, when I met a newsboy coming up tow me, staggering under a load of bright-colored, flaun Sunday newspapers. I said, 'Been to Sunday Sch He said he went to a Jewish synagogue. 'Well,' sa 'What do you think of Christian boys who sell pa Sunday?' It did not take him more than a quarter minute to give his opinion, which came out slow sure, 'straight from the shoulder.' 'I don't think are honest. They ought to keep their law as we ours. They have got a day; ought to keep it, just as we ours. I don't sell papers Saturd 'Well,' said I, 'you are an ho boy! You are an honest boy!'"

2. Results of Sabbath-Breal to Nations. Twice God's chosen ple lost their "Land of Promise" Sabbath-breaking; once in the derness, for Ezekiel shows that it not abstract "unbelief" (Ezek. 20 that kept Israel out of the Promi Land, but unbelief in the form Sabbath-breaking. The Jews hav profound saying that "he who bre the Sabbath, denies the creatio And again Nehemiah reminds us t they lost their land by Sabbath-bre ing when in captivity, it kept sev ty years because they would not k the seventh day. To-day, also, i the Sabbath-breaking nations t are the dying and despotic natio while the Sabbath-keeping nati are "riding on the high places of earth." The Sabbathless and S bath-breaking nations are the poor physically, mentally, morally, fin cially and politically. The countr where workmen get the smallest wa by the day or year, and that for t longest hours, are the countries wh they work seven days in the wee And the average workman in su countries not only gets less mon but also does less work in seven da than Sabbath-keeping workm do in six. No man can really ea six days' wages a week, if he reg larly works seven. Besides the wor ing of natural laws of body and mind, we must reck with God, whose favor follows Sabbath-keeping natio while his judgments against Sabbath-breaking cities a lands, are written in ruins all over the world. Histo proclaims the truth of Scripture: "The nation and kin dom that will not serve thee shall perish." All that best in a nation, those altruistic qualities that the Sa bath fosters, may "perish" even while a nation boasts financial "prosperity," which usually leads to moral a versity. Tradition said that as long as a certain va could be preserved, the family to which it belong should be honored, but when the vase was broken t family should be destroyed. The Sabbath is such vase in our nation, filled with unselfish work for other Alas for a nation when its ruling consuls are the Gre Brothers; the greed for gold, and greed for games, an when Mammon becomes its god. Watts, the Englis painter, has given us the "God of Mammon." In th picture, Mammon, with a repulsive face, sits upon throne of gold, with a golden crown upon his head, wit wings attached to show how soon it may fly away. Hi booted foot tramples on a young man, and his mailed fi crushes the face of a young woman.

*International Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 7. The captivity of Judah. II. Chron. 36:11-21. Golden Text: "Be sure your sin will find you out." Num. 32:23.

Called Higher

...s. L. J. Ramsey, for many years a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, passed away at her ...me in Geneseo, Ill., on May 27, 1905, aged seventy-...o years eleven months and three days.

...s. Mary Hodney died at her home near Sheri... Ill., on January 26, 1905. She was an earnest ...istian, a member of the M. E. Church, and a ...er of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years. ...husband and one daughter survive her.

...ed at the Aberdeen General Hospital, April 18, ...of typhoid fever, Miss Dale, the only daugh... of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Jackson, of Mel... ...ne, Wash. Miss Jackson was twenty years ...and had been a subscriber and constant read... ...er THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for seven years.

ROYAL
BAKING POWDER
IS THE BEST.
A pure, cream of tartar powder.
Greatest in Leavening Strength.
It makes lightest, sweetest, most wholesome food.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER
TRADE MARK
A Positive Relief for PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.
Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.
GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

LE PAGE'S GLUE STRONGEST IN THE WORLD
LIQUID GLUE
Does not set quickly like the old style glue, and has four times the strength (Official test, 1 in. sq. hard pine butted, registered 1620 lbs. before parting). Used by the best mechanics and mfrs. the world over. Invaluable in household use, for Furniture, China, Ivory, Books, Leather, and wherever a strong adhesive is desired. 1 oz. bottle or collapsible self-sealing tube (retails 10c.) mailed for 12c. if your dealer hasn't our line.
The genuine without is Label
LE PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE, 2 oz. size retails 5c.; by mail, 10c.
LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE, 2 oz. size retails 5c.; by mail, 10c.
RUSSIA CEMENT CO., 154 Essex Ave., Gloucester, Mass.

TRAINING SCHOOL for CHRISTIAN WORKERS
Trains women for Christian Work. The full course requires six months and includes Bible Study, English, Commercial, Nursing, and Domestic Science.
A Diploma will be given each person completing the full course and passing satisfactory examination.
POSITIONS GUARANTEED TO GRADUATES
Terms low and payments made easy. Only a limited number of students can be accommodated. Apply to Miss F. M. Gordon, National Prince Crittenton Mission, 218 Third St., N.W. Washington, D.C.

MONEY For Your Time
Trustworthy men and women in every community can make $5 a day or more explaining and taking orders for Dr. Day's Comfort Spring. No investment of money required. The Comfort Spring makes a perfect bed for ordinary use and the balance lifting head piece makes it invaluable for invalids, asthmatics or aged persons. Every one says: "Just what I've been looking for," and wants it. This is your opportunity to make a good income and besides doing a real service to many in your community. Write today.
COMFORT SPRING CO., 481 Benton St., Joliet, Ill.

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL
71ST YEAR. Opens Sept. 28, 1905. Day Classes, sessions 3:30 to 6 P. M. Evening Classes, 8 to 10 P.M. Degrees LL.B., LL.M. and J. D. Tuition, $100.
Address L. J. Tompkins, Sec., Washington Sq., New York

STARK FRUIT BOOK
shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's. Louisiana, Mo.

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

MUSIC LESSONS Send for our booklet, it is FREE
Tells how to learn to play any instrument. Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, etc. Write American School of Music, 339 Manhattan Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Four Little Bee Books FREE
Are intensely interesting and helpful in a hundred different ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-day.
A. I. ROOT COMPANY, Medina, Ohio.

NEARLY 700,000 SOLD
CHURCH HYMNS AND GOSPEL SONGS
New Edition—30 cents, by mail; $25 per hundred.
BIGLOW & MAIN CO.—Chicago-New York.

PROMINENT MEN OF THE HOUR

ADMIRAL CLARK GOV. MCLANE ADMIRAL MEAD MINISTER HILL

GOVERNOR MCLANE, of New Hampshire, played a most distinguished part in the reception accorded the peace envoys at Portsmouth. His speech of welcome was to the point, and made a favorable impression on the foreign guests of the nation. Much is required of a Governor of a New England State in a ceremonial way that does not fall to the lot of an official of newer commonwealths.

. . .

ADMIRAL MEAD, commander of the Portsmouth Navy Yard, showed in his recent reception of the Russian and Japanese peace envoys, that he is a master of social and diplomatic strategy, as well as that of the sea. It was fortunate that a man of such distinction in his country's service is in command while the envoys are meeting at the Yard. Admiral Mead is a Kentuckian by birth, but the world, for the greater part of his life, has been his home. He has fought in the Far East and in the war with Spain.

. . .

REAR ADMIRAL CLARK, who will go down in history as "Clark of the Oregon," retired from active service in the United States Navy, on the 10th of this month. Admiral Clark was born in Vermont. He graduated from Annapolis in 1863, and served in the blockade of Mobile. He was promoted through various grades, until in 1898 he found himself commander of the Oregon, one of the finest ships in the service. When the war with Spain broke out, the Oregon was ordered to the coast of Cuba, and Clark raced her 13,000 miles around Cape Horn. In the great running sea fight off Santiago, his ship, together with the Brooklyn, pounded the Spanish flagship to pieces.

DR. DAVID JAYNE HILL, is the recently appointed American Minister to Holland. For the past two years he has been our representative in Switzerland. He is a great student: an authority on all questions of international law, and a writer of historical works. As First Assistant Secretary, he had entire charge of the arrangements for this country's participation in the great Hague Conference. It is expected that he will hold the predominant place in the direction of the permanent tribunal. Dr. Hill was born in New Jersey, in 1850, and was educated at Bucknell University, and in Paris and Berlin. He was, before devoting his time to diplomacy, President of Bucknell University, and later of Rochester University.

ABUNDANT LIFE*

WHAT is life? It is a familiar word with us, but we seldom stay to grasp its meaning. One day we are talking with a friend whose face is full of animation. Some good news has come to him, and his eye flashes; his countenance is wreathed in smiles; his hand has a firm clasp. In a week or two we stand by the casket that holds his remains. What a change in that form, so still, so unheeding, so utterly unresponsive. What is the difference? The life has gone out of him. But there are degrees in life. See that feeble man dragging his slow steps painfully along the way. No energy, no vitality. Compare him with the young athlete whose elastic step has joy and vigor in it. More life, stronger life.

There are as striking contrasts in spiritual life. There is a man whose name is enrolled on the church books, but otherwise there is no sign of his being a Christian. He needs to be labeled, that we may know where he belongs. We find him engrossed in business, so absorbed that he is thinking of nothing else. Later, when he needs recreation, he is at the theatre or the club, or the billiard table. At night he is tired and hurries over his devotions before he retires, or omits them altogether. Here is another man, also active in business, but with a frequent uplifting of the heart to God; he has a frank word of counsel or encouragement to his subordinates, with a manner that tells of his own inner life. His recreation takes him to the house of God or to the abode of sickness or poverty to minister help. He has real communion with God and rises from his knees refreshed and strengthened. The difference between the two men? Life, abundant life. The physical contrast between the invalid and the athlete is paralled here between the half-hearted and the real Christian.

Spiritual attainment never comes without a struggle. Mr. Moody graphically described his disappointment when, after his conversion, he discovered what a severe battle he would have to fight in order to be a real Christian. He learned, as men do learn, that it was a fight so fierce, that he must have other strength than his own, otherwise he would be overcome. When men make that discovery, and seek the strength, they begin to taste the joy of victory. Read the sorrowful, despairing closing verses of the seventh chapter of Romans, and the joyful pæan of the eighth chapter. The discovery had been made and used. That was what Christ brought to his people—abundant life. "I am come that they might have life and might have it more abundantly." It was what men needed—a reinforcement of the spiritual forces. How it shows in his similes: The bread, whereof if a man eat he shall live forever; the water that shall be in him a fountain of water; the vine of which men are the branches. All indicating imparted life. It is a great mystery this transfer of life, but most glorious experience. Men that have it realize that they have bread to eat that the world knoweth not of. New strength, new energy from Him whose supplies are in exhaustible. And it is freely given to those who seek it. To every weary struggler fainting at the prospect of the coming conflict there is the still small voice whispering: "My grace is sufficient for thee."

To what use shall this strength be put? It gives resources of sympathy to carry to comrades in the fight. It gives the power that worked the first Apostolic miracle, bidding the man lame on the highway, rise in the name of Christ and walk. It gives patience in trial, cheerfulness in adversity, vigor in every conflict. It conquers selfishness; overcomes propensities to evil; elevates and ennobles life. And at the last, when bodily strength fails, it gives spiritual power that enables a man to say: "I have fought a good fight, the hour of my departure is at hand. Henceforth, there is laid up for me a crown."

* Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union, for Sept. 3d. John 10: 7-10; Rom. 5: 19-21.

Answered Prayers

A. C., New Hampshire. "I believe God will answer all who call upon him with faith and trust."

A. G., Pennsylvania. "I prayed for the recovery of my dear children and they are restored to health, and God has answered my prayers many other times, which gives me great faith."

M. B., N. R. "I am weak, and oftimes doubting, and the 'Answered Prayers' have helped my faith. God does hear and answer our prayers. I love to feel that he does really care for me, and is ready and willing to listen to my petitions."

Mrs. F. A. T. Westfield, Mass. "Having recently passed through great sorrow, I told my heavenly Father all about it, asking him to grant my petition. He did. He has lifted the burden."

L. A. R., Brooklyn. "I desire to add my testimony to the saving and keeping power of our gracious Father. He has most mercifully heard my prayers."

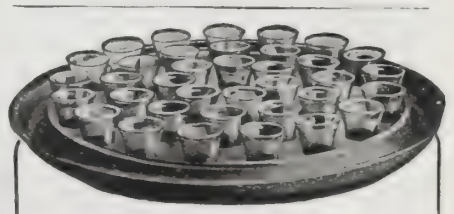
W. L. W., Oregon. "I have found the list of 'Answered Prayers' an uplifting help to me. God has answered my prayer, by restoring a loved one to health."

M. L. M., Fla. "I have been praying for three years for the reformation of a dear one. A week ago God answered my prayer, and now we are rejoicing over a soul redeemed."

Della V. W., Brazil. "When it seemed that nothing—not even prayer—could avail, a friend and I carried it to the Father, and like Jacob of old, refused to let go until we had received the answer. He heard and delivered, for he is ever true to his promises, and he tells that he will hear and answer the petitions of his children."

MELLIN'S Food
For the Baby
FOOD
All goes well when the baby is well. Keep the baby well by giving him Mellin's Food, it will nourish him, make him grow strong and keep him happy. We are sure of it; try it. Ask the mothers of Mellin's Food children. Send for our free book about Mellin's Food.
Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.
MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

WRONG SORT
Perhaps Plain Old Meat, Potatoes and Bread may Be Against You for a Time.
A change to the right kind of food can lift one from a sick bed. A lady in Welden, Ill., says:
"Last Spring I became bed-fast with severe stomach trouble accompanied by sick headache. I got worse and worse until I became so low I could scarcely retain any food at all, although I tried every kind. I had become completely discouraged, had given up all hope and thought I was doomed to starve to death, till one day my husband, trying to find something I could retain, brought home some Grape-Nuts.
"To my surprise the food agreed with me, digested perfectly and without distress. I began to gain strength at once, my flesh (which had been flabby) grew firmer, my health improved in every way and every day, and in a very few weeks I gained 20 pounds in weight. I liked Grape-Nuts so well that for 4 months I ate no other food, and always felt as well satisfied after eating as if I had sat down to a fine banquet.
"I had no return of the miserable sick stomach nor of the headaches, that I used to have when I ate other food. I am now a well woman, doing all my own work again, and feel that life is worth living.
"Grape-Nuts food has been a god-send to my family; it surely saved my life and my two little boys have thriven on it wonderfully." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.
There's a reason.
Get the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.



THE ECCLESIASTICAL DEPARTMENT OF
THE GORHAM CO.
is prepared to furnish Sterling Silver Individual Communion Sets of approved patterns which conform to the requirements of the Church. The indisputable merit and convenience of this individual service commends it to the clergy and laymen alike.
THE GORHAM CO.
Silversmiths and Goldsmiths
Broadway at 19th Street New York

GINSENG Culture is the "Only Way" to make big money on little capital. One acre is worth $25,000 and yields more per plant than a hundred acre farm. My Co-operative Plan enables you to take life easy and live in comfort on the large income from a small garden. Write to-day.
T. H. SUTTON, 530 Sherwood Ave., LOUISVILLE, KY.

A Ridge-pole Reconciliation

By J. S. JACKSON

IN the pitchy darkness of a storm just before dawn, a sudden flash of lightning revealed a score of ghostly men, women and children scrambling up the bushy slope of Orchard Hill. From the sheets of chill spring rain they crept in three groups into the slight protection of the bare apple trees. There, shivering with cold and with dread, they heard, above the howling of the storm and the cries of terrified children, the thunder of rushing waters below that set Orchard Hill trembling. Riston Creek had played an April-fool joke: on the last day of March, the lazy rivulet loitered innocently in its proper channel; but in the small hours of the night, catching the melted snows through a broken ice dam, it plunged, roared, and frothed down its short valley to the Missouri. Riston, knowing from Western experience the dangers of its little stream, lay safely back on a ridge; only the huge Preston lumber mill, and, near it, the three white houses of the Preston brothers stood on a level with the water. The three groups in the orchard were the three Preston families.

In the middle group, Luke Preston with his wife, Rose, and his two small sons, finding the apple tree a poor shelter, prepared to descend the hill on the other side and make for the nearest house. The members of the family were in curious stages of dishabille, each clad in such articles of clothing as he could seize in the darkness before the water drove him out; all were bareheaded and barefooted. Rose was gathering her drenched wrapper about her more closely and the boys were preparing to run, when Luke drawled between his chattering teeth: "Wait a minute, Rosie, I think I better go back and see how the creek looks." Gingerly setting one bare foot after the other on the stones and broken branches, he went cautiously until his white shirt and gray trousers disappeared in the gloom.

Before he returned, neighbors from Riston, one by one, discovered in the thick mist at dawn, the forlorn groups on Orchard Hill. Henry Wilkes, the hotel-keeper, with his son Tom, and Mr. Benjamin the Methodist clergyman, gathered around Rose Preston and her children; and loud voices in the vicinity of the other Preston families, announced the arrival of friends. The hotel-keeper waited only for the return of Luke, before taking the family to his own house. But when Luke appeared, he was too much excited to listen to Mr. Wilkes' plans.

"Worse and worse," he cried, panting after his fast ascent. "It's ten feet higher at least. Two of the houses have floated off; I was down at the water when they went by. Neither of them was ours, thank good heaven." Then aside to Rose he added: "It was too dark to see them very well; but I'm sure ours is left. John and Mark were down there too, bad luck to 'em."

Jennings, the tall, gaunt postmaster, loomed up through the mist and joined the group. In his usual tone of gossip, he began: "Well Mr. Preston, all safe? Just been over to see your brother Mark. His family came off worse for clothing than yours." He took Luke familiarly by the arm, and, leading him off a few steps, added confidentially in a lower voice: "I hear that two of the houses have been swept away. Your brother says yours is gone."

"No, it isn't," broke in Luke, "Only mine is left."

"Well, well," responded Jennings. Then in a tone still more confidential, he continued: "I'm afraid then he's playing a trick on you. I heard him tell his wife that in this case, possession is ten points of the law, and he wasn't going to let anybody get the house ahead of him. Since the flood is stationary now, he's got a boat, and he intends to go and hold the fort, so he tells his wife." Jennings reported this piece of news with inward glee, and waited for developments with great curiosity.

Luke made no remark; he rubbed his stubbly beard in meditation. Suddenly he broke away from Jennings, and drawing his wife aside, whispered to her excitedly. Then, confiding his family to the care of Mr. Wilkes, he hastened down the slope toward the flooded valley.

"What are you going to do?" cried Jennings. When Luke answered not, the postmaster said to himself with a chuckle, "He's going to try Mark's trick, sure as I live." Then striding off to the tree where John and his family were discussing the situation with half a dozen neighbors, he took John aside and imparted the same piece of news, with an account of Luke's evident intention added And in John's case the result was the same.

Having seen John headed for the Creek, Jennings turned with a chuckle for home where breakfast would be ready. Soon he fell in with Mr. Benjamin.

"Jennings," said the clergyman, "these Prestons are a strange lot. They do not act like relatives. They are all in my congregation; but they never sit together or speak to one another."

"Just so," replied Jennings, always eager to give a neighbor's history. "Don't you know the story? O no, you haven't been here long. Well, old Mr. Preston, was a pious man, sir. He named his four sons, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. Matthew, the oldest, died; the other three grew up, married, and fell apart badly. When the old man came to die, he was much distressed over this unbrotherly spirit. So he left his valuable mill and most of Riston to the boys, and built three white houses exactly alike, very close together; in these, the boys must live five years and must run the mill together; and if any son with his family ceases to live in his assigned house at any time during the five years, his third goes to the others. So the old man thought that if they lived near together and worked with one another so long, they would patch it up naturally."

"Did they?" asked Mr. Benjamin.

"Never," replied Jennings; "in all these years, I understand, one family has never spoken to the other. Each son takes charge of the part of the business of the mill that the father assigned, and he does the work well, but he never deals with a brother directly. The quarrel grows, and, I understand, the five years are up next week. Well, here's my corner. Good morning, Mr. Benjamin."

Meanwhile, the one roof left of the Preston homes was the centre of interest, as it stood in the morning light, just above the swirling white water. To the astonishment of the crowd collected on the bank, the three brothers managed to reach the roof alive, Mark and Luke in boats, John on a raft, with the stout rope around his waist, held by friends on shore. All three clambered up on the roof, Mark first, to the hole in the centre where the chimney had fallen, and soon after him Luke and John, each to a gable end. By the ornamental woodwork the younger brothers managed to secure a precarious hold, and answered Mark's glare of rage from his vantage of the chimney hole with glances no less savage. No word was spoken; it was a struggle of endurance between three men drenched to the skin and cramped in most uncomfortable positions.

Suddenly the vibrations of the roof increased; there was a straining of timbers. The house gave a groan, and tremblingly slipped off its foundations; it floated off with the current, rolling so that its roof was under water on one side or the other most of the time. The three men clung desperately; the crowd on shore, knowing that none of the brothers could swim well enough to breast such a flood, gave them up for lost. Mark had the best of it, the water came up to his waist, now on this side, now on that, as he straddled the ridge, and clung to the chimney hole. Luke and John, however, found themselves at ends of a see-saw; first one would dip up to his neck, then the other took his turn. Pale, shivering, the three held on, and awaited the inevitable. Still the silence of five years was not broken. Not far down on its journey the white house struck a snag. Mark and Luke pitched

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

Low Rates West and Northwest

Chicago & North-Western Railway.

The following rates and dates of sale are for strictly first-class round-trip tickets from Chicago, with liberal time limits.

39th Encampment G. A. R. at Denver.

$20.00 To Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo and return, August 30 to September 4. Special Personally Conducted trains leave Chicago and the East September 2.

$67.50 To San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego and return, on certain specified dates throughout the Summer.

$56.50 To Portland and Puget Sound Points and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$65.00 To Yellowstone Park and return, including stage transportation ($85.00 also includes hotel accommodations in the park). Daily until September 16.

$27.50 To Hot Springs, S. D., and return. $30.70 Deadwood and Lead and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$20.00 To Duluth, Superior and Ashland and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$17.25 To Marquette, Mich., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

$16.00 To St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn., and return. On sale daily until September 30, inclusive.

CORRESPONDINGLY LOW RATES ARE IN EFFECT FROM ALL POINTS.

For further particulars address

NW579 W. B. KNISKERN, Passenger Traffic Manager, CHICAGO, ILL.

RHEUMATISM

DRAWN OUT

Through the Foot Pores

New External Remedy Discovered Which Takes Advantage of Summer Heat to Rid the System of Pain-Causing Acids. We Will Send

A $1 PAIR FREE TO TRY

If you have Rheumatism we want your address so we can send you a dollar pair of Magic Foot Drafts Free to Try. They are relieving thousands of cases that failed to yield to medicines—even "incurables" of 30 and 40 years' suffering, as well as all the milder stages. Write today, try the Drafts when they come, and then if you are fully satisfied with the relief they give you, send us One Dollar. If not, they cost you nothing.

You can see that this offer would ruin us if the Drafts didn't relieve. Summer is the best time to purify the system. The steady heat increases the expulsion of uric acid through the pores, and the Drafts absorb it rapidly through the largest pores in the body, overcoming Rheumatism permanently, for they remove the cause. Send your name to Magic Foot Draft Co., R A 26 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich. A valuable illustrated book on Rheumatism comes free with the Drafts. Write today.

A Swell Affair

DENT'S

Toothache Gum

Stops toothache instantly—as soon as apply it. Stays where you put it and d not spread in the mouth. Stops decay.

There are imitations. Don't take them. See you get Dent's Toothache Gum. Yell Label, at all druggists or by mail, 15c.

DENT'S CORN GUM removes corns and bunions.

C. S. DENT & CO., 47 Larned Street, Detroit, M

DON'T SHOUT!

"The Morley"

makes low sounds and whi plainly heard. A miniature phone for the Ear—invis easily adjusted, and ent comfortable. Over fifty thou sold, giving instant relief deafness and head noises. T are but few cases of d ness that cannot be b fited.

Write for booklet and testimo

THE MORLEY CO., Dept 34 South 16th St., Philadel

MAKES GOOD COOKING A PLEASURE

BY USING THE

$2 and Up Easy to Clean O-HI-O Combination Steam Cooker—Baker

Guaranteed to save 50 per cent. in fuel, labor, time and provisions. A whole meal, from soup to dessert, cooked over one burner on any style stove. No intermingling of odors or tastes. Insures you deliciously cooked, easily digested, never spoiled, steaming hot meals. Thirty days' trial. Fine for summer cottages. Grand for Canning Fruit.

Handsomely Illustrated Catalogue FREE.

It Whistles. $1 Cook Book for 4 cts. Postage.

WE WANT COOD AGENTS.

OHIO COOKER CO., 727 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, O.

BICYCLES ON TR

for 10 days. We ship on proval to anyone without a cent a Finest guaranteed 1905 Models $10 to $ with Coaster-Brakes & Puncture-Proof 1903 & 1904 Models of best makes..... $7 to $

500 Second-Hand Wh

All makes & Models good as new $3 to

RIDER AGENTS WANTE each town at good pay. Write at on Special Offer on sample bicycle.

TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBI

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept H-71 CHI

BOMOSA BEST GROWN COFFEE

BIG INCOME

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WE

for getting orders for our Celebrated Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and tracts. For full particulars and Sp Terms address at once Mr. P. B., ca rd along the ridge, but clung safely; at the forward end, plunged off into ater. Mark turned his white face ooked at Luke. "John is gone," he faintly.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO P. O. Box 289, 31-33 Vesey St., New

Ridge-pole Reconciliation

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 710

n afraid so," answered Luke. Then lled with what vigor remained in ngs: "John, John."

ere," came a voice from the water. ment later John crawled back to his on the gable. "I pulled myself up by pe. I had it tied to the woodwork," ined the youngest brother, when he his mouth clear of water and had t his breath.

on't you think you would be safer n the middle?" asked Mark, timidly, talking to his brother were an unual proceeding.

is easy to hold on here," replied rather timidly also. "But," he , "I think you both will be safer if e this rope around your waists. We'll bound together then." He loosened pe from the gable, and threw the end ark; Mark passed it around himself, rew the end to Luke.

is house is going to turn over," vol-red Luke, as he came up from a cold e.

looks so," assented John, with a .

e'll stand by each other," proposed , tentatively.

ys," declared John, "just now, when in the water, I felt mightily like g up with you. We don't want to ll give in," agreed Luke. "I was as to blame as anybody."

"It wasn't much we quarreled over," said Mark. "I can't offer my hand, because I have to hold on." He gave a little forced laugh, which his white face belied. "But, I say, let's make up, and do it in a hurry."

"That's right," came from John's blue lips. "I feel better about everything now."

"I'm in with you," came in a faint voice from Luke, as he descended to another cold plunge.

Suddenly the house bumped again on the snag, and then with one great heave rolled over on its side. The three brothers shot off into the water and disappeared. When Mark came up and threw out his arms he found himself embracing a log. Luke bobbed up a few feet away and managed to reach the same log after some violent splashings and sputterings.

"Haul up John," gasped Mark. They both pulled so vigorously on the rope with their free hands that when the young brother's head appeared he was but a few feet away. A moment later John had his arm also around the log.

Meanwhile the neighbors, who had followed them along the bank, launched a boat and slowly approached the three Prestons. Friendly hands drew them into the boat and soon set them safe on land. When the brothers were seated in a wagon and were on their way to a comfortable farmhouse, Mark proposed: "Boys, the houses are gone. I think we better build some more, exactly alike, on the old lots."

"Agreed!" cried Luke and John in the same breath.

REAL REVIVALS

By MRS. M. BAXTER

E glory of the Lord has appeared in Vales, and "a fire from the Lord" en burning. He who is both the Sacrifice and the Altar has been fied in the eyes of thousands, who usted him for their souls' salvation. re of the Lord and his glory in that and have shone out upon the world. many lands delegates have come various churches and societies, as lls numbers of private individuals, to the glory of God."

At the beginning of the Revival, before ewspapers pushed Mr. Evan Roberts touch prominence, it was the hand of which men recognised. A Divine was at work, partly through Mr. Roberts indeed, but also in part independently of him or his helpers. sion may be man-made, a revival is ine thing, and comes down from n. It was not Mr. Evan Roberts the people of many lands came to ey rejoiced when they did see him; ere were many who did not see him. he saw the glory of God, and went to tell others of the great things God was doing.

But a great danger has arisen. The m of the Revival has gone into all rt of the world, and thousands have stirred to the very depth of their ir. In many places a genuine revival oken out in answer to much prayer, God is doing great things in some of England, Scotland, Norway, Sweden Germany, India, etc., for the fire of ord has fallen upon his people, who been waiting upon him for it. But are Nadabs and Abihus, here and , who are trying to produce the revival imitation. They sing, with the melodies, the hymns which have used in Wales, and try to get the e to sing and pray at the same time; of course, it is a hideous failure. sh cannot simulate life, although life simulate death. Man may get up a l excitement, sing choruses repeat- get up a good deal of noise, but no fire of the Lord burns in it to quicken dead souls, and no smoke of the great offering goes up in it to God.

It is neither fleshly excitement in preaching, nor in singing that can produce real spiritual results. If the fire does not fall from heaven, it is strange fire, and abominable before God. At the time of Pentecost, the fire of God came down from heaven, not to consume a dead sacrifice, for Jesus, the great Sacrifice, lived, and was at the right hand of God. The fire of God entered into men and women who were living sacrifice empowering them divinely to do Divine things. It was the third Person of the Godhead who entered into and fully possessed the hundred and twenty disciples. What blasphemy it must be in the eyes of God when men assume, by some self-created excitement, to produce by imitation God the Holy Ghost!

What, then, can we do to obtain a revival? Pray. It was while the hundred and twenty were praying, with one accord, in one place, that the fire of God fell. It was while prayer, which had gone on for years, was being, little by little, more and more prevalent in Wales, that the fire fell on Mr. Evan Roberts and his friends. On the day of the opening of the work in London, Dr. Torrey most definitely stated that a revival is not the work of man, but of God; and given in answer to prayer. But, he said, "Pray and work. Speak to others of what God has done in you, and is willing to do in them." We would add, cleanse the sanctuary. Let there be a putting right of all the wrong things in our own lives and in the Church. But O let us beware of strange fire, of work which is done, but not in Divine power!

There is a growing conviction on the part of many of God's children that the coming of our Lord is near, and that his word, "Be ye therefore ready," is a special word for this time. How may we be made ready? How is a bride made ready? Not by occupation with herself, but with him to whom she is betrothed.

Right Now

There never was a better time to find out the whole truth about Fels-Naptha soap than right now.

Right now is the time to try it on your fine sheer lawns, organdies, dimities, silk shirt-waists and all the light delicate materials of summer wear.

Right now is the time to prove how perfectly it takes out grass-stains, blood-stains and grease-spots that nothing else will move; and how beautifully it cleans, sweetens and purifies the daintiest goods without scalding or hard rubbing; and without injury to fabrics.

Right now is the time to do away with nauseating suds-steam through the house, the unhealthy heat of a washing fire; the exhausting wash-board labor and expensive wear-and-tear on clothes.

Right now is the time to forsake the out-of-date and laborious ideas of a past generation; and adopt a sensible comfortable modern wash-day.

Right now is the time,—if your grocer hasn't Fels-Naptha—to write for a free sample and follow the easy directions on the wrapper—Write now.

Fels-Naptha Philadelphia

A SPOON SHAKER

Straight from Coffeedom

Coffee can marshall a good squadron of enemies and some very hard ones to overcome. A lady in Florida writes:

"I have always been very fond of good coffee, and for years drank it at least three times a day. At last, however, I found that it was injuring me.

"I became bilious, subject to frequent and violent headaches, and so very nervous, that I could not lift a spoon to my mouth without spilling a part of its contents; my heart got 'rickety' and beat so fast and so hard that I could scarcely breathe, while my skin got thick and dingy, with yellow blotches on my face, caused by the condition of my liver and blood. I made up my mind that all these afflictions came from the coffee, and I determined to experiment and see.

"So I quit coffee and got a package of Postum which furnished my hot morning beverage. After a little time I was rewarded by a complete restoration of my health in every respect. I do not suffer from biliousness any more, my headaches have disappeared, my nerves are as steady as could be desired, my heart beats regularly and my complexion has cleared up beautifully—the bloches have been wiped out and it is such a pleasure to be well again." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

FENCE Strongest Made

See how closely it is woven. Sold direct to the farmer at factory prices, on 30 Days Free Trial. Your money back if not satisfied. Write today for free Catalogue.

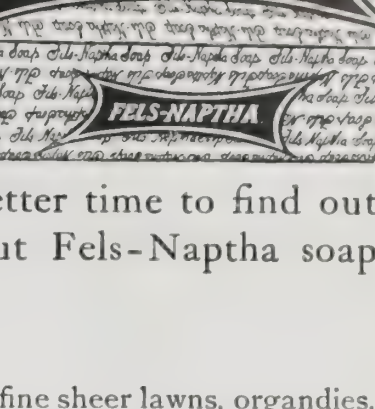
COILED SPRING FENCE COMPANY
Box 47, Winchester, Indiana.



The Best Cooking Range

Sold for Cash or on Monthly Payments.

$10 to $20 saved

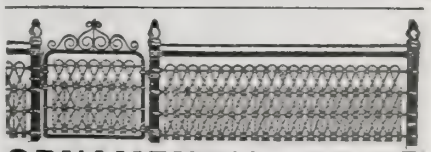
Freight Paid

Your money refunded after six months' trial if

Clapp's Ideal Steel Range

is not 50 per cent better than others. My superior location on Lake Erie, where iron, steel, coal, freights and skilled labor are cheaper and best, enables me to furnish a TOP NOTCH Steel Range at a clear saving of $10 to $20. Send for free catalogues of five distinct lines, over 50 styles and sizes, with or without reservoir, for city, town or country use.

CHESTER D. CLAPP, 620 Summit Street, Toledo, Ohio.
(PRACTICAL STEEL RANGE MAN.)



ORNAMENTAL FENCE

Cleverly combining Grace, Strength, and Durability. Moderate in cost. Sold direct to you. Catalogue Free. Box 302 KITSELMAN BROS., Muncie, Ind.

CLEAN CUT CAKE TIN

FREE TO AGENTS

Flat top knife cuts loaves perfect cake. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T.

HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

When you think of FLOUR
Think of GOLD MEDAL

Tempering wheat by the Washburn-Crosby process toughens the bran coat so that it can be entirely separated from the remainder of the wheat berry. This insures a flour free from all particles of the indigestible wheat shell and helps to make a nice, easy mixing dough. When you think of Flour, think of GOLD MEDAL – It means good bread.

WASHBURN-CROSBY'S

GOLD MEDAL FLOUR

COPYRIGHT 1908, WASHBURN-CROSBY CO., MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

COPYRIGHT 1905 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

UBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
ublished 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, AUGUST 30, 1905

VOL. 28—NO. 35. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

PAINTED FROM LIFE AT LAGUNA, NEW MEXICO, FOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

REBEKAHS OF THE PUEBLOS

OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

A. H. F., Hagerman, O. 1. When and where was Richard Watson born? 2. Can a man be a sincere Christian and follow a business on a railroad where he will have to help carry on Sunday excursions?

1. There were two Richard Watsons, both eminent theologians. The first was born in 1737, in Kendal, Westmoreland, England, and died 1816. He was a Church of England prelate, a powerful preacher and copious author. The second was born in Barton, Leicestershire, England, 1781, died 1833. He was a Wesleyan Methodist divine, a genius, great as preacher and writer, and gave the first systematic treatment of Wesleyan theology. His published sermons, sketches, essays, histories, biographies, reports, etc., make many volumes. These appeared between 1799 and 1830, and many editions were issued long after his death. 2. It is sometimes necessary that a sacrifice has to be made for principle's sake. Where one's business and his religious convictions are irreconcilable, the sooner the former is changed the better.

L. P., Carmeon, Mo. What is the meaning of fallen angels? Is it possible that sin could enter heaven?

Your question raises the subject of the origin of evil, which is insoluble. The whole question of the rebellion in heaven is mysterious, and there are few passages to guide us. Peter speaks (II Peter 2: 4), of God sparing not the angels when they had sinned. Jude also refers to the angels who kept not their first estate. In Revelation, too (12: 7-9), there is the account of a battle between Michael and his angels and the dragon and his angels. But all the references are vague and mysterious. Our experience with humanity shows us that the higher the intelligence created, the greater the possibility of fall. God does not make men good by force, and probably he pursues the same course with angels. We cannot imagine any being having reached the state of highest perfection, without being at the same time capable of falling. But why the angels fell, whether through ambition or some other temptation, such as that mentioned in Gen. 6: 4, we are not told.

J. T. M., North Livermore, Me. 1. Astronomers assert that a sun-spot era causes a climatic disturbance here. Why so? Can you give the reasoning. 2. December 21 the northern hemisphere begins to turn toward the sun and its rays of warmth, and through January and February we have our coldest weather. June 21, in the same ratio, we turn away from the sun, and through July, August and September we have our warmest season. Why do we have three months of severe cold and blustering weather directly after we turn toward the warm rays of the sun, with an increasing length of daylight, in contra-distinction to the increase of cold immediately following June 21?

1. Our best astronomers, especially those who have made sun-spots a study, discard the delusion that they produce any climatic effects on the earth. There does seem, however, some connection between sun-spots and electric storms, the periods of each maximum being about eleven years. 2. There are several reasons why summer heat does not occur immediately after the sun commences his northward journey. Everything that is done requires time. The northern portion of the earth is cold December 21, and the nights, being longer than the days, more heat is lost by night than is received from the sun by day.

Marathon, N.Y. LEWIS SWIFT, F.R.A.S.C

M. S. T., Boonton, N. J. Can you tell me something of a native Alaskan woman, named Francis Willard, who recently died in Sitka?

Miss Willard, the Alaskan, like her great prototype, was regarded as the foremost woman of her race. When ten years of age she was rescued from heathenism by the first missionary sent to Alaska, and was sheltered in the Presbyterian home. The child showed such unusual intelligence that she was sent East, and for four years attended school in Elizabeth, N. J. She returned to her people, cultured and consecrated, and took up the work of interpreter, teacher, and missionary, accomplishing a great amount of good, and exerting a blessed influence upon all who knew her.

A. B., Marienville, Canada. Did Jephthah really slay his daughter, and offer her in sacrifice? Would God have chosen a man who would do such a thing?

It is thought that he simply condemned her to perpetual virginity, which, in that age was considered a calamity equivalent to death. Judges 11: 40 seems to confirm this view. Another reason for thinking that this may be the fact, is that a special provision was made in the Mosaic law for such cases. Jephthah, by reference to the code (Lev. 27: 4), would have seen that he could redeem his daughter by the payment of thirty sheckels. As he evidently loved her, he would not be likely to overlook such a provision. But the narrative is so vague, and the customs of the time so barbarous, that it is possible, though not probable, that she was sacrificed.

Mrs. H. Columbus, O. We have been having a discussion in our family recently as to whether Liliuokalini, ex-Queen of Hawaii, is a Christian. Can you tell us in the MAIL BAG?

Mrs. Dominis is the widow of an American named John O. Dominis, who was at one time governor of Oahu. He died in 1891, the same year in which Mrs. Dominis became queen. She reigned but a brief two years, as the Hawaiians adopted a republican form of government. Queen "Lil," as she has been familiarly called, is an educated, cultured, lady, a most devoted churchwoman, and a composer of a number of beautiful hymns, both words and music.

B. C. D., Mooresville, Ind. 1. How many men of the name of John are mentioned in the Bible? 2. Which of them was the author of the Gospel and of Revelation? 3. What is the difference between justification and sanctification?

1. Four: John who sat in judgment on the Apostles (Acts 6: 6), John Mark, the companion of Paul, whom he discarded, and afterwards accepted (Acts 12: 12), John the Baptist, and John the Apostle, called the Beloved disciple. 2. There are disputes as to the authorship of the fourth Gospel, and of Revela ion; but the popular opinion is that both were written by John the Apostle. 3. Justification is the act of justifying, which occurs when a man through Christ makes peace with God. He then becomes a child of God. Sanctification is the fitting of him for his position, preparing him for his heritage, the transformation through the Holy Spirit's influence of his character and disposition. Justification is an act complete in itself. Sanctification is a process.

P. H. O., Goodrich, N. D., and others. Seventh Day Adventists who have been here tell me I am wrong in observing Sunday as the Sabbath. Is it possible that I have been wrongly taught?

If you are wrong, nearly the whole of Christendom is wrong, and has been for hundreds of years. Can you imagine God blessing his church, as he has done, if it was systematically violating his commands? In Apostolic days, the Gentile church was urged to become Jewish; be circumci keep the dietary laws and observe Jewish Sabbath. A council was calle consider the question (see Acts 15: 19- The decision was given that only four th were required of Gentile converts: al dence from meat offered to idols; f blood; from things strangled and f fornication. But the Sabbath institu was so evidently advantageous that practice of observing one day in seven adopted (see Acts 20: 7 and I. Cor. 16: The first day, as commemorating the re rection of Christ, was chosen and ca "The Lord's Day." It is not observed as Jews observed the seventh day, as the S bath, a period of complete rest, but as a t of Christian service and spiritual activ

E. J. B., Lawton, Mich. Is the present age s bolized in the prophetic image describe Daniel 2: 31-42.

The ten toes of the image are apparer in process of formation. The upper p of the image symbolized Ba lon, Medo-Persia, Greece Rome. The kingdom whi shall never be destroyed the kingdom of God, whic being formed out of all Churches, and in the millen age will supersede and overco all others.

J. V. P., Jolietville, Ind. 1. How m Protestant missionaries of all nominations are there now at w in foreign lands? 2. How m money is raised by all denom tions for foreign missions?

1. There were 4,247 missi aries sent by American churc at work last year in foreign lan Of these, 1,726 were males a 2,521 females. From the churc of Great Britain there w 5,664. Of these, 2,678 were ma and 2,986 females. From churches of continental Eur there were 2,294. Of these, 1, were males and 960 females. T total number of missionaries 12,205: 5,738 men and 6,4 women. 2. The total receipts the missionary societies of Am ica last year were $6,642,890; Great Britain, $6,862,849; continental Europe, $2,396,39

RELIGION IN THE WORKSHOP

Mr. W. Leroy McDiarmid, General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., at Bradford, Pa., sends to this journal an interesting letter concerning a Noonday Bible Class, which has been established in the machine shops of the Bovaird & Seyfang Company, in that place. This class, which is conducted by the Young Men's Christian Association, has proved a phenomenal success. It has an attendance of from sixty-five to eighty men, and the spiritual influence of the class is felt throughout the entire works. Once a week at the close of the class hour, copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are distributed among the men. In the photograph printed above, Mr. J. B. Carruthers, one of the Pennsylvania State Y. M. C. A. Secretaries, is seen standing among the workers, and General Secretary McDiarmid is also present. One of the men, Mr. Irwin, became so interested in the paper, that he recently subscribed for five copies, for use in connection with the work of the class.

Miscellaneous

J. H. H., Emporia, Kan. The N York Central Railroad has a stati at Forty-second Street, New Yo A hack will take one to West Eleventh Stre where the docks of the White Star Line are loc ed. From the Pennsylvania Railroad take fer from Jersey City.

C. O., Gage, Okla. While it is historically tr that Colin Campbell broke through the lines fi at Lucknow, the fact that General Havelo commanded the army of which Campbell's b gade formed a part, would seem to justify t reference.

A. McK., Middlefield, N. Y. The Apocrypha is series of scriptures which were rejected by t early councils of the Church as of doubtful a thenticity, consequently they are not includ in the Bible, which contains only the canonic or approved writings.

F. G. M., Philomath, Oregon. In OUR MAIL B you say, "The vowel sound in the word Smoot pronounced long 'oo,' as in good." The vow sound in good is not "long oo," but "short oo In the second place, as I understand it, the vow sound in the name Smoot is "long oo," as in t word "moot." o͝o, o͝ot, mo͝ot, Smo͝ot.

Mrs. W. H. T., Chili Station, Monroe Count N. Y., Noticing an inquiry as to the author of Jo May, will say I have in my possession a book t that title, written by Mary Langdon, publishe by Phillips Sampson & Co., Boston, and by J. Derby, New York, 1855.

Miss Jennie G., Jackson, Miss. If the work of God it will stand; if not, it will fall. W would not judge any one on the strength of new paper comment alone. There is, at least, som truth in almost all religions, and we know al that there are few if any wholly free from erro

G. C. F. The Church regards the Sunday Scho as the backbone of its work, and as the chief m cleus for future growth. A Church or pastor wh neglects the Sunday School, and who does not d all that can be done toward making it strong an efficient, giving it both moral and financial su port, is certainly deficient in appreciation.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 30, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

A NATIVE EVANGELIST

THE FAMILY OF A MANDARIN

A MISSIONARY JOURNEY

CHINA'S OUTCAST CHILDREN

WITH China released from Russian influence, and passing to a greater extent than ever before under the influence of her progressive neighbor, Japan, the future of Christian ssionary work in the Flowery Kingdom becomes a destion of unusual interest. Up to the present time, cept in the sections of the country that are embraced thin the zone of active military operations, there has en no perceptible effect produced on missionary work the war. What the situation will be en the ancient land begins to experience great change that is impending, none can esee; but that it will be a change for the tter is now confidently believed.

Without exception, the missionaries who ite to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from China e an optimistic view of the future. Remembering the past, with its manifold trials d dangers, its perils from riot and fanatiom, and from the opposition of the bigoted tive literati, who were often foremost in menting persecution, the Christian workers e in the awakening of China only encouragement to ll further spiritual effort.

One phase of missionary work there which is finding uch favor with all classes, is the opening of orphanes. Until the American, English, and Swedish Misonaries sometime ago began this work, such a thing as y systematic attempt to care for the poor parentless ifs was unheard of. Now, there are orphanages in veral provinces, all of them doing excellent service in eltering and training hundreds of little friendless boys and girls, many of whom are hardly more than babies. A large proportion of these tiny charges were bereft of their parents or relatives in the famine which swept over China two years ago, with plague following in its train.

Rev. W. Hagqvist, missionary at Hsian, in Shensi, one of the oldest Chinese provinces, and one, moreover, which suffered very greatly during the famine, writes concerning his orphan work in that section as follows:

A FLOWER GARDEN IN THE PALACE

THE MISSION STATION AT WUKONG

MISSION HOUSE AT HSING-PING

The stations are scattered over an area that takes about eight or ten days to travel over. Our orphans are living at the different stations. Here, in Hsian, we have sixteen children taken care of by Mr. and Mrs. Nordlund. We hope, by God's grace, they will all be brought to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. Kind words, good food, clean clothes, a warm bed, produce wonderful results. The beautiful Bible stories seem to have just as much effect on our poor little Chinese children as upon those in our own lands at home. In a place called Ong-kia wei, one day's journey from here, are four children in care of Miss Mary Henderson, viz.: Li Chong-Huan, Kas-Duwa, Heo Lao and another. In Chen-kia-ku, to the southeast, Mr. and Mrs. England have ten children in their care, and in Hsing Ping, Mr. and Mrs. Bergstrom have eleven orphans. All these little ones have good homes and are happy. It is a pleasure to see their smiling faces and to note the heartiness with which they read their books. One cannot help thinking what would have become of these waifs, were it not for the help of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and other kind friends. But God, who hears the cries of the birds, and knows even their wants, is reaching out in love to the suffering little ones of China.

Mr. Hagqvist mentions several other stations, where orphans are now cared for through the generosity of American and European friends. In San-shui, a few days' journey to the north of Hsian, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have taken a number of orphans. This district is infested by wolves, and many children, Mr. Hagqvist says, are carried off and devoured every year by those ferocious beasts. Frequently the wolves come right into the city and carry them off. In Chen-uen, the youngest of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD orphans is a little baby, who was perishing of cold and hunger when rescued by the kind missionaries. Many of the orphans are girls who, in being taken by the missionaries, escape a fate that is worse than death. These little ones, helpless and without any natural protector, would in the usual course of things be sold for slaves or doomed to lives of immorality. One quite young girl was taken violently ill not long ago in a mandarin's home. She was a slave, and had been so abominably abused that the wretched creature had taken a dose of opium to end her suffering. Her story, told to the missionary doctor, would have moved a heart of stone. Yet her case is but one of thousands of similar occurrences in China.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 718

THE
AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY
Rev. F. DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

LUKEWARM CHRISTIANITY

TEXT: REV. 3:15:
"I would that thou wert cold or hot"

GOD is love. The Bible declares it. Whether the divine Father's children are saints or sinners, they are still enshrined in his parental affections. God's love is like unto that of the earthly parent, who one day overheard his little girl saying to her brother: "Now, Charley, be a good boy, or papa will not love you." With that the father answered: "No, Nellie, you must not tell your brother that. I do not love you children because you are good, or hate you because you are bad. I love you whether you are good or bad, because you are my children. When you are good, then you make me very happy. When you are bad, then you make me very sad. But I still love you just the same." God loves his prodigals though they are prodigals; but he loves his saints with a delighted joy.

But though God loves all his children, there is one class about whom he is especially concerned. As the worried mother four or five times during the night lights her lamp and goes to look at the little sick patient and to feel the brow of the fevered child, God again and again turns his anxious eyes towards certain of his wayward ones. And where do you think these divine eyes are most pleadingly looking? Towards the social outcasts? Oh, no. Towards the drunkards who are staggering and hiccoughing towards their filthy tenements? No. Towards the murderers in the criminal dock about to be tried for their lives? No. Towards the thief who, in the evening hours, knocks down the pedestrian, or towards the safe-breaker, who with his dark lantern is making his way through the cellars of the bank he intends to rob? No, no, no. These sinners by the very enormity of their crimes may be led to the mercy-seat, if we only go after them in the right way. God's most yearning looks are not turned towards those who are in open rebellion against his name, but towards those who are chronically and systematically indifferent. Those who are simply negative to the divine call of love are harder to reach than those who deride God or curse him. Can you make any other deduction than this from Christ's message to the church members at Laodicea?

Veneered Christianity

Modern Laodiceans, these sinners of lukewarm Christianity and tepid morality, at a distance can be likened to a beautifully polished mahogany or rosewood table. To the casual observer, it seems to be worth almost its weight in gold. But when you closely examine the same, you find it is simply veneered with rosewood or mahogany, cut as thin as paper. They are like contrary winds, tantalizing the sea-captain becalmed near the equator. Here it is a little puff of wind; yonder it is a little puff; off to the west is another little puff. All these little puffs come from different directions. But before the ship's sails can be trimmed and filled, like the cheeks of a schoolboy blowing soap bubbles, these puffs of wind die away and the ship's keel moves not. They are like people of shallow Christian experience whom Christ describes, under the figure of grain growing on stony ground which, on account of the scarcity of soil covering the roots, dies before the meridian has been reached by the sun in the heavens. Now, the purpose of this sermon is to describe some of the causes of the languid condition of these modern Laodiceans.

The appalling negativeness of my text can well be applied, in the first place, to those of weak-kneed theology. It can be applied to those who cannot quite make up their minds whether Christ is God or a very good man; whether Christ is "the only begotten Son of the Father," or merely one of many different manifestations of God's love, of whom Mohammed and Confucius and Buddha and Vishnu are other manifestations, and almost as good. With the old Southern mammy's ideas of Christ, they are in heartiest sympathy. When her young mistress' little child died and the frantic mother thought her daughter was lost forever, the old slave said: "Honey, darlin', ye ain't right; dar's a dreffui mistake somewhar. Why, de Lord ain't like what ye think; he loves you, honey; why, jes see how I loves ye an' I ain't better'n Him as made me. Dar jes' ain't but one t'ing to come to an' dat ar's Jesus. Jes' come right down to whar dis pore old darky has to stay allers; it's a good place, darlin'. Look right at Jesus. Dar's a God ye can love." Oh, yes, these men of weak-kneed theology can look at Jesus and love him like that. But the trouble is that is not the place to stop. They go a little further and still a little further and say: "Jesus is so good that he saves us whether we love and honor him or not." They are almost in the same position as was one of the officers of my regiment in the Spanish-American war when he said to me: "Chaplain, I believe in your Christ. I do not serve him as I ought, but I believe if I am shot in this war, God will say, 'There is a poor fellow who gave up his life for his country. No man can do more for love of his native land than that. I will save him on account of his shed blood.'" Mark you this, not on account of Christ's blood but on account of man's blood.

Stalwart Theology

No sinner was ever saved from eternal death except by the divine atonement. Now, my friends, it is about time for some of you to stiffen up the backbone of your theology. It is about time for some of us to realize that only the blood of Jesus Christ can cleanse us as white as the driven snow. There is a stream in Corsica called the River Restonia, which has the remarkable power of turning white everything which is dropped into its clear waters. The cane, which falls from your hand into it, becomes a white stick. The watch, which slips out of your pocket into it, becomes a white metal. A traveler tells us that an iron bar dropped into those waters, at once becomes white as a silver sceptre. So everyone who is really cleansed by Christ's blood becomes, as in the River Restonia, white as the driven snow. But mark you, as the old Southern mammy said: "It is only by looking to Jesus, who is a God to love," that you and I can become purged and cleansed and washed until we become whiter than snow.

Many years ago, the British Admiralty sent the man-of-war Thetis to Mediterranean waters to hunt up a shoal or reef or bank, that had been reported by some fishermen off the coast of Italy, and mark it upon the chart. The vessel sailed back and forth without being able to locate the dangerous reef. The captain returned to England and declared no such rocks existed. But the first lieutenant of the Thetis thought differently. He begged the privilege of continuing the investigation. He labored on until at last he located those rocks, and was promoted for the service he had done the world's shipping. The old captain of the Thetis obstinately declared that these rocks were purely chimerical and never existed. "If I ever go near their supposed site, I shall sail over them to prove I am right," said he. A few months later, the Thetis was conveying the British Ambassador to the city of Naples. One stormy night, the captain found that he was near this supposed reef. He headed directly towards it as he said: "Now I will prove that lieutenant a fabricator!" The ship sailed on for a few hours, then came the grating sound of shallow water, then a crash! The Thetis was a helpless wreck. Most of the crew were saved; but the foolish captain would not allow himself to be saved, to meet certain disgrace. "He perished," said Dr. Stoughton, "a victim to his own unbelief." Thus thousands upon thousands of immortal souls will perish on account of their lukewarm acceptation of the Cross. They are not directly enemies of Jesus Christ. They belong to what is called the

Liberal Order of Christians

They believe that Christ died, that Christ rose again from the dead. But they do not believe that Christ is the only begotten Son of God and the only way of eternal life. And "Except ye believe ye shall all likewise perish." For the Bible distinctly declares the necessity of believing in Christ as a Saviour, and in Christ alone.

But we also find these modern Laodiceans wonderfully negative in reference to their business principles. Every Sunday morning they may be found wending their way to their church pews. Every Wednesday evening, they may attend the mid-week prayer meeting. But the ways they act inside the church, and outside of the church may have no more similarity than the nature of a striped furred leopard can be compared to the affectionate whinny of the Shetland pony whom your children are petting at the barn door. Now, I am asserting that these modern Laodiceans have no business principles. I am not asserting that these men are worse than their business associates. But I do assert that they will be just as dishonest as they can be in their financial affairs, and yet preserve their social respectability.

Some time ago, I was turning over the pages of a popular magazine. There I saw perhaps half a dozen pictures of men who are among the so-called respectable thieves of this country. From an old California many years ago I had heard about men stealing thousands upon thousands of acres of land from the United States Government; but then I did not believe it, because I lived in the crowded East. But after I came West, and learned of the vast distances of those unoccupied lands, I began to realize how it was done. In that magazine the writer not only gave the names of the plunderers, but also told the number of acres stolen by each of these individuals whose pictures he presented. I go to one of these men and say: "How did you get this land? Why is it yours?" "Oh," he says, "I fenced it in." "Why did you fence it in? Did you have any right to do so?" "No," he answers, "except the right of taking government land, as hundreds and thousands of others have taken their land." Thus, when I go into the business world, I find thousands of modern Laodiceans who care not how dishonest they are if they do not fall into disrepute by being more dishonest than their fellowmen. The question of right or wrong matters not into their financial make-up. The question with them is: "Is it feasible, from a reputable business man's standpoint, to steal this, or that, or the other thing, and not be socially degraded?"

Dishonesty in Politics

What is true of some dishonest business men, is absolutely true in reference to some dishonest political candidates. I see the political strife going on in a large city. One of the parties has fallen into such disrepute, that, in order to win at the polls, its leaders decide to nominate as a candidate one who is not of that kind. So they go and offer the nomination to a well-known Christian Church member. In nine cases out of ten, what does that nominee do? Does he go to the polls and bribe voters? Oh, no. That would not be honest. But he does commit a crime in the sight of God which is just as heinous. Instead of coming out flat-footed for an honest election, he becomes a modern political Laodicean. He shuts his eyes to the dishonesties that are being done in his name. He says, "I am not responsible, because I simply remain silent at the political corruption." Now, my friends, these teachings of my text practically mean this: A man must be positively honest in all his financial dealings. He must be positively honest in seeing that all those who work in his name are acting honestly, else God will have nothing of him. Mere negative respectability in God's sight does not measure up to his standard.

I find, too, that the appalling spiritual negativeness of the modern Laodicean is most frequently demonstrated in man's relation to the amusement question. Where there is one lukewarm Christian who will dishonor Christ in his financial dealings, there are five, ten, fifteen or even twenty, who will dishonor him when the day's work is done, or when out on a summer vacation. And the amusement sins of the American Laodicean at home are as nothing compared to those American Laodicean's sins when they are traveling in Europe or Asia or in Africa, or in any foreign land. Let me illustrate my thought.

Desecration of the Lord's Day

We are American tourists in Spain, or, bringing the statement a little nearer home, in Mexico. Sunday morning has rolled around. What are you going to do? Will you attend the Protestant church, as you would do if at home? "No," you say, "I guess not, I have tickets for the bull-fight. Why, one of the finest matadors in the world is going to fight to-day. I will never get another chance to see him." Is that so? What if you do not get another chance? Ought you to go and see one of the most brutal exhibitions in the

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

WORK OF THE PEACE CONFERENCE

PACE negotiations at Portsmouth, N. H., between the representatives of Russia and Japan, falsified the predictions of the wiseacres, by reaching the end of the first week without a final rupture. It was said that when M. Witte received a list of the demands of Japan, he would peremptorily reject them, and the conference would be closed. A much more sensible and prudent course was taken. The Russian reply was a courteous and argumentative paper, in which M. Witte showed, from the Russian point of view, that the Japanese terms were inadmissible and humiliating. Some of them, such as the evacuation of Manchuria, would be conceded, but others were conditions such as no nation but one utterly defeated and at the mercy of a conqueror, could be expected to concede. Russia had still a large army in the field which might be indefinitely increased, and had unbounded resources, which had not yet been touched. The forces of war had gone against the Government, but they were not yet so desperate as to bring Russia to the point of seeking peace at any price.

It would have been open to the Japanese representatives to say that as Russia rejected the Japanese terms, there was an end to the Conference, but they showed the sincerity of their desire for peace by making counter proposal. They suggested that the twelve conditions they had presented be discussed singly and receive careful consideration. By this means the question in dispute would be reduced and the real obstacles to peace be ascertained. There would also be an opportunity for compromise, if it should be discovered that some minor question, touching Russian honor, but not really important to Japan, was hindering the conclusion of peace.

The wisdom of this course was speedily demonstrated. On the first day of discussion, three of the twelve conditions were settled. It is understood that M. Witte agreed that Russia should evacuate Manchuria, that Japan's preponderating interests in Corea should be recognized, and that the independence of China should be respected. On the following day, report had it that two other of the conditions had been accepted by M. Witte, on behalf of Russia. There is some doubt as to what these were, but it is believed they related to the cession of Port Arthur, and the transfer of the Russo-Chinese Railroad. One other question, supposed to be the cession of Saghalien Island, was considered, but as Japan was firm, and M. Witte would not yield, the question was laid aside for future discussion, and the next question in order was taken up.

Progress on the following day, after two long sessions, was still more marked. Seven of the conditions of peace had been agreed upon, Japan yielding on one point, the identity of which was not disclosed. M. Witte openly boasted that of the eight questions considered he had agreed to seven. That these, however, were minor matters, already practically decided by the war, was obvious. The serious matters remained to be considered. These are the surrender of Saghalien Island; the transfer of the Russian ships in American and other ports, to Japan; the limitation of Russian strength in Eastern waters; and also the amount of indemnity to be paid by Russia to Japan. Russia's contention is that Japan initiated the war, and therefore cannot expect to be reimbursed for its cost; but Japan contends she did her utmost to avoid the war, and having been put to enormous expense, is entitled to compensation. Upon the question whether an agreement can be reached on these points depends the issue of peace or war. Hopes of peace need not be abandoned while the discussion continues.

That Russia is preparing to yield on this money question is suspected. Efforts are being made by the government to raise money, evidently in view of some such necessity. Her sins against the Jews are now being brought home to her, for it is to Jewish bankers that she must appeal for help. A significant fact is that a number of Jewish financiers have had a conference with M. Witte, to ascertain whether, if they agree to advance money, the Czar will undertake to give equal rights to his Jewish subjects. It is not known what answer has been made, but we may hope that through the Czar's necessities, some favorable results for the Jews will be secured.

PLANCON NABOKOFF WITTE ROSEN KAROSTOVITZ

ADAICI ALCHIAI KOMURA TAKAHIRA SATO

THE PLENIPOTENTIARIES OF RUSSIA AND JAPAN IN SESSION, AT PORTSMOUTH, N. H.

LUKEWARM CHRISTIANITY

Continued from preceding page

world, where men and horses are often horribly mangled. Because other people do wrong in Spain and Mexico, can you afford to do wrong on the question of your vacation amusements?

Sunday at home comes around. The communion of the Lord's Supper is to be celebrated at your church. A party of friends is going down to the beach. What are you going to do? Stay away and go to church as you ought, or go off on Sabbath desecration? It was of a elder of one of the largest Presbyterian churches of the West not only staying away from church on the Sabbath day, but when the members of his church were assembling for communion, he rode past that church on the top of a tally-ho to take some of his Eastern friends out to see the city sights. As a church officer, do you ever sin thus? Wednesday evening comes around. It is prayer-meeting night. A card party or a dance is to be given the same evening. Which will you choose to attend? These illustrations are not imaginary. These conditions meet us as church members almost every month of our lives. In deciding how we shall solve the amusement question, nearly all of us decide whether we will be positive Christians, or wobbling, negative modern Laodiceans, cursed by a lukewarm allegiance to God. God's loathing for such characters is unmitigated. In effect, he says, "The murderer, the blasphemer the thief and the social outcast are not so injurious as you are. Men know them for what they are but you misrepresent religion, you commit the outrage of misrepresenting me to the world. You should be the light of the world but you are misleading lights." Let me read to you God's own words in reference to the ancient church of Laodicea: "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot; I would thou wert cold or hot. So, then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth." Could any denunciation be more powerfully expressed?

Oh, that to-day the churches of the Lord Jesus Christ would become more positive upon the questions that are making so many church members lukewarm Christians! Some time ago I read of an artist who was asked to paint a picture of a spiritually dying church. He painted a church building, cathedral-like in its proportions. This prosperous church had its tall towers, its stained-glass windows, and its wealthy parishioners assembling for worship. But near the front door of this fashionable church, the artist painted a collection box, marked "Foreign Missions." Over the aperture of this box the artist drew a simple spider's web. The idea of that artist was self-evident. But though that was a powerful picture, I do not believe the artist pictured the greatest curse of our modern Laodiceans by which Satan destroys the spirituality of our prominent churches. This evil is not found in the collection plates, but in the church members' laxity in reference to amusements. When a man becomes indifferent to God in reference to his pleasures, inevitably he becomes indifferent to all other deeds.

Lastly, I remark that the lukewarm Christianity of our modern Laodiceans is demonstrated in reference to the professed disciples of Jesus Christ, neglecting to win their brethren from their sins. If the negative Christians are spending an evening with a party of friends, they may not tell the lewd story themselves, but they will not rebuke that story when they hear someone else telling it. If they see another traveling the crowded paths of sin, they may not follow; but they do not go forth and, as a Christian friend, say: "Brother, this is not the way to Christ. Let me lead you into the right path." In other words, in their friendship to Christ they are like a chameleon, changing their colors to suit their surroundings.

Would that we might be as true to God's love in every way as Doctor Joseph Leidy, the great naturalist, was true in his noble affection for dumb brutes. Some years ago, Doctor Leidy was lecturing on natural history to the students of Swarthmore College, about ten miles out of Philadelphia, where he lived. To illustrate his subject, he took into the classroom three little mud turtles out of a near-by pond. After the lecture he locked these little turtles up in his laboratory, intending to turn them loose next day. That night Doctor Leidy was summoned to Germany by cable. He had to catch the early boat for New York next morning. There was no train out that night to the college town. So, rather than let his little friends, the mud turtles, starve to death in the closet of which he only had the key, Dr. Leidy walked over the Pennsylvania hills to the college town, and then walked back and caught the early morning train for New York. "Ah," said he to the college janitor, "I could not go away and sail for Europe, and think of those little turtles starving in my closet."

"A little thing," you say. Yes, it was a little act. But it was a noble act which showed a tender heart. Thus may our love to Christ be demonstrated. May it be a positive love. May we be true to him in the teachings of the Cross. May we be true to him in the financial duties of the store. May we be true to him in our pleasures. Last, but not least, may we be true to Christ in rebuking sin wherever it is found. And in our rebukes, may we strive to lead the sinner into the spirit of Christ's sacrifice.

SING SING'S CAMP MEETING

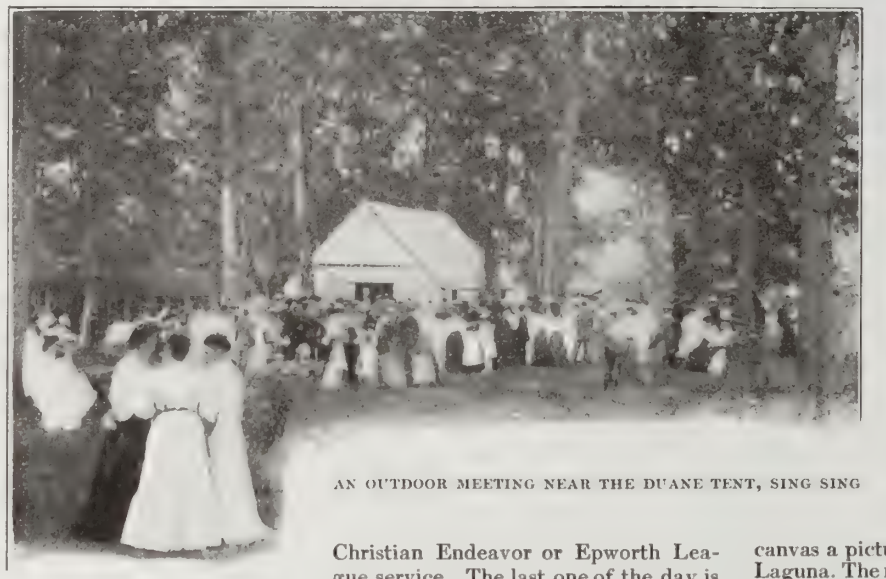
THE annual Camp Meeting in the grand old oak grove at Ossining (formerly Sing Sing), N. Y., is one of the great religious occasions of the year in the valley of the Hudson. For some eighty or ninety years, the Sing Sing and New York Camp Meeting Association has held annually a series of revivals in these woods. In the beginning, it was the custom for people to come from all the region round about in canvas-covered wagons, by stage coach, steamboat and train for a hundred miles in every direction, and during the meeting—a period of ten days or two weeks—to camp out in the woods, sleeping at night in wagons, under tents, or on the ground in the open air. It was the usual thing to have several meetings going on simultaneously in different parts of the grove—preaching at one place, a prayer-meeting at another, at some other section a testimony meeting, at still another a class meeting, and so on. It was no unusual thing for the services of ten days to result in two or three thousand professed conversions to Christ. The Sing Sing Camp Meetings came to be the most famous of the sort throughout the country.

With the passing of the years, these camp-meetings have undergone a great change. They are not now so largely attended, nor so vociferous in expression. There is not so much of the old-time shouting, but there is much earnest devotion. The piety characterizing the meetings this year, and all recent years is of the quiet and intelligent order.

The series of meetings the present season opened at "the Circle," or the preacher's stand (the main out-of-doors place for services), with the celebration of the Lord's Supper. It was an evening service and solemnly impressive indeed was the scene in this great natural temple of the woods. It was a fitting preparation service for the ten days of overflowing services that followed.

The order of daily services in the camp provided for all classes and conditions. The first appointment to worship begins in the old Duane Tent, named in honor of the Duane Street Methodist Church, the members of which furnished the money and built the tent on Central Avenue. After this, breakfast in the large Pavilion Restaurant where they usually sing grace before eating. The "Pentecostal Service" is held at eight o'clock in the Tabernacle, in which fervent prayer and earnest testimony are the prominent features. The next service is held at the Circle, out under the trees, at 10:30 o'clock. This is one of the principal preaching services of the day. The singing, led by a large, well-trained choir, makes the grand old forest re-echo with the sweet melody of Christian hymns.

The first afternoon service at 2:30, is somewhat similar to the one just before noon. At four o'clock comes Children's meeting in the Tabernacle, conducted by a special leader. At seven o'clock, the Young People's meeting, which in character, spirit and method, is a



AN OUTDOOR MEETING NEAR THE DUANE TENT, SING SING

Christian Endeavor or Epworth League service. The last one of the day is held at the Circle, and is the most popular of all, largest in attendance, and usually most profitable spiritually. It is the service attended by the men who go to New York on business every day and return to their families in the cottages at night. Sometimes an after-meeting for prayer, praise and testimony is held in the Duane Tent at the close of the Circle service. This after-meeting has at times continued until eleven or twelve o'clock at night.

The different interests of religion have their special days. One is devoted to the cause of Home and Foreign Missions, one is known as Woman's Day, another as Children's Day, the happiest and lightest of all. "Rescue Mission Day" is always an interesting event. This year, Mr. Hadley of New York and som[e] rescue workers were here, and told in a most e[n]-ing and instructive fashion, the story of redeem[ing] and power as experienced among the submerge[d] lation of New York City. Saturday before the Sunday is devoted to work among young peo[ple], the last day of Camp is the High Day. Great [crowds] are in attendance, and enthusiasm reaches th[e white] heat intensity. Extra love feasts, prayer meeti[ngs] and outdoor experience and testimony gatherings [are] here and there under the trees on different part[s] grounds. On the west side of the grove, the [cottages] of New York and Brooklyn hav[e many] cottages and a fine large ten[t], in which they hold annually e[xcellent] evangelistic services simulta[neously] with the others. These are si[milar in] spirit and method to the Eng[lish ser]vices; but they seem to be eve[r more] successful in latter years in th[e num]ber of souls won to Christ.

The closing scene this year, [as in all] former years, was spectacular an[d lad]some. "Marching Around Jeru[salem]" is popular with every one, C[hris]tian and non-Christian alike.

S. T. W[ILLIS].

Women of the Pueb[los]

SEE ILLUSTRATION ON FIRST P[AGE]

OUR first page picture this w[eek] is especially interesting, having [been] painted from life by Marion Cu[rtis], a typical young artist who, while st[udying] life in New Mexico, has placed [upon] canvas a picturesque group of women water-carri[ers] of Laguna. The natives of these pueblos (Spanish for vi[llage]), are a semi-civilized branch of the North American In[dians], who dwell in curious-looking houses. These dwe[llings], often five and six stories in height, are large enough [sometimes] to shelter a whole tribe. There are many roo[ms on] each floor. The buildings are of adobe or sun-dried [brick]. The ground floor is without either doors or window[s, en]trance being gained by means of ladders leading t[o the] second stories. Ladders also take the place of stai[rs in] indoors. Each family has a separate apartment, and [there] are large rooms for council chambers and tribal ce[remo]nies. There are over 8,000 people living in these [dwell]ings in nineteen different pueblos of New Mexico.

The large jars carried upon the heads of the wom[en in] the illustration are good specimens of the potter['s art], and are very beautiful in shape and coloring. The w[omen] are erect and graceful in bearing.

The Heavenly Way

By C. H. Yatman

Twenty-Five Great Things of Christ

THE greatest Invitation Jesus ever gave was, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

The greatest Parable he ever uttered was the story of the Prodigal Son. Luke 15.

The greatest Beatitude he ever gave was, "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God."

The greatest Hope he ever gave was, "In my Father's house are many mansions . . . I go to prepare a place for you."

The greatest Warning he ever gave was, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

The greatest Comfort he ever gave was, "Lo, I am with you alway."

The greatest Truth he ever spake was, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

The greatest Miracle he ever wrought was, to come up out of the grave.

The greatest Prayer he ever offered was on the Cross for his enemies.

The greatest Affliction he ever endured was the burden of a world's sin.

The greatest Doctrine he ever taught was atonement.

The greatest Gift he ever promised was the Holy Ghost.

The greatest Commandment he ever gave was to love.

The greatest Conversion he ever wrought was Saul of Tarsus.

The greatest Day he spent on earth was Friday of the Crucifixion.

The greatest Triumph he ever had was over Death.

The greatest Example he ever set was prayer.

The greatest Revelation he ever made was of God.

The greatest Fact of which he ever spoke was Law.

The greatest Boon he ever gave humanity was Life.

The greatest Praise he ever bestowed was on a woman.

The greatest Prophecy he ever made was about His Kingdom.

The greatest Reproof he ever gave was against Unbelief.

The greatest Work he ever wrought was to save a sinner.

The greatest sinner he ever saved was myself.

The Story of Little Gondere

HOLI, the great spring festival of the Hindus, when the people all feel under obligation to be happy, was celebrated here a few days ago. One of the merriest in the paint-bedraggled crowd was little Gondere, one of the most promising boys in the mission school. Next day the merry schoolboy of the day before lay in a grass hut outside the town, with a temperature of 105°, and an ominous swelling of the groin. All knew what that meant—Gondere was down with the plague. Knowing it would be a fight to the death, Miss Stanley bent all her energies to save her pupil. What was possible in the way of medicine was procured and given; but the medicine that will cure plague is yet to be discovered. Throughout Thursday, Gondere held his own well against a merciless and insistent enemy. I went with Miss Stanley that evening to visit him. It was a strange, pathetic scene that met us. The mango grove was full of tents and grass huts—the temporary dwelling-places of those that plague had driven from the town. In one of these grass huts we found Gondere. He lay on the ground wrapped in a blanket, and above his head—the one bright thing in that terror-stricken grove—hung his bag of school-books. Weeping women clasped our feet and besought us to save their boy. Amid their tears and entreaties, they praised his cleverness and diligence in study, and pointed to the school-books above his head, from among which the corners of a New Testament protruded.

"Gondere died at five o'clock this morning," was the answer of Friday to the hopes of Thursday. The enemy renewed the fight in the night watches, and the hard-pressed little soldier had gone down to fight no more.

They laid Gondere, wrapped in a blanket, on the rude bamboo-bier, placing his books alongside of him, hoping they would be of use to him. Then, while the wailing grew louder and louder, they bore him rapidly away to his resting-place near the river. Alice White.

China's Outcast Children

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 715

From Hing-hua, Wuhu, Nanking, Chien-kia-ku, [Kua]Chuan, Chen-uen, Pung-ling, Kien-cheo, and se[veral] other places, letters from missionaries state that the [is] great need of systematic orphan work. All indica[tions] point to a wonderful development on this line in [the] near future. Nanking, the old capital of China, on [the] Yang-tse river, is an ideal place for such a work, b[eing] finely situated in a high and healthy district, and [is] probable that it will become a centre of orphan [and] industrial activity. Mr. G. Howard Malone, of [the] Advent Christian Mission, has already begun suc[cessful] work there and is doing all he can to gather in [the] child-outcasts in a heathen world. To save these l[ittle] ones to lives of industry and Christian usefulness is [the] aim of all who are interested in this special work.

Some of the photographs forwarded by the miss[ionar]ies to The Christian Herald, furnish a better i[dea] of life in China to-day, than can be conveyed in [any] letter. Those sent by Mr. Hagqvist afford a glim[pse], not only of the mission workers and their surroundi[ngs], but also of the life of the upper classes in Chinese [so]ciety. The family of the mandarin shown in on[e of] the illustrations, have proved very good friends of [the] missionaries. The flower garden in the palace at Hsi[an] is historic, from the fact that it was to this place t[hat] the Dowager-Empress and the young Emperor, Kua[ng] Hsu, fled when the Court left Peking during the Bo[xer] troubles some years ago. The Court lived in this [same] palace of Hsian, which is now vacant. In the ba[ck]ground may be seen the house in which the Empe[ror] himself was secluded until the trouble passed over.

In its present stage, the orphan work in China [is] comparatively limited, but the pressure on all side[s] toward development. To win a heathen child to Ch[rist] is to make, under Divine blessing, a powerful ally, w[ho] in after years, will play his part in bringing his nat[ive] land into the light of the Gospel.

A STREET SCENE

JERUSALEM FROM THE NORTH

A SALUTE FROM DAVID'S TOWER

The Hope of Jerusalem

BY GEORGE ALDEN SANFORD

"THAT whistle has a familiar sound," somebody remarked on a "J-J" railway train, running from Jaffa to Jerusalem. "It ought to sound natural," was the reply, "it was made in Philadelphia." It was indeed a surprise to be carried by railroad train through the country of Joshua, of Samson, of Goliath, and the Philistines; but it was a shock to think of such commercial enterprise on the part of the Philadelphians! The puffing, snorting, American locomotive at last reached the top of the low mountains on which the city is built, and we beheld, what for years our eyes had longed to see, the city of David, the city Jesus loved, the ecclesiastical capital of the world. How fair it lay under the sunset skies: "Beautiful for situation, and the joy of the whole earth." The gilded domes of Mohammedan mosques and Greek churches, the ancient Tower of David, the narrow streets and houses huddled together, but especially the city wall with battlemented gates, casts about it a glamor of romance. Familiarity breeds contempt with Jerusalem as well as with some people. Our heartiest welcome on alighting was from a high wind, which nearly blew us off our feet; but later we learned to be thankful for those winds, for without them the city would be practically uninhabitable, there being no sewer system.

It is a poverty-stricken city. Your first word of welcome, your last word of farewell, and about every other word is bakshish (a gift or present). I do not believe there is a city on earth where there is more poverty and begging. A little child of nine years knelt down and kissed our muddy shoes as he plead for help. We had the pleasure of taking him to a nearby food shop, and stuffing him up until he could eat no more. The most persistent beggars of all are attached to the mosques. A while ago there was a riot in one of the Jerusalem mosques, and Turkish soldiers were obliged to restore order. Someone had thrown two shillings to an attendant and the scramble which ensued led to an actual riot.

It is a benighted city. Think of a place the population of which is estimated from 50,000 to 75,000 inhabitants where there is no newspaper, no bookstore, and no public school. There are mission schools, and good ones too, but no public schools. There are no street lights; and one evening, when a party of us went to a neighboring hotel with a guard carrying a big lantern, on our return, at ten o'clock, we found the hotel closed, in total darkness, and the Moorish porter at the entrance fast asleep. Such a thing as municipal interest is unknown.

It is a suffering city. On every street you will see blindness, the result of neglecting the simplest hygenic measures. But the climax of misery is seen in the lepers, who linger especially about the so called holy places and cry for help. It is true that provision is made for them, not by the city or government, but by a German Mission. But they naturally prefer more freedom, and by begging, many of them have procured what is there considered a competence. About Gethsemane they gather, and, with uplifted, maimed hands, being dismembered by this living death, with voices past any semblance of human speech, they appeal for help. Anew comes to you the picture of the ten lepers, piteous wrecks, crying for mercy. Perhaps it was in Bethany, possibly on the Mount of Olives, near where they gather to-day. We can fancy the multitude gathering about and following the great Teacher. Possibly these unfortunates recognize in the approaching crowd the Great Physician, and something of hope dawns within them. As the crowd draws near, "Master, have mercy!" they cry, and that ear which was ever open to the appeal of need, and that heart which was ever ready to bear the sorrows of the world, opened, and he said: "I will, be thou clean." How they hastened to fulfil the ceremonial law, and then—and then one returned, and we can see him draw near the Saviour, prostrating himself at his feet, as he says: "Lord Jesus, thou hast cleansed me, what wouldst thou have me do for thee?" And perhaps the Master suggested some service, for in the economy of the spiritual realm there is work for every Christian. But the nine? The nine? Is it possible that the cynic was right who said that most people's gratitude consists of a lively sense of favors to come? It is not for us to judge the lepers, for the sin of ingratitude still prevails. It is more respectable than drunkenness and thieving, but no better nor worse in God's sight. Only until you have seen a leper you will know the spiritual significance of sin. Some think that the proportion of those whose gratitude brings the life and lays it at Jesus' feet to day, is about the same as when one out of the ten came back to thank and adore him in that olden time. However that may be, let us be found among those who sit at his feet, who, out of gratitude and love, are ready to do his service at any time, in any place, and at any sacrifice.

THE HOTEL IN JERUSALEM

Jerusalem has young men, consequently is a city of hope. The hope of a "holy" city lies in the coming generation. It contains probably about ten thousand young men, many without education, all practically without commercial opportunity or training. The government is exceedingly conservative. On one occasion the officials nailed up the door of the Young Men's Christian Association and took down the sign. The British Consul, who is deeply interested, opened the door and replaced the sign. This Association occupies the ground floor of a small centrally located building. There are fifty members, of whom one-half are young men converted from Judaism. I have never seen a body of young men so eager for leadership in Christian work. A good Association building with a competent Secretary could work wonders along sanitary, commercial and educational, as well as religious lines. The presence of so many visitors who are leaders in educational work could be utilized in connection with lectures and receptions, and there could be secured for these young men some of the best obtainable talent. Intense prejudice exists between the various sects, and the world looks on aghast at the Turkish soldiers whose presence is necessary to keep peace among these sects of Christians. Fortunately Protestants are not included in this animosity, and the Young Men's Christian Association would make, as it has done in the Western world, a common ground for all faiths. An American Secretary would have great prestige. The word America is the synonym for freedom and opportunity for the people about the Mediterranean Sea. In my hotel, the Old Mediterranean House, the proprietor of which is a Russian Jew, the most conspicuous place in the reception room is given to a portrait of President Roosevelt.

Many and great have been the opportunities offered to the Young Men's Christian Association, but I know of none so fraught with possibilities as this one in the ecclesiastical capital of the world, the city which Jesus loved and wept over. It would be indeed wonderful if it were left to the Young Men's Christian Association to solve the apparently hopeless problem of this city of strife, poverty and misery. There are many obstacles, but "there is nothing too hard for the Lord." Two things are needed to carry out this project, a competent Secretary, and the means to send him and maintain an educational and social work, through which a spiritual influence could be gained over hundreds of young men. If God provides the man, who would like a part in sending him?

Among the Workers

—THE SUNDAY SERVICES conducted in the Lemon Hill Music Pavilion in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, are a unique feature. The meetings are in charge of Rev. James B. Ely, and attract large audiences.

DR. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN is leading a notable revival in New Jersey. The towns which have so far organized committees are Newark, Jersey City, Trenton, Paterson, Elizabeth, Montclair, Orange, Atlantic City, Bloomfield, Boonton, Bound Brook, Bridgton, Dover, Dunellen, Englewood, Long Branch, Manasquan, Belvidere, Lawrenceville, Newton, Perth Amboy, and Vineland.

—THE Y.M.C.A., OF PETROS, TENN., is now organizing for the coal miners of the Big Brushy Mountain coal camp. It asks the prayers and help of all Christians. The coal company has given the Association the free use of a hall, which is divided into a reading room, amusement room, bath room and auditorium. The reading room needs some good books, monthly magazines and religious publications.

THE TENT CAMPAIGN now being conducted in various parts of Chicago is progressing rapidly. Since the tents opened over fifty thousand people have been in attendance. A large number have publicly professed conversion, in one tent over fifty in two weeks, and some have already been received into membership in various churches. The tents are at present located at Walnut Street near Sacramento Avenue, Garfield Boulevard near Michigan Avenue, Humboldt Park and Kedzie Avenue, Thirty-first Street and Parnell Avenue, and Pullman. These tents are all cared for by groups of churches who have united to carry on this work.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, Associate Edit

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIA HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Mat

M. Witte and the Hebrews

SERGIUS WITTE, the Czar's envoy at the Peace Conference, has in many ways shown himself a statesman far in advance of the average Russian diplomatist. Easily the foremost figure in the affairs of that nation at this time, he is a man upon whom the eyes of the world are centered and of whom great things are expected. While as a loyal plenipotentiary he will endeavor to serve the best interests of his country in the negotiations, he is also in a position to serve humanity as well.

This has already become apparent in his recent consultation with leading American Hebrews, who are said to have departed with the assurance that M. Witte was not only the champion of the oppressed of all classes in Russia, but the stanch friend of the Jews and the unwavering advocate of justice to their race.

The war itself will soon be a thing of the past; but the great question of justice to the Russian Hebrews remains. Until that wrong of the ages is redressed, and the Jew is accorded equal rights with every citizen in the Czar's empire, this question will be a thorn in the side of every Russian ruler and his ministers. It has done much to alienate from Russia the hearty accord and sympathy of other nations.

This is the problem—second in urgency only to that of the war—to which M. Witte has wisely addressed himself during his stay here. As a student of history, he is, of course, familiar with the strange fact that every nation which has persistently persecuted the children of Abraham, and which has not in some way given evidence of repentance or atonement for wrongs inflicted upon the Hebrew race, has passed to inglorious oblivion. "I will bless thee and make thy name great; and be thou a blessing; and I will bless them that bless thee; and him that curseth thee will I curse; and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Such was the promise to the patriarch, and wondrously has it been fulfilled. Wherever Israel has found shelter and welcome and justice, to that land have come prosperity and blessing, while the peoples who have hounded and robbed and persecuted the Jews, have paid the penalty of their cruelties a hundred-fold.

When They Were Boys

UNDER the title "When I was a Boy," there will be found in this issue, a symposium that cannot fail to interest a wide circle of readers. Prominent men in many different walks of life have told, for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, incidents of their boyhood days. Some of these incidents, though apparently trivial at the time, exercised a formative influence on their characters; and many of them are looked back upon as among the first white milestones of their careers.

Almost every person recalls a group of early impressions—the first day of school, or some episode of school life; the first sermon that attracted their youthful attention; some great joy or great bereavement. All these occurrences stand out with startling distinctness across the mist of years—years filled with a multitude of events which have vanished from the memory, like the chapters of a long-closed book. The mind of a boy is alert, fresh, impressionable. You do not often hear of an absent-minded boy. Absent-mindedness results from preoccupation. An older mind, brimful of the serious problems of real living, or absorbed in study, pays little attention to outside details.

No one can read such a variety of youthful experiences without seeing, as in a mirror, some reflection of his own life. What an inspiration is given to the young man, by the recital of humble beginnings and honest effort, crowned with material and spiritual triumphs! Most of the contributors to the Symposium are what are called self-made men, who had to make their own way in the world, though often guided, it is true, by the watchful care of loving hearts at home.

There is a difference of opinion in regard to the opportunities for business advancement for the boys and young men of to-day, evidently arising from the individual experience of the writers; but there is agreement in regard to the better educational opportunities of the present.

The favorite authors of a generation ago are still so with many who, doubtless, will write their experiences for the generation to come. It is also interesting to note that many of the writers have some favorite text which has served not only as a restraint and moral guidance, but also as a comfort and inspiration.

We believe that the boy of the present, with his advantages of public school, Sunday School and Y.M.C.A., is bound to develop into magnificent Christian manhood. Let us have faith in the boy of to-day.

An Alienist on Prayer

ONE of the most remarkable utterances of our time, taking into account the scientific eminence of its source, was made at the recent meeting of the British Medical Association, by Dr. T. B. Hyslop, the famous authority on mental disease. The subject of the doctor's paper was, "The Causative Factors of Insanity." His position as Superintendent of the Bethlehem Royal Hospital and his wide experience, qualify him to speak authoritatively on all questions relating to the affections of the mind; his remarks, therefore, commanded the closest attention of the physicians who made up his audience. In the course of his paper he referred to the fact that insanity is often attributed to religious excitement, and gave his own opinion that, "no religion and no sense of moral obligation are much more frequently the cause of insanity, through the indulgences to which they lead." The doctor then proceeded to consider the theory, doubtless novel to his hearers, that "religion may be employed as a means of moral prevention and treatment of insanity." Having given his reasons for that belief, he adduced as an illustrative argument the effect of prayer on the agitated mind, of which he said:

> As an alienist and one whose whole life has been concerned with the sufferings of the human mind, I would state that of all the hygienic measures to counteract disturbed sleep, depression of spirits, and all the miserable sequels of a distressed mind, I would undoubtedly give the first place to the simple habit of prayer . . . . Such a habit does more to clean the spirit and strengthen the soul to overcome mere incidental emotionalism than any other therapeutic agent known to me.

This, of course, is the subjective view of prayer, the effect of prayer on the suppliant himself, without considering the other view, of the possibility of God answering prayer. Leaving that part of the subject out of consideration, Dr. Hyslop believes that the habit of prayer, whether it is answered or not, is good for the mental health. It is easy to see why it should be so. The perturbed mind wrestling with troubles and anxieties that are driving it crazy, is calmed and tranquilized, when it commits all its harass to a higher power. Casting the burden on the Lord, it is relieved. The man who bears the burden himself, may yet find it so intolerable that the mind reels under it, is eventually disordered and becomes insane. But he who places in the hands of the Supreme Being the problems he feels himself unable to solve, the vexations and annoyances that are distressing him, loses in part his sense of responsibility for them, and awaits the beneficent action. As a child perplexed by the consequences of his own wrongdoing, and harassed by the dread of retribution, goes to his father and lays the whole case before him, and begs his guidance and protection, is relieved of anxiety, so the harassed man goes to his heavenly Father, and committing his perplexities in confidence to his wisdom, comes away eased of his burden. No wonder that one who has charge of the insane has made the discovery that among them there are few who are in the habit of praying. No wonder that he regards the habit as the best preventive of insanity.

It is a happy augury that so eminent a man has made the discovery. Too long have medical men neglected or despised this means of prevention or recovery. As all our scientific discoveries have come from putting ourselves in line with natural law, it is strange that the centuries should have gone by, and men and women have continued losing their reason, without those who attempt their cure, realizing that recovery might be gained by the same principle, of bringing them into line with the Ordainer of natural law. The rest and quiet and peace they strive to produce with their drugs and sedatives, might, they now find, have been produced, much more surely, by leading them to commit the difficulties to One who is able to remove them.

This, however, is only the first step in the disco y. There is another, and still more important one. he benefit the man himself derives from prayer, the bl ed rest and peace he enjoys when he has committe is burden to the Lord, are not the end of the be it. Prayer does re-act on the suppliant, producing a n- quil mind. But it does more. It brings an an r. If it did not, it would soon lose its effect. No an would get relief to his mind by prayer, if God dic ot answer prayer. The sufferer would find that he w n- dulging a vain hope. God does answer prayer, t always in the way desired or expected, but in some t- ter way; more satisfactory to the suppliant. He as given his promise that he will hear and answer, an as millions of his creatures can testify, he keeps his pro e.

Thus there is a double benefit in prayer. The is this that Dr. Hyslop has discovered, which had g been known to the humble, faithful Christian, o s tranquilizing effect on the distracted man driftin o insanity. And second, and more important, the t that God hears and proves himself a very present p in time of trouble. "Thou wilt keep him in pe t peace whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trus h in thee."

Breakfast-Table Philosophy

MANY of our brightest things come from the W In that land of big crops and wide areas, ther an ever-recurrent tendency to kick over the convent alities. Hence we find it the birthplace of all kind new ideas. New political parties as well as new inv tions, new literary schools and educational novel spring up and thrive there. The latest product of amazingly fertile field is a new "Before Breakfast P osophy," by a Chicago professor, who may be regar as an up-to-date rival of Pythagoras, whose "Gol Verses" have stood for centuries as the classical stand of self-examination before seeking one's pillow for night.

This Chicago philosopher, who really deserves a w hearing, presented to his class in college, one fo noon lately, a list of questions that he declared ou to be answered satisfactorily by every man before received his degree of Bachelor of Arts. Univers training, he wisely held, should educate the heart well as the head. These were the test queries, wh the students presumably are now studying with due tention:

> Do you see anything to love in a little child?
> Have you sympathy with all good causes?
> Can you look straight in the eye of an honest man or a p woman?
> Will a lonely dog follow you?
> Do you believe in lending a helping hand to weaker men?
> Do you believe in taking advantage of the law when you c do so?
> Can you be high minded and happy in drudgery?
> Can you see as much beauty in washing dishes and hoeing cor as in playing golf and the piano?
> Do you know the value of time and money?
> Are you good friends with yourself?
> Do you see anything in life besides dollars and cents?
> Can you see sunshine in a mud puddle?
> Can you see beyond the stars?

Critics may smile at it, and wise old professors ma pooh-pooh it as an evidence of weakness; but this ne educational philosophy has a good, sound basis common sense. In the old Greek schools, the instructo held that the education of youth must include a essentials the development of those qualities of bod brain and heart that make a man strong, courageous patriotic, truthful, gentle, generous, a faithful friend, a obedient servant of the gods, a respecter of superiors an a staff of old age. Our Chicagoan has been mindful o the old pagan principle of harmonious development and has vitalized it with Christianity. He sees tha success in life does not consist of making a man a selfish unscrupulous, money-making machine. He regard those "short cuts" to fame and fortune, which some modern pseudo-philosophers advocate, as degrading an unworthy. And he has hit upon a great truth, for a education that inculcates kind-heartedness, helpfulness pure living, the love of honest labor, the sunniest opti mism as to the present, and a firm trust in God for th future, is worth more than all other kinds of training put together.

The BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The President and the Miners

LONG to be remembered was the scene of President Roosevelt's talk with the miners at Wilkesbarre, Pa., on August 10. Seldom has so large a crowd listened to any man's utterances. It is estimated that more than a hundred thousand persons had assembled to hear the words of the Chief Executive. Early in the meeting it seemed as if there might be a fatal catastrophe. The crowd began swaying, as latecomers, eager to catch every word, pressed on those at the centre. Many were badly squeezed, and there was imminent danger, when Mr. Roosevelt rose, and with vigorous gestures, shouted to the people in the rear to stop pushing and stand still. His prompt action averted a terrible panic, but several injured persons had to be removed in ambulances.

Cardinal Gibbons, John Mitchell, and other eminent speakers took part in the meeting, but it is not often that Wilkesbarre has the privilege of hearing the President of the United States, and he was therefore the lion of the day. In the course of his speech he made a thrilling appeal on behalf of temperance and morality. He said:

In the last analysis the factor most influential in determining any man's success must ever be the sum of that man's own qualities, of his knowledge, foresight, thrift, and courage. Whatever tends to increase his self-respect, whatever tends to help him overcome the temptations with which all of us are surrounded, is of benefit not only to him, but to the whole community.

No one society can do more to help the wage-worker, than the temperance society. It is of incalculable consequence to the man himself, that he should be sober and temperate, and it is of even more consequence to his wife and his children: for it is a hard and cruel fact that in this life of ours, the sin of the man are often visited most heavily upon those whose welfare should be his one special care. For the drunkard, for the man who loses his job because he cannot control or will not control his desire for liquor and for vicious pleasure, we have a feeling of anger and contempt, mixed with pity; but for his unfortunate wife and little ones, we feel only pity, and that of the deepest and tenderest kind.

Everything possible should be done to encourage the growth of that spirit of self-respect, self-restraint, self-reliance which, if it only grows enough, is certain to make all the men in whom it shows itself move steadily upward toward the highest standard of American citizenship. It is a proud and responsible privilege to be citizens of this great self-governing nation, and each of us needs to keep steadily before his eyes the fact that he is wholly unfit to take part in the work of governing others unless he can first govern himself. He must stand up manfully for his own rights: he must respect the rights of others: he must obey the law, and he must try to live up to those rules of righteousness which are above and behind all laws.

This was sound advice, even if, as the President suggested, it might be unpalatable. He concluded with the trenchant observation that: "No man can be a good citizen, can deserve the respect of his fellows, unless first of all, he is a good man in his own family, unless he does his duty faithfully by his wife and children." Well will it be if not only the people who heard the President's words, but every citizen takes them to heart:

Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? prudent, and he shall know them? for the ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them: but the transgressors shall fall therein (Hosea 14: 9).

Norway's Decision

The people of Norway have answered the question put to them by their representatives with unexpected unanimity. They were requested to say by their votes whether they desired to be separated from Sweden. Their reply is in the affirmative by an immense majority. Of 321,358 votes cast, all but 161 were in favor of separation. On the day of the plebiscite there were scenes of the greatest enthusiasm everywhere. Thousands of women who did not have the right of franchise signed petitions in the streets indorsing the dissolution. In Christiania and other cities the total population turned out every one wearing long streamers of the national colors. The Government declares itself willing to negotiate concerning the details of the dissolution. "It is," says a prominent leader, "the earnest desire of Norway to conclude the dissolution amicably. Norway will never retract, but everything will be done to meet the wishes of Sweden in other directions. If peace depends upon abolishing the forts they will be abolished." Time will show whether Norway will gain by the separation. It may be hoped they will continue to be friends, otherwise some other Power may take advantage of their separation to absorb them.

If they fall, the one will lift up his fellow; but woe to him that is alone when he falleth (Eccles. 4: 10).

An Engineer's Bravery

The work of constructing the great reservoir at Cedar Grove, N. J., was the occasion of a deed of heroism of a remarkable kind last week. The work was suddenly suspended by a great cloudburst that filled the vast trench under the Orange Mountain. The trench was shored up and crossed by numerous braces, and was filled to the brim with muddy water. The only available pump was five feet below the surface of the water, and the steam valve was closed before the big ditch was flooded. The engineer was deeply concerned about the hindrance to the operations, and after considering various ways and means of overcoming the difficulty, determined to dive down into the muddy water at the risk of his life to open the valve. He said he did not like to see the work drag, so he stripped and plunged headforemost between the braces, and went down to the pump. Then he groped for the valve wheel, and, turning it, threw the valve wide open. The work was done under the severest stress, and those standing on the border of the trench never expected to see the engineer come up alive. Just as all hands were getting discouraged he popped up through the mud and water, and was dragged out and resuscitated. He had accomplished his task and saved great damage to property and delay to the work. If men will perform such an heroic task to save property and avoid delay to an enterprise, what sacrifices ought Christians to make when Christ's work is obstructed in the world!

I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die for the name of the Lord Jesus (Acts 21: 13).

Stereograph copyright by Underwood & Underwood

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AT THE MEETING OF MINERS AT WILKESBARRE, PA.

Kindness Rewarded

Among the annals of the police force, in New York, is an incident that shows that in spite of the abuse hurled at the force, there are some upon it, and probably many, who are doing deeds of unnoticed kindness. It shows, too, that sometimes such deeds bring an unexpected reward. A short time ago, a policeman, whose post lies near the immigrants' landing, was astonished to learn that his wife was entitled to a legacy. The name of her benefactor recalled to the policeman's mind a long-forgotten circumstance. Twenty-seven years before an immigrant bricklayer landed at Castle Garden. He had no friends, and when he left the shelter he asked the policeman to direct him to a boarding house. He did so, and the next day had further talk with him. He took an interest in the man, and obtained employment for him from a builder who was a friend of his own. But the Bricklayers' Union objected to him because he was not a member, so he was discharged. But the policeman secured his election to the Union, paying the fees out of his own pocket. His protegee speedily reimbursed him and seemed grateful. After a time he prospered and went West and the policeman heard no more of him. Not until last week did he know whether he was alive or dead. The news came that he had died and had made the policeman's wife his sole heiress. It is not thought that he left a large sum, but he bequeathed her all he had. Evidently the policeman's kindness to him in his need had made a deep impression on his mind. It is not often that such kindness is rewarded in this world, but Christ assured us that when it is done to one of his followers in his name, the reward in heaven is sure.

Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me (Matt. 25: 40).

Drunkards Ashamed

Of late the annual summer day's suspension of business, known in England as Bank Holiday, has been made in some sections an occasion of drunken revelry. In Liverpool especially, the trains bringing back returning excursionists in the evening, were scenes of disgraceful spectacles of insobriety. One of the railroads this year made the announcement that special trains would be provided for drunken passengers. The thoughtful consideration of the Directors, was, however, unnecessary. There were no occupants qualified for the special trains. One officer said: "Regular topers who before could be relied upon to travel home drunk, have been shamed into sobriety. The idea of being placed in a compartment with other drunkards disgusted them, and consequently they resolved to keep sober. I consider we have done more for the cause of temperance than any amount of legislation could possibly do." It would be well, if, not only drunkards but other sinners, remembered that a time is coming when the Judge of all men will give sentence that all impenitent transgressors shall go to one place in company together.

The Lord of that servant . . . will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers (Luke 12: 46).

BRIEF NOTES

Since 1892, no newspapers have been printed on Sunday in Norway, and since 1895 no bread baked on that day.

The first Protestant Filipino clergyman is the son of a man, who, many years ago, procured from a ship captain a copy of a Spanish Bible.

In consequence of the Czar's proclamation granting religious freedom to Dissenters, tens of thousands of persons in Poland have left the Russian Greek Church and joined the Church of Rome.

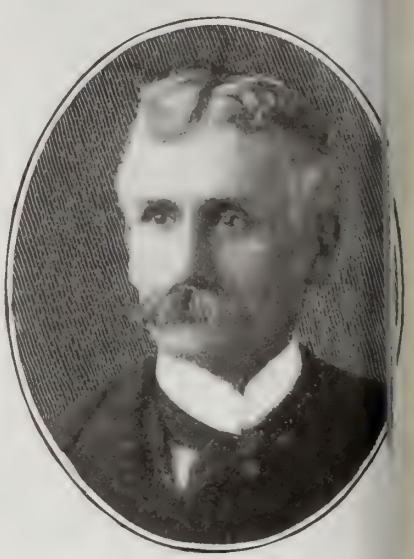
Dr. Smiley's meetings at Cedar Rapids, Neb., have proved very successful. A larger tent has been secured, as the first did not accommodate all who came. People drive from long distances to attend the meetings. He preaches twice daily to great audiences.

A Chinese Christian Endeavor Society at Shunkitien, China, has a "Heavenly Foot Committee," which opposes the custom of foot-binding, and a "Heavenly Union Committee," which arranges the marriages of Christians with other Christians rather than with heathen.

The latest religious statistics from Japan are: Roman Catholics, 44,659; Protestants, 44,585; Greeks 21,344. Of the Protestant bodies, the "Church of Christ in Japan," embracing the converts of six Presbyterian missions, has 11,347, the Congregational Churches have 10,578, and the Nippon Sei Kokwai (Church of the Methodist Episcopal Church has 5,894 communicants, the largest of the single missions.

"WHEN I WAS A BOY!"

An Inspiring Autobiographical Symposium by Men Now Famous in Many Walks of Life



"WHEN I was a boy"—what a world of interest is suggested by those five words, especially when the youthful days in question are those of men who have made their mark, in one way or another, in the world!

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD here presents the stories, more or less in detail, of a number of men who have risen to places of distinction in church work, in art, in literature, in pedagogy, and in the army, and the service of the State. In each case, the story of "When I was a Boy," is told directly by the "boy" himself—that is, by the man, looking backward to those juvenile days. Thus, each contributor to this Symposium becomes his own biographer.

Many of these stories of boyhood are told here for the first time. Here, each contributor tells of his earliest forms of amusement; the games he played at a time when "boys will be boys"; the studies he pursued at school; the part that church and Sunday School influence played in his career at the beginning of his life; the preachers who most impressed him; the sermons that helped him; the passages in the Bible that appealed to him; his favorite books and authors; the historical events that took strongest hold on his young imagination; the distinguished man or woman who was his model of character; how his own character was moulded by mother or father; how he came to choose his career; together with experiences of his school-days and characteristic incidents of his early life; and, finally, his own estimate of the differences between boyhood life then and now, and his opinion whether boys to-day enjoy greater freedom and larger opportunities for early advancement than did the boys of his time.

The replies to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S questions printed below form, indeed, an interesting and valuable addition to biographical literature—each individual represented in the Symposium contributing a chapter characteristic of boyhood in America in the forties, the fifties or the sixties of the nineteenth century:

His Only Ambition Was to be a Soldier

BY GENERAL CHARLES KING, AUTHOR OF "FAMOUS AND DECISIVE BATTLES" ETC.

"WHEN I was a boy," the one historical event that most impressed me was the rescue of the fugitive slave, Glover, in the city of Milwaukee. It was an incident characteristic of my town at that time.

I had to attend Sunday School at least two hours every Sunday. I was occasionally impressed by the sermons of our minister—especially when he talked about the Day of Judgment. The verse in the Bible that most impressed my boyhood mind was in Matthew: "Whosover shall give . . . unto one of these little ones in my name, he shall in no wise lose his reward."

You ask me how I came to choose a military career. I can only say that I never had any other hope or ambition than to be a soldier.

The great man who most influenced my youth was Abraham Lincoln. The woman who most influenced me was Julia Ward Howe.

I have nothing to add, except that boys in my time were taught to show respect to elders. Boys of the present time show reverence and respect, as a rule, neither to God nor man.

GEN. CHARLES KING, U.S.V.
Delafield, Wis.

. . .

A Mother's Influence Outweighed all Others

BY DR. DAVID STARR JORDAN, PRESIDENT, LELAND STANFORD UNIVERSITY

I WAS brought up on a farm in Gainesville, N. Y., about a mile from the village. I doubt that since then any great change has taken place in that community. There is, however, a far better opportunity for the young man of training or of promise to work his way forward than there was thirty years ago; but in some respects the conditions are harder for the man who has undesirable qualities, or who has no particular line of excellence or purpose in view.

I was most deeply interested in the study of flowers and stars, and also the problems of local geology. I finally went to college with the express purpose of studying botany, becoming early an instructor in botany in Cornell University.

I had at that same time some thought of becoming a breeder of animals. I went to the University to study under Agassiz, still placing the botanical career first, although I had done a deal of work in the related sciences. Agassiz set me to work studying the habits of fishes, thinking I ought to do something concerning which I had no previous prejudices. Afterwards I deliberately chose the study of ichthyology, as the one offering the largest field of original work of the kind for which I was specially fitted.

I became a college president at thirty-three, by accident, the career not being one to which I had looked forward, or in which I felt I had any immediate interest. The University of Indiana being in a condition of great difficulty, I was asked to become President, a position which I accepted for six months, but afterward became interested and did not withdraw.

I was far more influenced by my mother than by any other person not in public life.

DAVID STARR JORDAN.

. . .

Every Boy Wanted to be like Washington, none like Arnold

BY GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON, JOURNALIST AND AUTHOR OF "GRAUSTARK," ETC.

I THINK that Benedict Arnold's career influenced me as a boy, more than that of any other man. It always seemed to me that his treachery loomed up as an everlasting danger signal to the boys of America. Every boy wanted to be like Washington and none like Arnold.

I am convinced that boys of to-day have greater freedom and much wider opportunity in every particular, than had boys "when I was a boy." Studies and manner of study have changed since I was a boy in school, and so have the games, especially in the cities.

Preachers did not particularly impress me, but I liked Sunday School. We read The Scottish Chiefs, Tom Brown's School Days, etc. Oliver Optic was my favorite author.

I think I chose my "career" instinctively. The most overpowering incident of that career was the announcement that a publisher had agreed to accept Graustark.

GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON.
Chicago, Ill.

. . .

Was Most Influenced by the Bible and Shakespeare

BY HON. GEO. C. PURDEE, GOVERNOR OF CALIFORNIA

HOW did I come to choose my "public" career? Probably the example of my father. What books most influenced me as a boy? The Bible and the works of Shakespeare. Which great m most influenced me? Napoleon, Cæ and Lincoln. What historical event m influenced me? The reception in our t of the news of the death of Lincoln, tho this was as a local event in my town. whole Civil War made a particularly found impression. My favorite novels a youth, were those of Scott, Dickens, Oliver Optic.

GEORGE C. PURDE
Governor of California. Sacramento, C

. . .

Loved Outdoor Sports and Became a Good All-Round Athlete

BY GEN. JAMES GRANT WILSON, EDITOR AUTHOR

MY association as a youth with Brya Hallock, Paulding, Simms, Wil and other of my father's liter friends, gave me a bent in a literary dir tion which influenced my immediate car after leaving the army, soon after Civil War. I remember that as a bo often heard stories of the cruelties quently perpetrated upon the poor sla of the South. Those stories impressed youthful mind painfully, and I determ ed, if an opportunity ever presented its to use a "big stick" in their behalf. Th opportunity came in 1861-65, during whi period I served under Grant and Sherma

As for my school-days, the famous C lege Hill School of Poughkeepsie, N. Y which I attended some years before t Civil War, made it compulsory that hundred or more students should spend hour daily in the well-equipped gymn sium. While content to occupy a midd place in my studies, I was ambitious e'el in outdoor sports. I cannot remem-b that among my schoolfellows I was er beaten in jumping, running, rowing, sting, or swimming, and was, indeed, a gd all-round athlete, including boxing a fencing.

LIFE STORIES OF MEN WHO HAVE RISEN

'ooper's and Sir Walter Scott's novels re the favorites of my early days, which a the boys, of sixteen and upwards, were t recommended to read. Many of us re also familiar with the stories of Ickens, G. P. R. James, Marryat and Thackeray.

GEN. JAMES GRANT WILSON.
New York.

. . .

Boys Had Better Opportunities Then Than They Have To-Day

BY DR. EDWARD M. GALLAUDET, PRESIDENT GALLAUDET COLLEGE

I THINK during the period of my boyhood in Hartford, Conn., now more than fifty years ago, boys enjoyed ite as much freedom in respect to the mpanionship of girls as they do now. I nk that the boys of that day had better portunities for early advancement in siness and professional life, than do the ys of to-day.

The boys of my time played football—n such a game as is played to-day, but e nearly as strenuous, and as it was a cking game, sometimes quite painful to ns. We played baseball, but not so elborate a game as to-day.

was expected to attend church as a y, but my father allowed me to carry a ok, which I was at liberty to read durg the sermon. At about that time, the
v. Dr. Finney conducted a series of rival services in Hartford, in which he eached many times. His sermons proced a great effect upon my mind. I was a regular attendant upon Sunday School ll most of the boys of my acquaintance re in Sunday School classes, and the fluence of the Sunday School was consered an important part in the upbring-g of boys. I read Scott's novels, and me of Dickens. I formed the habit in rly life of reading the Bible with a good al of regularity. The fourteenth chapt of John was one of which I was especily fond.

Six months before I graduated from col-ge I was asked to take a partial position the School for the Deaf at Hartford. accepted, and after my graduation be-me a permanent instructor.

Sometime afterward, I was invited to me to Washington and organize a School r Deaf Mutes. I accepted that position, ving at that time a purpose in mind to cure, if possible, the establishment in ashington of a College for Deaf Mutes.
at dream of my very early manhood has en fully realized.

Without doubt I was more influenced d uplifted by hearing Jenny Lind sing, an by any other distinguished woman
th whom I came in contact in boyhood.
hall never forget how I, with all the rest the great audience, was moved actually tears as I heard her sing "Home, Sweet me," not only with an absolutely perct vocal organ, but "with the spirit and e understanding."

shington, D.C. E. M. GALLAUDET.
President Gallaudet College.

. . .

Was Greatly Influenced by Webster, Clay and Calhoun

RT. REV. ALPHEUS W. WILSON, BISHOP OF BALTIMORE

THE only woman who ever profoundly impressed me, until I married, was my mother. She was not known as "distinguished woman"; but my mother as something more than merely distinguished—in my mind. She was a refined, cultivated woman, and one of God's saints. he lives in me still.

The preacher who most impressed me as boy, was, first of all, my father. There ere, however, a few others whose memory t remains with me. Among the notable en who figured in my boy life—I may ention that I saw and heard many times ch men as Webster, Clay, Calhoun, Benn and others of the time. One or two of em I saw in private life, the others in e Senate and Supreme Court. To what tent, and how they influenced me, it is mpossible to say.

In regard to our amusements at school, e faculty had little to do in the matter of our choice. We chose our games for ourselves. Something akin to baseball—that was some fifty or more years ago—was the principal game. We did more hunting and fishing, I think, than boys do now. Indoor amusements were few.

Church attendance was, of course, an important and formal obligation. Sunday School, too, was an important influence in my boyhood. It was even more serious and thorough, as an obligation than now. Literature for boys at that time was scant. Robinson Crusoe and a very few others of the same sort are all that remain in my memory, with the possible addition of the Arabian Nights. The passages in the Bible that particularly influenced me as a boy were those contained in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah.

ALPHEUS W. WILSON, D.D.
Bishop Methodist Church South.

. . .

Church Attendance was Obligatory, But has Deteriorated Now

BY BISHOP H. Y. SATTERLEE, OF WASHINGTON

BOYS of my time were not taught outdoor sports so much as they are to-day. Sunday School influence was then not as important a part of the upbringing of boys as parental influence. One of my greatest griefs in my boyhood, was not being able to enter the West Point Military Academy, because I did not receive the appointment. Church attendance was a necessary obligation during my boyhood—much more so than among the boys of to-day, and in this there has been a distinct deterioration. The great novelists that I read as a boy included Scott, and G. P. R. James. My favorite books at first were Tom Brown's Schooldays, and Tom Brown at Oxford. Afterwards Kingsley's and Carlyle's works made the deepest impression. My favorite passages in the Bible, the ones that most helped me, were St. John, chapters 14, 15.

W. F. Mallalieu

David S. Jordan

BISHOP H. Y. SATTERLEE.
Washington, D. C.

. . .

Spent the Spare Time of his Boyhood in Fields and Woods

BY BISHOP W. F. MALLALIEU

MY home as a boy was on the slope of a hill facing the east, a ridge two miles or so distant, making the horizon. Back of the house were fields and woods and craggy hills—abundant in the fauna and flora of New England. My spare time was spent in the fields and the woods, mostly alone, but not lonely, with God and Nature.

The woman who most influenced me "when I was a boy" was my blessed mother. The sermon I heard as a youth that most impressed me was one on Lot's wife. My favorite book was the Pilgrim's Progress. My school-days were indeed very happy days—days of constant good fellowship with the boys. An incident that I remember, that was characteristic of the time, was a special Fourth of July celebration favoring total abstinence. The man that greatly impressed me was Stephen Olin. The passage in the Bible that particularly helped me as a lad was Matthew 11: 28, 29, 30.

BISHOP W. F. MALLALIEU.
Auburndale, Mass.

. . .

Began His Career on Fifty Dollars a Year

BY T. HOPKINSON SMITH, ENGINEER, ARTIST, AND AUTHOR

IN an interview with our representative, Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith, who has made fame in three professions as artist, engineer, and author said:

"I was born in Baltimore in 1838. I was prepared for Princeton in a preparatory school in Baltimore. But my father met with reverses, and at sixteen I entered a hardware store as shipping clerk, at fifty dollars a year. I marked and shipped the goods there for two years, and then at eighteen was taken as assistant superintendent in a Baltimore iron company, owned by my brother. This position I held for two years, when the war broke out. Then my brother's health gave out and I came North with him to Newburg, N. Y. My brother died, and I came to New York to begin life anew. I tramped the streets of that city, a stranger, day after day, trying in vain to get something to do.

At last luck turned all in a moment. Mr. T. B. Coddington, who had known my family, gave me a position in his iron business in Broad street. How well I remember that day! I was just about of age. I went into his place with a heart as heavy as lead; I came out walking on air. I was with him two years when I went into contract work. My first engineering achievement was the building of the stone ice-breaker around the lighthouse at Bridgeport, Conn. I have pursued my work as engineer, building one thing after another, always on the sea, up to the present time.

If you ask me to name the most satisfying thing I have done in my lifetime, I would say the building of the Race Rock Lighthouse, off New London, Conn. That light has burned there steadily ever since. I take the greatest pride in it, not because it was I who built it, understand, for some other fellow would have built it if I hadn't; but because it made such a profound impression upon my after life. It helped me—strengthened me—made me depend more and more upon myself. The plan was my own, and a novel one for me—for I had had at that time no real experience. It was a difficult problem, though. It took six years and I lived on the rock all the working months with my men, whom I made my companions.

"And I will tell you what helped then, what has always helped me most in everything I have undertaken. I call it 'stickedness of purpose.'

"Engineering and contracting is my business; it always has been; it gives me my bread and butter. Painting and writing and the other things I simply found waiting, like waifs, on the doorstep of my life, and I took them in. I cultivated them, and made them amount to something, and now they give me my salad and dessert. As an engineer, I make my living; as a writer and painter, I enjoy my living. But young men cannot live by their art alone—not at first."

. . .

Winning a Spelling Match was His Greatest Triumph

BY RT. REV. H. C. MORRISON, BISHOP OF NEW ORLEANS

I RECEIVED my primary teaching in the "Old field school," and my more advanced studies under preceptors at home. I certainly think the opportunities for early advancement on the part of boys are far better than in my boyhood. It is now possible for any boy to receive an education, if he has a will to that end.

As a characteristic incident of my school life, I may mention the following. I was in my twelfth year. A neighboring school sent two young men to bring a challenge to our school for a spelling match. It was Friday afternoon, and we were then engaged in a match in our own school. I had spelled down every one on the opposing side; and as I stood covered with glory because of my triumph, the teacher asked the two gentlemen who came with the challenge if they would like to stand up and spell against me. With a little hesitation they accepted. But both soon met the fate which had befallen my mates on the opposite side. And when those two visiting giants went down, it was, of course, a victory for me never to be forgotten.

In my lad-hood, I was stricken with a fearful and seemingly fatal fever. The time came with me when the physician said: "You cannot live five hours." My parents despaired of my life. It was my first serious illness. Like one of old, "I turned my face to the wall and took the case to God." I pledged him "lifetime of service" if he would let me live. He had compassion on me, "rebuked the fever," and I lived. News, however, had gone back to the old neighborhood in the East, from which we had lately moved, to the effect that I had died. Letters of condolence came to my parents, which letters I was permitted to read when convalescent, months afterward. How many nice things they said of the "dear boy!"

It is through our best nature that we look upon the dead. This incident impressed me and perhaps influenced my life more than any other experience of my boyhood.

H. C. MORRISON, D.D.
Bishop Methodist Church South, New Orleans, La.

. . .

"The Influence of Mother, Sister, and Uncle Decided My Career"

BY BISHOP C. KINLOCH NELSON, OF GEORGIA

I DO not think that boys of to-day enjoy any more freedom in respect to companionship of girls, than did the boys who were my contemporaries; but I do believe the boys of to-day have better opportunities for early advancement than had the boys of my time. An event of school life that I shall never forget was the displacement of an objectionable professor, under the united action of our class.

The man who most influenced my youthful years was my uncle, a godly and loving priest. The women who most impressed me were the gentlewomen I met in social life. My favorite authors were Scott, Bulwer, Hugo, and Dumas. I chose the church as a career because of the tender influence of mother, sister and uncle.

C. KINLOCK NELSON.
Bishop Episcopate of Georgia, Atlanta.

. . .

Reading "Oliver Optic" Led to His Newspaper Career

BY ALEXANDER BLACK, ARTIST AND AUTHOR

I THINK that boys of to-day have greater opportunities for early advancement. Such opportunities seem to be growing day by day. But as much as ever seems to depend upon the boy. There continues to be plenty of room at the bottom.

My impression is that Sunday School played a greater part in the training of

CONCLUDED ON PAGE 730

A River of Life in this World

Sunday School Lesson, By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

EZEKIEL AND HIS ANGEL GUIDE

WE stand beside the Apostle John, on the Isle of Patmos, and we hear him say: "He showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb." And then go backward almost seven hundred years, and stand beside Ezekiel the prophet. He shows us the Temple of God in Jerusalem, not in reality but in imagination, and he says: "Behold waters issued out from under the threshold of the house, eastward. . . . And everything shall live whither the river cometh." Both John and Ezekiel are showing us the "blest river of salvation."

But as yet the house of God lay desolate in ruins, and the people who were to rebuild it were captives in Babylon. Ezekiel came himself a captive, having been taken there as a mere youth with King Jehoiachin and a vast company of the people of Judah. He was early called to the prophetical office, and his scroll and inkhorn were ever beside him, that he might write down the Word of the Lord.

Even though the "river" was so far away from Ezekiel, both in time and space, he had a clear view of it, saw its fruitfulness: of fish in its waters, and of loaf and fruit upon its boughs. The vision brought assurance to him that Israel should be restored to their land as the chosen people of the Lord, and rebuild the Temple. He saw more than this, the realization of the promise, that in them all nations of the earth should be blest.

As prophet and priest, Ezekiel tried to carry this hope to his fellow captives in Babylon, but they were too sodden in misery and sin to comprehend it, and the prophet poured forth his soul in lamentation. So clearly did he see the meaning of the river and its fruitfulness, his words concerning it have been called "The Gospel of Ezekiel."

In God's own time, at the end of the seventy years, which he had ordained for the punishment of Israel, the captors were set free, and upon their return to their land they rebuilt the Temple, in fact, the very Temple in which Jesus Christ the Lord may be said to have set up his throne by his coming to it, and cleansing it of those who had made it a den of thieves, and by preaching in it the word of life. It was then the "river" began to flow. And the river of salvation beginning thus at Jerusalem has spread into all the earth. Into some places where its waters have been only for a short time, it seems to be but "ankle deep"; in other places where people have known the Gospel for a longer time, it is "knee deep"; in yet other nations who have been longer blest with Christianity, it is "loin deep"; and in still others, with centuries of Christian civilization upon them, the blessing is so great it is too deep to be measured. And so the prophecy of Ezekiel is being fulfilled.

"HE BROUGHT ME TO THE DOOR OF THE HOUSE AND BEHOLD WATERS ISSUED OUT"

Illustration and Application

Rivers are among the most useful and beautiful things that God has made, and their five uses picture the varied usefulness of Christianity as it flows through hearts and homes, and neighborhoods, and nations.

1. Christianity's Present River of Life, Provides Abundant Cleansing and Healing. It is the cleansing use of water that is pictured in baptism, which is a symbolic confession of, or prayer for, soul cleansing. The Jordan will be forever sacred as the river whose waters served as the symbol of Christ's purity, and of the soul cleansing through repentence of multitudes saved through John the Baptist. There is a beautiful illustration of cleansing the River Rhone, which enters Lake Leman near the Castle of Chillon, a muddy stream, but flows out at the other end blue and clear, a delight to eye and lip. Such is the contrast in many a life, "before and after" its coming to the "fountain opened for sin and uncleanness" at Calvary. Can you say:

The healing stream, I see, I see,
I plunge, and oh, it cleanses me.

Leslie's Magazine relates the following: "Perhaps the most remarkable illustrations of what can be done with simple means are furnished by the famous Mettei remedies, which made an extraordinary impression on the London public, a little more than ten years ago, and obtained so distinguished a champion as Mr. W. T. Stead, who visited Count Mattei in the romantic Italian castle, where he was supposed to guard his secrets. Three of his preparations, Elettricita Bianca (white electricity), Elettricita Verde (green electricity), and Elettricita Rossa (red electricity), were sent to a chemist for analysis. He suspended them in glass tubes to see if they were magnetic; made electrical experiments; tried them with litmus paper; took their specific gravity; used a microscope; applied every known test, but nothing happened. 'There is but one substance which possesses all the above qualities,' he finally reported. 'That is water. None of these fluids differ at all from water in any of their properties.' The remedies which essay to cure nearly every ill that flesh is heir to, and which hundreds of honest people were sure had benefited them, were, so far as the chemist could find out, only water—water, sold at $1.20 an ounce."

Water is indeed a great healer, as our "water cures" have proved, if faithfully applied, "internally and externally." In any case, the river of life will heal all that is wrong in our individual and social lives. Very little sorrow comes from things. It is mostly due to folks who are selfish and sinful. Were it not for "man's inhumanity to man," this world itself, even now, would be almost a heaven. Let us each heal so much of what is wrong as one true Christian life in ourselves can heal, flowing day by day as a river of blessing. All over the world men go to "springs" for healing. Every life may be such a healing spring.

2. Christianity's river of life satisfies the thirst of the soul for peace and joy. In Palestine we heard the proverb, "Wherever the Turk sets his foot no grass will grow." That pictures the universal blight of sin. In contrast we read in our lesson, of the river of Christianity, "Everything shall live whithersoever the river cometh." Of this the Nile is the most impressive illustration. Long ages ago all that we now call Egypt was a desert of barren sand lying under the burning sun. But the melting snows of the mountains far back in central Africa became a mighty river that slowly ploughed its way through the sand to the sea. Then each year the melting snows caused the Nile to overflow, and so covered the sand with the fertile mud brought by the river from far away, until at last the river made the most fertile land in the world. Seen from the top of the pyramids, Egypt is a narrow belt of green stretching about five miles back from the river on each side and broadening out like a fan in the yet more fertile delta. While at the seaside we behold an ocean of green breaking on a beach of sand, in Egypt we behold an ocean of sand breaking on a shore of green. "Everything shall live withersoever the river come That described the course of Christianity, flowing o the hills of God in the coming of Christ, through P tine, up into Syria, on into Asia Minor, through Eur over to America, thence in the missionary movemer the islands of the sea and to Africa and Asia—o streams flowing from Europe also. Everything gooc been quickened into life whithersoever this river of C tianity has come. A missionary about to leave Indi account of ill health, sat down with the native churc their last little communion service. In the centre sat pastor of the church, a man of middle caste. On his r were a Jew and a Mohammedan, on his left a Brah and an out-caste. As she watched the cup pass from Jew to the Mohammedan, and from the Brahmin to out-caste, she realized that she was looking upon modern miracles. And there were others no less rem able. In the front row sat a Brahmin lady, and next an out-caste leper woman whom the lady had been means of winning. Lower down sat another lady wh life had previously been almost all spent in the seclu of the purdah, now brought into the liberty and gladn of the children of God. Oppressed women and childr hopeless slaves, all the poor and weak, have found Gospel glad tidings indeed. "Thou shalt make th drink of the river of thy pleasures; with thee is the fountain of life." Stra that anyone should suppose that God s this "river of his pleasures" to lessen joys. Religion takes nothing away t would not in the long run take away fr life's gladness. It gives "peace like river"—not the peace of stagnation, of ever onward progress.

Rest is not quitting the busy career,
Rest is the fitting of self to one's sphere.
'Tis the brook's motion, clear without strife,
Fleeing to ocean after its life.
'Tis loving and serving the highest and best,
'Tis onward, unswerving and that is true rest.
JOHN SULLIVAN DWIGHT

Many years ago all who used the te phone in Chicago found that they co hear nothing but music. Every telepho in the city vibrated with musical not "What can it mean?" asked one in s prise. "How has it come about?" s another. "They say all the fire-alarms playing a tune," remarked a third. "T police telephone is musical like the rest added a fourth. This happened twent one years ago, and people were not well acquainted with telephones and tel graphs then as now, so the reason of t musical tones remained a mystery for fou and-twenty hours. Then it was discover that a wire, which carried music from agency to various houses, had become co nected with the main telephone wire. Ho the whole city would vibrate with joy every heart could get into touch wi Christ, not alone the churches and hom and schools, but the police and other cit departments and the board of trade! A any rate let us each do our part to be jo bringers, rivers of gladness wherever w go. Christ was pictured as like "river of water in a dry place." And such, in measure, every one who bears Christ name should be.

The bread that bringeth strength I want to give
The water pure that bids the thirsty live;
I want to help the fainting day by day;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give the oil of joy for tears,
The faith to conquer crowding doubts and fears,
Beauty for ashes may I give alway:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

3. Christianity's River of Life Supplies Power. Wha vast power our rivers furnish for manufactures, espec ially since we have learned to turn water-power int electric power, as when Niagara runs the trolleys of thre cities! Let us not forget that we need in Christian lif not only cleansing, healing and joy, but, most of all power. If our American river of Christianity, with it thirty millions of Church members was all turned t spiritual power, how speedily the other two-thirds would be transformed into Christians! Many of us have seen the great gorges and canyons that rivers have ploughed, often through the very rocks. The glacial rivers changed the very contour of continents. All this is but a symbol of the mighty changes that God's spirit makes in the lives of individuals and nations.

4. Christianity's River is for Beauty as well as Utility. Indeed, beauty is itself utility. Let us have beautiful churches, beautiful homes, and, above all, beautiful lives that shall manifest "the beauty of holiness."

5. Selfishness a Dead Sea that the River of Life may Transform. The most beautiful thing, and the most important in all Ezekiel's picture, is the transformation of the Sea of Death into a Sea of Life by the River of Life flowing in. Ah! many of us know just what that means, for we, too, have "passed from death unto life." "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

*International Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 10. The Life-giving Stream, Ezekiel 47: 1-12. Golden Text: "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Rev. 22: 17.

The Shadow of the Chimney

BY REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON

THE workmen had nearly finished the great chimney at the Packing Plant. It was 168 feet high, and the ornamental brick cornice at the top set off the round column of red as it rose wering coldly above the four-story buildings of the nt that covered some five acres of land in the bottoms.

Two men stood at the foot of the chimney looking up the rapidly finishing top. The elder of the two had e of those decisive, short, keen faces, which are iseled and hammered nowhere except in the comercial circles, where captains of industry are made, d often men of loftier standards, to begin with, are rred. The young man was not so easily described, cause his face belonged to that type of unknown ture possibilities, which might be determined either the loss of something, or by the kind of woman om he might marry.

"We'll be ready to fire up to-morrow, Allan," the der man said. "Then we'll show those Eastern felws a thing or two. It's a great plant, isn't it?"

His gaze swept around the high board fence ich surrounded the brick buildings, and inded, of necessity, because it was so near, a ct of land on which were about 300 shacks, ddled together in such a perfectly confused ation to one another, that every one of the acks faced a backyard, and every semblance a street was an alley, and every man's door ened into every other man's window. If the sons at the top of the chimney had made tle board houses as they had gone up with e shaft, covered the sides and roofs with old cans flattened out, and then dropped them casionally around the foot of the chimney, ting each little shack remain in whatever sition it happened to strike when it fell, the sult could not have been much more uncern and mournful.

"The air is something dreadful down here, ther," the younger man said, as he drew out fine handkerchief and wiped a soot spot off cheek.

"You're right, my boy. But we've got the w Ryan ventilators in the offices, and don't ed to open the windows summer or winter. e air is as fresh and fine as anywhere up on e heights. The test of it the other day was rfect."

Father and son were still standing close to e foot of the chimney when a man came out the engine house nearby. He hastily came to where the two men were standing and uched his greasy cap.

"Beg pardon, Mr. Carter, but I would advise u to stand back from the chimney. The icks fall off occasionally."

"Much obliged, Richards, I expect it would safer," Carter answered carelessly, walking with his son as he spoke. They paused to ok into the engine room a moment, then ntinued their walk until they entered the ard enclosure and disappeared.

The chimney was not yet enclosed by the nce, but stood towering up from its unrivaled sition surrounded by the shacks, most of which were ddled in a straggling bunch on one side, as if when e man at the top had dropped them, the prevailing nd had caught them and whirled them into a thicker nch on one side of the chimney than the other.

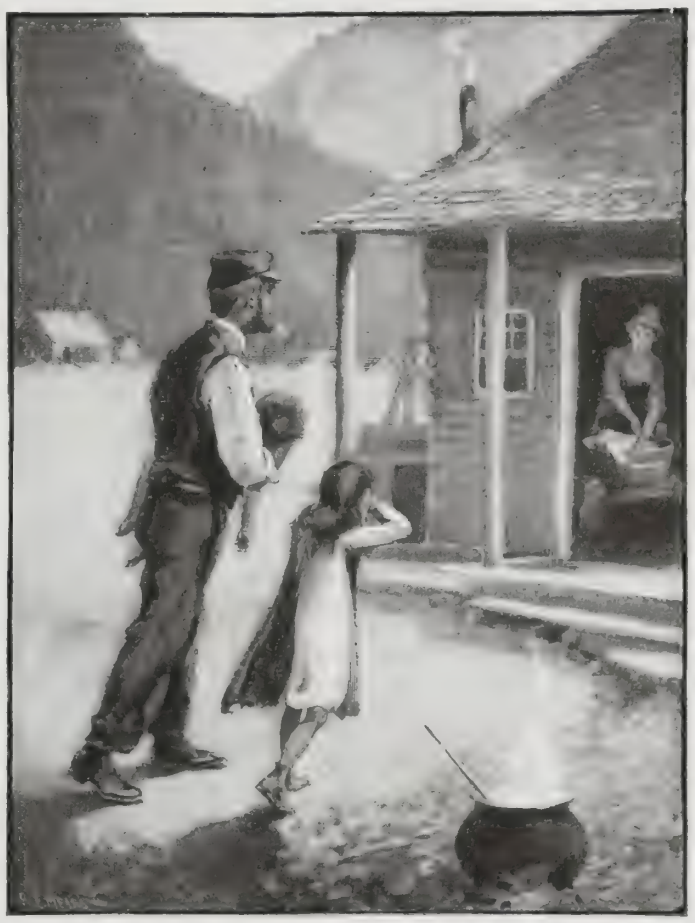
The base of the shaft was fifteen feet across. It was aced and strengthened by steel buttresses, which rmed a series of little open front rooms extending ear round the structure.

Out of one of the shacks close by, a little girl about x years old came pulling a two-wheeled cart, made t of an old baby carriage, joined to a wooden meat x. In this box sat a child eating a decayed apple, d from time to time throwing grimy handfuls of cinders d pebbles at the little girl who jerked the cart along itefully, until she reached the foot of the chimney.

Then she seemed to have an inspiration, suggested the great monster of brick which rose up so grim d high. Suddenly grasping the handle of the cart ith both hands, she used all her little strength, and re around the chimney with the cart, while the child the meat box dropped what was left of the apple, and clung to the sides of his vehicle, screaming, and uttering strange words mingled with oaths, that, coming from such a stunted, sickly-looking little creature, gave to the entire performance an air of demoniac reality.

On the second tour about the chimney one of the wheels of the cart struck one of the steel buttresses. The frail handle broke with a snap, and the cart turned over, throwing its occupant, who still clung to the edges of the box, into one of the recesses formed by the chimney braces.

At that moment, the man who had warned Carter and his son, emerged from the engine house, and with a curse yelled at the children. His yell was echoed by a faint halloo, that dropped from the top of the chimney. Two faces peered down from the height. Something fell down the shaft's smooth space, and when the engine man ran up he found the child under the wreck of the meat box, which had broken the force of the brick, else the little life had gone out to that power which knows why in the first place it was permitted to enter the world at all.



"HERE'S YOUR BOY, MRS. MAHON," THE ENGINE-MAN SAID

The engine man picked up the little form, its pallid, dirty lips now still from its unnatural curses, and gently enough, carried it over to the shack, the little sister following; terrified and crying loudly.

The mother was over a wash-tub, in the one and only room that made the house.

"Here's your boy, Mrs. Mahon," the engine man said, as he laid the child down on a cot. "He was playing around the chimney, and a brick fell on him." The woman straightened up slowly, and looked for a moment dumbly at the child. Then she turned on the little girl who was standing in the doorway.

"And didn't I tell you to keep Jimmy away from the chimney! Take that! And that!" She struck the child on the cheek with a wet, soapy hand, and the creature snapped at her something as a dog might have done, and then fell to screaming fiercely.

Paying no more attention to her, the woman suddenly ran over to the cot, and fell on her knees, wiping away dirt and blood from the boy's face.

The engine man turned, and faced a group of sullen, dirty faces staring in at the doorway.

"Run over to Mr. Markham's, some of you. Tell him to get Dr. Brady for an accident at Mrs. Mahon's." Several boys darted across the railroad tracks towards a long, narrow, unpainted building that looked like something between a grocery store and a public hall. In less than five minutes a young man appeared running up to the house.

The people in the doorway hastily moved out as he went in with a certain air of authority, and at once came up to the cot.

"He's not dead, Mr. Markham? Not dead, is he?"

"No, ma'am," Markham said after a brief examination, speaking slowly. "The doctor will be here soon. I sent one of the boys down to the infirmary." He busied himself deftly with the care of the wounds on the still unconscious body, until the doctor came. After he had arrived and made an examination, and all that could be done was done, the two men went away, the doctor leaving medicines and curt directions.

"Hard case, eh?" said the doctor to Markham as they picked their way around the puddles and garbage on the way back to the Mission through the smoke and gas-poisoned atmosphere. "No bones broken, but—"

He tapped his skull suggestively, and left Markham the impression that Jimmy Mahon would probably always be more or less deficient mentally as a result of the accident, and the two parted at the Mission doorway with that brief language of parting used by busy and absorbed men.

Markham went up stairs, and his wife, a cheerful-faced young woman, greeted him with questions, as she went on with her work of getting supper ready.

"Mrs. Mahon's boy Jimmy. Dr. Brady thinks his mind will be affected. He was playing under the chimney and a brick fell on him."

"Why haven't they kept the chimney inclosed?"

"I don't know. Richards thought the railroad people made some objections to a guardway. Mr. Carter is a large stockholder. It seems to me—"

Markham pulled up as if he feared to say too much.

"I'd better go over and see Mrs. Mahon," Mrs. Markham said.

"You might do her good," Markham said cheerfully as he turned to a pile of letters on a little desk. "I'll be looking over my mail while you're gone."

"If you will watch the biscuits, Chester?" she spoke somewhat doubtfully as she threw a shawl over her head and went to the door.

"I'll watch them," Markham replied, in an absent-minded manner as he opened the letter.

His wife smiled slightly, hesitated in the doorway, but finally went down the stairs.

The young man opened half a dozen letters and read them gravely. Then he picked up again the first one he had opened and read it over carefully. It was from the Superintendent of Missions, and read as follows.

"DEAR BROTHER MARKHAM: — Sorry to write that there is a likelihood of either being compelled to close up the Mission entirely after this year's work or reduce running expenses. I have been around among the churches a good deal and find many of the members are getting tired of supporting the work. They question its results, and think it is money doubtfully spent. J. R. Wellman, of Clearville, has withdrawn his pledge to the Mission in a letter to me, in which he says losses in business have made curtailment necessary. The same report comes to me from other sources. I would suggest that, under the condition, you go to Carter. He ought to make a handsome contribution to the Mission. Five hundred of his men in the plant will live in the neighborhood, and you can make the plea that whatever betters their condition will be a direct benefit to him. In any case I advise you calling on him, for the prospect is rather dark for help this year from the churches.

"Cordially yours, JAMES GRAY."

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

The Shadow of the Chimney

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 725

Young Markham thrust his legs under the little desk as he put the letter down and stretched his arms over his head.

"I'll do it!" he muttered decisively. "I'd sooner be operated on for most anything, but this work can't stop now. We are only just started. I wonder if Carter will do anything. He ought to give us $500. That boy of his Allan was in the freshman class as I was getting through the university. I rather took to him what little I saw. But he wasn't in my circle. I wonder now——" he went off into a reverie that was suddenly disturbed by a smell of burning something.

He pushed his chair back hastily and it fell over. A glance at the little cook stove brought him down to earth. A cloud of smoke was rolling out of the crack in the door. He rushed over and pulled the door open, reached in, and pulled out the biscuit pan. It was hot, and he dropped it. The black biscuits rolled out and scattered in various directions, and he was kneeling ruefully, sucking one of his burned fingers, just as his wife stepped into the room.

She laughed heartily at the sight, as he rose and began a lame apology.

"Say no more, King Alfred," she exclaimed. "Only, dear boy, you can have no biscuits for supper, and that was my main dish."

"Charcoal is good for digestion," he said humbly. "Honest, Clara, I forgot all about them. I'll use one of them for a paper weight. That will remind me." He put one of the blackest biscuits on the letters on his desk and faced his wife, who threw off her shawl and put something else on the table.

"Poor Mrs. Mahon! Melissa is a vixen of a child. Jimmy didn't know me. He was resting quietly. Mrs. Mahon's husband has not got back from the mines yet. What shall we do with him when he comes?"

"I don't know yet."

"The letters, Chester?" she inquired briefly; "any good news?"

"Yes, I think so. Gray writes he thinks it will be a good plan to see Carter. I'm going up to his house to-morrow. He ought to put down $500."

"Do you think he will?" she turned her earnest face towards her husband and he smiled courageously.

"I look for a thousand," he answered lightly.

"You were always sanguine, Chester!" she replied, smiling back at him. "Why not say $2,000?"

"Why not?" Just think what we might do with $2,000!"

"That would be too good to be true."

"Nothing is too good to be true!" said Markham cheerfully, as he finished his supper and went downstairs to light up for the evening classes of the Settlement.

* * *

The same evening that Jimmy Mahon met with the accident in the shadow of the chimney, Mr. J. R. Wellman of Clearville, came home to his supper in the beautifully furnished house which stood back from the main street of the town, encircled with its generous expanse of lawn and bordered with a noble row of white elms.

Mr. Wellman was a business man of very exact and methodical habits. His wife and children were in the habit of joking him about never changing his politics or his opinions. He was, however, exceedingly good-natured in the family circle, and popular with his fellow-citizens.

As he came downstairs and picked up the evening paper that Mrs. Wellman always put on the table in the library in a certain place, the oldest girl came into the room.

"Oh, father!" she exclaimed, going up to him, and placing her hands over the paper, so that he could not read, "Laura and I are invited to Mrs. Devrais' party next week, and Mildred Cheney wants us to make up the costumes for the characters. But we haven't the time to arrange them, and can't you send to Benito's for them? It will not cost so very much more than to make them up here. And Laura and I are so busy in school we do not see how we can attend to it."

"Why, I don't know," the father smiled at the pleasant face of the girl. "Do you know how much it will be?"

"Not over twenty-five dollars, I'm sure. Mrs. Devrais is such a finicky person, she will criticise it if it is cheap."

"Well, if it is not over twenty-five dollars I will pay it," the father said good-naturedly, and the girl kissed him, and went upstairs, calling to her sister: "Father says all right, Laura. Saves us the bother."

"I knew father would do it," was the answer.

"Do what?" asked a boy, who came out of his room into the upper hall.

"Father is going to give us twenty-five dollars for our charade costumes."

"Then I'm going to ask him to get me the spaniels," said the boy.

"The spaniels! Why, you have a whole menagerie out in the back yard now."

"I don't care, I want the spaniels, and I'm going to have them."

The boy went back into his room, and stayed there until the bell rang for supper. When the family assembled there were the two girls, Helen and Laura, and three boys —Henry, who was determined to have the spaniels, Walter and Donald, two younger boys, who were in the High School.

Mrs. Wellman was a plain-looking woman, but seemed to be making an effort to redeem the fact by a generous use of lace, and a somewhat over display of jewelry. She was proud of her husband and her children, and had never disagreed with a single opinion of her husband from the day they were married.

"Any callers to-day, Emily?" Mr. Wellman asked, after the soup had been served.

"Only Mr. Howard. He came to see you about the Bethany Mission. He said Mr. Gray had written him, asking him to see you about reconsidering your decision to discontinue your pledge to the Mission. He says Markham is doing noble work there, and that when Mr. Carter opens the new Packing Plant next week, it will draw a crowd of very needy people."

"Well, I don't see how I can give anything there this year. I have already pledged the Y.M.C.A., the W.C.T. U., the American Board, the new hospital association, and no end of things, to say nothing of current expenses for the church, and all that. It is just nothing but give, give, give all the time. There is a limit, and I have reached it with the mission work."

"We might do a little this year," Mrs. Wellman meekly suggested. It was the nearest she had ever come to expressing a contrary opinion.

"Mr. Howard must think he is a wonder if he can get pop to change his mind," spoke up Henry.

"He seems to think he can change God's mind," said Walter, the fourteen year old. "Anyway he prays long enough to make him tired. I don't see the use. Everybody is getting awfully sick of it."

"I wish he wouldn't wear that shining black coat into the pulpit. Everybody is tired of that," said Laura, and the boys laughed. Mr. Wellman rebuked them only slightly, by saying, "Perhaps he can't afford a new one very often."

"How much does Mr. Howard get, Pop?" asked Donald suddenly. Donald was specially good at figures and anything financial attracted his attention.

[TO BE CONCLUDED]

As to White "Castile" Soap.

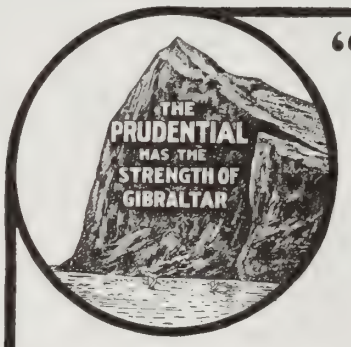
"White Castile Soap is preferable to all others"—Extract from a text-book on the care of infants.

Good advice! The only objection to it is, that it is not possible to comply with it.

Why? Because more than 95 per cent. of the "Castile Soap" sold in this country is not Castile Soap at all. There is not a drop of olive oil in it.

Ivory Soap is made of the best materials that money will buy. It will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin. Use it for every purpose for which only a pure soap should be used.

Ivory Soap
99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure



"In His Own Hand is The Mould of a Man's Fortune"

Especially is this true now, when he can, by means of Endowment Life Insurance, lay the Foundation of a Fortune by moderate yearly, half-yearly or quarterly Instalments. You should join the thousands who are doing it through

THE PRUDENTIAL
Insurance Co. of America
Incorporated as a Stock Company by the State of New Jersey

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President. Home Office: NEWARK, N. J.

Fill in this Coupon and send to
The Prudential
NEWARK, N. J.
Without committing myself to any action, I shall be glad to receive, free, particulars and rates of Endowment Policies.

For $_____
Name_____ Age____
Address_____
Occupation_____ Dept. 70

BIG INCOMES
$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK
for getting orders for our Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. For full particulars and Special Terms address at once Mr. P. B., care of
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289, 31-33 Vesey St., New York

GINSENG Detailed advice and special instructions regarding its culture. It will pay you to investigate our practical and common sense methods. We supply choicest American Roots and Seeds, at most reasonable prices, help you towards successful cultivation, and pay you highest market price for your Dry Roots. Send stamp for illustrated booklet "E."
NORTH AMERICAN GINSENG CO., Station C, Louisville, Ky.

ENUTSEAK, the Eskimo baby shown in the above picture, was successfully nourished at the World's Fair last summer through the use of Eskay's Food, and so were a number of babies in the Viscayan Village of the Philippine exhibit. In fact, babies of all nations and climes used it in the Children's Playground, where the popular food was Eskay's. The picture shows Enutseak at 11 months, when he weighed 32 pounds.

Babies fed on Eskay's Food are notably free from illness. It nourishes from the first feeding. Send postal to-day for a generous sample and book "How to Care for the Baby"—free on request.

SMITH, KLINE & FRENCH CO.
427 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Keep Cool

During the hot weather everyone wants ice cream. Don't bother with a troublesome recipe that makes work in the kitchen. Try JELL-O ICE CREAM Powder. Everything but the ice in the package. Simply add a quart of milk and freeze in the usual way. No heating, no cussing, no trouble. Makes about 2 quarts of delicious ice cream—pleases everybody.

Costs only 1c. a plate.

Gold Medal, Highest Award World's Fair, St. Louis, 1904. Approved by Pure Food Commissioners. 2 packages 25c. at grocers. If your grocer can't supply you, send his name and 25c. in stamps for two packages, enough for one gallon. Order to-day sure. Four kinds: Vanilla, Chocolate, Strawberry and Unflavored.

Send for beautifully illustrated recipe book, showing fifty ways of making ice cream.

The Genesee Pure Food Co., Le Roy, N. Y.
Visit our exhibit, Portland Exposition.

Learn to Knit

The new Columbia Book of Yarns (6th edition) is the best instructor in the world. No other knitting book goes into such detail and explains everything so clearly. 160 pages with illustrations of 106 beautiful and stylish articles. Worth $1, but you get it for 15 cents at dealers' or by mail. One of the most important things in knitting is to use fine, even, elastic yarn and we tell the advantages of using Columbia Yarns. Look for the Columbia trade-mark on the label around every skein.

Columbia Yarns, Philadelphia

TRAINING SCHOOL for CHRISTIAN WORKERS

Prepares women for Christian Work. The full course requires six months and includes Bible Study, English, Commercial, Nursing, and Domestic Science.

A Diploma will be given each person completing the full course and passing satisfactory examination.

POSITIONS GUARANTEED TO GRADUATES

Terms low and payments made easy. Only a limited number of students can be accommodated. Apply to Miss F. M. Gordon, National Florence Crittenton Mission, 218 Third St., N.W. Washington, D.C.

Rainy Days at Mont-Lawn

"WHAT do you do with the children on rainy days?" asked the visitor at Mont-Lawn of the kind superintendent who "mothers" all the boys and girls at the Home. "Such a big family to look after. I should think you would be at your wit's end how to amuse and keep them content in wet weather."

"Well, I must admit," said the little "Housemother," as she deftly bandaged a "stubbed toe" upon the foot of a little fellow who was smiling through his tears, as the kind hand put the finishing touch to the soft, white bandage; "I must admit it is a puzzle, and that both teachers and children give hearty welcome to the sun after a rainy day or two. We get the children into the chapel, tell them stories, draw pictures on the blackboard, and sing and sing, until we are tired, and the singers are hoarse. Some of the older children read to groups gathered about them; but they all grow very restless after a time. How I wish we could have a rainy day shelter—not an elaborate, costly building, but a floored and roofed space, where the children could play games, romp and shout to their heart's content.

"Of course," cautiously observed the visitor, "you cannot let him into the dormitories during the day time," while visions of what those spotless floors and beds would look like, after being romped over by the rainy-day "shut-ins," floated through her mind.

"No, that would not answer at all," rejoined the little woman, "and a wet-weather playroom would solve many difficulties for us."

The visitor, knowing how restless one or two children can be on a rainy day, even when provided with everything possible to interest and occupy them, multiplied this number by 100, and quite agreed with the "Housemother." Sometimes a number of the children will elude the utmost watchfulness of caretakers, and after running through the wet grass, with the perfectly natural abandon of children, they return, wet and bedraggled, to be in turn undressed and dry shod, while simple hot drinks are given them, to prevent their catching cold. The record for healthfulness among the little guests at Mont Lawn is marvelous. The little medicine closet, where are stored simple remedies for childish ailments—arnica liniment, etc.—plays a good part in keeping them well, and in healing scratches and bruises, incidental to all venturesome childhood out of doors. One little fellow about five years old, went out one wet day, and while making some investigations as to the whereabouts of a small turtle he had put under a bush the day before, Jackie sat down in a puddle, which proceeding did not at all improve the looks of his tiny "Buster Brown knickers." "Why Jackie, where have you been to get so wet? Just look at your pretty suit!" exclaimed his teacher when the boy came in. "Oh," replied the youngster, fertile in excuse, "that ain't wet, teacher, thath on'y thweat."

Another little story, told by Miss Collins, not apropos of rainy days, however, was about a cute little lisping girl, to whom fine raiment carried no significance. One of the teachers, who had been to New York one afternoon, returned to the Home too late to change her dress before waiting upon her charges at their evening meal. Going into the dining-tent, dressed in her pretty silk gown, with all its dainty accessories, she was not quite sure of recognition among the children. As she passed little Nellie, the child reached out a small and rather grimy hand, and catching the young lady's skirt, called out: "Nurth, Nurth, will you pleath mind my two thenth," (holding out two pennies with the other hand), "while I eat my thupper?"

A cheerful, happy place is Mont-Lawn, for, whether the day be dark or bright, the sunshine of love is ever present, and the ten days spent in this delightful spot, are by far the brightest in the whole lives of many of the tiny visitors. What effect this may have in shaping the after lives of the children cannot be computed. It is worth the effort, however, and costs little, $3 giving a boy or girl ten whole days of comfort and happiness. Send all contributions to Fresh-Air Fund, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Practical Christianity*

MANY people are puzzled by the apparent contradiction of Paul's doctrines, which James makes, in the passage associated with the topic. Paul writes: "A man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law." James asks incredulously, "Can faith save him?" Luther was so disgusted with the difficulty, that he called the Epistle of James, "A right strawy Epistle," and would have been glad to have it eliminated from the New Testament. But a little study of the two men and of the people to whom they wrote will show that there was no real difference of belief between them.

They were writing of different things. When Paul contended that faith was the essential element in salvation, he was describing a living, active faith that influenced a man's life, causing him to follow Christ and leading him to become Christ-like. All his writings show that Paul's conception of faith and his idea of its power in conduct, was of a vital principle, controlling, inspiring, stimulating and supporting a man in all he did. James was writing of a barren faith, that existed only in creed—a mere intellectual faith that produced no tangible results. Paul would have agreed with James, that such a faith was worthless. He probably would have refused to recognize it as faith. A man may condemn some system of fraud and yet make no effort to prevent it. He may be right in his theory and may despise the men who practice the fraud, yet neither by voice or vote do anything to show his abomination for it. Another man may protest against the fraud, oppose it by his vote, and denounce it at every opportunity. We know how that man stands, though we may have doubts about the other. He shows his faith by his works, as James says, and Paul would have approved him and condemned his silent brother.

There are some people who need the teaching of James, as there are others who need the teaching of Paul. In many communities may be found men of irreproachable lives. There is no lapse in their conduct, they refrain from sin, keep themselves respectable, and are fair-dealing citizens, good husbands and fathers. Negatively they are all that could be desired. But they are cold; they hold themselves aloof from humanity. No one in trouble would think of expecting help from them. No one would expect to find them fighting for righteousness in the front ranks. They are never at work for the rescue of the fallen, and they show no sympathy with Christian effort for the spread of the Gospel. One wonders whether they really have faith or not. To such men the teaching of James is necessary. Their faith is dead, being alone. As an infidel once said to a man of that class: "If I believed as you say you do, that the majority of my fellow-men were on their way to perdition, and I knew a way of rescuing them, I would work day and night to make it known."

There are other people who are active in good work, always ready to help in philanthropic efforts, good, kind, genial people of whom we say, would that they were Christians! Their lives are so careless, their indifference to religion so conspicuous, that we cannot but grieve over their state. Oh, that they knew Christ, that they belonged to his people, that they had faith in him and love for him! Such men need Paul's teaching. They should hear his warning that all their good deeds cannot save them, and that only through Christ can they inherit eternal life.

So Christianity presents its two sides in the writings of these two teachers, each consistent with the other. The world must see the good works, it must see Christianity not somnolent but active, sympathetic, benevolent, kind, patient, loving. That is what James admires. Then comes Paul, who says, the spring and source of these things is faith. Once get faith in the heart and you have these results in the life.

* Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union. for Sept. 10th. James 2 : 14–26.

THE BREAKFAST BELL

Every housewife knows it to be her duty to serve to her family foods which not only tempt the palate, but contain the maximum of healthful nutrition, but such foods are hard to find. ¶ In your home, as it is in hundreds of thousands of others, should be the prime attraction on the breakfast table—and at other meals. If you use it regularly you will find that the calls to meals are answered with more promptness and a keener zest. You will find that nearly everybody likes Shredded Wheat Biscuit and that it is the most healthful, strength-giving food you can serve. This is because it is made from the whole wheat berry, in which Nature has provided, in concentrated form, everything essential to sustain human life—everything necessary for building strong bones and teeth, as well as muscle, tissue and brain. Always serve as directed, with milk, cream, seasonable fruits and vegetables. ¶ Triscuit, the whole wheat cracker, takes the place of bread. It is best for toast and splendid with butter, cheese or preserves. ¶ Write us for "The Vital Question Cook Book."

Shredded Whole Wheat Biscuit

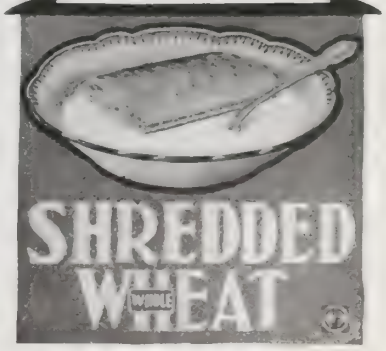
THE NATURAL FOOD COMPANY
Niagara Falls, N. Y.



JAP-A-LAC
REGISTERED TRADE MARK
"WEARS LIKE IRON"

Natural JAP-A-LAC is the best varnish for

HARDWOOD FLOORS

either old or new.

It dries with a beautiful luster, and retains its brilliancy through wear and tear right down to the wood.

Besides Natural, JAP-A-LAC comes in twelve colors. It is a stain and varnish combined, and rejuvenates everything about the home.

"You can do the work yourself."

Upon receipt of ten cents, to cover cost of mailing, and the name of your dealer, we will send, FREE OF CHARGE, to any point in the United States, a ½ pint can of JAP-A-LAC, together with interesting booklet and color card.

Ask your dealer or

THE Glidden VARNISH CO.
ADDRESS DEPT. C. D.
651 WILLIAMSON BLDG.
CLEVELAND, OHIO.

JAP-A-LAC YOUR FLOORS MAKES THEM SANITARY

The "Ocularscope" Free

Get Your Glasses at Wholesale

Examine your own eyes without an oculist. Send for our "Ocularscope," the latest invention of the 20th century. Sent Free, with our beautiful Illustrated Catalogue of spectacles and eye glasses. Mail order only. Send to-day.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS
402 Houseman Building, Grand Rapids, Mich.

INCOME OF 6% PER ANNUM ON SUMS OF $100 OR MORE, WITHDRAWABLE AFTER ONE YEAR.

SECURED by first mortgage on New York City improved real estate, and a guarantee fund of 10% of the face value of all mortgages in force.

This corporation is subject to examination by the Superintendent of Banks of the State of New York.

KNICKERBOCKER SAVINGS AND LOAN COMPANY
(Established 1883)
38 Park Row New York City

Agent's Outfit Free.—Rim Strainer, fits any pan. Agents make 3 to 5 dollars per day. Large catalogue new goods free. RICHARDSON MFG. CO. Dept. 6, BATH, N.Y.

ASTRONOMY OF THE BIBLE

By LEWIS SWIFT, F.R.A.S.C.

"AND Isaiah, the prophet, cried unto the Lord, and he brought the shadow ten degrees backward by which it had gone down in the dial of Ahaz." II. Kings 20 : 11.

This is another passage of Scripture which, owing to two mistranslations, has given rise to much discussion. It will not escape notice in reading the text, that I copy from King James' version. It is a very important and interesting passage, but the way we have it in this version, and partly so in the revised version, always awakens in one feelings of sadness. The aim I have in view is to convey to the reader what the inspired writer intended should be not vaguely but clearly interpreted. The revised version of the beautiful story is better, but far from perfect.

As clearly as possible, I will endeavor to harmonize the translations as I understand them. It seems that Hezekiah was taken ill, and the Lord said to Isaiah, go and tell Hezekiah to set his house in order, for he was about to die. In answer to his prayer, however, that he might recover, God quickly told Isaiah to go and tell him that he should live fifteen years. It seems that he was in doubt which statement to believe, if either, as they were exactly opposite, so he demanded some proof that God had actually told Isaiah that he should live fifteen years, which he, no doubt, strenuously asserted was true. To convince him, therefore, he said, Wilt thou have the shadow go forward or backward ten degrees? There is not in the original a word or hint about degrees. What did either of them know about circles being divided into degrees? All circles, whether the size of a finger ring, or of the circumference of the earth's orbit, are assumed to be divided into 360 equal divisions, called degrees, each degree into sixty minutes, and each minute into sixty seconds: equal 1,296,000 seconds.

The translators seeing that the shadow, not shadows, went back from east to west a certain distance, naturally concluded it to be measurable on some graduated instrument, so they, instead of translating it ten steps, which they should have done, called it ten degrees. The same word elsewhere in the Bible is translated steps, and the revised version has it steps.

Here the question arises how much is a step? Calling the length of steps made by an average-sized man two and one-half feet, ten steps would be about twenty-five feet; enough to convince Hezekiah that it was no optical illusion.*

I wish here to emphatically assert that Isaiah 38: 8, alluding to this miracle, is writing about one thing, the sun, and in his conversation with Hezekiah another—as unlike it as light is from darkness—the sun's shadow. The expression, "By which it had gone down," is not in the original, and, as here used, has no meaning. It is quoted from Isaiah, where it is used correctly, as applied to bringing the sun back, by which it had gone down. Hezekiah was not asked if he would have the shadow go forward or down, but backward.

The passage from Isaiah, "Brought the sun back by which it had gone down," shows that the miracle was performed near sunset.

Here another important question arises, By what process was the miracle performed? I answer, by refraction of the earth's atmosphere. The sun was apparently brought back, not really. Every night when the sun is entirely below the horizon, it is apparently by refraction of the intervening atmosphere lifted up 40 min. of arc, or 8 min. more than the apparent diameter of the sun's disk. This phenomenon, however, occurs every night, and has nothing to do with the miracle. A rod inserted diagonally in water appears bent at the surface, caused by the water refracting the light from the rod more than the air, being denser.

The miracle was performed by one of two processes, either by increasing a vast amount of air between Jerusalem and the sun, or, which is the more probable, by increasing the index of refraction, as it is called, thus making the same amount of air refract the more.

I have received a personal letter from a Hebrew scholar, saying, "In the original there is not a word or hint about a dial, and that the same word, in one place, translated degrees, should, in the other place, be rendered dial, is very strange." The correct translation, he says, should have been steps, or better yet, stairs of Ahaz.

The question constantly asked, What it was that cast the shadow? is by the correct rendering, answered. In my criticism of the translation, I wish to state emphatically, that not a semblance of disparagement is cast on the teachings of the Bible. I am vain enough to hope that the reader will coincide with the views presented, making the passage read, "And Isaiah, the prophet, cried unto the Lord, and he brought the shadow of the stairs of Ahaz ten steps backward," a rendering easily comprehended by a child.

Marathon, N. Y., 1905.

Ø

*The stairs were probably constructed, like King Alfred's candles, to tell the time. They might easily have been so, and then Professor Swift's explanation of the miracle is simple.

Plural Marriages To-day

From U. S. Senator Kearn's Speech, Feb, 28, 1905

It is known that there have been plural marriages among the Mormon people, by sanction of high authorities in this church monarchy, since the solemn promise was made to the country that plural marriages should end. It is well known that the plural marriage relations have been continued defiantly. The church monarch is known to be living in defiance of the laws of God and man, and in defiance of the covenant made with the country. I charge that every apostle is, in large part, responsible for this condition, so deplorable in its effects upon the people of Utah, and so antagonistic to the institutions of this country. Every apostle is directed by the law-breaking church monarch. Every apostle teaches by precept and example to the Mormon people, that this church monarch is a prophet of God, to offend or criticize whom, is a sin in the sight of the Almighty. Every apostle helps to appoint to office and sustain the seven presidents of seventies who are below them in dignity, and they are directly responsible for them and their method of life. It is quite evident that the church monarchy is endeavoring to re-establish the rule of a polygamous class over the mass of the Mormon people. Of the apostles not practicing polygamy, there are at most only three or four men.

For Convenience

always have a supply of Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk on hand. Suitable for all household purposes. For puddings, cake and all kinds of desserts. Send for Recipe Book, 108 Hudson Street, New York.

"Rest for the Weary"

If you are tired and want rest, or if you are just beginning to sit up after a long illness you will find

Dr. Day's Comfort Spring

is just what you need. The most perfect bed for all ordinary uses besides its distinctive feature, the Hinged Head and lifting device which permits any desired adjustment. It raises the entire body from the hips and supports it restfully at any angle. In this way there is perfect relaxation. A few moments so spent will rest and refresh one more than hours on a lounge or couch.

No slipping down as with pillows; breathing is full and natural. Asthmatic patients or others who cannot lie down, can sleep all night every night on a Comfort Spring. It is the only successful device for this purpose

It lifts easily. The weight of the body is balanced by springs. A child can lift a man. The mechanism is concealed. The bed when made up looks like any other, can be used flat like an ordinary spring.

Do you enjoy reading in bed? Get a Comfort Spring and learn what real comfort is.

Don't wait for sickness. Order now and enjoy the best bed you ever slept on. Should sickness come you will be prepared and will find the adjustable feature invaluable. Users say: "Worth its cost every day in case of sickness;" "I prize it more than any article in my home;" "A great comfort," etc. Endorsed by physicians and trained nurses.

Dr Day's Comfort SPRING

This Trade-mark on every Spring

Fits any bed. Costs about the same as any other good springs. Write for Catalog. Address

Comfort Spring Company, 455 Benton St., Joliet, Ill.

Does 5% Interest You?

If so, it will be to your advantage to write at once for particulars of the non-speculative investment offered by the

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO.

Let us show you the testimony of our patrons, prominent clergymen, professional and business men all over the country, some doubtless in your locality, to whom we are privileged to refer to you.

WE PAY 5% Per Year On Your Savings

which bear earnings for every day in our care. Your money is always subject to your control if required for other purposes. START NOW. Earnings begin as soon as your money is received, and are mailed you by check semi-annually, or compounded, if desired.

Our Patrons are Protected

by assets amounting to almost two million dollars. Our loans are made upon the best class of New York and Suburban Real Estate—to home-buyers who pay us interest and part of the principle each month, which is in turn reinvested. Our business, established 12 years, is conducted under New York Banking Department Supervision, by whom it is regularly examined. Write for full particulars and letters of endorsement.

INDUSTRIAL 5% PER ANNUM SAVINGS & LOAN CO.

Assets $1,750,000
Surplus and Profits, $150,000

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, N.Y.City

$20 to $50 WEEKLY made selling this NEW INVENTION, the STANDARD SELF-Filling Fountain PEN Cleaning

No ink dropper. No smeared fingers. No twisted rubber. No complication.

Fills Itself instantly at any ink-well, THIS WAY.

$178.90 earned in 32 days by retired business man in Ala.

$35.80 for a month's spare time by G. Jos. Lovett, of Mass.

$5.40 made in first two hours by Mrs. Mary M. Lennon, of Mich.

Our free lessons in successful salesmanship make experience unnecessary. We send all particulars and figures to prove above and other records; write to-day.

Energetic Agents and District Managers Wanted

Standard Pen Co., 706 Baker Bld., Toledo, O.

Wheel Chairs

We make a complete line of modern Rolling Chairs for adults and infants, and sell direct at WHOLESALE PRICES. 75 styles to select from. We pay freight and sell on

30 DAYS TRIAL.

Liberal discounts allowed to all sending for FREE Catalogue NOW.

GORDON MFG. CO. 526 Madison Ave., Toledo, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

The Art of Knitting and Crocheting continues its universal popularity. It is a pastime, which combines profit with pleasure. A machine cannot give a garment the distinctive elegance, as will the human fingers.

To produce satisfactory results, however, only the best yarns should be used. The "Fleisher" Yarns are the acknowledged standard of excellence—uniform, lofty, elastic—the colors bright and lasting. Your dealer should carry them.

If you use The "Fleisher" Yarns, you can be sure that the working will be a pleasure and the finished result satisfactory. A garment made of The "Fleisher" Yarns will stand the test of wear and wash.

Knitting Worsted	Germantown Zephyr
Dresden Saxony	Spanish Worsted
Shetland Floss	Ice Wool
Cashmere Yarn	Shetland Zephyr
Pamela Shetland	Spiral Yarn

Every skein bears the "FLEISHER" trade-mark ticket.

Free booklet, "A SHORT TALK ABOUT YARNS," mailed upon request.

"FLEISHER'S KNITTING AND CROCHETING MANUAL" mailed for four tickets from The "Fleisher" Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making all the new style and staple garments.

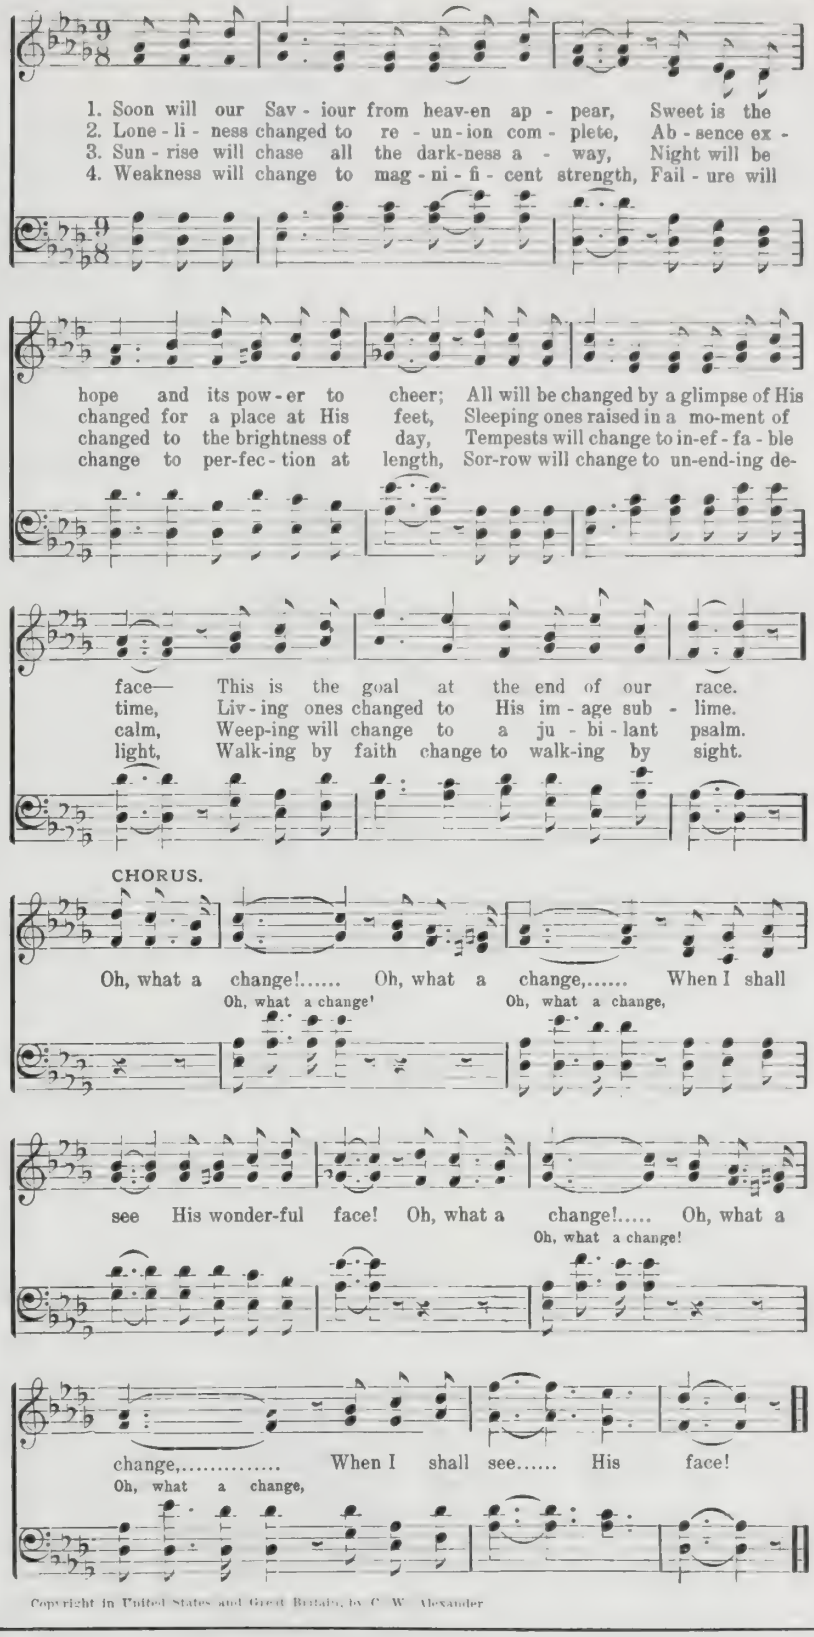
S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER
Department "B" PHILADELPHIA

OH, WHAT A CHANGE!

THE famous new revival song, which is now stirring vast audiences in Great Britain, and which Mr. C. W. Alexander, the singing Evangelist, is singing at Northfield. It is published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by Mr. Alexander's permission.

"We shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." 1 Cor. 15: 51-52

ADA R. HABERSHON ROBERT HARKNESS



1. Soon will our Sav - iour from heav-en ap - pear, Sweet is the
2. Lone - li - ness changed to re - un - ion com - plete, Ab - sence ex -
3. Sun - rise will chase all the dark-ness a - way, Night will be
4. Weakness will change to mag - ni - fi - cent strength, Fail - ure will hope and its pow - er to cheer; All will be changed by a glimpse of His changed for a place at His feet, Sleeping ones raised in a mo-ment of changed to the brightness of day, Tempests will change to in-ef - fa - ble change to per-fec - tion at length, Sor-row will change to un-end-ing deface— This is the goal at the end of our race.
time, Liv - ing ones changed to His im - age sub - lime.
calm, Weep-ing will change to a ju - bi - lant psalm.
light, Walk-ing by faith change to walk-ing by sight.
CHORUS.
Oh, what a change!..... Oh, what a change,..... When I shall Oh, what a change! Oh, what a change, see His wonder-ful face! Oh, what a change!..... Oh, what a change,..... When I shall see..... His face!
Oh, what a change!
Oh, what a change,

Copyright in United States and Great Britain, by C. W. Alexander

"THE PRISON-GATE"

LET us, like the "little mother,"
Show we are the prisoner's friend,
With the truly Christlike spirit,
Watching o'er them to the end.
Thankful that from home and kindred
We were never led astray;
Thankful for the love that held us
Closely to the better way.

As the gardener, in transplanting
Plants that need his tenderest care,
Guards them safely from the tempest—
From the noonday's scorching glare:
So these human plants, our brothers,
Need the nurture we can give,
That amid the best surroundings,
They may learn the way to live.

Taking up once more life's burdens,
Greeted by an outstretched hand,
Shielded from each fierce temptation,
They will gain the strength to stand.
Hope will kindle in each bosom
Visions of a nobler life,
Till their latent manhood rising,
Helps to conquer in the strife.

Let us greet them each as brothers,
They who seldom meet a smile,
Oft more sinned against than sinning—
Victims of surroundings vile.
They have had enough of heartache,
Lost and wounded, led astray;
Tell them of the Christ that's waiting,
Tell them of his love to-day.

What if one from our own household—
One we loved—had gone astray?
How our hearts would long to shield him—
Long to cheer his lonely way.
Shall we then refuse to aid them
Who were once some mother's pride!
God forbid that we should ever
"Pass by on the other side."

Pittsfield, Me. MRS. MARY B. WINGATE.

FALL SUITS

MADE TO ORDER. $6 to $25

Style Book and Samples sent Free.

Many of our customers will be wearing the new Fall styles before the local stores are even in a position to show them. That is one of several reasons why our Style Book and Samples are indispensable to every woman who wishes to dress fashionably and at moderate cost.

New Styles, reliable materials, perfect fit, superior workmanship, your order filled promptly, no worry, no trouble, and prices lower than ever before, are other reasons.

WE KEEP NO READY-MADE GARMENTS, BUT MAKE EVERYTHING TO ORDER

WE GUARANTEE TO FIT YOU IF WE FAIL TO DO SO. WE PROMPTLY REFUND YOUR MONEY

Our Style Book explains how we can fit you by mail, and illustrates:

VISITING COSTUMES	$6.00 to $20
TAILOR-MADE SUITS	$7.50 to $25
NEW FALL SKIRTS	$3.50 to $12
RAIN COATS	$9.75 to $20
JACKETS AND COATS	$5.75 to $25

We prepay express charges to any part of the U. S.

We Send FREE to any part of the United States our new Fall and Winter Style Book, showing the Latest New York Fashions, a large assortment of samples of the newest materials, and simple directions for taking measurements correctly. Write for them to-day. Kindly state whether you wish samples for a Suit, Skirt, Cloak or Rain coat, and about the colors you desire, and we will send a full line of exactly what you wish.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.
119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York
Mail Orders Only. No Agents or Branches Est. 17 Years

"Pianos have an expense of their own."

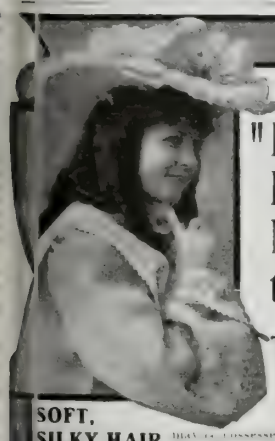
Over 83,000

Emerson

Pianos have been sold during the past fifty-five years. There must be a good reason. An instrument to give such universal satisfaction during more than half a century of public trial must have proven beyond question its pre-eminent merit on every point which goes to the asking of a great piano.

Write for our catalogue, which explains the splendid tone-quality, action and durability that account for this remarkable record; and our book describing our new Short Grand, pronounced by capable judges the most successful Short Grand produced in America.

Emerson Piano Company
117 Boylston Street, Boston — 167 Michigan Ave., Chicago



"It's the Hair—Not the Hat That makes a Woman Attractive"

SOFT, SILKY HAIR may be possessed by any person that will keep the hair and scalp clean, healthy, and free of Dandruff and Microbes.

Seven Sutherland Sisters'
Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner perform such missions, and perform them well. Letters of highest praise from four generations. Young misses starting now with these highly meritorious preparations will enjoy luxuriant hair all through life.

Sold by Dealers Everywhere

WOODBURY'S SOAP CREAM POWDER DENTAL CR FOR THE FACE

Reading the directions for using Woodbury's Facial Soap is the first step toward reading your title clear to a fair wholesome complexion.

Send 10 cts. for samples of all four preparations.

The Andrew Jergens Co., Sole Licensee, Cin. O

The new heat-imparting Thermalite Bag

"Successor to the Hot-Water Bag"

Gives an even, long-continued, comforting heat at just the right degree of temperature.

It Can be Always Ready, for it stores heat to use when wanted. You simply remove and replace the stopper as directed and the bag will become hot in a minute and stay hot for hours.

In a word, the Thermalite Bag is the Most Comforting Article that a Little Money Can Buy.

John Wanamaker says: "There will be a Thermalite Bag in every home in the land."

Made in five sizes $1.25 to $3.00. No. 2 (square size), $2.

Sold by all leading Druggists. Write for free descriptive book.

REMEMBER: Just as soon as you become acquainted with Thermalite Heat you will always want to use a hot water bag again.

THE THERMALITE COMPANY, 164 Elm St., New York City
26 St. James Street, Montreal

"WHEN I WAS A BOY!"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 723

boys thirty years ago than it does now. This may be because other educational influences are more general and more effective now than they were then.

At all times during my boyhood I was free to read any books that interested me. Being born in a Scottish family, Scott and Burns were among the first authors I knew, though Dickens impressed and influenced me more than any other writer before I was sixteen. I think it was in Oliver Optic that I found the hint that resulted in my setting up and printing a monthly periodical, which I published for three years, beginning at the age of thirteen, and in my later entrance upon newspaper work.

In my later boyhood, I was more profoundly guided by Emerson than by any other writer, Carlyle following in my affections. Balzac and Hugo interested me more than any other French writers. Goethe I did not read until I was over twenty. I once burned to translate Homer, but I was too busy reporting in the police courts to get very far with the task. Emerson sent me to Plato and to Swedenborg. The Greek pleased my Scottish argumentative sense, but I was much older before I could understand Emerson's interest in the author of the Arcana Celestia. Reading a book too soon is one of the most serious mishaps of a man's life. Perhaps there is also the calamity of reading a book too late. Blessed, then, is the man who chances upon a book when he needs it!

Brooklyn, N.Y. ALEXANDER BLACK.

. . .

As a Boy, He Greatly Appreciated the Classics

CHARLES F. THWING, PRESIDENT WESTERN RESERVE UNIVERSITY

THE first appreciation which I ever received of the value of a literary style was given me, I think, by my reading of Horace. Other causes than the reading of his Odes, of course, contributed to the result. But while I was reading his verses, and also, I think, in no small part because I was reading them, I found myself appreciating somewhat the worth of words and of phrases.

CHARLES F. THWING.
President Western Reserve University, Cleveland, O.

. . .

The Story of a Gallant Struggle Up the Literary Ladder

BY WILL N. HARBEN, AUTHOR OF "THE GEORGIANS," "THE SUBSTITUTE," ETC.

THE historical event of my boyhood that most impressed me was the Civil War, for, young as I was, I witnessed real fighting at Dalton, Ga. In the old brick homestead of my family, my elders dragged me, shivering in horror, to the chimney places, because there the walls were thicker and stronger and afforded better protection from stray shells.

One characteristic incident of the time stands out in horrible blackness in my memory. It was the sight of a negro hanging all day long from the bough of a tree in the principal churchyard. For weeks I saw that horror before my eyes night after night, going to bed in my big, lonely room with the covers over my head, and praying that I might not see it any more.

I think that the introduction of the kindergarten has rendered early advancement easier than it was thirty years ago. The high school I attended, left the pupils at liberty to choose any form of amusement they liked. Town-ball and baseball were indulged in, and also "sweepstakes" and "knucks"—the first a game of marbles on a straight line for "keeps," the other a game in which the skill depended on the ability to roll a marble into holes in the ground. No outdoor sports or athletics were taught, yet boys had quite as much of that kind of sport as was necessary.

Church attendance depended on the wish of parents. Nearly all boys attended some church, and Sunday Schools were kept alive by the annual spring picnic and the end of the year Christmas tree. Parents encouraged the reading of all classical novels of the time. I shall never forget how I loved the works of Dickens, Charles Reade, and the stories of Robinson Crusoe, Arabian Nights, and Swiss Family Robinson, nor how I lived the character of Jack Harkaway, applying all his practical jokes to my own school life.

I had always wanted to be a writer, but dared not hope to succeed. I engaged in several sorts of business enterprises, but did not think seriously of authorship till I was nearly thirty. I was led into it by making a translation of a short story from the German. It was published in a leading paper and I caught the "fever." Then followed about a dozen years of only moderate success, and I found myself in a rut. Then, by good chance, a publisher brought out a collection of my short Southern character sketches in book form. William Dean Howells read it, praised it warmly, and asked me if I could not furnish him with a novel in the same field for publication by the Harpers in their American Novel Series. I had a book ready, Westerfelt, which was written in London and Paris five years previously, but I had lost hope of ever finding a publisher for it. Mr. Howells accepted it. It was fairly successful and was followed by my first real success, Abner Daniel.

New York. WILL N. HARBEN.

. . .

Received His First Artistic Inspiration from a Blackboard Drawing

BY CHARLES AYER WHIPPLE, "THE PAINTER OF PRESIDENTS"

MY boyhood was passed in the country. I went to district schools where the boys and girls were taught together. I believe that the companionship of girls has a refining influence on the boys, and induces a spirit of gallantry and respect which would surely be lacking were they kept apart. Likewise, I think that for girls to associate with boys, gives them a better understanding of what is good and bad in them.

A characteristic incident of my school life was when one of the big boys (I was then only eight years old), drew some horses on the blackboard. At the sight of that drawing I received my first inspiration leading to an artistic career. I thought that if only I could make a horse as good as Tom West, I would be a second Michael Angelo right away. The first important portrait I painted of a public character, was that of General Nelson A. Miles, which is now in the West Point Military Academy. The next, and most important, was a full-length portrait of President McKinley in the White House. This was exhibited at the State Department of the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, where the President was assassinated.

How I came to choose art as a career, is best answered by saying that I am in it because I cannot stay out of it. I was not satisfied to pursue any other occupation. When I was only twelve years old I worked as a "printer's boy" in a country printing office, and I might say that if a boy cannot have all the advantages of a higher school education, the experience in a printing office is very beneficial.

Do the boys of to-day have better opportunities for early advancement? I think they do. Most of the successful men of to-day were poor boys who had not the advantages that are within reach of every boy to-day. These same men would undoubtedly have reached the position they now occupy much earlier in life had they had the advantages that boys now have.

New York. CHARLES AYER WHIPPLE.

Called Higher

Suddenly at Assonet, Mass., Mr. B. F. Aiken. Funeral services were held in the North Church at Assonet, the eulogy being delivered by Rev, J. W. Reynolds, from the text "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; they rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

There are hundreds of people in this land, and other lands, who will read with sad hearts that Dr. M. B. Gault is dead. For over a quarter of a century, to sanitarium-going people, he was a notable figure. For many years he was head physician in the Clifton Springs Sanitarium. From there he went to Western Pennsylvania, where he established the Markleton Sanitarium, with which institution he was actively connected for several years, giving it a name and standing among the first institutions of the kind in the United States. From there he retired to his farm, in Fayette County, Pa. He was born in Fayette County, Pa., April 2, 1836, of Scotch-Irish parentage.

PRESERVE THE COLORS and Freshness of Dainty and Delicate Summer Garments by regular use of Pearline
THINK OF THE DAMAGE
Bar Soap and Washboard do in a single wash—then remember that PEARLINE cleanses through SOAKING and Perfect RINSING —WITHOUT RUBBING.
Pearline saves colors and fabrics

NEW-SKIN
TRADE MARK REGISTERED WATERPROOF
LIQUID Court Plaster

Heals Cuts, Abrasions, Hang-Nails, Chapped and Split Lips or Fingers, Burns, Blisters, etc. Instantly Relieves Chilblains, Frosted Ears, Stings of Insects, Chafed or Blistered Feet, Callous Spots, etc., etc.

A coating on the sensitive parts will protect the feet from being chafed or blistered by new or heavy shoes.

Applied with a brush and immediately dries, forming a tough, transparent, colorless, waterproof coating.

Mechanics, Sportsmen, Bicyclists, Golfers, Etc. are all liable to bruise, scratch or scrape their skin. "NEW SKIN" will heal these injuries, WILL NOT WASH OFF, and after it is applied the injury is forgotten, as "NEW SKIN" makes a temporary new skin until the broken skin is healed under it.

	EACH
Pocket Size size of illustration	10c
Family Size	25c
2 oz. Bottles for Surgeons and Hospitals	50c

At the Druggists, or we will mail a package anywhere in the United States on receipt of price.

DOUGLAS MFG. CO.,
Dept. 33
96-102 Church St., N.Y.

"The Whole Thing in a Nutshell"

200 Eggs a Year Per Hen

How to get them.

The fifth edition of the book, "200 Eggs a Year Per Hen," is now ready. Revised, enlarged, and in part re-written. 96 pages. Contains among other things the method of feeding by which Mr. S. D. Fox, of Wolfboro, N. H., won the prize of $100 in gold offered by the manufacturers of a well-known condition powder for the best egg record during the winter months. Simple as a, b, c—and yet we guarantee it to start hens to laying earlier and to induce them to lay more eggs than any other method under the sun. The book also contains recipe for egg food and tonic used by Mr. Fox, which brought him in one winter day 68 eggs from 72 hens; and for five days in succession from the same flock 64 eggs a day. Mr. E. F. Chamberlain, of Wolfboro, N. H., says: "By following the methods outlined in your book I obtained 1,496 eggs from 91 R. I. Reds in the month of January, 1902. From 14 pullets picked at random out of a farmer's flock the author got 2,999 eggs in one year—an average of over 214 eggs apiece. It has been my ambition in writing "200 Eggs a Year Per Hen" to make it the standard book on egg production and profits in poultry. Tells all there is to know, and tells it in a plain, common-sense way. Price, 50 cents, or with a year's subscription, 60 cents; or given as a premium for four yearly subscriptions to the American Poultry Advocate at 25 cents each.

Our Paper is handsomely illustrated, 40 to 80 pages, 25 cents per year. 4 months' trial, 10 cents. SAMPLE FREE. CATALOGUE of poultry books free.

AMERICAN POULTRY ADVOCATE
34 Hogan Block, Syracuse, N. Y.

Thousands of Dollars

have been wasted in Marble headstones now lying flat and overgrown with weeds. Thousands more are being wasted for cleaning, refinishing and repairing Granite monuments. Every stone gets moss-grown, cracks and crumbles.

White Bronze

is good for all time. Moss-growth, cracking and crumbling are impossible.

GOLD AND SILVER MEDALS at the Universal Exposition, St. Louis, 1904.

If interested give approximate sum you can spend and we will send a variety of

Beautiful Designs,

prices and full information. No obligation to buy. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

AGENTS WANTED

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

"Pillar'd around by everlasting hills,
Robed in the drapery of descending floods."

NIAGARA FALLS

One of the natural wonders of the world. A charming place at any season of the year, reached from every direction by the

NEW YORK CENTRAL LINES

A visit to the Falls is an object lesson in Geography; an exhibition of landscapes that no painter can equal, and a glimpse of the latest devolopments of the industrial world.

A copy of Four-Track Series No. 9, "Two Days at Niagara Falls," will be sent free, upon receipt of a two-cent stamp, by George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent, Grand Central Station, New York.

Loftis System
Diamonds On Credit

A Diamond is a shrewd investment to-day. Buy a Diamond on credit now. Diamonds win hearts. Write for our Catalog, 1000 illustrations. Select your Diamond. We will send it for examination. One-fifth the price to be paid when you receive the article. Balance in eight equal monthly payments.

The Old Reliable Original Diamond on Credit House

LOFTIS BROS & CO. EST'D 1858

DIAMOND CUTTERS
Watchmakers, Jewelers.
Dept. H 95, 98 to 98 State St.
CHICAGO, ILL. U.S.A.

No Money Required

until you receive and approve of your bicycle. We ship to anyone on

TEN DAYS FREE TRIAL

Finest guaranteed 1905 Models $10 to $24 with Coaster-Brakes & Puncturless Tires.

1903 & 1904 Models of Best Makes..... $7 to $12

500 Second-Hand Wheels All makes & Models good as new $3 to $8

GREAT FACTORY CLEARING SALE.

RIDER AGENTS WANTED in each town at good pay. Write at once for catalog and Special Offer.

TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H 71 CHICAGO

MELLIN'S
For the Baby
FOOD

A babe in the house is a well-spring of pleasure" if he is properly fed and well nourished, then he is happy and everybody is happy."

Your baby will be healthy and happy and a well-spring of pleasure, if you will give him Mellin's Food.

Sample bottle sent free of charge.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Send us your money and get 5% interest on it. We have been established 11 years, and every dollar you send us earns compounded semi-annually, from the time your deposit reaches us until the money is withdrawn.

5% interest

We invest your money for you—loan it on improved real estate. No risk or speculation. The security is gilt-edged and grows larger all the time—the borrower pays us back part of the principal every month in addition to the interest, and this money is immediately reinvested.

You can deposit as often as you want, and you can withdraw money at any time without advance notice.

Write for free booklet which tells our whole story.

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
Dept. E, Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

COILED SPRING

FENCE

That is Horse High, Bull Strong, Pig-chicken tight.

SOLD DIRECT TO YOU

At less than dealers' price and we pay the Freight.

Our Catalogue tells how Wire is made, how Wire is galvanized,—why some is good and some bad. You should have this information. Write for Catalogue.

KITSELMAN BROTHERS,
Box 297, Muncie Indiana.

Stewart Hartshorn

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label.

Wood Rollers. Tin Rollers.

LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches. Address

COILED SPRING FENCE CO.
Box D Winchester, Ind.

STATE MANAGERS WANTED

By an established Ohio corporation; good salary, office expenses and commissions paid to men of character and ability. References required and give address, MANAGER, 176 Ontario Bld'g, Toledo, Ohio.

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Beklns Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St., Chicago

ARE YOU DEAF?

We have 25 kinds of Instruments to Assist Hearing. Sent on approval. Write for Catalogue.
M. C. WILLIS & CO., 134 S. 11th St., Philadelphia

MUSIC LESSONS Send for our booklet, it is FREE tells how to learn to play any instrument. Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, etc. Write American School of Music, 319 Manhattan Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

200 NEW SONGS IN YOUNG PEOPLE'S SONGS OF PRAISE
30 cents per copy, by mail; $25.00 per hundred.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.—Chicago-New York

LIVING WATER

By Mrs. M. Baxter

ABOUT two centuries before Ezekiel prophesied, the prophet Joel had foretold that in the last days when God shall judge the nations, and bring again his people Israel, "a fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord" (Joel 3: 18). Zechariah, writing some two hundred and fifty years later, speaking of the same time, says, "And it shall come to pass in that day that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the Eastern Sea [i.e., the Dead Sea], and half of them toward the Western Sea [the Mediterranean]; in summer and in winter shall it be" (Zech. 14: 8). This stream, unlike the ordinary river in hot countries, shall not run dry, or nearly so, in the hot seasons; it will be perennial. David, speaking of the time when God shall dwell in Zion, says, "There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High" (Ps. 46: 4), "the river of thy pleasures" (Ps. 36: 8). And Isaiah, speaking also of Zion, the city of our future joy, when the King shall be seen in his beauty, adds, "But then the Lord shall be with us in majesty, but in the place of broad rivers and streams there shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby" (Isa. 33: 20, 21 R. V. marg.) That river shall be for life, and not for commerce.

The present state of Palestine, with its stony, unproductive wastes, is a picture of the spiritual state of the Jews as a nation, and equally of the spiritual state of many professing Christians. Such a river as is described in these Scriptures would be the great remedy for Palestine's barrenness. Such an outpouring of the Holy Spirit as these passages typify is the only remedy for the spiritual death and barrenness of the Jewish people, and of the professing Christian Church.

Ezekiel who was brought "in the visions of God" into the land of Israel when the hand of Jehovah was upon him (Ezek. 40: 1-3) was shown by "a man whose appearance was like the appearance of brass," and who never is called an angel, the future temple which shall exist in the Millennium. "Afterward (Ezek. 47: 1) he brought me again unto the door of the house; and behold waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward: for the forefront of the house was toward the east, and the waters came down from under from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar. Then brought he me out of the way of the gate northward, and led me about the way without unto the outer gate, by the way that looketh eastward; and behold there ran out waters on the right side." The flow of the waters would be eastward.

Ezekiel could not forget how the glory of the Lord had departed from off the threshold of the house, and mounted up from the earth in his sight, when the cherubim which bore the glory stood "at the door of the east gate of the Lord's house," and then later went up from the midst of the city, and stood upon the mountain which is on the east side of the city (Ezek. 10: 18, 19; 11: 23), and he knew that the presence of God—the holy Shekinah—was no more with his ancient people. And he could not forget how in his vision of the rebuilt temple God had shown him after his vision of the repentance of Israel (Ezek. 36), and God's cleansing of his people, how (Ezek. 43: 1-6) he had seen the glory of the Lord return "from the way of the east," the very quarter where he had seen that glory departing, and he saw him whose glory it was, and "he fell upon his face" in intense worship. And now he saw waters issuing from the very gate where the glory of the Lord had reentered! Is not this a lesson for us? It is the right of everyone that is born of the Spirit, that the presence of the Lord should be with him and in him.

"How Money Grows"

IS the title of my FREE BOOK, which tells:

How to Invest Small Sums.
How to Tell a Good Investment.
How You Can Convert $100 into $358.83
How to Choose Between Real Estate and Stocks.
How Savings Banks Make Their Money.
How to Choose Your Partners.
How to Guard Against Uncertain "Prospects."
How to Protect Yourself in Case You Should Not Care to Hold an Investment Indefinitely, etc.

It tells a hundred and one other things you will be interested in knowing.

This book is not an advertisement of any particular investment. It is a talk on investments in general, and is based on my personal experience and observation.

I will send my book FREE to any address. I want to place a copy in the hands of every man and woman in America. I want it to be the most widely circulated book that has ever been published.

I want YOU to send for a copy.

You will find it a veritable guide-book to safe and profitable investments of all kinds.

If you are now investing small sums ($10 a month and up), my book will show you how to invest them wisely, so that your money will work directly for you.

Most everyone could and should save at least $10 a month from their income.

Sit right down and write me a postal, saying simply: "Send How Money Grows. I will send you the book by return mail.

W. M. OSTRANDER, Inc.
161 North American Building, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

25 designs, all steel. Handsome, durable.—Cheaper than a wood fence. Special inducements to church and cemeteries. Catalogue free.

KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO., 445 North St. Kokomo, Indiana.

The "Best" Light

is a portable 100 candle power light costing only 2 cts. per week. Makes and burns its own gas. Brighter than electricity or acetylene and cheaper than Kerosene. No Dirt. No Grease. No Odor. Over 100 sizes. Lighted instantly with a match. Every lamp warranted. Agents Wanted Everywhere.

THE "BEST" LIGHT CO.
3—70 E. 5th Street, CANTON, OHIO.

STARK FRUIT BOOK

shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.

We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's Louisiana, Mo

NEWTON'S Heave Cough Distemper and Indigestion Remedy

THE NEWTON REMEDY CO.

When Hamlet Exclaimed "Aye, there's the rub!" could he have referred to

SAPOLIO

Go to any church you like – – but there's only one breakfast

Quaker Oats

Good enough to eat on Sunday. Too good not to eat all the week

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 6, 1905

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

VOL. 28—NO. 36. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

Our Fresh-Air Waifs Enjoying a Band Concert at Beautiful Mont-Lawn

OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

Reader, Essex Junction, Vt. I am inclined to doubt that Robinson Crusoe is not a good book for young people. I would like the editor's idea about it.

Defoe's famous work has stood as a juvenile classic so long, that it would be a difficult task to displace it now. We do not consider it objectionable, in any ordinary sense. It has been greatly praised for its literary style; there is a charm about it for young minds such as few other books possess, and its influence is not debasing or immoral, as is the case with too many modern works of fiction.

R. N. T., Dalhousie, Canada. Is there any passage which says that a person goes to heaven or hell immediately after death?

There is no passage that asserts it explicitly. There are, however, passages from which the inference is made. One of these is the assurance of Christ to the dying thief on the cross (Luke 23: 43) "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Another is the Parable of the Rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16: 19-31), in which Dives is represented as being in torment and Lazarus in Abraham's bosom, while the five brothers of Dives were still alive on the earth. A third passage is Philippians 1: 23, in which Paul says he desires to depart and be with Christ, implying that his death would give him that felicity, but he prefers to abide in the flesh because he can do good in the world. From these passages and a few others the deduction is made that there is no interval between death and the eternal state; but some eminent Christians now and in past times have thought that there is an interval long or short, and some that it lasts till the resurrection.

E. A. J., Petersburg, Va. What is the limit of subsidiary coin as legal tender?

United States Treasury Department Circular No. 72, says: "Subsidiary silver is legal tender for amounts not exceeding $10 in any one payment."

J. D. G., Centralnee, Me. 1. What is the meaning of the word "symposium," as used in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD about Sunday Recreation? Webster defines it as "drinking to merry making." 2. Why did Jesus make water into wine, and would not change stone into bread when he was "an hungered"? 3. Is the washing of the feet (as taught in John 13, 14, 15), not just as much a command as Baptism? Is it practiced by any denomination?

1. "Symposium," in the modern acceptation, is an intellectual feast. Even in ancient days, the symposium was the conversation that followed the banquet, and not the banquet itself. 2. Jesus turned water into wine to relieve the embarrassment of his host. It was service to others—an act of kindness distinctly in accord with his nature. The suggestion to turn the stone into bread came from Satan, and Christ recognized it as a temptation to show his lack of faith in his Father's care. 3. Foot-washing is practiced by the Dunkards and others. If people were accustomed to going about barefoot, or with sandals, the service would still be appropriate. Christ simply meant that no service was to be regarded as too menial for one Christian to render to another.

Mrs. C. V. V., Long Branch, N. J. In what part of the old country was Martin Luther buried?

The body of Luther was interred at Wittenberg, in front of the pulpit of the Castle Church.

G. W. G., Scranton, Pa. 1. When did the Greek Church separate from the Church of Rome? 2. In what does it differ from the Romish Church?

1. The Greek Church was the source of the Western Church. The Scriptures were written in Greek and the early services were conducted in that language. But when Christianity was introduced into Rome and extended through the Roman Empire, the Western Church grew in importance. When the Roman Empire fell into decadence, the Eastern Church drifted into separate ecclesiastical government corresponding with the civil. The final separation may be marked by the establishment of the Patriarchate of Jerusalem in A.D. 451. 2. The first strongly marked difference was the Filiogue controversy. The Western Church held that the Holy Spirit proceeded from the Father and the Son; the Eastern, that he proceeded from the Father only. Besides this, the Greek Church rejects the authority of the Pope; permits wine to be given to the laity in the Communion, and allows priests to marry.

Canadian, Baltimore, writes:

In answer to J. O. Martin, I would say: We Canadians have but one national anthem, "God Save the King," but our Colonial song, which is also sung at all important gatherings as well as the national anthem, is "The Maple Leaf Forever," and can be obtained from the T. Eaton Co., Toronto, Canada.

Mrs. C. H. B., Hudson, Mass. If Commander Peary succeeds in reaching the North Pole, of what great benefit will the discovery be to the world?

In a commercial sense, probably none; but in a scientific sense, it will be a distinct triumph, and may add greatly to the world's stock of information in many ways.

Reader, Mendota, Ill. Would it not have been better for Russia and Japan to have fought until one or the other was forced to sue for peace? Is there not danger that a peace at this time will be but a truce?

We cannot agree with you on either point. In this late age, to permit two powerful antagonists to go on destroying hundreds of thousands of human lives, when the useless and sickening slaughter could be stopped by any kind of intervention, would be a frightful crime against humanity. Violence settles no principle; it only asserts the superior power of one brute force against another; whereas arbitration, or the calm and deliberate consideration of the question at issue by some authoritative tribunal, would result in some adjustment that ought to be satisfactory to both, being based on the principles of law and equity.

KNABENSHUE'S AIR-SHIP BEGINNING ITS FLIGHT OVER NEW YORK CITY

One of the most successful experiments in aerial navigation took place recently in New York City. The airship used was a long, cigar shaped balloon, from which hung the propelling engine, steering-gear and operator's seat. A. Roy Knabenshue, who has made himself famous as an intrepid aeronaut, made the ascent. Business was practically suspended in the city for a time. Great crowds of people blocked the streets, and roofs of the "sky-scrapers" swarmed with spectators, who watched with breathless interest the flight of the strange machine as it rose from Central Park to a height of five thousand feet. At that point it was just visible to the eye, and had the appearance of a small, white bird. The "ship" came southward, circling, rising, falling, at the will of its helmsman. About two miles from Central Park it made a wide sweep and headed back, and half an hour after starting settled into its place at Sixty-second Street. Mr. Knabenshue said that although there was a stiff breeze blowing several hundred feet above the city, he had been able to cross and sail against it. At one time he could see up the Hudson and far out beyond Sandy Hook.

Lottie D., Los Angeles, Calif. Who was the author of the poem or hymn: "I would not live alway, I ask not to stay"?

William Augustus Muhlenberg. He was at one time rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, of New York, at the same time giving largely of his time to educational work, and in trying to benefit the poor. He was born in Philadelphia in 1796, and died in New York in 1877.

Miss Sarah N. Murphy, of Mt. Vernon, O., sends us an account of a recent notable gathering in honor of the ninety-seventh birthday of her father, Mr. Elias Murphy, many years a reader of this paper. The celebration took the form of a home Sabbath service and communion, followed by a general reception and congratulations. Rev. E. O. Mead was the preacher. The centenarian is a fine example of the aged Christian, hale and hearty, with all his faculties well preserved, and surrounded by many loving friends.

Mrs. W. H. L., St. Stephens, S. C., writes:

Please find $1.50 for the Bowery Mission. Use this small amount for the Mission, and may God help you in your undertakings.

H. S., Cincinnati, O. What was the nationality of Captain Kidd, where was his home, and why did he beome a pirate?

William Kidd was a Scotchman, and it is said that he was born in Greenock, near Glasgow. He was given the command of a ship fitted out by a private company, and was ordered to proceed against the Madagascar pirates. In 1697, it is claimed that he was forced into piracy by a mutinous crew. There are several other reasons given by historians. He went later t Boston, New England, where he was ar rested on the charge of piracy. He wa tried in England, and executed in 1701 He buried treasure in many places, bu only that at Gardners Island, N. Y., ha ever been recovered.

Ella C. M. Sewickley, Pa. Quoting from your editorial column of Aug. 2, 1905, from the subject "Smoot Must Go," the sentence, "Utah having violated the solemn contract on which Statehood was granted, does not deserve to b treated as a sovereign American commonwealth," I want to ask, why Utah canno have its Statehood taken from it, and it b made a Territory again?

To do so would be unjust to the people of Utah, who, as a whole, are loyal to the United States and heartily in favor o obedience to law. It is only the violators who should be punished.

N. M. R., Somerville, Mass. Why and when was the title "Reverend," first used?

It is a title of courtesy, prefixed to the name of a clergyman. In the Church of England, the Protestant Episcopal, and the Catholic Churches, the title is applied to ecclesiastics of the second and third orders. An archbishop is "Most Reverend"; a bishop, "Right Reverend"; a dean, "The Very Reverend"; and archdeacon, "The Venerable," and all the rest of the clergy, "The Reverend." These titles are probably not older than the sixth century.

Miscellaneous

M. D., Okay, Ark. The passage quoted is not in the Bible.

Subscriber, Danville, Ky. Cannot give up space to the subject, which is a large one.

M. T. C., Liberty, Pa. We have been unable to ascertain the facts you ask for.

Clara McQ., Nogo, Mo. We suppose you refer to Miss Helen Gould. She is still active in Christian work.

Julia C. B., Rhonesbro', Tex. We have not heard of the circumstance you mention and do not believe it is true.

E. E. B., Lingo, Mo. You have the record in the New Testament and we have no other information. You must form your own opinion.

Reader. We believe that it can be successfully maintained that the death penalty is contrary to God's laws, and to the Bible, and opposed to the spirit of Christianity.

N. H. A. Hartford, Conn. It is a case for the church session or the courts, and not for the columns of a family paper. Personally, it need not interfere with your participation in the services.

F. K. S., McL., N. Dak. Such a one has seemingly mistaken his vocation. He may be a capable and entertaining lecturer. He certainly is not an evangelist in the proper sense of the term.

W. C. B. informs us, in regard to a recent question asking the names of the presidents of the South American republics, that President Candamo died in office, and was succeeded by Dr. Jose Pardo last fall.

Mrs. E. B. G., East Syracuse, N. Y. You should ascertain whether you are not entitled, under the law, to certain privileges with respect to things intended for personal use. If at all in doubt, make it a case of conscience, and pay.

Arkansas Reader, Pine Bluff, Ark. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has many times expressed its views on the modern dance, and need not repeat them here. Read the booklet on Ecclesiastical Amusements, A. W. Hall, Syracuse, N. Y., pubr., 25 c.

Lulu L., Braymer, Mo. There are many things "lawful, yet not expedient," and so there are many things one may do without actual sin, but which are not by any means advisable. These must be decided by the individual conscience, since there is no law on the subject. It is a good rule to avoid doing a thing concerning the wisdom or propriety or healthfulness of which you have any serious doubts.

Visitors from Bulgaria

Rev. Tzvetko S. Bagranoff, of Bulgaria, a graduate of the Auburn Theological Seminary, N. Y., and a minister of the Gospel in Bulgaria, is now in this country with his wife, Nevenka S. Bagranoff, also of Bulgaria, a graduate of the American College for Girls at Constantinople. They have come to the United states for a year's preparation for more useful Christian work in their own land. They will accept engagements to speak in churches and at Y. M. C. A., C. E., E. L., and other meetings, Sunday Schools, etc. Their addresses will be found more than usually interesting, and Mrs. Bagranoff will sing. Subjects of addresses: "The Wonderful Progress of Bulgaria;" "Missionary Efforts in Bulgaria and Macedonia;" "The Strife between the Greek and Protestant Churches," and "The Present Social Strife in Bulgaria." Letters may be addressed to Mr. Bagranoff, care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 6, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

ENTRANCE TO MISSION SCHOOL

SOME OF THE NATIVES WHO COME TO THE MEDICAL MISSION

A MISSIONARY'S HOUSE IN LEH

TIBET'S QUAINT PEOPLE AT HOME

WILL you come with me for a walk through Leh, and see what the Moravian Mission is doing there? The Mission houses, at present four in number, are small, one-storied, ıitewashed buildings in a compound at the west of the wn, sufficiently far outside to get fresh air and trees, ıt so close to the town that less than a minute's walk kes one into the streets. In these four houses dwell, ıen the staff is complete, the two clerical missionaries, ıd the medical missionary and their wives; besides o single ladies for zenana and nursing work. Unfornately, of late years, the staff has often been far from mplete, and one or more houses have been vacant. sides these houses is another, ıich contains library, printing om (for we have a lithographic ess on which we print tracts, hoolbooks, and even a monthly betan paper), and various store oms. Adjoining the Mission emises are the compound, conining the bungalow of the ritish Commissioner, and the avelers' "Rest House."

Now it is 8 A.M., we have had eakfast, so leaving the Mission mpound, we go towards the wn. The first building of the wn proper is the British Charible Dispensary, which belongs the British Government, but worked by the Moravian Medil Mission. The Mission receives pay for this work, only a small ant for the upkeep of the place ıd some medicines. By far the eater part of the expenses of ıe medical work, including all laries, falls on the Mission. ere, morning by morning, at ght o'clock in summer and ten winter, a little crowd of sick lk gather in the veranda. Before ork commences, we bring out a picture dealing with ıe life or words of Christ, and explain it to the people, ointing out its application to their own circumstances, nd trying to show them in Christ the one way of salation. Some look interested and nod approval at mes; others are critical; some simply look bored, and ne old lady tries to retail the latest piece of gossip to er neighbor until she is stopped. To several patients, ur Ladaki address is as much in a foreign tongue as an nglish sermon would be, and they understand nothing f what is said. But after the address we have a rayer, and most of those present understand at least hat is being done, and at the end, perhaps, one or two ill add "Amen."

Then to work. Our assistants are one of the zenana adies from the Mission, and a Ladaki Buddhist, who is resser, interpreter, and general right-hand man at the hospital. The patients have much the same ailments that may be seen in the out-patient room in any hospital at home—coughs and colds, wounds and bruises, fever, sickness and pains. The diseases are common enough, but how many different types and nationalities! Ladakis, of course, but also merchants from India and Kashmir; Tibetans from the Lhasa district; merchants from Yarkand, and pilgrims returning from Mecca to their homes in Turkistan, with perhaps two or three months' journey still to cover—these are some of the people one sees. Of some of their languages we hardly understand more than a few words; but the native assistant helps us out. There may be one or two more serious cases to be kept in hospital for operation, mostly blind people,who have come several days or even weeks' journey, in the hope of getting their sight restored. We have eight small rooms for in-patients. Each is about thirteen feet square, and will accommodate two, or in summer three beds, if necessary. Some of these beds are already supported by friends in America, or Europe. We have comparatively few in-patients as a rule, so our resources for accommodation are not put on the strain, and generally each patient can have a separate room, which is just as well, seeing that he brings one or more friends to look after him.

Now it is, perhaps, ten o'clock or after, and if there are no operations to be done, the morning's work at hospital is over and we are free to go further. A few steps down the street is a door in the wall with the trilingual notice over it: "Mission Church," in English, Tibetan and Hindustani. We enter, and find in a shady enclosure a small building set back from the road. Half of this is church and half school. Often in summer, school is kept outside under the trees, where also parallel and horizontal bars, vaulting-horse and climbing pole show that we try to educate the body as well as the mind. The number of boys varies, but is always much greater in winter than in summer, when the children have to take the goats and sheep to feed on the hills. The curriculum is not very extensive, reading and writing in Tibetan and Hindustani, and perhaps in English for some bigger boys, arithmetic, Scripture, the rudiments of geography, etc., but that is a great advance on the education given by the Lamas. Of late years, the Kashmir State has established a free school in Leh, so our numbers are not so great as formerly.

THE PRINCIPAL BAZAAR OR STREET IN LEH

The church is a room about twenty feet square, not big, but big enough for the congregation on ordinary occasions. At one end is a chair for the preacher, with table or desk in front, at his sides, rough benches for the other missionaries. A harmonium and a stove complete the furniture. The natives sit on carpets on the floor. Service is held twice on Sundays, and there are also evening meetings in the week. During the winter months, there is a weekly magic lantern preaching kept by one or two of the native Christians, which is well attended by both Buddhists and Mussulmans. Our best attended service is on Christmas Eve, when the church is lighted up and we have the Christmas tree. Then the place is literally packed full, and all the windows are blocked by the faces of those who cannot get in. True, they come to see the lights and the tree; but who knows if the seed then sown may not fall into good ground and bear fruit! The brilliant dresses of the women at these times make a fine display of color, and the whole scene is one not easily forgotten.

Now, if we pass through the bazaar, we may, perhaps, see one of the missionaries with a native helper preaching to a small crowd. Up a side street is a little native house, where the zenana ladies have had a knitting school for girls, where they try to teach them, in addition to the knitting, something of the love of Christ. Last autumn, this knitting school had to be dropped temporarily, as the workers were too few, but we hope it may be resumed shortly. The Mission ladies, both married and single, also visit the women in such houses

CONTINUED ON PAGE 737

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

A SERMON BY

REV. W. J. HOWELL*

THE GLORY OF THE CROSS

TEXT: GALATIANS 6: 14

"God forbid that I should glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."

LIFE is either a memory or a prospect. Life has either run in the mould of past achievement, or strives in expectation of a future ideal. Between the past and future, the present life surges in endeavor. Every bosom is animated by some one aim in life. Every man is a voluntary slave to the demands of that devotion. Every man is a voluntary worshiper of that which is either divine or human. Every heart centres its affection on what it regards as the highest good that earth can offer. No life gives away its devotion to trifles. Every life glories in some thing, or some person, or some work. It has its own chosen lifework that completely engrosses the mental, moral, spiritual and physical faculties and energies. That, then, becomes a master affection. It dominates all the life.

I. Every person must glory in something. The soldier glories in his country's battles and victories. The statesman glories in his nation's history. The father rejoices in his children. Children rejoice in their parents. The business man in his investments, the youth in his ambitions and ideals, the professional man in his career, the mother in her household, the Christian in his church. One may rejoice in his character, reputation, education, or his financial success, his estates, his benevolent gifts.

Life's pathway runs within hearing of many clarion calls. Each voice says "I am worthiest of all to your devotion. Hear me. Take me as your lifework. I can give you employment, usefulness and happiness. I can give you heart satisfaction. I promise you all that heart can wish."

Life's Highest Good

So one may rejoice in childhood, youth, manhood, business, family, country, neighbors, and friends. He loves one and all. Each gives him joy. He glories in all. Yet not a single one of them can ever give him his highest joy. These are but hills. The mountains of joyful exultation are still beyond. Not until he recognizes that his highest joy is skyward, heavenward, does he attain satisfaction. He climbs the mountains of religious experience and hope. He leaves below the lesser joys of his life. He reaches up the hand of faith and grasps Calvary's cross. Never till then has he reached his loftiest altitude of holy joy and exultation. When Paul said, "I glory in the Cross of Christ," he lifted his heart upward into an ecstacy that has no equal this side of Paradise.

II. The Cross of Christ has employed the intellect of the ages. Christ and his Cross have been the theme of the greatest oratorios. Religion has inspired the greatest painters. The great hymn writers have breathed out poetry and song in adoration of the Nazarene. The long line of martyrs confessed Jesus as Redeemer and Lord. In whom were they glorying ? Certainly in the Cross of Christ. The missionaries of all lands and in all ages have witnessed to the power of that same Cross. No eloquence is so entrancing, so sublime, as the voice and message of the Gospel preacher. No literature so lofty or so immortal as religious literature. The greatest poets, the greatest writers, were such because they took the Bible and its truths for their guidance and inspiration.

I shall never forget the impression when I heard that great oratorio, Handel's "Messiah," rendered by five hundred voices. It seemed that the very air was peopled with heavenly choirs. I thought of that happy day when the New Jerusalem should come down out of heaven. Religion has been served by such musicians as Bach, Beethoven, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Gounod, and Handel. They gloried in the triumphs of the crucified and risen Redeemer.

The greatest painters also have been in the realm of religion. Some have said that the three greatest paintings in the world are Michael Angelo's "Last Judgment," Guido Reni's "Crucifixion," and Raphael's "Transfiguration." "The Last Supper," by Leonardo Da Vinci in Milan, was the artist glorying in the redemptive work of our blessed Lord. Countless thousands have looked upon that picture and have felt their hearts going out in worship of Him, who bowed the heavens and came down to save by the Cross of suffering.

It were alone worth a journey to Holland to visit the cathedral in Antwerp. There is Rubens' immortal painting "The Descent from the Cross." That painter, like the apostle, believed that all that was worth while in this life, was focused in the Cross of his Divine Lord. How real! One can feel that pitying love dropping down from that Cross upon his own heart. The painter has made Calvary so near and so real. Look at the faces of the women. See the tenderness and love in their faces. How gently they lower his lifeless body. Joseph of Aramathea, from the rear of the Cross, and above the Saviour, tenderly releases the pinioned hands. Many hands safely lower the body of Jesus. He can do no more for us all. His work is finished.

Thrills Poets and Painters

As I stood and looked in silent awe, my heart said: "I will cleave to such a friend." Then I thought of the host of the redeemed, the quick and the dead, the ransomed host in the skies. My heart swelled and rejoiced in the triumphs of that Cross. I thought of the coming day when, as described in Revelation, the redeemed saints raise their hosannas. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and glory, and dominion forever and ever." The art of all ages records the triumphs of the Cross.

In whom have all the hymn writers of the church been glorying? Watts, Wesley, Bonar, Keble, Faber, Stanley, Heber, Frances Havergal, and Fanny Crosby? In whom did the martyrs of the Church in all ages glory? Of them the world was not worthy. They lived in dens and caves of the earth for the faith of Jesus. They counted their lives not dear unto themselves.

In whom but Christ have the long and worthy line of missionaries been glorying? That list of immortal worthies, including Carey and Judson, and their unknown yet faithful fellow laborers, all these gloried in the triumphant Gospel of a Saviour's Cross. Paul said: "Five times received I forty stripes save one; a night and day have I been in the deep; in journeys oft, in perils of the sea, of false brethren." Yet he counted not his life dear unto himself, that he might win Christ, for whom he suffered the loss of all things. In sight of his martyrdom, he still exulted in the Cross of Christ with this triumphant outburst: "I have kept the faith. I have finished my course. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." O thou dauntless Paul, thou peerless saint, thou hast gone up to the right hand of God.

The highest form of eloquence also has been that of the Gospel burning in the heart of the Gospel preacher. What theme so noble as the Gospel? No other theme can inspire such eloquence as can the Cross of a Saviour's love. That great army of the ministry, leading a still greater army, the Christian Church, have both gloried in Christ's Cross. Those illustrious names kindle every Christian heart to join in Paul's exultant glorying. Whitefield, Wesley, Spurgeon, Parker, Beecher, Moody, and pastors and evangelists innumerable, have been thrilled through and through with the love of Christ.

The Angelic Host

But saints in the Church on earth can only give the prelude of exultant joy over man's redemption. In Revelation we have the vision of that glorified humanity. "Who are these arrayed in white robes? They have come up out of great tribulation. Therefore are they before the throne forever." None have such a right to glory in the Cross as they.

Christ in poetry and literature also proves his lordship over man's mind. Milton's Paradise Lost and Paradise Regained have for their theme the Paradise that Calvary's Cross has prepared. Many of the great poets received their inspiration from the religious sentiment. Religion is the life, the charm and the atmosphere of the highest and most immortal lines of poetry. Rousseau said, "If the life and death of Socrates were those of a sage, then the life and death of Jesus were those of a God." Napoleon Bonaparte said, "I think I understand somewhat of human nature, and I tell you that Jesus Christ was more than a man. Alexander, Cæsar Charlemagne and myself founded great empires; bu upon what did the creations of our genius depend Upon force. Jesus alone founded his empire on love and to this very day millions would die for him."

Sin's Sole Remedy

III. Paul rejoiced in the Cross, because it provided a way of forgiveness for man's sin and produced a spiritual regeneration, a renewed humanity. Christ our substitute was his constant theme. In the time of the empire in France, a draft of soldiers was made to fil the armies. A drafted man procured a substitute. He went to the field and fell, but the drafted man remained in safety at home. Later the same man was called again but he refused. "I am free, my substitute was killed. So I am a dead man." It went into the French courts, and it was decided that the man was free The law had accepted his substitute, and it could never again enforce its claims against him. So we who died with Christ, are alive with him forevermore.

The Gospel is like the lodestone, which will not draw gold, but does attract iron, an inferior metal. So Christ came to seek and to save sinful man. Christ can transform the lowest stratum of society. In an English cathedral there is a beautiful stained window, made out of broken pieces of glass that were rejected by the master. Yet that window is a wonder of beauty to every beholder. So Christ's eyes rested on condemned material. It has been left to Christ to care for what was not beautiful till he made it so. He cares for us sinners.

The Church to-day has the same Gospel that Paul had. The same Christ that mirrored God in Paul's soul can likewise transfigure us. The "Aurora" is a fresco by Guido Reni on the lofty ceiling of the Rospigliosi Palace of Rome. To look upward long, makes the head dizzy and wearies the neck. But a broad mirror has been placed near the floor. So one may sit down before the mirror as at a table and leisurely enjoy the fresco above him. So Christ reflects all the spiritual beauty of heaven. What Jesus was, in the beauty of his person, on earth—such is the Father in heaven.

The Preacher's Glory

IV. A Christian preacher has a right to glory in the Cross. In the work of a minister there is a strange blending of weakness with omnipotence—of imperfection with sublimity. The preacher is now a penitent and a worshiper himself at the mercy seat. Again, by his calling he is Christ's ambassador. He preaches, not what he has already attained, but what he hopes to attain. Pastor and Church serve together in Gospel bonds. This is no occasion for boasting, but of humility and thankful praise. Even the weakness and imperfection of the instrument does not dim nor obscure the Gospel's charm. The truth of incarnate love is spoken by human lips; the teachings of prophets, apostles, and the Lord and Christ are transcendent, though stammered out by one whose own heart and life have but partially felt all their power. Christ miraculously fed the five thousand in the wilderness. Every preaching service is a continuation of Christ's spiritual feast. Before our very eyes, heavenly manna is dispensed by human hands and voice to congregations. The sight is glorious. It is marvelous in our eyes. The preacher is only a proclaimer. He does not beget spiritual life nor is he capable of perpetuating it. He is only a helper. He therefore glories in spiritual influences above himself. The telling work is done, not by man, but by God.

The Spirit of God and not the preacher creates the new heart. Regeneration is the work of the Spirit and Gospel truth. It is not the work of the preacher. The new birth, the new creature in Christ, is the creation of the Spirit. The preacher has little to do after all. God's Word and Spirit work through his message the mighty wonder.

If happiness and usefulness come to any Christian or preacher, let him rejoice. There is not enough rejoicing in the church of Christ. O for happy Christians and for joyful preachers, and for sermons of sunshine to fall on life's pathway. One of the greatest compensations

CONCLUDED ON PAGE 748

* Preached in the First Baptist Church, Cortland, N. Y.

OUR LITTLE FRESH-AIR VOYAGERS

LEAVING THE "CHRYSTENAH" AT NYACK

THE MOTHER OF THE THREE CAPTAINS

RUNNING TO CATCH THE HOME WAGONETTES

A PLEASANT feature of the Mont-Lawn vacation for the poor children of the city, is the sail up the Hudson. From the time the little travelers board the steamer Chrystenah at the pier in New York, until they scamper ashore at the gray old landing at Nyack, the journey is a succession of beautiful pictures. The fleecy clouds floating over the azure arch above, the green hills, the grand old Palisades and the sparkling waters, combine to form a scene of rare beauty. In addition to this, many places of historic interest may be pointed out to the children. To the right, towns and villages are passed whose names are closely associated with old Colonial and Revolutionary days; while on the left rises nature's magnificent wall—the Palisades—behind whose rugged, precipitous heights, lie New Jersey's fertile valleys.

The children's pleasure never flags until the steamer enters the Tappan Zee, or bay—the widest part of the Hudson, flowing between Tarrytown and Nyack—from which they can see the village, beyond which lie the green hills of Mont-Lawn.

The old steamer Chrystenah, upon which the children have traveled so many times, has an interesting story of her own. Many years ago, there lived three river captains, who all their lives had sailed up and down the waters flowing past the place of their birth, Nyack. Captain Isaac P., Captain Tunis and Captain David D. Smith, commanded a line of steamers which ran between Peekskill and New York. These men were hearty, genial, and as popular on land as on water. They were prominent members of the old Dutch Reformed Church in Nyack, and such a thing as a boat being run Sunday would have scandalized these good old Sabbath-keepers. Just after the close of the Civil War, Captain Isaac P., said to Tunis and David: "Brothers, we must have a new boat, a finer steamer than ever touched our dock before. She must be built on graceful lines, and we will spare no expense in her machinery. She must be staunch and true and fast."

A PARTY OF OUR FRESH-AIRS SAILING UP THE BEAUTIFUL HUDSON

So at the shipyard in Nyack, there gradually grew the shape of the new boat. The villagers to a man (for Nyack was but a hamlet forty years ago), each felt that he owned a share in the beautiful new steamer. When she was finished, the three captains consulted, and agreed that so lovely a craft should be honored by having the name of their dear old mother. She was very old, for the three sons were gray-haired "boys" now, but she was not too aged for the happiness which was hers, at this manifestation of her children's love and respect. A portrait of Mrs. Smith was painted, and placed at the landing which led to the upper saloon, and there it hangs to this day, smiling at every passenger as they mount the stairs. Not very long after the Chrystenah sailed on her maiden trip to the city, the dear old mother, for whom the boat was named, went to her last resting place among the hills overlooking the Hudson.

One by one the three captains left their boats and followed their mother to the quiet green hills, and as the years went by their names were almost forgotten, but the old Chrystenah, good and staunch, still sails on. For forty years she has faithfully performed her mission. No accident has ever befallen her, and though in comparison with the floating palaces of to-day she is small and insignificant, she rides the waters sure and confident, as if bearing a charmed life. And the pictured face of Grandma Smith still smiles down from the stairs upon the children, just as she did in life upon her three noble sons so many years ago, when they took her on board their good new boat, told her it was named after her, and showed her its many beauties, none of which were to them so good to look upon as the smiling face of their dear old mother.

TIBET'S QUAINT PEOPLE AT HOME

Continued from page 735

as they can find entrance to. This is no child's play, and requires some courage, for at many houses there are "lions in the way," in the shape of savage dogs, which recognize no difference between a missionary lady and a thief, and, unlike the lions in the Pilgrim's Progress, these are often not chained. Oftentimes the ladies are well received, and find the women willing to listen to the Gospel stories and wishful to hear more; but other women will only laugh and make evil jests. God can change all these hearts in his own time and way. Pray that he will do so.

We have sketched in outline the chief points of the work at only one of our stations in Western Tibet. Will our readers use both prayer and purse to help the work here?

ERNEST SHAWE.

Moravian Mission, Leh, Tibet.

The work of the Moravian Mission, like that of nearly all the other missions which have attempted to carry the Gospel to the Tibetans, is on the border, and the great heart of the "Sealed Land" is still practically untouched by the messengers of salvation. What influence the new arrangement Tibet recently concluded with Great Britain may ultimately have upon the status of missions cannot yet be determined; but it will probably be favorable. When the golden opportunity does arrive, and the mysterious country of the Dalai Lama is opened to the white race, the Gospel standard-bearers will pour in from all sides.

NATIVE GIRLS AND A ZENANA MISSIONARY

NATIVE CHRISTIANS AND MISSIONARIES IN LEH, TIBET

A HUMANE WORK IN TURKEY'S CAPITAL

SEVEN years ago, at Marsovan, a town of 40,000 inhabitants, in Asia Minor, sixty miles from the Black Sea coast, a New York surgeon, Dr. Thomas Spees Carrington, backed by American humanitarian interests, started in a little native house a hospital where the Turkish poor could receive free medical and surgical treatment. Slowly overcoming the prejudices of the inhabitants, this work of charity grew, until to-day the hospital occupies three buildings, has beds for forty patients, and a staff of three surgeons, besides two foreign nurses and a Training School for Nurses, where a number are constantly instructed. About ten thousand patients are now treated annually. The hospital has proved a blessing to the country for hundreds of miles around.

Unhappily, the work of the Marsovan hospital is necessarily limited. Only those who are on the ground, or who have visited the country, can realize the almost indescribable conditions which exist in Turkey. A surgeon whose patients come to him in such numbers that only one out of every ten seeking relief can be operated upon, is a thing of the past in American cities; but it is the rule in the greater part of the Ottoman Empire, where a few foreign doctors, the majority Americans, are facing these conditions. Babies die by the thousands, or, what is worse, grow to manhood or womanhood in blindness or as cripples. Houses have no drainage; the water is infected, and the people know absolutely nothing about modern hygiene. The value of fresh air is unknown, and the people sleep the year around huddled together with every window closed. None of the precautions taken to prevent the spread of contagious diseases by our boards of health in America are used, so disease stalks through the land. It was while studying these conditions and trying to find a remedy which would bring about reform, that Dr. Carrington first hit upon the plan of supplying trained nurses to the Turkish Empire. The people are easily influenced, kindly and obedient when reasoned with on such subjects, and they are awake to their danger. Practically fifty per cent. of the babies born each year die during childhood. The land is full of blind and crippled, while there are no asylums, and no hospitals for incurables. Every interior city, all foreign and native schools, hospitals, and other institutions, could find use for nurses; and applications, which it would take years to fill, have been made to the one little institution already in existence, which was started at Marsovan five years ago, two years after the hospital was opened. The idea of service for others, as taught by Christianity, is foreign to the traditions of the higher classes of the Turkish people. When the Marsovan Training School for Nurses was first started, all the duties of a nurse were considered only fit for the lowest servants; but after one native girl of good family was induced to take up the training, others offered their services, until now there are many eager to enter the profession, but who cannot be accepted until funds are found for the enlargement of the work. These girls make excellent nurses, and when carefully trained, accomplish splendid results.

A TYPICAL TURKISH AMBULANCE

Americans are only beginning to realize that the Oriental races are willing and ready to help themselves. There is no better way of doing a man a kindness than putting him in the way where, in time, he will be able to stand alone. Doctors and nurses revolutionize the home life of a family in a short time, if the personal contact is close enough. As an example of how the influence may be exerted upon the highest official as well as on the lowest peasant, an incident may be cited. When the Governor of a province in Turkey visited one of his principal cities last spring, in sending a message of welcome, the American doctor there mentioned the water supply of that part of the city in which the Governor was to stop as infected, and advised that all water used by him and his suite be boiled. On calling at the hospital before leaving the city, the official mentioned that he had given orders that his advice be carefully carried out, and was hearty in his thanks to the doctor for his suggestion. One can hardly understand what accepting such an innovation means in a country like Turkey, where custom rules the land.

Encouraged by the success at Marsovan, Dr. Carrington has enlisted the support of friends and organized the work for the Turkish capital, a city of a million people, which needs more hospital facilities for the poor, and which has no established training school for nurses. This is a philanthropy which it is confidently believed will appeal to the generous sympathies of Christian people. Only a comparatively small sum is needed to put the Constantinople hospital and training school on a good working basis. It is earnestly desired by the projectors that contributions be sent in promptly, so that the practical operation of the new institution need not be delayed.

The Board of Trustees of the American Hospital and Training School for Nurses in Constantinople are:

President, William Ives Washburn; Vice-President, Dr. George Washburn (who was for forty years president of Robert College); Secretary, James S. Umsted, and Treasurer, Edwin H. Baker, of Messrs. Bliss, Fabyan & Co., New York City. The home office of the hospital is in the Charities Building, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City. Any contributions sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be promptly acknowledged.

WITH THE TENNESSEE COAL MINERS

THERE are over fifteen thousand men engaged in the mining industry of Tennessee. Practically no religious or educational work is undertaken for the men in the mining camps of the State. The monotony of the daily toil of the men in these coal camps makes it necessary for them to have recreation during their leisure hours. They are compelled in most cases to get this in undesirable surroundings.

In response to this need, the Young Men's Christian Association has entered the coal fields at Petros, Tenn., to help the hundreds of men who dig coal in the Big Brushy Mountain. This is the first Association of the kind for miners in the State. The need of helping men spiritually, intellectually and physically at these places is a great undertaking, with many discouragements in the way; but the workers believe their efforts are owned and blessed of God and they go forward trusting in his promises.

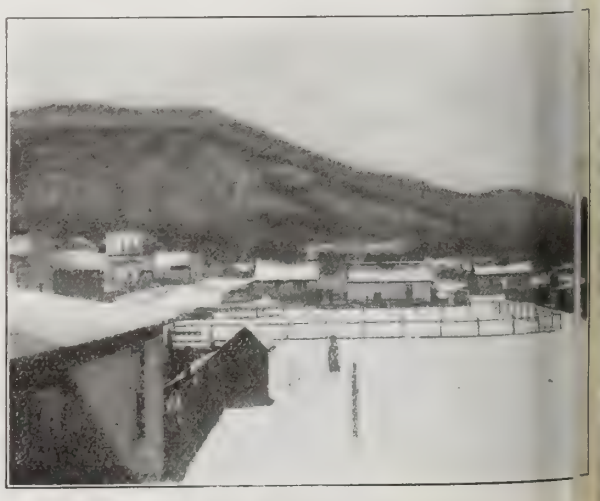
Big Brushy coal camp at Petros has about fifteen hundred inhabitants. It is seventy-five miles from the city of Knoxville. Those who work in the mines are mostly young Americans. There is in the camp no reading room or library; there is not a bath-tub in town, and the young men, many of whom hail from good homes in the rural districts, come to the mines, and finding no social or spiritual influences at work for the development of their better nature, soon show a marked deterioration in their manners and habits. The Y. M. C. A. comes to these young men to help them to live a manly life, and to touch their lives personally for Christ.

The coal company has provided the Petros Association with a hall free of cost, which is divided into a reading-room, amusement-room, bath-room and gymnasium. The building is expected to be the social centre — a place where the moral atmosphere will be wholesome and invigorating. The men come out of the mines about four o'clock in the afternoon, and the Y. M. C. A. endeavors to attract them by providing a place for study, recreation and rest, with incentives to the Christian life. Friends of the Association can be of great assistance by helping to furnish the different rooms, and thus to make them as bright and cheery as possible. This special work among the miners is dependent upon voluntary contributions. The miners, of course, pay a merely nominal membership fee, but this does not cover the expenses of a work of this magnitude, nor is it expected to do so.

Ruskin says, "Invest your money in manhood, particularly young manhood." That is what those friends do who help along this work. Contributions may be sent to the Secretary Y. M. C. A., Petros, Tenn., who will acknowledge the same and answer all inquiries as to the work and its needs.

Petros, Tenn. JAMES D. BURTO

A MINERS' Y. M. C. A. MEETING, AT PETROS, TENN.



THE "BIG BRUSHY" COAL CAMP

THE WOMEN'S WAR AGAINST POLYGAMY

At Lakeside Park, near Akron, O., there was held lately a large camp-meeting of the members of the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," the first event of its kind in that part of the country. These people are the descendants of those who seceded from the Mormon Church in 1852, leaving it on account of its heresies, and because they had no sympathy with the abuses that had crept in under the control of Brigham Young and his twelve apostles. The leaders of the "Reorganized Church," as the seceders call themselves, say openly that they are in no way allied with Mormonism. They reject the impious "Adam-God" belief promulgated by the Mormon leaders, and utterly repudiate polygamy and its train of evils; they also reject the whole system of blood atonement and secret endowments, which are marked features of the Utah hierarchy and its following. In a word, they have not now, and have not had for many years, anything in common with the Mormon church or creed, although, unfortunately, this is not very clearly understood by the American people as a whole. The "Reorganized Church" believes in the laying on of hands in the case of sickness, but is not opposed to the use of medicine. The fundamental principles are: "Faith towards God, repentance from dead works, baptism, the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment."

At the camp-meeting, great interest was manifested among the women members present, in the Memorial for the removal of the Mormon apostle, Reed Smoot from the United States Senate. A Memorial was laid on a table, and all the leading ladies of the church signed it with great enthusiasm. The photographer has pictured this remarkable scene. In the group at the table, Mrs. U. W. Greene of Kirtland, O., is in the act of signing, the other signers, from left to right, being as follows:

Miss I. M. Manchester, Mrs. A. R. Manchester, Mrs. T. H. Darst, Mrs. C. McConnaughy, Mrs. A. McDugle, Mrs. Ida McCoy, Mrs. Sarah Liston, Mrs. Charles Delberg, Mrs V. M. Goodrich, Miss C. Greene, Miss E. P. Kimbell, Mrs. V. D. Scharr, Mrs. Martha Gillespie, Mrs. Charlotte S. Stewart, Mrs. Bell Strachan, Mrs. W. G. Kimbell.

THE LADIES AT AKRON, O., SIGNING THE ANTI-SMOOT MEMORIAL

. . .

Every mail brings numerous additions to the thousands of signatures to the Anti-Mormon Memorial. The keynote of the popular feeling among the women of America on the question of the expulsion of the Mormon apostle from the United States Senate, is struck by a correspondent, who, in sending for Memorials, writes:

I shall obtain many signatures in our little village, and I think it is important that this should be done in every city, town, and village in the country.

Not only is this important, it is absolutely necessary. Memorials are going out, and are being returned to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by the thousands, with signatures appended. The women from far and near have awakened to their responsibility and their opportunity in the righteous campaign. They are doing all they can to agitate the matter among those of their sister women, who do not as yet realize the menace implied in the seating of a Mormon Apostle as a law-maker for the whole American Nation. Where the women fully understand what the seating in the Senate of a member of the Mormon hierarchy means, they not only sign their own names to the protest which is to be presented to Congress, but they go from house to house among their neighbors, and get them to sign the Memorial also.

These women are very much in earnest, in many cases sending for a large number of Memorials to distribute among their friends, who will canvass for signatures. Others send in long lists of addresses, asking that the Memorials be sent them. All this is most encouraging to the workers at Memorial Headquarters, who are kept busy arranging long lists of signed protests, sending out others, and answering correspondents.

From a town in Ohio, a woman sends a letter, asking for Memorials. She says there are 25,000 inhabitants in the town, and that she will endeavor to get every woman to sign. Another writes:

Send me half dozen Memorials. I want to join the army of workers and do all I can through the rural districts where I live.

It means hard work for some of these good women. Neighbors are far apart, and, oft-times, many long miles must be traveled to get the signatures. In some districts, women are forming themselves into bands, whose members work in different directions, with the result that long lists reach us through these united efforts. Farmers' wives and daughters are working at the various Granges which they attend; women are working at Chautauqua assemblies, at camp-meetings, church gatherings and W. C. T. U. meetings. One subscriber has started to get 1,000 names through her own efforts, and is meeting with splendid success. Ten hundred such determined women would make up a million names, and there are many such now at work.

. . .

Another correspondent says, "It is a matter that demands haste, as all of Christ's work does." She is right; there should be no delay. This protest, if every woman does her plain duty, should soon assume such gigantic proportions as to astonish even the most sanguine, and make success assured. If any women are lukewarm, or inclined to put off the important work of getting signatures to the Women's Memorial, they certainly would delay no longer if they could read some of the letters that accompany lists of names sent to this office. Dear old ladies upwards of eighty years of age and some over ninety, put down their own signatures; but not content with that, they explain the matter to grandsons and daughters, and send them out with the Memorials, to be returned, in many instances, with the names of the most prominent women in the town. Women in some instances are working evenings in order to canvass for the Memorial; invalids and shut-ins are writing from their captivity, inspiring others to effort in this great movement. Public meetings are being called, and the situation explained by women who understand the peril, to others, and great lists of signatures invariably result.

The leaven of righteousness is working, and the day will speedily come when every woman who hears of the movement and can hold a pen, will not rest until her name is appended to the protest against Reed Smoot's retention in the Senate of the United States.

Our letters show that splendid work is being done in many States by noble women, who are devoting themselves energetically to the task of obtaining signatures. One lady has been instrumental in procuring nearly 1,000; another 600 and several others 300 to 400 each.

Do not delay; send for Memorials, sign and get your friends to work for the cause. No woman should sign for another; to be effective, every signature must be original. Write full name and address. Send to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for Memorials, which will be sent free, on receipt of postal.

All contributions toward defraying the actual expenses of the campaign will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The following additional contributions in aid of the Women's Anti-Mormon campaign have been received:

Previously ack'd.	$13 68	Mrs. R. A. L. Dickinson	1 00
Mrs. Pengh	1 00	Mrs. A. B. B. Dickinson	1 00
E. Schofield	1 00	Mrs. S. A. Carson	4
Mrs. S. J. Cannon	04	Mrs. C. Sheppel	16
—, Savannah, Ga.	25	Mrs. H. L. Horton	4
The Misses C.	3 50	Mrs. H. L. Campbell	1 00
Mrs. C. S. Hedges	1 00	Mrs. J. M. Smith	1 02
—, New York City	1 00	Mrs. J. H. Troutman	10
Miss M. B. Gross	16	Mrs. C. N. Hazen	4
Mrs. S. Jagger	10	Julia Bennage	20
Mrs. I. L. Beam	50	Mrs. W. A. Taylor	50
Mrs. M. R. Lewis	20	Mrs. F. J. Wightman	1 00
Mrs. I. Hauswold	08	—, Farmington, Mo.	2 00
O. B. Webb	1 00	Mrs. H. A. Warner	6
Mrs. F. A. Smith	04	Mrs. A. B. Tanner	4
M. A. Mills	1 00	S. B., Manchester, Iowa	1 00
Mrs. J. Smith	25	Miss S. L. Gardener	5 00
Mrs. H. Robinson	10	Mrs. A. L. Murphy	4
W. F. Leonard	1 00	Forest, Tobacco, Ia.	10
Mrs. H. B. Hodges	25	A. H. M'Conathie	4
Mrs. C. Magnuson	50	S. A. Carman	4
Mrs. W. J. Gustin	18	L. P. Sherrill	20
Mrs. D. R. James	1 00	Miss L. A. Parker	6
Mrs. V. Robinson	10	Mrs. C. J. Lyles	8
Lydia Esch	10	Mrs. Anna McKee White	50
Mrs. M. J. Anderson	04	Elizabeth D. Van Wart	12
Mrs. J. D. Shute	1 00	Mrs. Frank Lyman	8
—, Richmond, Va.	50	A. G. Bowley	10
Mrs. E. P. R. Crafts	12	E. Q. M.	1 02
Mrs. Delp	50	Mrs. Mary A. B. Brown	50
The McMaster's King's Daughters, Auburn, N. Y.	25	Lyda Snell	12
		Mrs. Camilla Johnson	1 00
		F. L. J., Flushing, N. Y.	1 00

IS IT WAR OR PEACE?

FRIENDS of peace the world over are still hopeful that President Roosevelt's persistent efforts to keep the conference at Portsmouth together may yet be crowned with success, but it is useless to deny that the present outlook is far from encouraging. It may be that pressure will be brought on both Russia and Japan by their allies, who are even more anxious than America to close the war.

M. de Witte, there can be no doubt, has a very strong desire to sign peace articles, if it can be done without too much mortification to Russian national pride. There is still a strong feeling against the payment of an indemnity that diplomatists feel that even if de Witte should sign a treaty with an indemnity clause, he would run the risk of having his act repudiated at St. Petersburg. The amount that would probably satisfy Japan would not be less than five hundred million. This, the Russians claim, would mean bankruptcy for their nation, and put them back for a generation.

Another reason for the deadlock, and a strong one, is the fact that General Linevitch, who now commands the Russian forces in Manchuria, is constantly sending despatches to the Czar that his force is in a strong position, and a battle would result in a victory for the Russian Bear. The Russians are an optimistic people, in this case far beyond reason, and a large party seem to be desirous of trying fortune once more, to see if their "luck," as they call it, will not turn. Reports from Tokio, on the other hand, show that Marshal Oyama has prepared well for such a contingency; that he has Linevitch partly surrrounded, and a new battle might be worse in results than Moukden, as Linevitch and his entire army might be cut off. Such a result would leave the Russian envoys in a much worse situation than they are at present, and make Japan the dictator of the terms that would be brought forward in the future. The Japanese, after Russia refused the first terms, brought forward a modification of their demands. According to the new scheme, the Island of Sakhalen was to be divided between Russia and Japan. A working financial arrangement would be entered into by which the Eastern Chinese Railway, which was constructed by Russia, would be operated by Japan. Russia would pay to Japan an amount equal to the cost of the war, less the amount obtained by Japan through the possession of the railroad. The Russians declare that is merely a rehash of the old terms, and are, in fact, as unbearable as the first. They say it is an indemnity, and as such can not for a moment be considered. The matter, nevertheless, was referred to both St. Petersburg and Tokio. President Roosevelt has himself communicated with the Czar through Ambassador Meyer, but the answer was not made public.

A startling interview, granted by Count Lamsdorff to a correspondent at St. Petersburg, has also added to the general gloom of the situation. He said neither money nor territory would be given up by Russia.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly, Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Russian Reforms

AFTER long delay, the Emperor of Russia has issued a decree permitting the election of a national assembly. The concession is carefully hedged about, the franchise is limited, and the powers of the Assembly are extremely small. But the permission is important and may have momentous consequences. It is an admission that the Czar desires to take his people into his confidence and to give them the right to express their opinions. This, in Russia, where public opinion has been ruthlessly suppressed, is a genuine concession. That it would satisfy Russian reformers could not be expected, but it is a step in the direction of constitutional government and as such is welcome.

The Assembly or Duma is to be elected by the whole Russian people, except those of Finland and Poland. The franchise is granted to men of twenty-five years of age and upwards, who own property of a certain value. The classes excluded are women, soldiers, sailors and men without fixed abode. The representatives are to receive ten roubles (about $5) a day while in session, and their traveling expenses. The Assembly is to have a life of five years. It must not initiate laws, but may consider and debate on laws submitted by a minister of the Czar. Its decisions are to be sent to the Grand Council, and must have the approval of the Czar to make them valid. It may examine and criticize questions of taxation and expenditure, and may call the attention of the Czar and his ministers to infractions of the laws. Thus, the Duma is not to be a Legislature, but a consultative body, with a limited power of suggestion. It is to assemble in January, 1906.

It will be seen that the Czar is careful to protect and maintain his autocratic power; but there is little doubt that the Assembly he is calling into existence, will eventually extend its powers. In England the growth of constitutional government has been slow and painful. It has taken Parliament hundreds of years to attain the power it now wields. However carefully the rights of such an Assemby are restricted, they inevitably increase. Russia, after it has once had the privilege of sharing in the government, can never be the same hidebound despotism that it has hitherto been. The decree calls constitutional government into existence in embryo, and whatever the Czar and his advisers may think, they have embarked on a new era. Friends of the Government and people of Russia will hail the concession, small as it is, with delight, and will congratulate the country on entering on a career of civilization, that has in it the promise of liberty and development beyond the conception of either the Czar or his people.

Christianity in Business

IT was a severe arraignment that Dr. G. Campbell Morgan uttered on the eve of his leaving our shores. His visit appears to have had a depressing effect on his mind. He is, he says, "surprised and astounded at the way the so-called Christian business man keeps his pledges to his God and his church. Business men, wrapped up in their own affairs or busy in the pursuit of pleasure, lose track of the way and forget the pledges they made to God and their church. Many a man whose name is on a church-roll is not doing his part in the conversion of the sinner or the spread of the Gospel. What the churches want is more of God and less of dress and social position."

It is well that we should know our faults, and perhaps there is no one so qualified to administer reproof as a consecrated worker who comes to us from another land. We can understand, however, how a man whose whole time is given up to religion and active evangelism may have somewhat exaggerated the evil of the situation. The business man, in these strenuous times, must give his attention to his business, otherwise he would soon be left behind in the race. The evangelist, on fire with his mission, wonders that other men are not similarly in earnest, forgetting that the mission, that is all to him, is divided, in the business man's case, with worldly concerns. To measure up to Dr. Morgan's standard, the business man might need to give up his business and devote himself to evangelistic work. Dr. Morgan may not have intended to inculcate such a duty, but he appears to have overlooked the fact that in the business world, anything short of undivided, concentrated devotion to business would be to invite failure. The business man ought never to lose sight of the fact that he is a Christian; ought never to do anything inconsistent with his profession; but it is asking too much of him to expect him to give himself to Christian work with the energy and devotion of a man in Dr. Morgan's position. The business man has opportunities of service of which he ought to avail himself; he ought to consecrate a part of his gains to Christ's church; but that he is not doing his part in the conversion of the sinner and the spread of the Gospel, as Dr. Morgan charges, is a reproach that needs explanation. We doubt if in this country there is ground for the pessimism the evangelist expresses.

Dr. Morgan may have been unfortunate in his associations. Perhaps he may not have come in contact with a sufficient number of business men to form the basis for a just opinion. Our own experience, based on a wide knowledge of men in all sections, in every line and grade of business, leads us to a happier conclusion. We have found the business men of America, not only willing to give of their substance to feed the hungry, to support the orphan, to succor the unfortunate, but eager to seek opportunities of direct evangelistic work. Men more thoroughly conscientious, more anxious to live near to God and to serve him, than thousands of those who have come into our own personal knowledge, are not to be found even in the clerical profession. It is our right and our pleasant duty to testify of them as we know them.

It would be a grievous thing for the American church if the Christian business man had lost track of the way, and had forgotten his pledges to God. All our boasted prosperity would then be dust and ashes in God's sight. It would be a transfer of devotion from God to Mammon, as hateful as that of ancient Israel, from Jehovah to Baal. The Apostle's rule, "Diligent in business, serving the Lord," ought to be the motto of every Christian business man. He ought to look to God for guidance, ought to be careful to set a good example to his employees, and knowing his danger of being drawn into the maelstrom of worldliness, should seek continually fresh supplies of God's grace. All this is being done unostentatiously and sincerely by many business men in the American church. By how many probably Dr. Morgan does not know, otherwise he would not have made charges so sweeping.

A Check to Gamblers

IT is gratifying to learn that the Post Office authorities at Washington have decided to deny the use of the mails to advertisers of "tips" on the races, and similar gambling schemes. There is not a doubt that these racing gamblers, and the tempting lures they spread broadcast through the country by means of their skilfully-worded literature, have been the means of bringing sorrow and remorse to thousands. Many a bright young man has dated the first step that led to ultimate ruin from the day he followed the advice of the "sure thing" tipster, and invested his money on the race-track. Credulous people everywhere have been victimized by these sharks, but they have found their readiest victims in the rural districts.

It is strange that human nature, notwithstanding the abundant examples on every hand, will still incline a too willing ear to the alluring lies of the sharks who profess to offer them a "good thing," "two for one," something for nothing, or some other of the many attractive schemes for getting rich quickly. These rogues live by preying upon the public, and in refusing them the use of the mails, the authorities are really doing a substantial public service. The Government has the right to take any and all measures necessary for the protection of the people against the depredations of plunderers of this class, whose victims can be counted by the tens of thousands.

☆ ☆ ☆

Signatures to the Woman's Memorial for the removal of Apostle Smoot from the United States Senate are rolling in by the thousands daily. The tide is rising. It is a mighty river now; by November it will be a Niagara.

A Little Sermon by the Cable

DURING the summer months, it has been the cust of the Proprietor of this journal, who founded T CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home at Mont-La on the Hudson, to spend a considerable portion of e week with the children. Our little folks never fai accord him a hearty welcome. He enters with into all their enjoyments, and is never happier t when addressing them in the chapel, devising some means of amusement for them on the big lawn, watching them enjoy the delights of the out-door g nasium. His regular weekly talks to the children teachers in the chapel have been a feature of the M Lawn work for years.

This summer, having been called to Europe fo time, he was greatly missed. But Dr. Klopsch did forget Mont-Lawn's little guests, though thousand miles away. One day, Housemother Collins was prised by receiving a cablegram from Dr. Klopsch, was then in London. Opening it, she read the followi

(CABLEGRAM.)

LONDON, July 18, 1905.

CHILDREN'S HOME, Nyack, N. Y.
Philippians 1: 2, 3.
Thessalonians 1: 3.
I. Timothy 4: 11, 12.
Hebrews 13: 18, 19, 20, 21.

(Signed) KLOPSCH.

The Housemother, with the willing co-operation several members of her staff of teachers, looked up passages indicated, and soon the purpose of the sen became apparent. It was a little sermon by the cabl a Scriptural discourse peculiarly appropriate to the cumstances, and which readily divided itself into parts or heads. This is the full message brought by cable from Dr. Klopsch, to the teachers and children Mont-Lawn:

Greeting:

Philippians 1: 2, 3. "Grace be unto you and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. I thank my God upon every remembrance of you."

Commendation:

Thessalonians 1: 3. "Remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father."

Instruction:

I. Timothy 4: 11, 12. "These things command and teach. Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity."

Aspiration:

Hebrews 13: 18, 19, 20, 21. "Pray for us: for we trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly. But I beseech you the rather to do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner."

Benediction:

"Now the peace of God, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant.

"Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. AMEN."

When the "Little Sermon by Cable" was read to t teachers and the children in the chapel that day, th listened with deep attention. Its simplicity, and t kind thoughtfulness that had prompted the sender, across the ocean, to remember his friends and litt guests at Mont-Lawn, touched every heart, and will n soon be forgotten by those who were present.

The BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

British Politics

AFTER a long and almost fruitless session, the British Parliament has been prorogued. It was but a small modicum of legislation that the King in his speech could refer to as the results of the labors of his faithful Commons. It is evident to all observers that the drift in the country is in the direction of a change of government. The Cabinet knew that their lease of power is growing short, and are experiencing the lassitude that naturally results from that conviction. Indeed, the political prophets predicted that it would not survive the session. It has done so, but by reduced majorities, and with the knowledge that when one of their own party dies, the constituency he represented is very likely to elect an opponent in his place. The effect of the Education Bill forced through the House is making itself felt in the country. That law touched the conscience of the people. Men ministers of the Gospel have distraints put upon their books and furniture, and are threatened with imprisonment for refusing to pay taxes which they conscientiously object to pay, and when laymen, with the same principles, are actually sent to prison, it is not surprising that the government is unpopular. If these men were criminals, the prosecution of them would arouse no sympathy, but they are godly men and men of unimpeachable moral character. There is no doubt that Mr. Balfour and his party have lost thousands of their supporters by the enforcement of the law, and have made their opponents more intense and determined in their opposition. At the next election, if not earlier, the Speaker of the House of Commons is almost certain to find the Liberals sitting on his right hand and the motley company of Unionists on his left, signifying their exclusion from office. The change will, it is promised, make no difference in the foreign policy of the country. The same principles and traditions will be observed in dealing with other nations, whether the Liberals or the Unionists are in office. It is only with the internal affairs of the country that the change will be perceived, and we may be sure that one of the first acts of a Liberal government will be to repeal the iniquitous education acts. In every constituency there are men who are asking as did those of ancient time:

Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee which frameth mischief by a law? (Ps. 94: 20).

A SCENE IN THE BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS DURING THE RECENT DEBATES

Saved by a Dog

An aged citizen of New York, who has lost his mental balance through sickness, has been restored to his family after a disquieting absence, through the sagacity of a dog. He has reached the age of eighty-seven, but is able to take out-door exercise. His sons, however, aware of his failing faculties, have kept him under surveillance lest he should forget his way home. The old gentleman has fretted against being watched and has often tried to elude observation, insisting that he was able to take care of himself. Last week he went for a walk, taking with him a dog to which he is much attached. He did not return at night, and his family searched for him in vain. They went to his favorite haunts and to the houses of friends, but no one had seen him. Two days passed without tidings of him, and the alarm of his relatives increased. On the following morning one of the sons had occasion to visit an acquaintance on the outskirts of Brooklyn. As he turned the corner of a street he heard a joyous bark. Looking around, he saw his father's dog running after him. The dog jumped on him, whining and showing his delight. The dog ran on before and waited to see if he was followed. Realizing that he wanted to lead the way, the son followed until the dog stopped at the door of a lodging house. Going in, the son found his father, miserable and distraught. The search might have continued a long time, and the old man might have died unknown, but for the sagacity of the faithful dog. He could not save his master, but he could bring some one to him who could save him. That service it is the Christian's duty and privilege to render to lost and wandering souls, for whom the Saviour is seeking as for lost sheep.

They brought him to Jesus (Luke 19: 35).

An Elephant's Dentist

A difficult operation on an elephant was performed in New York last week. For three weeks past the favorite elephant at the Hippodrome had been sulky and evidently in pain. The cause of her condition was discovered when a swelling appeared on her lower jaw. Then it was realized that the candy so freely given to her by visitors had caused one of her huge teeth to decay. Several dentists were asked to treat her, but declined. At last one was found who was willing to undertake the operation. Her keeper induced her, to lie down and she was securely bound with two-inch ropes. But she appeared to suspect designs on her and with a mighty effort she shook herself loose. But again she was quieted, and, with her keeper sitting on her head, the dentist went to work. The cavity in the tooth was cleansed and about fifty dollars' worth of gold was forced in. Just as the dentist was finishing the work, the animal lost patience and struggled to her feet. But she seemed to discover that her trouble was past. After examining her mouth with her trunk and testing the tooth, she was satisfied, and permitted the burnishing to be done. It was not possible in her case to convince her, before the operation, that she must be hurt in order to do her good. Sometimes it is hard to convince human beings in like circumstances. The Apostle had to plead with some in his time who could not realize the fact.

Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous, nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness (Heb. 12: 11).

A Fugitive Tracked

There was a scene of wild joy in the city prison, New York, last week. A man who has been seeking the murderer of his father through two continents for eight years, saw and recognized him. In 1896, there was an election of member of Parliament at San Giorgo, a small town at the foot of the Apennines in Italy. One of the chief managers and effective speakers was a noted lawyer, well known for his geniality and philanthropic life. Many a criminal did he defend free of charge, and not a poor man in the village fell into adversity without receiving help from the lawyer. It became apparent that one of the candidates would be defeated if the lawyer continued his eloquent harangues. To save the election, some unscrupulous men hired a wicked man to assassinate him. The man accepting the commisssion was not deterred by the fact that he owed his liberty to the lawyer, who had defended him on a recent trial. He waylaid his benefactor and murdered him. His son immediately began a search for the criminal. He followed him to Paris, to London, to New York, to Montreal, to Charleston, S. C. and to Galveston, Tex. Everywhere the murderer eluded him. Tired out, the son went back home. He had barely arrived, when he heard that a man answering the description of the murderer had been arrested for an assault with intent to kill, in New York. He took the first steamer back, and went straight to the prison, where he found the slayer of his father, and took steps to arrest him when his sentence expires. It is strange that a man, who knew he was being pursued, did not refrain from any crime that could bring him into notoriety, especially from a crime of violence which would serve to identify him. He must have known that the only safe course was to avoid publicity, yet the old proclivity to violence was too strong to be resisted, and he will have to pay the penalty of his crimes. It is confirmation of the prophet's word that the wicked, even if admitted into heaven in a state of impenitence, would continue their wickedness.

Let favor be shown to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness: in uprightness will he deal unjustly (Isa. 26: 10).

WITH THE "SLUM ANGELS"

BY HARRIET C. LAMB

"BE they comin', Sam?"

"I think so, Ma. I seen 'em crossin' the alley at old Mike's grog shop. Guess they stopped there to hand pieces of ice round to the fellows, that's what they does reg'lar these hot nights. It's so pitch dark I can't hardly see nothin'," Sam added, peering out the door into the blackness; "but these Army gals eyes is mighty bright, seems they can look thro' thick and thin. They don't ever forgit you and me, Mammie, sence you been sick pirticler, but they got so many of us on their string, and now Dan Lovejoy had to go and get drunk, too, and broke his leg and makes 'em more trouble'n ever; but I don't hev no idee they're going back on us to-night, when they know we be settin' up fightin' moskiters and just heavin' to git our mortal breaths."

"Here, Ma, I can shove yer chair closer to the door-edge. My! you are swettin'; and, Ma, I'll buzz this fan what I made to-day out o' kindlin' wood and a piece of paper, and it'll do as good almost as bein' in an up-town eatin' house!" And ten-year-old Sam Brown, "the only man of the house," after moving by inches his mother's old rocker, the sole piece of furniture in that humble abode, closer to the narrow doorway, proceeded to flourish dexterously his new and latest invention, an electric fan which "worked" in a fashion, when Sam worked. The hot, stifling, dead air took on a touch of life; and presently, as Sam continued his flopping and flirting and spinning about with his wonderful contrivance held high in mid-air, the weary sufferer felt a whiff of something like a breeze against her thin cheek, and she gave a little sigh of relief. Sam was delighted, and would have continued his circumlocutions indefinitely, only that he stopped to listen; he was waiting anxiously for the "Slum Angels."

"I hear someone talking low; yes, it's them, and they're bringing the clean clothes what they washed to-day for us."

A certain sense of things sacred made Sam lower his voice as he saw again these precious girls cross his very threshold. By the pale light of the rising moon (his only "candle" lit that night), he watched them as they proceeded quickly to make his mother comfortable, chatting brightly as they worked. While the Captain cracked some ice to cool the water, the Lieutenant was taking a freshly laundered wrapper from the basket to put on his mother. It was all so sweet, so lovely to Sam, something like a prayer came to his lips, a little musing thanksgiving melody.

"Can't they do it slick," he meditated, as they bathed the sick one's face and hands in the cold water from the basin which Sam was so happy to hold for them.

"Don't you want to put a little piece of ice in her mouth," he asked shyly, gazing over at the pallet where the baby slept, and then he settled back upon his broken stool, and even forgot to take up the fan in his pleasure of hearing the baby teeth cracking the bit of ice in her tiny mouth.

"It's a bit of smoked herring and some crackers, Mrs. Brown," the Lieutenant was saying. "Smoked herring!" Sam's happiness was not on the wane. He almost spoke aloud. "You'd begin to think that Dad's ship never went to the bottom and Ma didn't get sick and we wasn't poor, and we ain't so awful poor," and Sam turned again toward the little bed where the treasure slept.

When the prayer time came, a little later, and the Army girls stood outside the door again, in the alley-way, Sam will never forget the picture to him so wondrous fair; the two with their baskets on their arms, in plain blue dress and little slum hats, above the upturned faces so full of sympathy. When he had said good-night after their exhortation, "that they must both sleep now, for it was past midnight," it seemed to Sam that two spirits from the other world were lingering near to tell them "all's well." He stretched his tired body upon the door-sill, and, resting his curly head upon one chubby hand, fell fast asleep.

. . .

"I'm going where the angels live, Granny, where there's green grass and trees and breezes, and I won't choke this way; don't cry, Granny; you've been so good to me, when you were cross, you didn't mean it. You got so tired, me sick, and you with the rheumatiz, Granny. Of course, you love your Tessie, you wouldn't give her the coolest place on the roof if you didn't. There! Granny—I've—I've—been slow dying but this hot spell, Granny! Do you rec'lect what the Army sisters told you? The Captain said what that everybody can be a 'Chirp-up' in the world, and that means you, too."

A VISIT FROM A SLUM ANGEL

There were few sounds to break the stillness of that early morning hour. The heat was somewhat less intense, and the crowd of suffering creatures, men, women and children on the tenement roofs, lay sleeping heavily.

Suddenly the dying child lifted her head, listening intently. The old woman kept her wild, glistening eyes, fixed full upon her. The last treasure was going. They called this aged woman in the neighborhood "The Witch of Poverty Row," and witches do not love!

She had lost and lost as the years had gone, and even this darling child God had smitten with disease.

"Listen—Granny, it's the Army lassies; tell them to climb, tell—them—" Then the child lay back panting, nearly fainting.

The lassies had climbed the ladder to the roof, and in the moonlight, the Captain leading the way. Instinctively, she knew all before she reached the prostrate form, and looked into the pinched face. "Our little Tessie," she whispered, weeping, "the way is too hard and rough for you. Here, take this ice in your mouth. How you have suffered! O, God, if there were more of us to carry on thy work! There, dearie; if we had but come sooner; I can't forgive myself (but so many, needy!) Would you like the Lieutenant to sing your song?"

It was not easy for the Lieutenant to sing that night, and yet there came to the Army girl just then a sense of God's wisdom in taking back this frail flower out of Slumdom to his own heart, and her voice was clear as she sang Tessie's favorite, "There's a better world, they say." Hundreds of people on the roofs heard it. Some awakened and listened, and then fell again into a restful sleep, and some slept on and believed that they dreamed.

The old woman, the "Granny," sitting near by, was laying her sharp, suffering face upon the child's cheek. She kissed her wildly again and again. "A last kiss," she cried, and then, as the Lieutenant repeated the beautiful song, she sobbed out, as she watched the fluttering eyelids, "No, God helping me, it isn't the last, I'll meet her again!"

One little gasp, and a rare, sweet smile, and the Lieutenant stopped her song. Little Tessie had gone to the "Better land."

Such incidents as the above are crowded by the score into the busy life of the toiling Salvationist slum lassie of New York City. In panoramic procession, these scenes of suffering pass before their eyes, until sometimes we wonder that their brains do not reel on account of the continuous sympathetic strain upon them, together with the bodily weariness which is ever theirs.

. . .

In the very heart of Slumdom, on the lower East Side of New York City, the Salvation Army proposes to erect a large five-story building, a home centre for the people of that district. The washerwomen of that great neighborhood may bring their washings to this home and wash them in the laundry there. Mothers can do their family sewing in this building, one floor of which is to be fitted up with sewing machines. On the upper floor, the rooms will be furnished as dormitories, where young girls, strangers in Greater New York, may find a place of safety over night and a hearty Christian welcome.

This building is Commander Miss Booth's special scheme for the poor of New York. But, in providing for them, she does not fail to look after those women of the Cross—who are to have their rooms there also. Some of them will live in this house night and day, as managers and home-makers, while to others, it will be their only resting-place. The lots for this building are purchased, the plans for the Home drawn, but we need financial support.

Anyone sending a donation to Commander Miss Booth, 120 West Fourteenth Street, New York City, with the written direction, "For New York Slum Settlement Building," or with the request that the money be spent to furnish a little bedroom for a "Slum Lassie," may be assured of its most careful use.

PROMINENT MEN AND WOMEN OF THE HOUR

MRS. MARY MAPES DODGE, who died last month, held a unique place in American literature, as well as in the hearts of two generations of readers. Her fame rested to a great extent on her strictly juvenile stories, especially that delightful tale of Hans Brinker and the Silver Skates. She said that she often regretted that her literary fame had come without a struggle; that all came her way from the first. Since 1873, she had been the editor of St. Nicholas, which she made the most successful young people's magazine in the world.

. . .

ADOLPHE WILLIAM BOUGUEREAU, one of the most famous of modern French artists, died recently in Paris. He was born in 1825, and achieved fame at an early age. His famous picture, "The Body of St. Cecilia borne to the Catacombs," is familiar to American art lovers, through numerous copies. Among his other works are "La Vierge Consolatrice," painted in 1876; and "L'Amoor Mouille," painted in 1895.

. . .

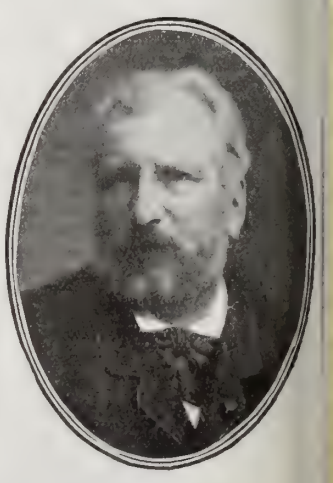
LORD CURZON, after having twice been appointed Viceroy of India, has resigned. In the years that he has held that office he has been most successful; but recently, the pushing southward of Russian troops has warned England that a change must be made in her military system. Lord Curzon was opposed to an army government, but General Kitchener has demonstrated that a strong hand is needed on the frontier rather than a civil government. Britain must hold India, to keep the natives from butchering one another at least. Lord Curzon, before going to India, served his country as Under Secretary of State for India, and Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. He is a graduate of Oxford. His career has been of special interest to Americans, as his wife was formerly Miss Mary Leiter, of Chicago.

PRINCE EITEL, second son of the German Kaiser, is soon to be married to a young German reigning duchess, and be promoted to higher rank in the navy. He is commonly called the "Sailor Prince," and is, by far, the most popular of the sons of the imperial family. The Kaiser's great ambition is to make the German fleet the most powerful in Europe.

PRINCE EITEL

MRS. MARY M. DODGE

LORD CURZON



A. W. BOUGUEREAU

IN THE GOLDEN SUMMER DAYS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

[mproving One's Education

IAGERLY, wistfully, continually, this question comes from the woman in the small village; the woman on the farm, and the woman who fears that he well-educated children are growing out of her life. Its a vital question, that presses sharply on the attentio of thousands of such women as those who weekly rel this page of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. How may a woman whose school-days are far behind her, acquire intellectual culture and mental discipline? What shall she study? When shall she begin? How shall she utiliz to the best advantage the fragments of time which alhe are at her disposal?

I am of the conviction that the sensible, judicious woman who has fulfilled for years the functions of housekeeper, wife and mother, greatly underrates herself, and greatly overestimates the importance of what may be called book education. She is a bit rusty in the branches pursued in schools. So are we all, who are not occupying the chairs of professors and tutors. Few doctors, lawyers, and clergymen could take, without a good deal of cramming beforehand, the mid-year examinations which the young fellows at college are taking this winter. We forget a great deal that we learn at the cost of an immense painstaking in the classroom. The residuum that is left is intangible, but none the less extremely useful. While the clever man of affairs and the well-trained college woman, cannot, twenty years after, hope to shine in examination papers. They may, and do, bring to bear upon daily life, the fullness of resource and the quickness of insight that came to them while their minds were enriched.

Something of facility akin to theirs, is the portion of the woman who has managed a family, attended Church regularly, and taken her modest but most essential part in its work, and by her love and wisdom, moulded and shaped her sons and daughters.

But the latter woman, arriving at a place where she has a little leisure, wants to add to her stores. What initial steps shall she take?

I can tell her what not to do. She must not sit down and bemoan her deficiencies, nor compare herself unfavorably with her children and their friends. Nor is it a good plan for her to grope along by her own feeble candle-light in the intricacies of geography, history, and arithmetic. If there is any study to which she is specially drawn, as botany, geology, or astronomy, let her devote a little of her spare time to that. Anything that obliges the woman of middle age to go out of doors every day with some degree of motive and regularity, will prove a boon to her. A fad of some sort has tided a woman safely over the reefs and shoals of middle age, and brought her into smooth waters of health and comfort, when doctor's prescriptions have been inadequate to her needs. A woman who lives in a rural neighborhood should study its birds and its flowers. In such study, if lovingly pursued, there is much real culture, and a broadening of general intelligence. Nature study at any period from youth to age, is very rewarding in its results.

The woman who is dissatisfied with her present state, intellectually, would find good returns and great profit by taking up some congenial study in a group, rather than by herself. This is why plain women, busy most of the time with sewing, cooking, and the care of children, so very much enjoy the opportunities given them by the little informal, or the larger and more formal Woman's Club, in their vicinage. It is easier to work in a group than in solitude; easier to advance when others are interested, than when one moves alone.

* * *

You who are conscious that the years are hurrying away, and who look with desire toward the pleasant land of books, waste no more of time's precious elixir in futile complaint, but begin at once, somewhere, somehow, to remedy what troubles you. If you really want to build from the foundation, sit down in the evening and go over the children's lessons with them. A great deal of useful information in a condensed form, is wrapped up, as a pill in sugar, in the text-books the children study. Still another good plan, and a very interesting one if you can carry it out, is to enter on a course of correspondence with a friend whose tastes are similar to your own, writing and receiving weekly letters, when there is no particular reason for writing letters, women lose the art, and when the occasion comes, find the thing a burden. Merely scrawling notes and postal cards is not letter writing, which is always an elegant accomplishment, and may be the means of rare pleasure and much culture.

The Lord's Day, Sunday, or the Sabbath?

By which name shall we call it, our pearl of days, God's best gift? Sunday has established itself in popular usage, and it is rather an affectation to drop it wholly from our speech. Yet as Monday, and Tuesday, and Wednesday are, Sunday is a heathen god's day. The sun's day! Yet, again, what have we in the world below more symbolic of God's great power and goodness than the sun? Let us be sunny Christians on Sunday. Sabbath conveys a tranquil idea of repose, of the cattle on a thousand hills, of rest, of the cessation of toil. Many of us love the title; we heard it in our childhood. It is full of sacred memories. We remember that God has said: "Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuaries." The Lord's Day has a peculiar beauty and appropriateness, indicating as it does, that the day is not secular, that it is set apart for worship, for spiritual development, for communion with God. When we seek for a better observance of the Lord's Day, we recognize the Lord's claim to the day in the very phrase. But whatever we style it, Sunday, or Sabbath, or the Lord's Day, let us remember the good day, and keep it holy, and serve the Lord with gladness in its happy hours.

WASHING-DAY

Monday is my washing-day,
Dolly sits and see me rub;
It is just the nicest play,
When my Dolly's clothes I scrub;
When I wash in mother's way,
In my little cedar tub.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—M. V. Why not ride your bicycle if you enjoy the exercise? Whether or not cycling is still extremely fashionable is of no consequence.

—DEANE. A very courteous man always knocks at a closed door, his wife's, just as any one's else, and always rises when a lady enters a room.

—LEONA. A traveling costume is always in good taste for a wedding ceremony. But a girl-bride looks prettiest in a white gown, and the gown may be inexpensive and still beautiful.

Sunburn and Freckles

WHILE the athletic girl is not so much in evidence as she was several years ago, she is still much oftener met than her opposite, who is afraid to let the sun shine on her delicate skin. A girl's mother will tell her that, she, in her day, knew young ladies who never went across the threshold without a protecting veil. Indeed, young ladies in the sixties sometimes wore three veils at once, rather than have wind or sun impair the smoothness and freshness of their complexion. To day a girl is not ashamed to be sunburned. In summer days she goes often without gloves, and has brown hands and arms, and considers herself better looking for the healthy color. Sunbonnets, with deep brims and capes to the shoulder, are effectual preservers of a delicate skin, and in some parts of the country, they are always in fashion. But it is also a fashion in some parts of our land for girls to go about bareheaded. If you are troubled with freckles, you may try the benefit of certain home remedies. Nothing is better than lemon juice and glycerine in equal proportions. If the skin is very thin, use the lemon juice sparingly. Glycerine is irritating to some skins. It should always be very much diluted. A veil of reddish brown or white chiffon is better for the skin than a black or blue veil. If you would have a really soft and beautiful skin, wash your face with buttermilk before going to bed at night. For pimples, a physician's prescription is precipitate of sulphur, one dram, tincture of camphor, one dram, mixed by a chemist with four ounces of rose water. A girl whose skin is dry, should use cold cream at night.

The Bride's First Loaf

Among the droll stories which New Jersey generously furnishes the world, is one in which figures the first loaf of bread made by a young wife. It proved to be uneatable, but lest her feelings should be hurt, the bride's husband hid it away in the bushes of the back yard, while presumably a loaf of baker's bread was placed upon the table. The bread was found by a band of highwaymen who used it as a missile, and tried to hold up a passer-by. Fortunately, their scheme failed and they were arrested, as they deserved to be. If every prospective bride should be compelled to furnish as a certificate of her readiness for marriage, a loaf of wholesome, light bread, it is probable that the domestic sky for the first year would have fewer clouds. There is nothing easier than to make good bread if only one knows how. Thousands of illiterate women make perfect bread. Equally good bread is made by women who have carried off honors at college. When one does not know how and has not the ghost of an idea in what proportions to combine her flour and her yeast, how long to knead her bread, how to gauge its fitness for the oven, and how to bake it, the thing becomes exasperatingly difficult. Every girl, whether or not she expects to marry, ought to know how to make a loaf of bread. If she does not know how, she should take pains to learn.

The Stay-At-Home Sister

A correspondent writes feelingly about the daughter whose duty it is to stay at home and help with the housework. Her sisters go out daily to work, and each earns a salary; besides having regular hours for rest, their Sundays and their evenings are at their own disposal. The home-keeping sister is busy all day, and is washing dishes all the evening. In the intervals of work and of standing on her feet, she has mending and making to do for the others. On Sunday she has to help with the dinner, and it is late before she gets through. She never has any remuneration that is at all regular, and, in fact, the home people fancy that she is very well paid because she has her board and clothes. But is she? I read between the lines that the writer of this letter feels herself unfairly treated, as indeed she is, since she is doing her full share to save expenses in the family, and since her efforts leave her sisters free for self support, it would be a good plan for them or her parents to give her a regular weekly sum to be entirely her own. One of the sisters in turn should relieve her on Sundays, so that she might be free to attend Church. If all took turns in getting the Sunday dinner, none would have a reason to complain of hardship. The sister who works in the household, is entitled to every privilege that the others enjoy.

"DARE TO BE A DANIEL"

Quarterly Temperance Lesson, By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

WE should certainly get some light on the "Boy problem" from the group of four boys whose characters we are to study to-day. They were about sixteen years of age. They were in a strange land. They were schoolboys. Their religious training made them very different from their schoolmates.

Much is said about the "gang spirit" in boys by those who are to-day giving attention to the solution of the boy problem. It is the dawn of social and benevolent organization in later life. Almost every boy belongs to some sort of "society," and proudly wears a ribbon, a button or a pin, as a badge. Out of 1034 boys questioned about this matter, 851 were members of societies organized by themselves, others were members of societies organized by adults, such as the Junior Christian Endeavor, or the Loyal Temperance Legion. In "Daniel's Band" we see the gang spirit at its best, and therefore the faithful study will be a help to those who would know how to get on with boys. Every gang must have a leader, and Daniel was that leader. The four boys: Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah, for such were their Hebrew names, were not in the King of Babylon's school by choice. It was a civil service school, and the likeliest boys in the land were selected by the King's officers to be trained for official positions. The broad spirit of the school management is shown in the fact that sons of captives were eligible to such scholarships.

Notwithstanding the high honor placed upon them, the four boys were not in accord with their environment and they determined on combining, and making an environment of their own. Apparently they did not object to the changes in their names—Daniel was renamed Belteshazzar; Hananiah, Shadrach; Mishael, Meshach, and Azariah, Abednego. These new names were all connected with the idol worship of the Babylonians. In all probability the names were distasteful to the four Hebrew boys. They seem to have yielded the matter of mere names, but there was something they would not yield: loyalty to their God. Wine and meat which had been offered to idols as the best to be had in the market, was daily set before the boys of the King's school. It was against the law of their God to partake of such things. And so they decided to unite in a request to Ashpenaz, the King's officer in charge, that he would let them have water instead of wine, and pulse or beans instead of meat. At first Ashpenaz demurred, saying, that if their health should fail, as he thought it certainly would under such a diet, he would be held responsible by the King. The "band" requested a ten days' trial of the beans and water. That was granted, and the melzar, or servant, was ordered to provide it. Perhaps the four boys were not called "The Hebrew gang" by the other boys, but in all probability they were given in fun some other name equally offensive.

Bravely the four boys stuck it out, and at the end of the ten days they came under the scrutiny of Ashpenaz, and he declared their countenances to be "fairer and fatter" than those of the boys who ate meat and drank wine. And so the band were permitted to continue their chosen diet. And they stuck it out for three years, until the end of their course in the school. Then they, with the other boys, were brought before the King for examination as to acquirements. And the record is: "Among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah." And more than this, as the King tested them he found them to be ten times wiser than the magicians and astrologers, the so-called wise men of his kingdom. The King did not understand that it was their God who had given them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom. Subsequently Daniel was made the King's chief counsellor, while the other three were set over the affairs of the province.

And all of this good grew out of a boy's league! Should boys of our day be forbidden to organize societies? Rather, let those who have anything to do with boys, recognize the "gang spirit," and even suggest societies and forms of badges. If Sunday School teachers had been wise in this matter, we should not to-day be mourning over the fact that boys have not been held by the Sunday School. Do not condemn nor ignore the "gang spirit," but sympathize with it, and direct it.

KING NEBUCHADNEZZAR HEARS THE MEANING OF HIS DREAM

Illustration and Application

Here we have the story of the first boy's organization on record, the first Young People's Temperance Union. Let us consider the organization, the pledge, the results.

1. Daniel's Band. One of the delegates to a State Endeavor Convention, a young business man, dressed in a natty rough and ready suit, every movement alert and eager, and telling of bottled energy within, came suddenly upon a red-faced citizen who evidently had been patronizing the hotel bar. Buttonholing the delegate a trifle unceremoniously, the latter said: "What are you fellers trying to do down at the meeting? You are—— temperance, I see by the papers. Do you think you could make a temperance man of me?" "No," replied the delegate, looking him over from head to foot with a keen glance, "we evidently couldn't do much for you, but we are after your boy." At this unexpected retort the man dropped his jocular tone and said seriously: "Well, you have got the right of it there. If somebody had been after me when I was a boy, I should be a better man to-day." And in order to get the boys we must get them together. The two great social needs to-day are: the study of reforms, the union of forces. While "one may chase a thousand, two shall put ten thousand to flight." "Two are better than one, and woe unto him that is alone when he falleth." Daniel himself, when necessary, dared to stand alone, and illustrated the vast influence of one wise and fearless man. But the strongest individualities are strengthened by union of their counsels, their courage and their cash. Every man and woman should be in some organization that fights the chief foe of God and man—the saloon—and these organizations should, at least federate. The proposal of the Society of Friends, to bring together for conference in 1906, all the divided forces of temperance, should meet cordial response. But most of all is it desirable to enlist in Loyal Legions, or other temperance bands for young people, the boys and young men, for the study of this and relative problems, under a purpose as firm and noble and courageous as that of Daniel's Band. What is first and most needed is knowledge. "Be sure you are right, then go ahead." It will be tactful and profoundly true to call these studies, "Patriotic Studies."

DANIEL AND HIS COMPANIONS PRESENTED TO THE KING

2. The Pledge. The devil tries to make boys think that signing a pledge is "signing away liberty." Let American boys remember that the Declaration of Independence was a brave "pledge" of "lives and fortunes and sacred honor," by which civil liberty was secured, not only for the United States, but also for many lands. And as the Declaration of Independence was a "pledge," so the pledge of total abstinence is a brave declaration of independence always, as in Daniel's case, against a foolish and harmful custom. The purpose of Daniel and his associates included food as well as drink, and the main objection seems to have been that both the meat and wine they refused to take, had been first offered to idols. One message of the lesson is, therefore: "Little children, keep yourselves from idols," that is, do not allow yourselves to put anything but God in the uppermost place in your heart, whether games or fame, or money or appetite or lust. There is an athletic suggestion here against the excessive use of meat, to which prosperous people are tempted. Better less beef and more beans. But the abuse of food is far less harmful than the use of wine and other intoxicants, because, while both harm the user, only the intoxicants drive a man to madness, to the peril of his neighbors and friends. While it is therefore mostly a man's own business what he shall eat, it is the business of the whole community to see that he be not tempted to drink what will make him a peril or a burden to all about him. And in his best moments, and especially in boyhood, before he has learned to like the drink, he should make a "purpose" and pledge that will make it impossible that he should "put an enemy in his mouth to steal away his brains," and make him the laughing stock or the terror of his neighbors.

While the Hebrew boys risked their advancement by refusing to drink, young men of to-day are just in the opposite position for a majority of the business establishments in the United States forbid drinking when on duty, and an increasing number will not employ anybody known to drink at any time, because the drink taken when off duty, continues to confuse his mind and unsteady his hand when he is on duty. England and Germany are introducing temperance education to bring up the industrial efficiency of their workmen. But it still takes great courage in many circles to stand for the right in this or any other matter. Everybody ought to see that it takes more courage to do right when nearly all one's associates will sneer, than to do something in battle or fire or flood which they will all cheer.

When the British torpedo-boat Thrasher struck on Dodman Reef and was torn open, the steam pipes of one of the boilers burst and the stokers were in instant peril of their lives in the scalding steam. Stoker Lynch managed to reach the deck in safety, but just then heard his chum cry for help, and plunged back into the scalding steam, shouting: "All right, Jim, I'm coming!" The rescuer groped his way to his chum, and bore him up to the deck, getting badly burned as he did so, but his only thought was of his chum. "Bear up, Jim, we'll get you through, dear old boy." But Jim died of his burns, and Lynch almost died of sorrow added to his own injuries. When Lynch got better, there was a parade of sailors before the Admiral. "Step forth, Lynch, and receive this first class Albert medal for conspicuous bravery." And his comrades crowned his honors with a hearty cheer. Some days after, a lady speaker to a group of navy stokers and others, used this story of Lynch's courage, as an illustration of moral courage needed in fighting drink and saving others. "Stand up, Lynch!" shouted his comrades, Modestly he rose, and as appeal had been made for pledge signers, he said: "I have not been a drinking man, but my temptations have been very great, and if I should become a drunkard, it would break my mother's heart. I should like to sign the pledge." He did so, and a hundred men signed with him. Thus he added a new act of courage to his record.

*International Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 17. Daniel in Babylon, Daniel 1:8-20. Golden Text: "Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself," Daniel 1:8.

The Shadow of the Chimney

BY REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON

"OH, I don't know. I think the church voted him nine hundred and fifty this year," said Mr. Wellman.

"Does he ever get it?" Donald asked a question that surprised the family, and they all laughed heartily.

"Well," he said as soon as he could be heard, "I know George Bright's father is one of the trustees, and he said Mr. Howard had paid in at the end of every year when there was a—a—deficit, anywhere from fifty to one hundred and fifty dollars. And George said his father scolded Mr. Howard for doing it, and said it was not good business."

"I should say it wasn't," Mr. Wellman laughed, much amused at Donald's shrewdness.

"But father," Donald persisted, "do you think it is good business to vote to pay Mr. Howard $950 a year and then allow him to make good a—a—deficit?"

"No, no, decidedly not. But—"

"If Mr. Howard were only a better preacher," broke in Helen, "people would pay better. He's too old-fashioned. He makes life too serious. We ought to have a younger man."

"You have one young man. I don't see what you want another for," Henry said, and everybody laughed again.

So the talk went up and down the table in banter and ridicule and criticism. Laura said something about one of the Sunday School teachers that made fun of a little harmless habit, and the whole family laughed as they never would if the teacher had been a guest at the table. Helen said something disparaging about the church prayer-meeting, to which Henry added a slangy assent, and neither father or mother corrected either the careless criticism or the irreverent comment, exchanging smiles with each other at the smartness of their children's remarks. Yet both Mr. and Mrs. Wellman, together with the girl Helen and Laura and Henry and Donald were members of Mr. Howard's church, and Helen was a member of the Endeavor Society, and this was one of the educated, respectable, well-to-do families in Clearville. When such table-talk is the habit with such families in Christian civilization does any one wonder at the lack of reverence shown by American boys and girls in churches, college chapels, and other places of religious observance? Or is it any wonder that young men continue to shrink from the ministry when they note how universally it is poorly paid, and how little respect or consideration are often shown to those who grow old or worn out in its noble service?

After supper the family scattered for the evening. The boys went upstairs to study for an hour, and then went out to visit a neighbor's boys. Helen and her mother went down town to a play, and Laura was joined by two other girls from the high school, who after studying together for half an hour went out to a card party for the rest of the evening. Mr. Wellman had some business accounts to look over and went into his little den off the library.

He finished his item of business and took down his personal expense book. Mr. Wellman was a very methodical man, exact almost to the point of being fussy. He knew to a cent where all his benevolences went and never failed to record every item in a particular detailed way. As he sits alone in the big house looking over this personal expense account, it is no impertinence for the reader to look down the page of the record and see how Brother Wellman spends what he calls his own money:

American Board, pledge for this year only	$ 25 00
W. C. T. U.	15 00
Y. M. C. A.	25 00
Hospital Association	20 00
Annual church pledge, due weekly, for Mrs. Wellman, myself, Helen and Walter	100 00
Opal Brooch, for Mrs. Wellman's birthday	100 00
Candy for Laura's party	10 00
Cigars (Anson's best)	15 75
[These were bought at Brady's forced sale at a bargain]
Theatre tickets for Mrs. Wellman and the girls	18 50
[This includes last month's opera]
Walter's and Donald's winter suits	40 00
Flowers for Helen's birthday	5 00
The Art Museum's choicest selections, printed in exquisite colors by Antoine	85 00
[This is an addition de Luxe, and one of a special edition limited to 100 copies]
Magazine subscriptions for the year	30 00
[Mrs. Wellman made this selection]

CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK

The Morning Register, by carrier	5 20
The Evening Record, by carrier	5 20
Expenses of summer vacation with Mrs. Wellman, Laura and Henry	425 00
[An itemized account extending over two months, and including hotel, carriage, and railroad expenses]
Athletic outfit for Henry, who is a member of the High School football team this year	115 00
[This includes some special apparatus used at home, and also a subscription to the boys' new club house in process of erection]
Banquet for the store employes last month	90 00
[Under this item are the words, "It pays to keep on the good side of the clerks"]
Subscription, campaign	250 00
Bethany Mission, last year, not to be renewed	50 00
Charade costumes for Helen and Laura	25 00
Spaniels for Henry	25 00
[A surprise to the boy]
Henry's school, including books, dues for club-house, etc.	198 75
Lunches down-town with business friends	86 40
[This item covers three months, and indicates expensive luxuries in the way of food. But Mr. Wellman believes in living well and never economizes on the table]
Club expenses for the year, including separate items of entertainment purchased for visiting business acquaintances.	235 00

"MELISSA HUGGED IT UP WITH A YELL OF DELIGHT"

These items are a few out of many others giving some idea of Mr. Wellman's personal expenditures. He is reported to be worth in the neighborhood of $250,000. It is well known to Dun & Bradstreet that Wellman's Clearville Department store is a large money-making concern, and Mr. Wellman is rated always in terms of six figures.

As he sits there in his den he is a living personification of self-satisfaction. Is he not generous to his family, a good giver to needy causes, popular with his clerks, and counted a public-spirited citizen by both morning and evening papers? He is the only man in the church to which he belongs who gives $100.00 a year to support the Gospel, and there are only two other men in Clearville who gave to the Chairman of the Committee $100.00 for campaign purposes. There is talk of Mr. Wellman entering politics another year, and the Register and the Record are already beginning to mention his name as an available candidate for State Senator.

He closes the expense account with a complacent smile, well pleased with the showing there, and leans back to dream awile over that possible senatorship. He sees no handwriting on the wall over against his use of the Lord God Almighty's money, but as he himself proudly praises himself, He who sits in the heavens holds him in derision as one of the sons of men who has had his opportunity and has stumblingly missed it.

* * *

The night wears on and Mr. Wellman falls asleep in his luxurious den. The clock strikes eleven. At that very hour, a shambling figure staggers around the chimney at Carter's Packing House Plant, and makes unevenly for the shack, inhabited by Mrs. Mahon, Melissa and Jimmy. A dirty fist rises over the unpainted boards, called a door, and a drunken voice demands entrance. Mrs. Mahon timidly asks the drunken man to wait. The door is opened, and the form of Mr. Mahon reels in, filling the close room with the fumes of the last saloon visited, which is under the shadow of the chimney around the corner.

Mr. Mahon is just back from the mines in the southern part of the State, where he has been employed as a derrick tender. Being drunk one night, he lets the skip fall on the assistant engineer's head, to the sorrow of that individual and to Mr. Mahon's ultimate discharge from the company. He is now back in the bosom of his family, to get spasmodic and occasional labor in the new Packing House.

He reels over towards the cot, and is about to fall heavily on it when Mrs. Mahon restrains him.

"Jimmy is hurt. Let him be."

"Put him on floor," says Mr. Mahon, and proceeds to drag at the dirty spread. Mrs. Mahon, assisted by Melissa, who now scratches and claws at her parent like any animal, try to pull him away. The drunken man raises his fist to smite them both, and Jimmy sits up scared into consciousness and swearing like a parrot. So the human tragedy around the chimney rears its menace up to heaven, towering over that physical structure, and flinging abroad over the sky of God's justice the condemnation on those who complacently use the gifts of God upon themselves, and contemptuously or carelessly raise the question, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

* * *

Chester Markham chose to call upon Mr. Carter at his house on the heights, instead of at the new office room down at the plant. The door was opened by a servant in livery, who took Markham's card and left him to wait in a reception room at the end of the hall. While waiting he had time to note the exquisite malachite clock and the rare cabinet of cloisonne over the high window.

At the end of ten minutes the servant came back and said Mr. Carter would see Mr. Markham a few moments, but matters of a pressing business nature would call him out of the house very soon.

Markham found the Packing House merchant seated in front of the desk in an office room off the hall. He greeted the missionary impassively, and Markham felt abashed.

"I am Mr. Markham, of the Bethany Mission, Mr. Carter. Mrs. Markham and myself have been with the Mission for two years. It is a great field."

He stopped, actually daunted by the cold look that Carter gave him, but a vision of Jimmy and Melissa and Mrs. Mahon gave him inspiration. "For their sakes!" he whispered to himself, and the next minute he poured out his heart's desire before the unresponsive figure in front of him.

When he stopped, Carter turned in his chair and pulled out a check book from the pigeon hole.

"You want money. I don't mind saying I don't believe in trying to help those people very much. They are too far gone. Their surroundings are all against them. Still I don't mind doing something. You understand there are no end of calls on me. My expenses are very heavy." Markham glanced up at one of Greuz's canvases that adorned the wall, while Carter was writing out the check. He knew enough about art from one summer spent in the National Gallery to know that such a canvas could not possibly cost less than $200,000.

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

New York's Best Store

is making every effort to extend its business to as far as the mails will reach. To aid us in our endeavors we offer the readers of this magazine the accompanying new style shirt waist 50 per cent. below its value. This we term a leader and is used as an advertisement to attract your first order. We are willing to sacrifice our profit and give you an exceptional bargain at the cost to manufacture, in order to become acquainted and have you communicate with us, as well as to place in your hands our catalogue, which explains how we can save you 20 per cent. on your purchases—barring no competition. We sell the finest goods at the lowest prices of any house in the country.

Our Catalogue is Free. Write for it To-day.

Samples sent.

No. 73. New Style Fall Waist, made from medium weight poplin in white, black or light blue, five clusters of three tucks in front, with fancy embroidered medallion between each, two side and box plaits in center of back, full sleeve with deep five inch tucked cuff.

Regular value, $1.50.

Special Price

$1.00

Agents Wanted to sell our Men's and Women's Made-to-Order and Ready-made Clothing.

Mention this paper and send us $1.00, enclosing 10c for postage, and we will mail you this beautiful waist. If you do not think it the greatest bargain you ever purchased, you are privileged to return and we will cheerfully refund your money. Our guarantee is—YOU MUST BE SATISFIED.

Established 1857 EHRICH BROS. NEW YORK. 6th Ave. 22d and 23d Sts.

REVERSIBLE Linene Collars and Cuffs

Have You Worn Them?

Not "celluloid," not "paper collars"; but made of fine cloth, exactly resemble fashionable linen goods and cost of dealers, for box of ten, 25c. (2½c. each)

No Washing or Ironing

When soiled, discard. By mail, 10 collars or 5 pairs of cuffs, 30c. Sample Collar or Pair Cuffs for 6c. in U. S. stamps. Give size and style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. P, BOSTON, MASS.

The Best Cooking Range

Sold for Cash or on Monthly Payments.

$10 to $20 saved

Freight Paid

Your money refunded after six months' trial if

Clapp's Ideal Steel Range

is not 50 per cent. better than others. My superior location on Lake Erie, where iron, steel, coal, freights and skilled labor are cheaper and best, enables me to furnish a TOP NOTCH Steel Range at a clean saving of $10 to $20. Send for free catalogues of five distinct lines, over 50 styles and sizes, with or without reservoir, for city, town or country use.

CHESTER D. CLAPP, 620 Summit Street, Toledo, Ohio.
(PRACTICAL STEEL RANGE MAN.)

BUSTER BROWN

We will send for a TWO-CENT POSTAGE STAMP to any address in the United States a sample of Buster Brown Scarf Pin or Ladies' Stick Pin, gold plated and enameled. Pin is over two inches long. Sample by mail TWO CENTS. Address

LYNN & CO., 48 Bond St., New York.

The Shadow of the Chimney

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 745

Carter held out the check and Markham took it, and the hot blood rushed over his face as he read the amount. He stammered out something as he rose.

"Sorry it isn't more, Mr. Markham. I've no doubt you are doing a great work. But my calls are very numerous, and my expenses very heavy, you understand. Good evening."

Markham walked down the velvet carpet, past the Carrara marble Hebe at the foot of the resplendent staircase, past the enamelled inlaid work on the doors of the reception room, passed the richly attired flunkey at the entrance, and had stepped out on the broad entrance stone, when a hand touched him, and he turned to see young Allan Carter. He held out something to Markham, and said without a sign of any particular feeling on his inexpressive face, "I would like to add a little to father's donation, Mr. Markham."

Markham stammered thanks, and said something about the university of which they were both graduates. Allan Carter replied briefly, and drew back into the hall. The servant shut the door, and Markham went down the steps.

When he was on the sidewalk he looked at the little roll Allan Carter had given him, and counted five ten dollar bills. With them and the check from Mr. Carter, he hurried back to Bethany Mission.

"Well," his wife cheerfully greeted him as he stepped into the little room, "I suppose you have the $2,000 we were talking about?"

For answer, Markham handed his wife the check. She exclaimed after reading it, "Fifteen dollars!"

"Yes, all of fifteen!" said Markham, gently. "And he said, Clara, that he didn't believe in helping those people very much because they were too far gone. He also added that their surroundings were against them. But in heaven's name, what kind of humanity needs help the most if it isn't the kind that's too far gone? And when it comes to surroundings, they are living on Carter's real estate, without sanitary necessaries, in hovels that we would hesitate to put a good cow into, and the air is so poisonous even geraniums won't grow over six weeks. And just think, Clara, of Carter's agent charging Mrs. Mahon $6 a month for the rent of a house that isn't worth $6 for the rotten boards and tin cans that hold it together. And then Carter sits in his parlor surrounded by the luxuries and art of Europe, perfectly content to let these people that belong to his parish just as much as to mine, rot like so much filth at the foot of his plant which they help to keep going. And he helps by his personal habits to keep alive the saloon and the liquor business generally. On his sideboard in the great dining-room I saw many decanters of liquor. And you know, Clara, in the Evening Record two nights ago we read of Mrs. Carter's reception, and a list of the champagne and wine was printed with their $5,000 banquet, the most fashionable gathering, the Record said, that the city has seen this season. And then he gives me his check for $15 to help save this humanity. I was tempted to fling it into his face!"

"Ernest, you are judging the man!"

"Well, Clara, if I am, I am willing to be judged. You and I have honestly and wholly, in the sight of God, as he knows, put our lives into this place to help save these people. But what can we do for them—what can we do for them, when their physical surroundings are so desperate; when the work they do in the slaughter-pens is so repulsive and brutalizing; when the saloon and gambling den lie in wait for them around the corner like wild beasts to tear what is left of them after their horrible day's work is ended? There is no spot on earth so like hell as this spot at the foot of this rich man's money-making establishment, and I am willing to let God judge if, when it is all over, I am more to blame for the conditions than the man who has the power in his wealth to change the conditions that surround these creatures."

Clara did not venture to reply, but a tear fell from her eyes as she looked at her young husband, who, for the first time since they had come to live at the Mission, was speaking out what had slumbered long in his study of the place.

The door opened suddenly, and Melissa's scared face peered in.

"Please, Mr. Markham, won't you come over over right off! Dad's trying to choke Ma, and he's broken Jimmy's cot, and I'm afraid——"

Markham rushed out and down the stairs and across the railroad tracks, followed by Melissa, her bare feet splashing through the filthy puddles, and arrived just in time to find Mr. Mahon pounding Mrs. Mahon's head on the floor in the midst of a miscellaneous collection of broken furniture, on the outer circle of which, with his head still bandaged, Jimmy sat and swore in such an unconcerned and methodical manner that Markham, even as he pulled Mr. Mahon off and seated him forcibly on the floor, shuddered at the sound.

The rest of the evening he spent in conducting Mr. Mahon to the nearest police officer, who put him through the usual grist of the police court and landed him in the jail, which was conveniently close by the saloon where Mr. Mahon generally got his drinks. It is a beautiful thing in the administration of our civilization that the jail and the saloon are quite close together. It saves embarrassing delays in getting the people into the one after they have been into the other.

Markham next day experienced a certain grim satisfaction in cashing Mr. Carter's check at a furniture store and getting for Mrs. Mahon a table, some chairs, and two or three other necessary articles. With the balance of the money he bought Jimmy some fresh fruit and Melissa a brand new doll.

When he told his wife about this purchase she shook her head a little doubtfully.

"But it only cost thirty cents, Clara, and Carter bought his daughter, so the Record said two days ago, a French imported doll that walks, talks, sings and plays the piano, for $300. I think I only evened up the doll business. And I wish you could have seen Melissa when I put the doll into her arms. It was one of those pink-cheeked, sawdust-stuffed things, but she hugged it up to her dirty dress with a yell of delight."

"Poor Melissa! What will become of that child, do you think?" Mrs. Markham's eyes filled with tears.

"I don't dare think too hard," Markham answered with a sigh as he began the day's work among the human wreckage that the storms of life had thrown up in tangled heaps on the surf-beat shore of the dreary bottoms, where the chimney now waved its black plume of smoke, and most of the time, as if in malicious purpose, flung it down and wreathed it around the shacks as if it would claim a dark possession of them and their contents.

Five years, eight years, ten years, swept by over the bottoms. Mr. Carter's plant was a money maker. There was no doubt of it. He was a captain of industry, and in several commercial battles he had more than once beaten his enemies into the dust, and incidentally ruined smaller concerns, and driven several men to suicide and worse. But as this is a part of the is renowned for making finest cake, hot biscuit and rolls. Made from pure grape cream of tartar.

CONCLUDED ON NEXT PAGE

ROYAL Baking Powder

Park Ave. Baptist Church Zobo Band, Paterson, N. J.

ZOBO

The Musical Wonder

Solid metal (brass finish)

Sample sent Prepaid for 25c.

Everybody Can Play It. No Musical Knowledge Required.

Illustrated Zobo Entertainments for Home, Church, Sunday Schools and Missionary Societies sent FREE with each instrument.

STRAUSS MFG. CO., 395 Broadway, Dept. 19, New York

VICK'S FREE OFFER

With every order for $1.00 worth of Bulbs from our Fall Bulb Catalogue, we will give, absolutely FREE a coupon good for 25c in Seeds, selected from our 1905 Garden and Floral Guide, which will be mailed you in January.

Bulb Catalogue FREE upon request. It contains descriptions and prices of Hyacinths, Tulips, Narcissus, and 200 other varieties of bulbs and plants. Quality is the first consideration in bulbs, and are known the country over as the Standard of Goodness. They Never Disappoint.

"VICK QUALITY" BULBS

JAMES VICK'S SONS, 160 Main St., E., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Why let Baby cry

this hot weather, when it can be kept cool, comfortable and well in a

Glascock's Baby-jumper

ROCKING CHAIR, BED, HIGH CHAIR AND GO-CART COMBINED.

Splendid for "the new baby," and adjustable for it as it grows older. Designed on special hygienic lines; beautifully made; very strong. Babies love the gentle motion. A wonderful help in the healthful care of your child. Physicians urge the use of Glascock's Jumper—the standard. Sold with or without Go-Cart attachment. Buy of your dealer, or of us direct if he hasn't Glascock's Jumper. 30 Days' FREE Trial. Write for catalogue and mother's manual, "The 20th Century Baby" FREE.

Glascock Bros. Mfg. Co.
Box 347, Muncie, Ind.

MONEY For Your Time

Trustworthy men and women in every community can make $5 a day or more explaining and taking orders for Dr. Day's Comfort Spring. No investment of money required. The Comfort Spring makes a perfect bed for ordinary use and the balanced lifting head piece makes it invaluable for invalids, asthmatics or aged persons. Every one says: "Just what I've been looking for," and wants it. This is your opportunity to make a good income and besides doing a real service to many in your community. Write today.

COMFORT SPRING CO., 481 Benton St., Joliet, Ill.

BOMOSA BEST GROWN COFFEE

BIG INCOMES

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK

for getting orders for our Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. For full particulars and Special Terms address at once Mr. P. B., care of

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289. 31-33 Vesey St., New York

Steady Incomes

For men or women, selling our Handkerchiefs and Dress Goods. We are large manufrs. Send 5c stamps for illus. catalog and full particulars.

Freeport Mfg. Co, 391 Broadway, N. Y. Dept. 56.

NEARLY 700,000 SOLD

CHURCH HYMNS AND GOSPEL SONGS

New Edition—30 cents, by mail; $25 per hundred.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.—Chicago-New York.

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

WANTED A few live, energetic persons to become associated with us. A rare chance. Write for particulars. Address,

THE NEW JERSEY MFG. CO. Jersey City, N. J. (Inc. 1890).

CATALOGUE FREE

Fall and Winter Catalogue containing everything in the Woman's Wear, mailed FREE. Write for it to-day.

Two of New York's Latest Style Waists for Early Fall Wear

Below we illustrate two special waist bargains. Select either or both. They will be sent to you with the full understanding and agreement that after you have received them, examined them and tried them on, if not perfectly satisfactory to you in every detail you may return them and your money will be refunded, including express charges both ways. You run absolutely no risk in ordering from SIEGEL-COOPER COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

The fact that we know positively that the two waists, illustrated and described below, are the greatest values ever before offered in waists, makes it possible for us to give the above binding guarantee.

No. 70 E. The Blossom Waist.

Made of silk-finished cotton poplin cloth, white only. An ideal model for early Fall wear. Beautifully tailored with cluster of pin tucks, forming a full blouse. Wide front plait, tucked and artistically silk embroidered; plaited back, newest shape sleeves, finished with tucked gauntlet cuffs. New turn over stock collar and bow tie. Cut extra full and long, open front. Sizes 32 to 44 bust measure. An extraordinary value. Price $1.00

Waist No. 70 E

$1.00

Waist No. 70 F

$1.95

No. 70 F The Gem Waist.

An extremely stylish and dressy model made of good quality albatross in white or black only. Just the waist appropriate for early Fall wear. Handsomely designed with round yoke front and back. Attached collar made of rows of hemstitching and German Valenciennes lace insertion. Beautifully shirred below yoke, forming full blouse, newest sleeves, deep cuffs finished with lace insertions and hemstitching to match yoke. In every respect a most charming and serviceable waist, offered by us as long as this lot will last for the special price of $1.95

THE BIG STORE A CITY IN ITSELF

We Have No Branch Houses — SIEGEL COOPER CO. SIXTH AVE. 18TH TO 19TH STS. — We Employ No Agents

NEW YORK CITY, N.Y.

CHURCH-WORKER'S

FREE BOOK OF MONEY RAISING PLANS.

"HOW TO RAISE MONEY" is the title of a valuable, instructive book just published, explaining many new and successful plans for raising sums of money, from $8 to $200, quickly and easily, without investment, for Churches, Schools, Aid Societies, Charity, or any other purpose.

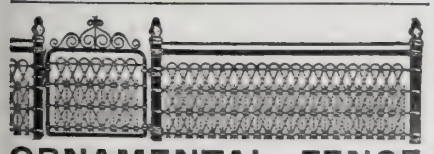
This book is sent Absolutely Free, postage prepaid, to interested persons. Address

SEND FOR IT TODAY.

WISCONSIN MFG. CO. Dept. 150, Manitowoc, Wis.



ORNAMENTAL FENCE

Cleverly combining Grace, Strength, and Durability. Moderate in cost. Sold direct to you. Catalogue Free. Box 302 KITSELMAN BROS., Muncie, Ind.

FENCE Strongest Made

See how closely it is woven. Sold direct to the farmer at factory prices, on 30 Days Free Trial. Your money back if not satisfied. Write today for free Catalogue.

COILED SPRING FENCE COMPANY
Box 47, Winchester, Indiana.

The Shadow of the Chimney

CONCLUDED FROM PRECEDING PAGE

programme of captains of industry, nothing else need be expected. The shacks at the foot of the chimney are the same old shacks. Mr. Mahon has finally drunk himself to death, and his body lies in the Potter's Field, and the saloon-keeper does not miss him, for there are plenty of other and younger men from the plant to take his place. Besides, Mr. Mahon was not very good pay of late years, owing to Mrs. Mahon's spells of sickness and her inability to earn as much as formerly at the washtub for her husband's drinks. Jimmy still lives with his mother in the shack, and, thanks to Markham's incessant care for him, he has of late years, helped to earn a little by basket weaving at the settlement. But he still swears terribly at times, and a noted surgeon who has been to see him, says the habit is mechanical, and is probably due to his accident when he was four years old. And Melissa; Melissa is fifteen years old, and her once pert, spiteful little face has somehow grown pretty, and Mrs. Markham is grave about it. Markham comes in one evening and tells her he saw Melissa drinking in a saloon. Mrs. Markham has a good cry. Next day she finds Melissa and brings her home to supper, and the two women spend the evening together, and when Melissa goes out she is crying.

After that the big flood. Up comes the relentless river, and its muddy waters swirl about the chimney, four, five, eight, ten, eleven feet and a half. The Mission building is a refuge choked in the upper story by as dreary a collection of humanity as ever huddled together and watched their possessions float down into the river.

Strangely enough the shacks do not all go out. The bunch near the chimney nearly all remain. When the flood goes down, great holes are found bored out of the sand, and several shacks have tumbled over into the holes. In Mrs. Mahon's front back yard is piled up a heap of tangled railroad ties, board sidewalks and a four-wheeled cart sticking up.

"The Lord be praised," says Mrs. Mahon when she comes to view her new possessions. "I have enough kindling wood to last me all winter. And Jimmy can fix up the cart and gather rags and old iron with it. Sure, and the flood is a fine thing for us!"

She, and Melissa, and Jimmy, dig out the mud and arrange the kindling close up to the shack, receiving from Mrs. Markham help to refurnish the house with needed furniture.

One day Mr. Carter and Allan come down to the plant to examine the damage. The engineer thinks the foundations of the big chimney have settled a little.

Carter walks out to look at it. He has always prided himself on his attention to details. He skirts the edges of several big holes and scans the chimney critically.

"I don't see any cracks, Richards," he says, walking around the shaft until he is standing on the side where Mrs. Mahon's shack is. She, and Melissa, and Jimmy, are hard at work cleaning up.

There is apparently no warning for what so terribly and unexpectedly happens. The shaft trembles just an instant, and then like one of the giant trees in the California forest it falls, crashing in a horrible line of dust and blood, red bricks over the bunch of shacks.

Allan is standing by the engineer, talking with him. After the first moment of stunned surprise is over, he runs up to the form lying on the edge of the great hole at the base of the fallen chimney. It is his father. Andrew Carter never moved. Death must have come instantly with that blow from a great fragment of the buttress that smote him down.

Markham and hundreds of others helped dig the bricks off the ruins of the shacks. They found Mrs. Mahon and Jimmy and Melissa, and Melissa's face was lying downwards and not disfigured much. Mr. Markham preached the funeral sermon in the Mission House two days after. Through it all, Mrs. Markham kept wondering if God knew after all what was best for Melissa. The great tragedy sobered the city. Men and women took up their burdens more gravely. But the bottoms were again covered with little buildings. In course of time a new chimney went up near the site of the old one. The plant resumed business. Money must be made, no matter if men do die. The wheels of commercialism cannot pause long over the human tragedy, else others will win in the mad race for success.

One day Allan Carter came down to the Mission to see Markham. He asked about his prospects, and gravely but intelligently put many questions. When he was gone, Markham faced his wife, who came into the room from a visit outside.

"Clara! Allan Carter wants me to take the position of Social Superintendent of the Plant, and suggest anything that seems to me feasible or necessary to better the condition of the people, and he will pay the bills!"

"It is the leading of God," his wife said. Markham rose and went over to the window. The new chimney was nearly finished. The men were laying the last row of brick at the top. And to Ernest Markham's vision it seemed to him the chimney suddenly changed into a great and beautiful spire, pointing the workers in the great plant to that heaven which men may sometime know on the earth if once they realize their relations to their fellow-men, and in the name of Jesus Christ establish the Brotherhood in the commercial life of the world.

[THE END]

An International Question

It is natural that the problem of immigration should attract the close attention and serious deliberation of home mission leaders, and in this connection it is significant to note that the attitude of the Church workers for community uplift, and for the Americanizing of the foreigner, is distinctly of the broad spirited and liberal minded type. This is plainly shown in an article in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, by John Willis Baer, Secretary of the National Presbyterian Home Mission Board, who characteristically declares that the whole question demands "team work" by the nations of the world, and energetically supports the proposition for an international conference and mutual agreement between all lands on the subject. Instead of placing undue emphasis on the menace of the immigrant invasion, he would meet it in the helpful spirit of the true lover of humanity, who clearly comprehends that "we must Americanize the immigrant, or he may Europeanize us—we must lift him up, or he may pull us down." Boston Transcript.

NO DIFFERENCE

Old People Just as Happy as Young

Age cannot wither nor custom stale the infinite variety of life.

When the right food makes one new each day there seems as much simple happiness when one is old as when young, but bounding health is the requisite, and right food produces that.

A happy woman of 77 tells her experience:

"For three years," she says, "I was greatly troubled with a nervous affection of the stomach, which at last brought me to such a condition that I could neither eat nor sleep with any sort of comfort. I grew very despondent and felt that my hold on life was very uncertain. It was difficult for me to find food that I could digest. My doctor kept me on a diet of rice for a long time, but it did not seem to give me any strength.

"I am glad that at last I decided to try Grape-Nuts food, for it has done a wonderful work for me. Before I had used up the first package I began to take a new interest in life, and I rapidly increased in health and strength. My stomach has regained its normal tone and in the two years that Grape-Nuts has been my only food, I have not had a sick day. I am 77 years old and Grape-Nuts has restored to me the pleasure of living. I am sorry I did not begin sooner to use it. I cannot praise it too highly." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

A 10 days trial is sufficient.

NONE but expert tailors touch your garment when it is made by us.

¶ Tailors who mould the cloth to bring out the good points of your figure, and add those indescribable touches which mean style.

¶ To get the custom effect that saves many dollars and pays enormous profits.

¶ Through our wonderful system you get it without leaving your home, and at prices lower than are asked for ready-made garments.

We guarantee to fit you or refund your money

FALL SUITS MADE TO ORDER $6 to $25

Nothing Ready-Made

Style Book and Samples of Materials Sent Free

Your choice of cloth from over 400 varieties. Ask for as many samples as you like.

Our Style Book shows you over 150 of the most popular fashions in New York, and tells you how we can fit you from measurements sent us by mail.

Visiting Costumes, $6.00 to $20

Tailor-Made Suits, $7.50 to $25

Separate Skirts, $3.50 to $12

Rain Coats, $9.75 to $20

Jackets and Coats, $5.75 to $25

We prepay express charges to any part of the U. S.

We Send FREE to any part of the United States our new Fall and Winter Style Book, showing the Latest New York Fashions, a large assortment of samples of the newest materials, and simplest rules for taking measurements correctly. Kindly state whether you wish samples for a Suit, Skirt, Cloak or Rain coat, and about the colors you desire, and we will send a full line of exactly what you wish.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York
Mail Orders Only. No Agents or Branches. Est 17 Years

Temple-Clasps

FIRE Away Those Nose Pinchers. STOP Being Annoyed by Old-Fashioned Spectacles.

Temple Clasps "stay put" so they won't fall off, yet so gently you forget they are on. No pinch nor pull anywhere. Beauties, too. Our book, "Eye-Logic," tells all about them and it's FREE.

BRIGGS OPTICAL CO.,
378 TRIANGLE BLDG., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

MAKES GOOD COOKING A PLEASURE

BY USING THE

$2 and Up Easy to Clean O-HI-O Combination Steam Cooker Baker

It Whistles

Guaranteed to save ½ per cent in fuel. Takes place of steamer, stove, oven, roaster, broiler, double boiler, etc. Cooks meat, fish, vegetables, pudding, custard, pies, cake, bread, biscuits, etc., all at same time. Has five compartments. Cooks 5 meals at once. Can be used in any room. Saves its cost in one month. Saves labor. Saves steam. Saves heat. Saves fuel. Saves time. Saves money. Saves health. Saves worry. Saves steam. Saves heat. Saves fuel. Saves time. Saves money. Saves health. Saves worry.

Handsomely Illustrated Catalogue FREE.

$1 Cook Book for 4 cts Postage.

WE WANT GOOD AGENTS.

OHIO COOKER CO., 727 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, O.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief for PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.

Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's the original. Sample Free.

GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY Newark, N.J.

LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE

No [illegible]

LE PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE,

LE PAGE'S GLUE STRONGEST IN THE WORLD

RUSSIA CEMENT CO., 104 Essex Ave., Gloucester, Mass.

THE MORMON PERIL

THERE'S a hydra-headed monster, with a much lamented power,
That is roaming through our country, "seeking whom he may devour."
'Tis the shameless Mormon evil, with its wickedness untold;
'Tis a spider, which the petals of a lily, white, enfold.

'Tis a wolf that, in sheep's clothing, searches for its human prey;
It is worthy of the loathing it is meeting with to-day;
For 'tis founded on the basest of humanity's desires,
And is fostered and promoted with a zeal that never tires.

Shall this element of danger longer threaten us with harm?
Could we see a burning building without sounding an alarm?
Shall the manifold petitions from the mountainside and plain,
And the warnings from the pulpit and the press all be in vain?

No! We'll stem this tide of evil by a firm, decided stand;
We will yet avenge this insult to the women of our land.
Strengthened by a noble purpose—our loved country to defend,
We will fight the Mormon Peril, yes, unto the bitter end.

Washington, D. C. E. G. QUACKENBUSH.

The Great Surrender*

WHEN men speak of surrender they generally mean a laying down of arms, and yielding to a superior force. It is not often a pleasant thing; it has sometimes been a thing as painful as death. It is a confession of defeat when victory had been expected; a yielding to an enemy hated more after the surrender than before. But it is an end of war so far as they are concerned; the surrendered men are at the mercy of the enemy, and must fight no more. But there is surrender in another sense. A girl wooed by a man of whose character she is uncertain, on that account, or for some other reason, is obdurate to his appeals. He urges his suit, but she resists. Suddenly, something that he does, or something that she hears of him, changes her attitude. She yields to his pleading, and surrenders. This is a different kind of surrender. It is a giving of herself to him, to be his in loving loyalty for her whole life. In both illustrations there is submission, and an end of resistance; but in the latter the surrender is one of affection and joyful confidence. It is this surrender that a man makes when he becomes a Christian. He may have misunderstood Christ; he may have misunderstood the obligations he would have to undertake; he may have doubted whether he would be accepted. But when the obstacles are removed, and he surrenders, his resistance is ended, and henceforth he belongs to Christ.

The surrender is one of education. It is the sinner who gives himself to Christ. Many people make a mistake about this. They say: "I am not good enough. I do this and that and yield myself up to sin. Christ would not accept me." But it is precisely one in such a case that Christ seeks. It is to save sinners, not the righteous that he came. The only thing that he demands, is that the sinner desires to quit, desires to be delivered. When there is that desire, Christ undertakes. Gough used to tell the story of a drunken man staggering into a temperance meeting. He was sorrowfully bidden depart. "Why," he asked; "I am a teetotaler. Why cannot I stay?" "You a teetotaler!" was the response; "you are drunk. When did you become a teetotaler?" The drunken man looked piteously from one to another, and said: "I signed the pledge half an hour ago, and I want protection; I want help, and I thought I should get it here." That is what the sinner comes to Christ for. Not because he has qualified by being good, but because he is bad and needs to become better. That is the glory of the Christian faith. It takes the worst and the vilest, and transforms them.

The surrender must be complete, otherwise it is of no account. When a man is suffering from a dangerous disease he consults a doctor. Perhaps he has been told to follow a certain course or he may have read up his case in some book and have chosen his own remedy. He gets no better and he summons another physician. This doctor says: "I can cure you if you will give your case into my hands. You must follow my instructions implicitly." The sufferer says he will, and the doctor throws his remedies out of window and tells him to take no more of them but trust entirely to him. If the sufferer yields, the doctor has a fair chance and can ask no more. It is this that Christ demands. If the sinner is sincere in desiring to be saved, he will yield. Gently and tenderly Christ shows him his duty. He may have to give up one and another sin dear to him as a right hand, may have to sever associations precious as a right eye; but what of that? His soul is at stake and his surrender to his Saviour requires obedience. By much tribulation, very often, men enter the Kingdom. Christ saves men from their sins, not in their sins.

Then the surrender includes service. The deliverance is so wonderful, so gracious, that the least the saved man can do is to testify to the power that has saved him. Even the doctors are glad of testimonials. Christ expects that we give him the praise for what he has done for us, and tell other sufferers of his power and willingness. It is not much to ask, but it is in that way that his kingdom grows. Every one can do it, and full surrender requires that they do. Thus surrender affects the whole man and the whole life. The surrendered man becomes a Christ's man or Christian. He is pledged to Christ's principles, which are to govern his life; he is pledged to Christ as his King, whom he must loyally serve.

* Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union. for Sept. 17th. Acts 9 : 1-22 ; Rom. 6 : 16-23.

The Glory of the Cross

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 736

of a minister's life is the fellowship of his church. Every pastor feels the kindly sympathy of his people's hearts. Their prayers for him have sent him again and again from the juniper tree to the heights of Carmel. Every pastor can say with Paul: "Ye are my joy and crown."

The Gospel's appeal is "What think ye of Christ?" When Tigranes and his wife were taken prisoners of war by Cyrus, they were sentenced to die. Tigranes pleaded that if he himself must die, the life of his wife might be spared. "What will you give for her life?" said Cyrus. "I will give my own life, if only she may live." Cyrus said: "She shall live, nor shall so noble a man as you be executed. You both shall go free." Tigranes with great exultation praised Cyrus. He lauded his magnanimity. But not one word of praise did his wife speak. "Are you not grateful to Cyrus?" he asked her. "I have not so much as thought of Cyrus," she answered. "Then of whom were you thinking?" "I was thinking of the man who offered to lay down his life for me that I might live."

My hearer, out of Christ, will you not to-day think of Him, who bowed the heavens and came down willingly to Calvary's cruel tree and there freely gave up his life for you?

"Let the GOLD DUST TWINS do your work"

Get the Original

Washing powders of various makes are as thick as blackberries in August, but is the only one that stands above the heads of all others. It is the World's Greatest Cleanser.

GOLD DUST

No soap, borax, soda, ammonia, naptha, kerosene or foreign ingredient needed with GOLD DUST. It will do all the work without assistance.

GENERAL USES FOR GOLD DUST | Scrubbing floors, washing clothes and dishes, cleaning wood work, oil cloth, silverware and tinware, polishing brass work, cleansing bath room, pipes, etc., softening hard water and making the finest soft soap.

Made by THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY, Chicago—Makers of FAIRY SOAP

A KALAMAZOO DIRECT TO YOU

At Lowest Factory Prices.

We will sell you, freight prepaid, direct from our factory any Kalamazoo Stove or Range on a 360 Days Approval Test.

Oven Thermometer

We guarantee, under a $20.000 bank bond, that there is no better stove or range made, and we save you from $5 to $40 on every purchase, because we save you all middlemen's, jobbers' and dealers' profits. We're manufacturers, not "mail-order dealers;" we own and operate one of the largest and best equipped stove factories in the world; we guarantee the high quality of our product and ship on trial.

WE PAY THE FREIGHT

SEND A POSTAL CARD FOR CATALOGUE No. 103.

Examine our complete line of ranges, stoves and heaters, note the high quality and low price and save from 20% to 40%. All Kalamazoos are shipped Freight Prepaid, blacked, polished and ready for use. All our cook stoves and ranges are equipped with patent Oven Thermometer which makes baking easy.

KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., Manufacturers, KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN.

We probably can refer you to pleased customers in your own neighborhood.

MELLIN'S Food For the Baby

The quantity of the food taken is not the measure of its nourishment. The quality is what counts. Many babies take large quantities of food and get a small amount of nourishment. Mellin's Food babies take a small quantity of food and get a large amount of nourishment. Send for our book "Mellin's Food Babies."

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Let Us Send You Our Book.

about good wheels and good wagons that will save you a lot of work and make you a lot of money—the

ELECTRIC STEEL WHEELS —and the—
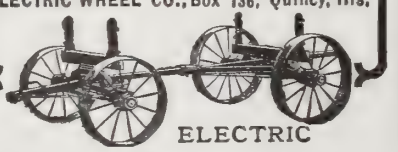
ELECTRIC HANDY WAGON.

By every test, they are the best. More than one and a quarter millions sold. Spokes united to the hub. Can't work loose. A set of our wheels will make your old wagon new. Catalogue free.

ELECTRIC WHEEL CO., Box 136, Quincy, Ills.



ELECTRIC

PUBLISHER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

"THE BATTLE OF LIFE" THIS BOOK FREE

This book has been prepared at a great expense by an eminent physician. It gives to the world a wonderful discovery, a new method of healing the sick. Treats of the causes and relief of disease, dwelling particularly on the diseases of the stomach and intestines, constipation, indigestion, appendicitis. Absolutely hygienic. No drugs. The first edition of this book will be sent out FREE. Bound in cloth, regular price $1.00. Write to-day mentioning the disease you are trying to conquer. (Send 10 cents for postage.)

(Your name will be retained in our possession. This is an honest announcement, no scheme. We want to get in touch with people who are troubled with disease, they will appreciate this work.)

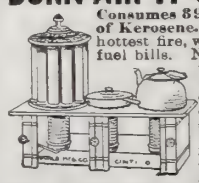
TYRRELL'S HYGIENIC INSTITUTE
Publication Dept. 107, 321 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK

Steel Roofing, $1.50 Per 100 Sq. Ft.

New painted both sides, most durable and economical roof covering for Houses, Barns, Sheds, etc. Freight Paid to all Points East of Colorado, except Oklahoma, Ind. Ter, and Texas. Prices elsewhere on application. $1.50 is price on our No. 15 Flat Sheets, 2 ft. x 2 ft. At $1.60 we furnish the same in corrugated or "V" crimped. We also furnish this in 6 and 8 ft. lengths at an advance of 50c per sq. Ask for our Free Illustrated 500 Page Catalog No. A. M. 373 on Lumber, Roofing, Wire Fencing, Hardware, Furniture Clothing and General Stocks from Sheriffs' and Receivers' Sales. We bought the Fifty Million Dollar St. Louis World's Fair.

Chicago House Wrecking Co., 35th & Iron Sts., Chicago

BURN AIR-IT'S CHEAP NO STOVE LIKE IT!



Consumes 895 Barrels of Air to 1 gallon of Kerosene. Penny fuel, burns like gas, hottest fire, won't explode, saves work and fuel bills. No coal, wood, dirt, ashes—no wick, no valves, easy operated, handsome, durable. Grand cooker, baker, quick work, cool kitchens. 18000 Harrison Wickless, Valveless Oil-Gas and Air Burners sold 1 month. AGENTS WANTED—$40 Weekly. GREATEST MONEY MAKER. Guaranteed, all sizes, sent anywhere, $5 up. Write, FREE proposition, 30 day trial offer. Address only mfgrs. World Mfg. Co., 5909 World B'ld'g, Cincinnati, O.

A Godly Statesman

By Mrs. M. Baxter

THERE were special purposes that God designed to accomplish in bringing young servant Daniel to Babylon; he needed a witness in this centre of the world's power, and it was Daniel who answered to the need. Many a young man who has been brought to Christ, and who is placed in circumstances of exceptional difficulty and temptation, has sought to change his lot, and to seek an environment more in accord with his transformed attes. But is this always the will of God?

Such an one has nothing to fear so long as he has not brought himself into circumstances of temptation. There is no position or circumstance, however acute or unprecedented, of which God does not hold the key. And one who maintains a close dependence upon God, and who lays the responsibility of his circumstances upon God who permits them, will always find that he gives him "places to walk among them that stand by" (Zech. 3:7). Daniel, with his three fellow-captives and friends, were chosen because of their personal advantages and princely origin, to receive an education in the college of the Magi, or learned men, of Babylon, which was, perhaps, in that day the chief seat of learning; but imbued, of course, with the paganism into which the whole world of that day had sunk. This was no easy position for such as would bear witness to the true God.

It was no small test for these young men. Their worldly prospects were made if they retained the favor of the king: it would be most impolitic to do anything to displease him. They were captives, not their own masters, and if they offended the king, they might, in some measure, involve their people; if they pleased him, they might influence him in favor of their people. But such considerations are the calculations of such as know only earthly wisdom, see all things on an earthly horizon.

Daniel knew God. He had probably become converted, either as a child, at the time of the revival in Josiah's reign, or through some who had been brought to God at that time. He may have known both Josiah and Jeremiah, probably Zephaniah and Ezekiel also, and he did not come to Babylon unaccompanied. The same God who had said to his father Jacob, on that critical night when he saw the ladder, "Behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee whithersoever thou goest" (Gen. 28:15), may have said to his young servant Daniel, the same words.

Thus Daniel had no need to fall back on his own resources. He knew that it was not by accident, nor yet by the will of man, that he found himself in Babylon; he could be nowhere but by the will of God, whom he recognized in all which happened.

By the power of his Spirit, God gives understanding (Isa. 11:2-3), and he gave to Daniel and his three companions knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom. But Daniel had a special gift not imparted to his friends: "Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams." And yet we see from chapter two, that he needed as much as his companions to pray to God to reveal to him the king's dream and the interpretation; so that we know this "understanding" was dependent on his being in touch with God. At the time appointed by the king he personally examined the students; and among them all none equalled the four Hebrews; "therefore stood they before the king." They had been true to God about the king's meat, and God was true to them; they all got Government appointments. "And in every matter of wisdom and understanding, concerning which the king inquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and enchanters that were in all his realm" (R.V.).

A National Help in the Servant Problem

WHERE every housewife, no matter where she lives, in the United States or Canada, can come and be told how and where to get a good servant, and where the servant will be helped to get a good place—the nearest approach ever reached to a reliable, national intelligence office. A new department, absolutely practical, which begins in the September issue of

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

One Dollar a year until October 1 next, then $1.25.

The Woman Who Knows More About Needlework than Any Woman in America

Will give a new five-page needlework department in every number of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. The newest stitches and designs in every kind of needlework; knitting, crocheting, tatting, embroidery, drawn work, lace work, etc., will be given—and with stamped patterns, too, of every piece.

The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mme. Lavina
Chief Instructor

You Can Learn Dressmaking By Mail at Home

Hundreds of the best dressmakers in the cities took our Home Study Course in Dressmaking, and today they are making thousands of dollars a year clear, from their business.

By our Home Study Course in Dressmaking you can learn everything possible to be taught by any school.

You learn to cut, fit, drape, trim and finish any garment of lady's apparel. We teach you to cut and fit by measure—the method of the best modistes—no charts or patterns—but real dressmaking so you can make your own dresses, or those of friends and customers, in the most approved, up-to-date styles.

No previous experience or preparation necessary. A tape-line, yard-stick and scissors all the tools you need. No class work—we teach you personally—give you every point you need to know step by step until you master it perfectly.

You can complete the course in much less time than at any other school or apprenticeship.

Hundreds of our pupils are making from $15 to $50 a week, and they are independent and conducting a business of their own. You can manage your own business and earn large profits without having had any previous training or experience.

Our beautiful color-plate catalogue of the oldest dressmaking school, with more students than all the other schools combined, is sent Free. It is worth having. Send for it and testimonials.

Columbian Correspondence Schools, 355 Globe Bldg., Des Moines, Ia.

DON'T SHOUT!

"The Morley"

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials.

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E,
34 South 16th St., Philadelphia

GINSENG

Detailed information and instructions regarding cultivation, etc., of the choicest American Roots and Seeds, at lowest prices, help you towards successful growing, and get you highest market prices for your crop. Send stamp for illustrated book of 32 pages.

NORTH AMERICAN GINSENG CO., Station C, Louisville, Ky.

GOOD CAUSES HELPED

The following sums have been contributed by our readers for the support of the worthy causes mentioned below:

Bethesda Home
Ida & Augusta Lawrence..... ...10 00

Any Good Cause
Capt Wm Lyons..... 5 00
Mrs J C Master 2 50
Mrs C Bergstrom.... 45
Miss Jennie Jamison 50
E A, Hardy, Neb.. .. 3 00
Mrs Wm Pentecost . 20
——, Henniker, N H. 50
Miss M P Benedict .. 25

Bella Cook
Mrs J Taylor . 50
Mrs J M Smith . . 2 00

Rose H. Lathrop
Patient, Sonyea, N Y 1 00

Foreign Missions
In Lord Jesus' Name, Bennettsville, N Y. 1 00
Friend, Venedocia, O 5 00
Friend, Matteawan, N Y 25 00
G W Van Nortwick..10 00
Mrs C W Tourgee .. 2 00
Friend, Vermont . 5 00
John Kendrick. 1 00
Mrs Susan Smyser (Rev John Dube) .10 00
Mrs Susan Smyser (Rev John Paton 10 00
Mrs Julia H Miller (Rev John Paton) .15 00
An Iowa Subscriber (Rev John Paton) .10 00
Mrs Susan Smyser (C Beals for houseboat) 5 00
An Iowa Subscriber (Moravian Mission, Labrador)..... .10 00
An Iowa Subscriber (Rev M r House, Turkey) 10 00
An Iowa Subscriber (Rev R Wodehouse, South Africa) 10 00
An Iowa Subscriber (Rev W O Johnson, Corea).....10 00
An Iowa Subscriber (H Joseph Medical Mission, Persia)....10 00
An Iowa Subscriber (Mary Sharp, Liberia, Africa)..... ..10 00
An Iowa Subscriber (Rev A R Stark, Peru) .10 00
An Iowa Subscriber (Rev Z S Beals, China)..... ...10 00

Home Missions
Westervelt Burger.. 50
Friend. Vermont ... 5 00

Span.-Amer. Gospel Fd.
G S, Milwaukee, Wis. 3 00

Prison-Gate Mission
Mrs Susan Smyser... 5 00
Catharine Shee 1 00
L R B, Waco, Neb.... 3 00
Henry Austin ... 1 00
Mrs Clara Bennet ... 2 00
Mrs Julia Billings... 5 00
Mrs B Mooney. 2 00
An Iowa Subscriber.10 00

F. P. Wiley's Wk. in India
Mrs Susan Smyser... 5 00

Rev. H. Loomis, Japan
An Iowa Subscriber 10 00

Work Among Eskimos
(REV J H ROMIG)
Mrs Annie Gravatt 1 00

Jerusalem Lepers
In Lord Jesus' Name, Bennettsville, N Y. 1 00

Pundita Ramabai
Mrs M E Price..... 5 00

Rev. G. F. Herrick, Turk'y
Mrs Susan Smyser .10 00

Rev. Nicholas Zamora
S P Melville 1 00

Mayesville Institute
Mrs Susan Smyser .10 00

Miss Shattuck
Mrs McMillan, of Leavitt St Cong'l Ch, Chicago, Ill ... 5 00

Invalid Child'n's Home
An Old Reader, Louisville, Ky 1 00
Friend, Lake Basin, Mont 5 00
Mrs Susan Smyser... 5 00
Mrs A R Sayre..... 5 00

Leper Colony, So. Amer.
Mrs Susan Smyser...10 00

Hull House, Chicago
An Iowa Subscriber 10 00

Steele Orphanage
An Iowa Subscriber 10 00

Jacob Riis Settlement
An Iowa Subscriber. 10 00

Lepers in India
(MISS REED)
Friend, Lake Basin, Mont 4 00

Relief Wk. Among Poor
E F Merriman . 4 00
Mrs B I Snowe 5 00

India Earthquake S'ffrs.
Mis M T Stevens .. 2 00
Mrs Amelia Kurtz. . 2 00
Mary E Peebles.... . 3 00
J J Markel 5 00
S Clelland and wife.. 5 00

Dr. W. T. Grenfell, N. F.
Annie Lyons 2 00

C. N. and P. Sch., N. C.
Mrs Susan Smyser..10 00

F. Hotel for W'k'g. Girls
Reader, Thornville, O 5 00

E. Olsson's Work
H Farnsworth..... 1 00

Rev. & Mrs. K. S. Stokke
(CHINA)
Gabriel Fedde..... 5 00

N.Y. Gospel T. Cam'pn.
Friend, Matteawan, N Y..... ... .10 00

Living Waters Mission
An Iowa Subscriber.10 00

Rescuing Chinese Girls
Mrs Susan Smyser . 10 00

Y.M.C.A. Wk. in Japan
Mary E Peebles . .2 00

Ga. State Industrial Col.
Mrs Susan Smyser... 5 00

Mrs. Anthony
Mrs H N Freeman... 1 00
——, Philadelphia, Pa 25
P H Anderson.. . 1 00
J J Walton 1 00
J W Kurtz 2 00
I B K, Taneytown, Md 1 00
Miss Blanche Kleber 1 00
Frederick Blume..... 1 00
Amy Blume 1 00
Frederica Blume. ... 1 00
Universalist Brother, May's Landing, N J 1 00
Reader, Red Bank, N J 2 00
F C Rosendale. 1 00
Mary F Hackman 3 00
Mrs Emma E Clark.. 2 00
I Patterson..... ... 5 00
Mr and Mrs L Nones. 2 00
S H C, Roaring, Spring, Pa 1 00
T N Parrish 1 00
Rev Charles Renaud. 1 00
Fred Merck 1 00
F D Clement 1 00
Mrs A Sunbury and Mrs J C H 2 00
Mrs Susan E Barrows 5 00
S A Lowrance.. .... 1 00
Mark Hobart 1 00
W. Jeffersonville, N Y 1 00
Amos M Shank 1 00
Mrs Essie A Beathon 1 00
Arthur L Griffiths... 1 00
Lewis Hooff 5 00
Mrs M E Drew..... 25
W A Miller . . . 1 00
Sarah E Goldy.... . 1 00
——, Brocton, N Y. 1 00
C M P, Brooklyn, N Y. 2 00
Mrs N P Watson. ... 5 00
Friend, Park River, N Dak.... .. . 1 00
Mrs E E Boyd..... 5 00
L R Price 3 00
S B T, Brooklyn, N Y 1 00
C E Tripp 1 00
Mrs France B and Miss Lulu C Palmer 2 00
Robert Doyle ... 10 00
Mrs Wm Anderson . 1 00
Miss L Sterling 1 00
Ella A Spangler.... . 1 00
W S Gaffney 10 00
Jennie Van Ham.... 35
H E Keeler..... 1 00
Mrs C W Barr..... 1 00
E A R, Newark, N J. 1 00
Rev S Dailey 1 00
——, Essex, Ia..... 25
T Hunter..... 25
Annie Hampton 2 00
Mrs Mary E Meeker 25 00
Mrs E C Osborn 1 00
Mrs Wm Holton..... 50
Mrs S E Pope..... 3 00
S C S, N Y City ... 1 00
Mr and Mrs J H Thompson..... 2 00
In Christ's Name, Kenton, O 2 00
Friend, Ridgeville Corners, O.....1 00
Mrs W G Parke 10 00
H F Crapon 2 00
Mrs Mary Weimer.... 1 00
O A Larson 1 00
Mrs James Hall 1 00
Mrs George Tolley... 1 00
H P Tompkins. . 1 00
An Old Subscriber, Esperance, N Y. . 1 00
W H Toy..... 2 00
J M A, Phila, Pa.... 1 00
M C D, Moscow, Idaho 1 00
Mrs Sallie Taylor.... 1 00
Mrs C G D 5 00
Margaret Jeffry.... . 1 00
Miss Maude Mahar.. 1 00
John E Hanna.....10 00
Mr Crosby and Mrs E Wendell... .... 10 00
Miss Theresa Kalisch 5 00
Mary and Clara Mitchell..... 5 00
Mrs W and Harold Nicholas 20
——, Cambridge, Mass 30
A Christian, Philadelphia, Pa..... 25
H S D, Baltimore, Md 25
Miss Grace H Dodge 75 00
J W Akins 10 00
A Christian Brother, New York City.... 1 00
Wm T Fulton..... 1 00
John P Herman..... 2 00
Mrs S A Pettigrew & daughter..... 5 00
Friend, N Y City. ... 3 00
Mrs Thomas Tucker. 2 00
Mrs James H Bird. . 1 00
M, Bedford, N Y..... 2 00

The Prison-Gate Mission

RECENTLY two men called at the office of the Prison-Gate Mission. They are foremen for a large contractor in New York. Both were ex-prisoners who had given up crime and were now employed in honest pursuits, supporting themselves and families. They came to thank the Mission for those whom it had fed, sheltered and given employment.

"When we came forth from prison a few years ago," they said, "nobody extended to us a helping hand or offered to find suitable employment. Had there been such an organization as the Prison-Gate Mission in existence, it would have saved us many heart-aches."

An ex-prisoner came to the Prison-Gate Mission Rooms recently and asked to be given a chance to get on his feet again. He had led a wayward life for several years, but was now done with it, as it only brought sorrow and bitterness to his soul. After attending to his bodily needs, he was invited to the inner room, where he was prayed with and led to pray for himself. This ex-prisoner's prayer was touching in the extreme. After asking God to forgive him his many sins, he said, "Lord, please give me one more chance—just one more chance—for I am sick of my bad life." He was in "dead" earnest, and trembled with emotion as he uttered these words. For years he had been an outcast from home.

"We found him employment," said Chaplain Munro, the Superintendent, "and we are glad to say he is doing well. This man would have been back to prison again, were it not for the help given him by the Prison-Gate Mission. But his case is only one out of many. The Mission comes personally in touch with from six hundred to eight hundred ex-convicts a month.

The Superintendent of the Prison-Gate Mission frequently speaks in churches, schools, and before Young Men's Christian Associations, on various aspects of prison work, but especially the restoration of the ex-prisoner. He will be glad to respond to calls from pastors and others, as far as he is able, during the coming fall and winter months, delivering addresses on the intensely interesting subject, The Restoration of the Discouraged Prisoner, and the story of the Prison-Gate Mission and its work.

Contributions of money to carry on the work of saving and restoring the ex-prisoner may be sent to Andrew A. Knowles, Esq., Treasurer, 33 Wall Street, New York, or THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Cast-off clothing, shoes, etc., which will enable the Mission to clothe the needy discharged prisoners until able to help themselves, may be sent to the Mission headquarters, No. 150 Baxter Street, New York City.

OUST THE DEMON

A Tussle with Coffee.

There is something fairly demoniacal in the way coffee sometimes wreaks its fiendish malice on those who use it.

A lady writing from Calif. says:

"My husband and I, both lovers of coffee, suffered for some time from a very annoying form of nervousness, accompanied by most frightful headaches. In my own case there was eventually developed some sort of affection of the nerves leading from the spine to the head.

"I was unable to hold my head up straight, the tension of the nerves drew it to one side, causing me the most intense pain. We got no relief from medicine, and were puzzled as to what caused the trouble, till a friend suggested that possibly the coffee we drank had something to do with it, and advised that we quit it and try Postum Coffee.

"We followed his advice, and from the day that we began to use Postum we both began to improve, and in a very short time both of us were entirely relieved. The nerves became steady once more, the headaches ceased, the muscles in the back of my neck relaxed, my head straightened up and the dreadful pain that had so punished me while I used the old kind of coffee vanished.

"We have never resumed the use of the old coffee, but relish our Postum every day as well as we did the former beverage. And we are delighted to find that we can give it freely to our children also, something we never dared to do with the old kind of coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum Coffee contains absolutely no drugs of any kind, but relieves the coffee drinker from the old drug poison.

There's a reason.

FUNDS EASILY RAISED FOR CHURCHES
WITHOUT DONATIONS OR EXTRA EXPENSE TO ANYONE
BY THE LARKIN CHURCH-AID PLAN

A simple, effectual, co-operative way to raise money for Churches, Sunda Schools and Societies for any desired purpose. Heartily endorsed by Pasto and Congregations wherever tried.

Through an appointed church-committee, each member regularly buys h Soaps, Toilet Articles, Coffee, Teas, Spices, Extracts, other Food Products, etc at regular retail prices.

$500 TO PAY OFF DEBT

We give $20.00 worth of Larkin Products for $10.00 so one half the tot sales, or 50c on every dollar's worth sold, goes to the church. If, in a congreg tion, thirty-five families each buy but $2.50 worth monthly through the Com mittee, the church makes over $500 a year. All this is simply the result c co-operation—it is well worth trying. We help start the plan.

Larkin Products are absolutely pure, of the highest quality, and are know everywhere.

Write for Application-blank No. 104 and complete information.

Church Aid Dept. Larkin Co. Buffalo, N. Y.

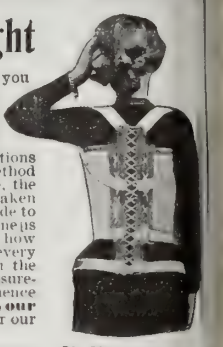
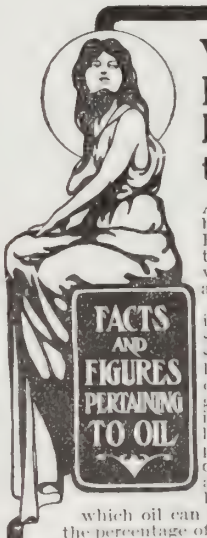
Crooked Spines Made Straight



If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble, you can be relieved in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who relieved himself of spinal curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. The scientific and medical world is amazed at the work being effected. Noted physicians in prominent medical institutions and in private practice are endorsing it. The Sheldon Method relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is invigorated and strengthened, all soreness taken out of the back, the cartilage between the vertebræ is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed and the spine is straightened. There is bright hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. The appliances are being sent all over the world. Each one is made to order from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction, or refund your money at the end of thirty days' trial. Write for our new book giving full information and references.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 207 Ninth St., Jamestown, N. Y.



Valuable Information Pertaining to Oil

A new, Free, copyrighted book, by Otto G. Tague, Editor of THE OIL NEWS, the recognized oil organ, will be mailed to any address.

This book gives detailed information that all persons interested in oil should have. It tells how leases are obtained; how companies should be organized; how companies in which stockholders lost money during the past three years were organized and mismanaged; how money was lost; the only manner in which oil can be produced profitably; the percentage of profits; gives data as to cost of obtaining leases, drilling wells and operating same—in fact, contains reliable information that leaves the reader fully posted on the production of petroleum and the profits to be made therefrom.

This Book is Free for the Asking

A postal card will bring it. It offers nothing for sale, but is given as a souvenir for the purpose of increasing the patronage of THE OIL NEWS.

OTTO G. TAGUE, Editor The Oil News
319 Opera House Block, Lima, O., U. S. A.

9.95 Buys This Large Handsome Nickel Trimmed Steel Range

without warming closet or reservoir. With high warming closet, porcelain lined reservoir, just as shown in cut, $13.95; large, roomy oven, six cooking holes, body made of cold rolled steel. Duplex grate; burns wood or coal. Handsome nickel trimmings, highly polished.

OUR TERMS are the most liberal ever made. You can pay after you receive the range. You can take it into your home, use it 30 days. If you don't find it exactly as represented, the biggest bargain you ever saw, equal to stoves retailed for double our price, return it to us. We will pay freight both ways.

CUT THIS AD OUT, send it to us and we will mail you our large stove catalogue. 75 styles to select from. Don't buy until you get it.

MARVIN SMITH CO. CHICAGO, ILL.

STARK FRUIT BOOK shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's. Louisiana, Mo.

RHEUMATISM
Relieved Without Medicine

New Remedy Discovered Which Absorbs Acid Impurities Through the Large Foot Pores

A DOLLAR PAIR FREE

On Approval—Write To-day

Don't take medicine for Rheumatism, but send your name to the makers of Magic Foot Drafts, the great Michigan discovery which is relieving every kind of Rheumatism without medicine—chronic or acute—Muscular, Sciatic, Lumbago, Gout, etc., no matter in what part of the body. You'll get the Drafts by return mail. If you are satisfied with the relief they give, send us one dollar. If not, send nothing. You Decide.

Magic Foot Drafts possess the remarkable quality of absorbing from the blood the impurities which cause Rheumatism, relieving where everything else has failed. They are even relieving cases of 30 and 40 years' standing. They will relieve you. Send your name to-day to Magic Foot Draft Co., R A 2 Oliver Bldg., Jackson Mich. Our splendid new book on Rheumatism comes free with the Drafts. Send no money—only your name. Write to-day.

DENT'S
Toothache Gum

The only remedy that stops toothache instantly.

The only toothache gum that cleans the cavity and prevents decay.

Imitations do not do the work. Get Dent's Toothache Gum, Yellow Label. All druggists 15c, or by mail.

Dent's Corn Gum removes corns and bunions, 15c.

C. S. DENT & CO.
47 Larned Street, Detroit, Mich.

CLEAN CUT CAKE TIN FREE TO AGENTS
Flat thin knife cuts loose a perfect cake. $2
Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T
HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

PLEASANTVILLE TERRACE

Is Making Money for People All Over the World

Thoughtful, Conservative People Everywhere, in Every Walk of Life, are Investing Their Savings in Pleasantville Terrace.

HERE ARE SOME OF THE MANY EXCELLENT REASONS

PLEASANTVILLE TERRACE occupies the only desirable high ground near Atlantic City. Pleasantville Terrace is on the main line of the Atlantic City Railroad (Reading system) 11 minutes from the Boardwalk. All trains stop there, except express. See Atlantic City time table, Reading R.R.

Early investors have already nearly doubled their money. Pleasantville Terrace is 55 ft. higher than Atlantic City. No swamps; no malaria.

Atlantic City real estate values have grown enormously. The entire island was originally sold for less than $20 an acre—now its real estate valuation runs considerably over $92,000,000.

Beach front property is worth $1,000.00 a foot.

Atlantic City real estate has made millionaires of those who had the foresight to invest there in years past.

A lot 50 x 100, that cost $700, was sold a few months ago for $50,000. A property bought five years ago for $6,000 was sold a few days ago for $150,000. But Atlantic City has practically outgrown the boundaries of the island on which it stands. It must expand inland.

Franklin P. Stoy, Mayor of Atlantic City, says: "I regard Pleasantville Terrace as the natural suburb of Atlantic City."

We anticipated this several years ago by purchasing the General Doughty estate and laid out Pleasantville Terrace. If we had to buy this land now, we would have to charge many times present prices.

There are few investment opportunities like this anywhere, because there are very few tracts of ground in the country so well located, with so many natural advantages in favor of rapid development.

The lots are 25 x 100 feet, and range in price from $25. to $55. (according to location), payable in easy weekly or monthly amounts, within the means of any thrifty person.

We have purposely made prices very low, because we want everyone to build on their lots (although you are not compelled to do so). Houses are in great demand, and many lot-owners are turning their investment to immediate earning account by building houses to rent.

We definitely guarantee early increase in values and insure successful development of Pleasantville Terrace by offering special premiums to those who will build. Building operations are under way in every section. Thousands of dollars have already been spent in improvements.

Title is guaranteed. No mortgages. No taxes until 1906. No charge for deed. If you die befor lot is paid, we issue deed to your heirs, without further payments.

Whether you want to buy for a home near the country's greatest playground, or for investment, by all means investigate this proposition. Call or write for free descriptive booklet to main office, address below.

Selection is as good now as ever, because we have reserved some of the best locations for the late buyers. Free excursions weekly from Atlantic City to enable lot-owners to see improvements.

ATLANTIC CITY ESTATE CO.

Address Main Office:
1001 Drexel Building, Philadelphia.

VICTOR J. HUMBRECHT, President

Atlantic City Office: 937 Boardwalk

PERHAPS you have never eaten Nabisco
Sugar Wafers? If not, life still holds for you
one of her chiefest pleasures.
Nabisco remind you of honey, of sun-kissed fruit,
of candied rosepetals,
of a thousand enjoyments whose pleasant recollections are gathered into one sweet reminder—Nabisco.

Flavors: Chocolate, Vanilla,
Lemon, Orange, Mint.

FESTINO—An original conception in the shape of an almond shell with a filling of delicious cream—a sweeter surprise never came out of Nature's Garden of Spices.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT 1905 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 13, 1905

VOL. 28 — NO. 37. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Stereograph, Copyright, 1905, by Underwood & Underwood

SEE PAGE 758

President Roosevelt Leaving the "Sylph" to Descend in the "Plunger"

OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

E. E., Sheboygan, Wis. What are the salaries of the rulers of England, Germany, Russia, Spain, Austria-Hungary, Japan, and the presidents of Brazil and the Argentine Republic?

The King and Queen of England receive annuities for their support of $2,350,000. The king has also other sources of revenue bringing in about $500,000 more. All of the revenues of the Duchy of Lancaster belong to him. The German Emperor receives a salary as King of Prussia, of $3,852,770, besides the income of much private property. The Russian Czar has 1,000,000 square miles of cultivated land, besides gold and other mines in Siberia. His annual income is estimated at $12,000,000. The king of Spain receives $1,430,000, besides $600,000 for the support of the family. The ruler of Austria-Hungary receives $3,873,000. For the South American and Japanese statistics write to the legations at Washington.

C. K., Centralia, Wash. 1. How can I procure a copy of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, on the ownership of minerals in lands for the past thirty years or more? 2. Are the decisions of said Court classified or published in pamphlet form?

1. The decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court are published in bound volumes from time to time, which number about 190. Only a lawyer can use this source of information on the mineral laws. The laws themselves are printed as part of the United States Revised Statutes which are in three bulky volumes. I think (though I do not know positively) that the Land Office at Washington (Department of the Interior), publishes a pamphlet which contains the desired information. Write to "Secretary of the Interior." 2. The decisions of the Supreme Court are published as fast as they are made in pamphlet form, but only for convenience of attorneys.

G. H. Crawford.

E. P. T., Eddy, Neb. How long was Noah building the Ark?

There is no passage in Scripture upon which to base an answer, unless, as some commentators hold, Gen. 6: 3 be interpreted to imply that a respite of 120 years would be granted to mankind for repentance, before the Flood would be sent to overwhelm the wicked (See I Pet. 3: 19, 20).

Mother, Columbus, O. Where can I get anti-Mormon literature for the use of our club here?

You can procure the speech of Senator Kearns, and all the other necessary information, books, pamphlets, etc., free, by writing to Mrs. Schaff, President American Federation of Women, 3418 Baring Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Observer, Clinton, Ia., writes:

The question of closing our churches and Sunday Schools for a month or six weeks in summer, has been a matter of much observation. I find at the resumption of services that our numbers in both Church and Sunday School are very much diminished for a number of weeks, especially in the Sunday School. Fully two months are lost in Bible training. Pastors, when absent, should supply the desk, as was done a few years ago. Their own salaries are not stopped in vacation. "The son of perdition" takes no vacation, but he surely increases his harvest of souls when we relax our efforts.

Assuming that the preacher is entitled to his vacation, like other workers, that fact need not involve the shutting down of the entire spiritual and humanitarian machinery of the church. What would be thought of a bank or business concern that remained closed simply because some member or employee was off on vacation? Such a plan would mean ruin to the business. Pastor and trustees should arrange to have services in both church and Sunday School continue uninterruptedly, wherever possible.

C. L. S., Hamilton, N. D. I notice the moon is low in the south for a period, sometimes for a month, and sometimes for three or four months in succession. At other times, it is very high, setting in the northwest for a longer or shorter period. Also, when it is low in the south, the weather is invariably warm; and when it is in the north, the weather is sure to be cold. Can you explain, first, this apparent change in its relative position to the earth, and second, its effect on the weather?

The moon revolves around the earth monthly, and with the earth revolves round the sun yearly. If the plane of the earth's equator was exactly parallel to the plane of its orbit, and if the plane of the moon's orbit was also parallel (which it is not nearly), the path of the moon would follow the path of the sun, and, at every new moon, there would be a central eclipse of the sun, and every full moon would be totally eclipsed. The two planes are inclined at an angle of nearly twenty-three and a-half degrees, causing the sun and moon also to make excursions north and south of the Equator. It follows, therefore, that all winter new moons must be low in the south, and, of course, all winter full moons high in the north, the conditions being reversed during the next six months. To Question No. 2, I answer "not any."

Marathon, N. Y. Lewis Swift.

C. E. P., R. R. O., Havelock, Neb. Which is the national hymn of the United States "America" or the "Star Spangled Banner"?

"America" is the national hymn, and the "Star Spangled Banner" the national air.

Reader, Hackensack, N. J. Has anything been done towards selecting the twenty names to complete the first fifty of the Hall of Fame?

The University Senate of New York University, in 1901, decided to fill the vacant panels by the year 1905. Write to the secretary of New York University for further information.

S. C., Oakbowery, Ala. I knew the son of a good man to do a very bad thing. Have I done my full duty by talking to the boy, and gaining his promise to do better? Would it be likely to do more good to inform his father?

If you have reproved the lad kindly, and if he has been sincerely repentant, you have probably done your duty. If it is a fault of which, in your judgment, his father should be informed, why not persuade the boy himself to tell his parent? If a trivial offence, which need not to be reported, your silence may help him to do better in future.

A. K., Roanoke, Va. Please give some recent statistics regarding suicide.

Deaths from suicide in United States in 1890 were 3,932; in 1900, 5,498. Average suicide rate in various countries is: Saxony, 31.1; Denmark, 25.8; Austria, 21.2; France, 23.6; German Empire, 14.3; Great Britain, 6.9; United States, 3.5.

W. P., N. Y. City. What was the cost of wines and spirituous liquors consumed in the United States from 1880 to 1890, and what was it in 1900? How many gallons do each of the inhabitants, on an average, consume? Has there been an increase or a decrease per capita?

The available figures are:

1899, $ 973,589,080
1900, $1,059,563,787
1901, $1,094,644,155
1902, $1,172,565,235

Average at present, 19.48 gallons per capita; steadily increasing.

J. R. K., Los Angeles, Calif. One of the mottoes on the "royal standard" of Great Britain reads thus: "Dieu et mon droit" ("God and my right"). Will you please tell me when the motto was first used, and what "right" has it special reference to?

It was the parole or motto of Richard I, at the battle of Gisors (1198), and meant that he was no vassal of France, but owed his royalty to God alone. The French were beaten, and the battle-word was adopted as the royal motto of England.

B. G. R., Baltimore, Md. 1. Please let me have your views on riding in the street cars on Sunday. 2. Also, whom Cain married?

1. It should be avoided, except in cases of necessity or mercy. 2. Nobody knows. All guesses are mere speculation.

B. H., Berkeley, Cal. 1. When the tempter offered all the kingdoms of the world, did he expect to cease using his evil influence? 2. Also, what did he mean, since he had no kingdom to offer here on earth?

1. It was the final effort, and in it the tempter exhausted his resources. Throwing off all disguises, he attempted, by the splendid bribe, to accomplish his purpose and secure divine honor, but utterly failed. 2. Our Lord himself calls Satan "the prince of this world" (John 12: 31, and 14: 30), and he is to many "the god of this world" (II. Cor. 4: 4), having "the power of death" (Heb. 2: 4). In this sense he spoke of the kingdoms of the world as his. This last great temptation was an appeal to ambition, which makes us desire possessions, grandeur and power. Christ, however, has said, on another occasion, "My kingdom is not of this world."

C. D. T., Southern Pines, N. C., writes:

I notice in your issue of August ... your reply to E. M. G., West..., Mass., to the question whether a ... ever justifiable, you take the negative side. As deception is considered ... ing, I must differ. God looks at ... motive that prompts an action, and ... think it must be evident to every ... that, under some circumstances, ... deception may become a sacred duty ... when it is used to thwart the designs ... of the wicked. If one was among ... Indians, and could save his life by ... jumping behind a wall or stump ... hold up his hat, instead of his head, ... for his foe to shoot at—who would ... do it? Or if an insane person came ... into our dwelling with murderous intent, would it not be our duty to deceive him, if by so doing we could ... turn him away from his purpose. ... in other conditions of life we might ... have a holy motive to restrain the ... wicked and confer blessing upon the ... innocent.

That a ruse may be justifiable ... in certain circumstances is evident. The general question, however, as we understand it, has ... nothing to do with a mere ruse ... or stratagem, but with a plain ... untruth.

W. H. H., West Otis, Mass. Is it proper ... to say "a house full of company" ... or use it as one word (housefull), ... and if one word, would it be spelled ... with one or two "l's".

It may be used either way. ... used as one word, spell with one ... "l," preferably.

THE VILLAGE OF EDEN, SYRIA—(TRADITIONAL SITE OF THE GARDEN)

The tradition that the garden of Eden once stood here, originated in the extreme loveliness of the site, which is, however, of too alpine a character to render the locality probable. The ancient cedars are near: the hill on the right, on whose crest the village stands, as well as the other eminences, are part of Lebanon. Eden is literally an eagle's nest, placed almost between heaven and earth, like a lone sentinel on the everlasting cedars: above Eden rises a pyramid of bare rock. Vineyards, gardens, mulberry and walnut trees climb the declivities, watered by numerous rivulets and little canals; twelve kinds of grapes grow on the range of Lebanon; most of them are sweet, strong, and pleasant. Eden is the health resort of Lebanon. During the chief part of the year, mulberry trees clothe the prospect in every direction with a delightful verdure. As they are not cultivated for fruit, but for their leaves, from which a great quantity of silkworms are reared, they are pulled generally when the stem is about six feet high, and the small branches, or rather twigs, then burst out in most luxuriant foliage. An immense quantity of silk is thus raised in Syria.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. S. R., New York. Write to P... senger Traffic Manager, Chicago & Northwest... Railway Co., Chicago, Ill.

Inquirer, Germantown, Pa. According to ... latest official reports, there are now 1826 Y. M. ... A's, in North America, with a total membersh... of 381,982, of whom three-fifths are not connect... with any church.

J. L., Elkland, Pa. If your conscience tells y... that you are in a wrong business—one that m... lead others to do wrong, even in a remote sens... the best way is to discontinue it. We cannot ... vise in such matters, which must be decided ... the individual conscience.

Emily R., Metuchen, N. J. You are quite rig... The Christian Herald advocated intervention ... the United States in the Far Eastern war, in t... name of humanity, long before the first step w... taken by our government. When that step w... taken it received our warmest support.

L. B. W., Pine City, N. Y. It is a question f... the individual conscience and cannot be made t... basis of a general rule. There are good and b... plays; but in the main, the influence is antagon... tic to spiritual growth. Besides, we must co... sider the effect of our example on others.

M. E. R., Canandaigua, N. Y. The question ... one's occupation, in a very great majority of cas... must always be one that should be decided by t... individual conscience. If your calling interfer... with your spiritual growth; if it deprives you ... religious privileges; if it places a stumbling blo... in the path of others, then it would be wise ... change it as soon as possible.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 13, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

A SON OF THE DESERT

A DERVISH TYPE

A MOSLEM RELIGIOUS GATHERING IN TABRIZ DURING THE PREVALENCE OF THE PLAGUE

PERSIA SWEPT BY THE PLAGUE

By HANNAH Y. JACOB

EARLY in the spring of last year, pilgrims brought the cholera from Carbella, as "the gift of an Azrayil" (angel of death), to their relatives. The people scattered it far and near. For months it raged with deadly fury in various parts of the country and at different times of the year, visiting nearly every village and nook, and only sparing those who lived hygienically and ate clean food. It is said that nearly 180,000 people died of cholera in Persia in the year 1904.

Mohammedans consider it a religious obligation to deny the presence of any calamity, like plague, cholera or disastrous wars. They avoid telling people of the death of a relative or a friend. In the following conversations and incidents you will see that they consider it almost a meritorious act to tell lies about the prevalence of any epidemic or calamity.

I heard that my laundress' sister was ill with cholera. I said: "Fatima, how is your sister?"

"My sister is not ill at all; she just went out to do some marketing. Did anyone tell you she had that sunken named disease? (ignorant people never mention such diseases by their own names, being fearful of repeating Satan's name, especially in the dark). There is no such an illness in the city."

After the cholera had reduced Fatima's family to a small number, she said to me: "Hanim (lady) my face is black before you in denying the presence of that sunken named disease. I was fearful you might be frightened, as the consequences would have been unpardonable sin. Hakim hanim (lady doctor), have you heard of the cholera—I mean of that sunken named disease—in the city of Maragha?"

"No; tell me all about it," I said.

"That is why we Moslems," said Fatima, with quite an important air, "do not believe that that disease would ever come to this city. Well, they say, that just a few days ago in Maragha, an Armani (Armenian) young man was converted to Islam, and it was this way: This young man went out of the city for a walk in the fields. Suddenly, far off, he noticed a camel aimlessly walking and without an owner, and he walked towards the animal to take it home, thinking that some one had lost his camel. On getting hold of its reins, suddenly the camel spoke, and said: 'What are you doing? I am Cholera.' The poor Armani was much frightened, and did not know which way to run. 'I will kill you,' the camel said to the Armani. 'I was going to the city of Tabriz; but as they are having such a religious mourning for the martyrs, and feeding the people with pilow (a rice dish) and sharbet in the mosques, I have decided not to go there. But I will kill you, unless you become a Mohammedan, a true believer, and I will become your wife and you my husband.' And now they are man and wife and are prospering in the city of Maragha," concluded poor, superstitious Fatima. Once a rich hajy said to me last summer: "It is not possible that cholera should come to Tabriz (at the time of the conversation I was calling at his house treating his cholera-stricken daughter), because of our prayers and shedding so many tears, giving teas, and feeding the people with pilow. Our martyrs, Hasan, Hasan, Hasrat and Abas, have appeared to our devout men and women in visions and dreams, and have said that Tabriz has been pardoned because 'its people have done so much charitable work.' Why, just last week," he went on, "a woman saw in a mosque a man dressed in the sacred dress (green-colored girdle and blue turban) of Sayid. And he said to her: 'Tell the people: How long will ye cry and call our names? Tell them we have heard their prayers, and have prevented the disease from visiting this city.'

THE MOURNERS OF MOHARRUM—A STRANGE MOSLEM CEREMONY

The "White Shirts" in fantastic garb, passing through a Tabriz Caravansary

"Salam aleikoum, hakim hanim," she continued, "my coming is not due to any sickness at home. Not having seen you for two months, I was anxious to know how you have been through the terrible scourge."

"Thank you; we are well. I hope you and your family have been keeping well," I said. "Yes, we kept your orders in boiling our water and abstaining from vegetables and fruits. Imman Hasan's (martyr), love and consideration were great towards us. He interposed and interceded for us. Except some of our distant relatives, no one died among my immediate relatives. You notice that I have changed the kind of shoes which I used to wear. I have vowed, if cholera does not visit my family this year, I will wear the strictly devout Moslem shoes; but I could not induce my daughter, Zenat Hanim, to give up wearing Frangy (European) shoes and put on shoes like mine, at least while this sunken named is raging. People are blaming us women," she said, shaking her head, "and on the streets, devout men are constantly reviling us, and are saying that the Almighty sent this plague as a punishment, because our women are wearing such shoes Frangy (European) style."

"I am astonished at what you are saying," I replied. "God never cares what kind of shoes or what color or style of clothes we wear, or what kind of food we eat, or whether we eat at night and fast during the day. Our Father wishes and expects from us clean lives and hearts as well as lips, honest hands and hearts, not to tell any lie, not to steal, not to revile, not to hate. Do your books or your priests teach you what I have been just telling you?"

"No, we are taught nothing of the kind," she said sadly."

"Zahra, what is the matter with your clothes? They are all muddy," I said to a patient who had just come in.

"Oh, Hanim (lady) on my way here, near the bazar, cha (little bazar), the road is very muddy, and my eyes, you know, do not quite see the dry spots, where well-eyed persons jump from one dry place to another,

CONCLUDED ON PAGE 757

THE
AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY
Rev. F. DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

MORAL BONDAGE

TEXT: JOHN 11: 44:
"Loose him, and let him go"

NEVER was human leader in closer touch with his followers than Jesus Christ. He walked and ate and slept with his disciples. He was closer than that. He shared their joys and sorrows and privations. He set them an example of self-sacrifice. He never asked his followers to make any sacrifice which he himself was not willing to make. If they wept, he wept with them. If they were a-hungered, he starved with them. When he warned them that they might have to lay down their lives for his sake, he set them the example of martyrdom by yielding himself to the Cross. One of the greatest elements which binds a human heart to another heart is the willingness of man to make sacrifices for a friend or a neighbor.

Human Aid Demanded

But though Christ never asked his followers to make any sacrifice which he himself was unwilling to make, yet, as I study the miracles of Christ, I find that almost without exception, he sought co-operation from those whom he would help. He was willing to feed the multitude with a few loaves and fishes, but he made the disciples distribute the bread and the fish, and collect the fragments that remained. He was ready to give his disciples a great catch of fish on Lake Galilee, but he made them launch their boat out into the deep, and let down the net, and bring the fish to land. He was ready and willing to resurrect the dead Lazarus, but he called upon the bystanders to loose the grave-clothes which bound him hand and foot. Not until they obeyed could the brother of Mary and Martha go forth free. What Christ did of old, Christ is doing to-day. He is ready to save men, but he expects his disciples to help him in man's liberation; mental, financial, moral, physical, and spiritual. I want to show how we can aid in the emancipation of helpless men, as the disciples took off the grave-clothes of resurrected Lazarus to "loose him, and let him go."

Christ bids us help liberate the intellectual man who is struggling in his mental difficulties. He wants us to cut asunder the old bonds of prejudice with which they are born, and which are gripping them almost as powerfully as the officer's handcuffs hold the criminal by his side. He would have us not laugh at or sneer at or ridicule the doubter and the sceptic and the atheist. He bids us not hurl our taunts at the poor mental cripples, who, with hot, blistering feet, are painfully limping over the awful deserts of blighting agnosticism. But he bids us go to our brethren in mental or intellectual difficulties, and kindly and gently and lovingly, yet firmly, lead them out of the bogs and the quagmires and quicksands in which they have fallen, and in which they are struggling to-day. Oh the awful tragedy of being mentally blinded and being unable to get a right conception of God! Yet there are thousands of men and women who, by constitution of brain and intellect, are natural-born doubters. They suspect the sincerity of every good work, and therefore they naturally doubt God's goodness and love.

Prejudice to be Overcome

An incident in the life of Michael Angelo well illustrates how you and I have to continually run up against and overcome men's prejudices. The Florentine master had already chiseled some of his greatest pieces of sculpture. But, strange to say, there were a great many Florentines, as there are men in our day, who could not see any perfection in any picture or piece of statuary unless it was hundreds of years old. So Michael Angelo, to convert his critics, made a new statue. He then broke off one of the arms of that statue and kept it. Then he stained the rest of the statue and buried it under one of the old churches, and then had one of his friends find it. At once all the art critics of Florence gathered around this exhumed piece of stone, and declared it was one of the finest pieces of sculpture ever chiseled by man. "Oh!" cried they, "where can we find a modern sculptor able to mould a body like that?" After Florence had praised this statue for some months, Michael Angelo came forward with the broken arm of white marble which he had kept in his studio. He fitted it on the exhumed statue, and he declared: "I can make a statue as good as that. See, I have made this one myself! The broken arm is a perfect fit." His critics were confounded, as they well might be. But as I read that story, I did not condemn those Florentines as many have done. I said to myself: "Yes, those men who criticised the rising sculptor were natural-born doubters. There are some men who, by their natural mental make-up, find fault with everybody and everything. Therefore, we if are going to lead men to Christ, we must learn how to overcome the intellectual doubts, the intellectual scepticisms which trouble so many men concerning God.

And how many causes for doubts in reference to God we see everywhere. Here, for instance, are all the doubts men have in reference to the mysteries of the Bible. Was there ever a compass which needed to be surer or truer in the dark and almost impenetrable forests than the Star of Bethlehem, to guide the mental doubters out of the mysteries of God's providence? Here are all the mysteries of sorrow. The doubter, perhaps, has lost a little child or the mother of his children. He cannot understand why God took his loved ones. Shall we pass over these mysteries of sorrow with a mere wave of the hand? Here are all the shortcomings of Christians which blind the doubter's eyes. Perhaps some elder of a church has cheated him in a business deal. Shall not the doubter be talked to lovingly in reference to that matter, and shown how there have been Judases among Christ's professed followers at all times? Yes, Christ wants to draw to his arms those who are

Mentally Blinded

He would have us lead them as I saw the other day a boy leading his little brother of eight summers, who was blind in both eyes, across a country field. As I saw these two boys going past me, there were tears in my eyes for an especial reason. As they were passing, I was told that only a year before that little boy's eyes were as good as yours or mine. But his own brother, who was then leading him, while hunting one day, had accidentally discharged his gun, and shot his brother's sight away. "Oh, God!" I said to myself, "can it be that some of us, by our own sins of commission or sins of omission, have made some of thy children mentally blind to thy love? Can it be that doubters and sceptics and agnostics and mental antagonists to God, are resisting him to-day merely because we will not take away the bands which are blinding their eyes —because there is no one to uncover their eyes—as the disciples of old took off the bands from the eye-sockets of helpless Lazarus? Oh, God! to-day give us more sympathy for the honest doubter. Inspire us with holy zeal to try to scatter these doubts away whenever and wherever they are."

But as I go up to the opened tomb where slept the dead Lazarus, I find that not only was he blinded, but his movements were restrained. His resurrected body has its grave-clothes bound around the arms and the hands, the legs and the feet and the stomach, as well as around the forehead and the eyes. As I go on up and examine the man's bound hands and feet, I say to myself, "Yes, how much in symbol does Lazarus look as a man bound hand and foot with financial debt." The man in financial distress sometimes cannot make one move if he would. So I believe Christ's words, "Loose him, and let him go," have their application in reference to a financial liberation, as well as a mental or intellectual. How much of a financial liberation many people need but few of us have any adequate conception.

Financially Bound

Financial liberation is needed in the store. The temptations of business life are mighty. Here is a merchant who has been left an executor of a friend's estate. For years and years he has led an honorable life. But the hard times have come. The people who once bought his goods cannot buy them now for they have no money with which to buy. "Oh," he says to himself, "if I can only tide myself over this winter, I know everything will come out right." Shall he surrender? Shall he hand over to his creditors the store and walk out a bankrupt? Or shall he borrow some of the money of his friend's estate, and put it into his business? It is all well enough for you to denounce the misappropriation of trust funds. But supposin you were in that man's place, and your creditors wer knocking at your door, what would you do? I fea you might do just as thousands of men have done in th past, who have been bound hand and foot with th grave-clothes of debt You would be dishonest, as the were dishonest.

The Temptations of the Poor

Or take another view of the same subject. Suppos ing you are not a merchant, but a clerk or a laborer On account of the hard times, you have lost your pos tion in the store or the mine. Supposing you hav tramped the streets day after day, looking for wor and never have been able to find it. And then, sup posing hunger is beginning to gnaw at your vitals, an the bitter cold to send its chills playing "hare an hounds" up and down your back. What would yo do? You may have learned what cold and hunger are when, sometime you were out hunting or trampin through the woods, and you were lost. You remembe how you tramped on and on, until you became fain from lack of food, and perhaps your lips became swol len for water to drink. But there was no water, n food, no house in sight. How, then, did you look a life? Does a hungry man, a cold man, have the sam chance for virtue and honesty and purity, as a well-fe man and a warm man? Oh, my friends, if you and ever find a time when we can relieve some of these financial distresses, I believe we will take away a large per cent. of the crimes and the dishonesties of th world. Indeed, I know what I say is true. Most me are not dishonest for mere pleasure; but only whe they have become brutalized by hunger and bodily wants, and financial necessities. The majority of me are honest at heart.

This truth was forced upon me some months ago in a powerful way. I met one of the boys of one of the old farmers of my Bushhill church, where I preached fo two summers as a theological student, thirteen miles from a railroad. From being a farmer's son, he had worked his way through college, and was traveling through the country in a camping wagon, lecturing at the little towns and schoolhouses upon the "Anthracite Coal Beds of Pennsylvania." As a lecturer, that man had been everywhere. On the deserts, in the mountains, at mining camps and in railroad towns he had spoken. He had camped alone in ravines, and by Mexican dug-outs, and by Indian villages. "Were you never afraid of being attacked and robbed?" I asked him. "Never," said he. "I started out years ago believing that and that if you trust them they would not betray you. I have been among the cowboys, and met Indians on the desert, miles away from any human being, and I have never been molested. Furthermore, I have never carried a fire-arm, either gun or pistol. I never locked up my things. But I'd go away from my wagon for days at a time, and when I came back I always found my goods just where I left them. If you believe people are honest, and trust them, they will not betray you." So say I. From a rather varied experience, I feel sure that most people want to do right. If men do cheat, forge, and steal, inevitably you will find that they were first led astray because hunger, or cold, or financial exigency of some sort drove them to crime. God inspire us to help those who are without work to get work, and those who are without food and clothing to get food and clothing, and those who are in financial difficulties to weather their few months of financial storm. Help that man financially. Do you not hear the words of my text: "Loose him, and let him go"? God will save that man in financial distress, if you disciples will do your part.

Most People Are Honest,

We must save men morally, as well as help them intellectually and financially. I apply that word "morally" to all that is most vile and corrupt in human nature. I do not, however, apply it in the sense that you and I should go into the city slums and lift up the social outcasts, although their rescue should and must be done by the proper Christian workers. But I do apply it in the meaning that we should reach out a helping hand, and ke men, and women, and young boys and girls from sl ping over the precipices of moral ruin. In ninety-ni cases out of a hundred, this can be done, if we on place around the young folks the right kind of Ch tian associations.

Heredity and Environment

here are many influences which develop the moral lifbeside environment. I believe absolutely and emphically in heredity. The reason the domestic dog cires around two or three times before he lies down to sle at the kitchen stove, is because his wild ancestor in he eastern woods or on western prairie circled arnd in the same way to track down the leaves or thgrasses, before he lay down to sleep beneath the canfires of the glittering stars. The reason the Jew is e shrewdest and most successful buyer and moneylener of the world, is because for centuries he was doh-trodden by the Gentiles. The only means of livihood opened to Shylock was that of a trader an money-lender. But though I believe much in prena influences, I also believe much in environment. If yo and I place the right kind of associates about our yoig folks, we can save them for God if we will.

ow powerfully this truth came to me a few weeks ag Our last national holiday of Fourth of July was a vry busy one for me. I was working hard in my stuy, in order to hasten my departure for the country, wh a dear friend of mine called, and, against my prsting voice, carried me off on an automobile ride. Fmiles and miles we left Los Angeles behind, until weame to one of the great reform schools of our State. Th steady throb of the engine was stopped, and we entred the buildings, situated in one of the most romatic places I ever saw for a State reform school. Th flowers were there; the green hills were there; the hatest-fields and the orchards were all there. But as I vnt through that institution my heart grew sick, for I sd to myself: "Nature, in all her beauty is here; buchild-life, in all its sinfulness, is here also." Then I said again: "Supposing one of my daughters should be taken out of her Christian home, and, in the most critical time of life, be compelled to associate with these wayward girls, how would she turn out? What chance for good would she have? Ah, little, very, very little chance!" And so, my friends, if by the help of the Holy Spirit, you and I are going to save the young people, we must throw about them the right kind of Christian companionship. We must woo them to the church fellowship. We must make our young people's meetings so attractive, that the saloon and the billiard-parlor and the dance-hall and the low theatres cannot successfully beckon them for six nights of the week, and we preach to them only on Sundays. We should cling to the young folks of our cities. We should go after them and hold to them all the time. The young people of your church who never invite the strangers to their houses, or visit them in their rooms, or arrange semi-social gatherings for them in the church, will never have the new-comers crowding their services.

Sickness an Opportunity

But, lastly, I remark, we must try to liberate helpless men during their time of physical infirmities, as well as during their time of physical strength and good health. Of all times during which we can most appeal to helpless man, the best is when he is lying upon an invalid's bed or in times of agonizing sickness. Sometimes a strong man or woman is not always susceptible to kindness. But once let the strength leave the arm, once let the brow become hot and feverish, once let the stomach refuse to retain its nourishment, and then, the slightest kindness, as a rule, will bring tears of gratitude to the eye and words of thankfulness to the trembling lip. But though the sick-bed is the greatest and best of all pulpits over which to preach, how few of us ever embrace the opportunity to minister there in God's name as we should!

"Why do you not spend your summers in Asheville, or the Adirondacks, or in Colorado, or in Redlands of Southern California? Are they not beautiful places?" I ask you. "Yes," you answer, "but I cannot stand the sick people. Wherever you go in these places, you find them there, weak and pale. Coughing, coughing, coughing, appalling coughing, is continually heard on all sides. Sickness is to me very depressing. Why, I dislike to look even at the windows of a hospital. As for going through a hospital, I would no more do it than I would enter the operating room and see a surgeon cut off a man's leg." But, my friend, did you ever stop to think that as others are sick, so some day you may be sick? Then will you not need comfort? Week in and week out, some of these invalids have to be in bed with no callers. Yet, by their very sufferings, these sick people are in just the right mood to reach up and take Christ by the hand, if you will only show them how.

Bound by Sin

But, before I close, I bethink myself of one fact. Perhaps you are not yet fitted to go forth on these errands of Gospel mercy. Why? Perhaps you are today hearing Christ's voice, which spoke at the tomb of the dead Lazarus, and yet you yourself are sitting or standing before me, bound hand and foot with the grave-clothes of past sins. Then, my friend, will you let me remove them in Christ's name? Will you let me take away that sin of the hand, that sin of the foot, that sin of the eye, that sin of the lip, that sin of the heart? Paul, the chief of sinners, was once bound as you. Will you let me, in Christ's name, speak unto you the words of hope? Then, like the good Ananias of old, I will say unto thee, blinded with sin, "Brother Saul, brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, whom thou hast seen on the Damascus road, hath sent me that thou mightest receive thy sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost." In Christ's name, your eyes may be opened. Then you will be ready for his service. Will you here and now consecrate your life to taking off the grave-clothes which are binding sinful men, as you yourself were once bound helpless in the vise-like grip of sin?

PERSIA SWEPT BY THE PLAGUE

CONTINUED FROM THIRD PAGE

A PERSIAN LADY

avoiding the dirty water and the mud. I implored two ladies who said they were 'going to the bath' to get hold of my hand for just a few steps. They became quite angry that such an old poor-sighted woman should detain them, and ask them besides to do such a thing. May Hasraty Abas (one of the martyrs) bring my fate upon their heads and make them stone blind," she cried, "so that their own kin and family may forsake them."

"Oh, Zahra Nana (Mother Sarah) do not talk so," I interposed. "If our Heavenly Father punished us according to our deserts, the world would be empty; and besides, the women who treated you so unkindly do not know any better. Torat and Injil (Holy Bible) says that the love of God could only come to the heart of man through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Poor old Zahra sadly shook her head, and said: "What shall I say? I am like a donkey. I cannot read, and am driven by others through my journey in this world."

During the cholera, the Armenians gathered in council, and one of the white-bearded elders said: "Those of us who are old, remember how, many years ago, when this city was stricken with cholera, some one went and brought the hand of St. Stephen, and immediately the disease left. Let us bring the hand of the saint from Maco" (a city of four or five days' journey).

After several days, a messenger brought news that "the hand of St. Stephen is approaching the city; come and meet it." A great procession was formed. The procession was headed by a crucifix wrought in gold and mounted on a pole. Then came the hand gloved in some kind of metal, also lifted high on a pole, and followed by the priests and choir chanting in the ancient Armenian language. The Martyr-Saint would have been ashamed to have seen all this fuss—shall I say worship—paid to his supposed remains. Thousands of people, Armenians and Mohammedans, kissed the hand. Cholera at that time had abated greatly; but after this kissing and carelessness, the disease broke out anew.

One of the Russian scientific societies had sent two physicians (one a lady) to inoculate and treat cholera patients gratis, and supply clean bedding and clothes. The Moslems could not understand why the Russians or any other non-Moslem nation, should be so kind as to give them financial assistance, or try to mitigate their condition. They thought that there must be a selfish motive at the back of it. Therefore they circulated the story that the Russians, "our ancient enemies, have brought poison and are killing the Mohammedans." So the Russian doctors are reviled and stones thrown at them on the streets, so that they do not go out without guards to protect them.

A MOHAMMEDAN SACRED PICTURE

Abraham sacrificing his son Ismil. Angels pleading for Ismil's life

Last summer, during the cholera an Armenian merchant of my acquaintance was taken ill with the disease in one of the Mohammedan villages. Before the breath of life had left him, Moslem villagers put a rope about his ankle, dragged him through the village outside, and threw the body in a ditch. A Moslem would not defile himself by touching a living non-believer, much less a dead one.

Hospitality in the East is a part of the life of the people. A farmer when he sows his seed, while burying it in the bosom of the earth, says, filling his hand: "This is for the birds; this is for the guests; and this is for strayed domestic animals." Months before the ingathering of the harvest, preparations are made for unexpected guests and visitors. As the harvest is expected annually after sowing and cultivation, likewise the visitors and guests are expected and anticipated.

We used to live in a large village, where a much frequented road passed right in front of our gate. My grandfather used to sit there and decide many lawsuits from the surrounding villages, and many strangers used to be invited by him to rest for the night. Often he would send my uncle, my brother, or a servant to get hold of the bridle of the strangers' horses, and persuade them to come down and rest. Their feet were washed, and sometimes their soiled clothes also. My grandmother in the morning, when taking out food for the day, would take a few handfuls more, and she would say: "This is for the unexpected guests." I am sorry to say that this beautiful trait of hospitality in the East is slowly but surely waning, and is being displaced by selfishness and the love of money.

When I was in America, being a stranger, I was often entertained hospitably and was made to feel at home, without any expectation of return. I think the Americans are the most loving and hospitable nation on earth.

I feel quite sure that America one day will wear the grace of hospitality of the ancient East, while the latter is selling her honor for greed and money.

Tabriz, Persia. HANNAH Y. JACOB

AMONG THE LEPERS OF SURINAM

MANY readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have contributed to the support of the Christlike work that Mr. Henry T. and Mrs. Weiss are doing among the lepers of Surinam, in Dutch Guiana, South America. A few days ago Mr. Weiss called at this office to express his thanks for their timely help. He begged that we tell them how grateful he is, and say how much more he has been able to do for his afflicted people since the money reached him. He has come here to report progress, and to appeal to the people of the United States for funds to continue his work.

He says that not only has he been able to enlarge his premises, but has erected a large bath house with connected dispensary, and to set up an apparatus which was sorely needed for the destruction of infected clothing and bandages. The roads and paths around the settlement have been cemented, so as to get rid of the sand and gravel that afforded a breeding-place for contagious germs. The new house has been named Bethany. The Stars and Stripes wave over it, for it was built with American lumber, and was sent to Surinam in sections.

There are now 250 lepers in the Institution, but there are three thousand in Surinam, and pleas are continually being made to Mr. and Mrs. Weiss to receive patients who have heard of the kindness and attention paid to the inmates of the Home. The noble, self-denying missionaries shrink from no service that can relieve the sufferers. More than all, they preach Christ to them, and many who have no hope of recovery in this world have taken hold of him, and are rejoicing in faith that when their years of suffering come to an end, they will be received into that land where there is no more pain.

So earnest and so pathetic are the requests for admission, that are necessarily rejected for lack of accommodation, that it has been decided, if Mr. Weiss' mission to the United States gains sufficient support, to erect a new hospital on the banks of the Surinam river. There is an eligible plot of land near the present Institution that may be obtained for a small sum, and on this a building could be erected that would enable the managers to better segregate the patients, while receiving a larger number.

The accompanying photographs were taken shortly before Mr. Weiss left the Home on his tour. They show a number of the inmates, and their teachers and attendants. The small group represents a morning class of the younger patients, who are learning to read and write and sew. Owing to the stiffness of the fingers, they make slow progress, but they are patient and cheerful. They say pathetically that not until they came under Christian care did they ever know what affection was. Never had anyone said to them "I love you," or manifested any interest in them. It is little likely that any of them will grow to maturity, but their sad little lives in the Home are cheered and brightened beyond thei poor conceptions. Their work takes their thoughts o their pain and relieves the tedium of their lives.

DR. AND MRS. WEISS, AND A GROUP OF NURSES AND PATIENTS

A MORNING CLASS IN SURINAM

In the larger group Mr. and Mrs. Weiss are shown with three of the nurses. The patients around them ar some whose appearance has not ye grown repulsive. But under thei clothing there are horrible sores tha need to be dressed twice a day. Th man on the extreme right, holdin his cap, was born in Holland. H went as a soldier to Guiana, but be came a coachman, and was greatl liked by his employers. He prove most trustworthy and industrious One day the fatal marks appeare on his body and were at once diag nosed as leprosy. He was reporte to the Government Committee, ap pointed for the purpose, and, afte examination, was pronounced a leper The shock almost unhinged his rea son, and even now, though gratefu for the attention he receives, he i often overwhelmed with distress. H has two boys, whom he is not permit ted to see. He tells how they clung to his knees when he left them, an begged him to stay with them.

The man with the full beard is als a Dutchman. He has a record o thirty years' service; at first in the army, and after wards as a policeman. He has become a Christian and recognizes the blessing it has been to him to be re ceived into the Home. "God took pity on me," he said, recently, "but for this affliction I should never have come here, or given myself to Christ."

It would be a long story to tell the history of these lepers. They have each their sorrowful experience. Their case is hopeless, but its worst pain has been alleviated in the Home. Compared with the lot of those who have not Christian kindness and attention, it is a happy one. Though they cannot be cured, their suffering is relieved, and they are led to Him who can support them in pain. No praise is too high to give to the devoted missionaries who have consecrated their lives to the care of these sufferers. It is the glory of Christianity that it fills the hearts of its followers with pity for such as they, and that it prompts them to the self-sacrifice that in its highest form the Master displayed when he laid down his life for sinners. Their service is dreary, but their reward will be great when they come into the presence of Him who said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto these, ye have done it unto me."

THE PRESIDENT'S SUBMARINE TRIP

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has again shown his fearlessness, as well as his intense interest in everything that pertains to our navy, by going down under the icy waters of Long Island Sound in the new nautical wonder, the submarine torpedo-boat Plunger. While he did not quite equal the hero of Jules Verne's famous romance, who went twenty thousand leagues under the sea (in the mind of the author), he had a trip that was thrilling enough, for the boat at one time dove clear to the bottom and rested a moment upon the sahd.

Several days before actually making the descent, he had been invited to inspect the new craft by her commander, Lieutenant Nelson, who is an expert and enthusiast on everything that relates to torpedo-boats in general and submarines in particular. The President was asked by the lieutenant if he would not like to take a ride with him toward the bottom, and the President started at once to accept the invitation. A member of the Cabinet, however, at once interposed, and persuaded him that his life was too valuable to his country to be risked that way in a boat that was little better than an experiment. The President reluctantly gave up the trip for the time being. A few days later Lieutenant Nelson gave a demonstration of the workings of the strange craft near the yacht Sylph, and the manœuvres were eagerly watched by Mrs. Roosevelt and the other members of the President's family. So successful were the evolutions that she was convinced that the President might make the trip in safety. Mr. Roosevelt had been held in check by his unwillingness to cause his wife any anxiety.

When word was at last sent to the Plunger that the President would take the submarine trip, the crew were greatly elated, and went busily to work getting things shipshape for their distinguished visitor. It was a gusty day, and a northeast wind drove the sea into jets of spray over the bow of the launch Dart as it bore the President from the Sylph toward the Plunger, that rolled its shiny back in the turmoil of the waves like a monster porpoise of steel and iron. As soon as the President climbed aboard, the submarine, accompanied by the naval tug Apache, headed toward that stretch of water that lies between Oyster Bay proper and Long Island Sound. The water is here between thirty and forty feet in depth and was regarded as a good place to make the first dip beneath the waves.

SEE ILLUSTRATION ON FIRST PAGE

The President was taken to the conning tower, that contains the buttons by which every movement of the submarine is directed. Following the directions of Lieutenant Nelson, the President pressed one of the buttons, and on a perfectly even keel the Plunger settled slowly. In a few moments a slight jar told that she was resting on the sandy bottom. Looking through the heavy glass lights they could see all about them the wonderful opalescent green of the water through which the sunlight still showed itself, coming from above in long, slender, thread-like streamers.

The boat was sent toward the top, and then dropped several times to the depth of twenty feet. The engines were reversed, and back she came almost to sea level without any stop being perceptible to her passengers. The submarine after going down several yards, was able to turn in less than one minute. She is also able to turn in three times her own length when running ahead.

"Porpoise diving" greatly interested the President. The Plunger would dart to the surface, and remain there long enough for the commanding officer to determine the positions of nearby ships, and then plunge instantly below the surface to any desired depth. When quite a distance down, everything occurring on the surface can be made out by means of the periscope, that reflects all objects from the ocean level to a small mirror. This mirror reflects objects with such distinctness, that they have the appearance of a photograph, and a novice is unable to tell the exact distance of any given object from the boat. The officers, however, soon become experts on distances. The President was shown the way in which the vessel could lie absolutely stationary below the surface long enough for a hostile fleet to pass completely over her, without discovering her position. The President for a while took charge of the button-board, and put the craft through many of her manœuvres. At one time he pressed the torpedo button, and sent the torpedo, the Plunger's only weapon of offense, practically, spinning through space.

The drill in the dark was gone through with just before the President left. At a signal from the commanding officer, all the lights were instantly extinguished and the men went to their stations without a mistake, although they could not see their own hands. All of the drills that had been gone through with before, were now executed as promptly and as well as they had been with the electric lights in full operation.

It was night when the President at last came to the surface, and entered the Dart for the trip home. He had made himself exceedingly popular with the crew during his short stay among them, and they were later, unstinted in their praise of his coolness, and the quickness with which he mastered the details of war service below seas. The President discovered that the men of the submarines have been rated as landsmen, and receive twenty per cent. less pay than regular sailors. He has given orders to have this inequality rectified, for he believes that there is no branch of our military service that is so dangerous as that of the crews of the submarines, either in peace or in war.

Is She America's Oldest Christian?

MRS. ELIZABETH HUNT, WHO TALKED WITH LAFAYETTE, CELEBRATES HER 105th BIRTHDAY

MRS. ELIZABETH HUNT celebrated her one hundred and fifth birthday on Aug. 31, at the home of one of her granddaughters, Mrs. Emma Holman, of Meriden, Conn. A few days fore the departure of the aged woman to Meriden, a presentative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had an interew with her at the residence of one of her surviving ns, Mr. Reuben Hunt, on Carlton Avenue, Brooklyn. Mrs. Elizabeth Hunt has her home with a granddaughter, Mrs. Ferdinand Wickes, of 407 Adelphi Street, ooklyn, but she occasionally visits her son Reuben d his family, and it was there that she consented to e and talk with the representative of THE CHRISTIAN ERALD, which, Mrs. Reuben Hunt said, was highly teemed in the family, having been subscribed to by e of its members for many years.

Some of the reasons for Mrs. Elizabeth Hunt's great ngevity are apparent even without speaking to her. ie is surrounded by loving and devoted descendants, ho attend to her every need. They live plainly and mfortably, evidently having enough of this world's ods not to worry about immediate necessities, and at e same time not having wealth to worry about either. hey and she are quiet, God-fearing, home-loving people, ing in a great city the calm and wholesome life of e country, and doing what is right to the best of their ilities. Amid such surroundings, there has been nothg to hasten the natural decline of the vital powers in d Mrs. Hunt, and great as her age is, there is a prosct that she will survive for several years longer.

Mrs. Hunt is of German stock. Her grandfather, ho had the unusual name of Babel, came from Gerany and settled in Pennsylvania, and she was born ar Lancaster, in that State. Her father and mother ere not long-lived, but all of their children, six in mber, lived beyond middle age. Mrs. Elizabeth unt was born August 31, 1800, and was the oldest of e children, one of her sisters having died about two ars ago, at ninety-one years of age. Mrs. Hunt was arried at twenty-three, and came to New York City th her husband, living on Leonard Street, now one of e most active business streets of lower New York, but that time rather a suburban locality of pleasant mes. She had not long been a resident of New rk when General Lafayette, companion and friend of eneral Washington in the Revolution, visited the nited States. He had grand receptions everywhere, d among those who thronged to the City Hall to eet the famous Frenchman was Elizabeth Hunt. e shook her hand, and passed a few pleasant words ith the young woman. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD representative, about eighty years later, pressed the hand hich had been shaken by the Marquis de Lafayette.

The business of Mrs. Hunt's husband, while in New York, was that of a baker. The bakers in those days used to deliver their bread in wheelbarrows, usually employing boys for that purpose, Mrs. Hunt said. From New York, Mr. and Mrs. Hunt removed to Middletown, Conn., where most of her children were born, and where, as in Pennsylvania and New York, and ever since, as long as she was physically able, she was a regular attendant of the Protestant Episcopal Church, her parents having been members of that communion.

MRS. ELIZABETH HUNT, AGED 105

Mrs. Hunt's husband died in 1858, and she never married again. She had six children, of whom two, James M. Hunt, of Shelton, Conn., and Reuben Hunt, of Brooklyn, both advanced in years, are now living. Besides her two sons, her descendants include twenty grandchildren, thirteen great-grandchildren, and four great-great-grandchildren. One of the saddest blows of her life was the loss of two of her daughters, both married, leaving children in infancy to be cared for. There was a touch of pathos and tenderness in her voice as she said: "I took their babies and brought them up myself." It is no wonder that those "babies" are now among her most devoted descendants, and love her as if she were their own mother.

Mrs. Hunt's features are regular, and in earlier years she must have been comely, and, considering her great age, she is comely still. Exertion quickly tires her, and she has to be assisted in moving about. Mrs. Hunt is, and always has been, a religious woman, of the quiet, undemonstrative, practical kind. She went to church while she was able, and now she likes to have the Holy Scriptures read to her, and has a deep seated, abiding faith in God's promises as therein revealed. With the consciousness of a well spent life she calmly awaits the final call.

Mrs. Hunt has never used intoxicating liquors at her table. Although the snuff habit was very prevalent among women many years ago, Mrs. Hunt never used snuff or tobacco in any form. Her appetite has always been good, and she has never had indigestion. Indeed, she has never had any serious illness, and her only ailment, if it can be called such, is the gradual wearing away of natural faculties by the attrition of time. She had an accident some years ago, when she fell downstairs at Meriden, Conn., and was taken up unconscious. She quickly recovered, however, and no disability resulted from the fall.

For a number of years Mrs. Hunt has spent her birthdays in Meriden. She has more relatives in Connecticut than in New York, and as she lives in Brooklyn nearly all the time, she feels it but fair to give her birthdays to her descendants in the New England State. Besides, the change from the city to that comparatively rural neighborhood agrees with her. She travels by ordinary conveyance, of course carefully assisted by her offspring. Her annual visit to Meriden is made the occasion of a happy family reunion, including, with herself, five generations.

To meet Mrs. Elizabeth Hunt, is like being brought face to face with the infancy of the American Republic. Few as were the gracious words spoken to her by Lafayette, they seem to revive memories of Yorktown, of all the great scenes of the American struggle for liberty, in which the heroic Frenchman stood side by side with Washington. Her life, too, has its valuable lesson of the effect of contentment, righteous living, and simple, trustful religious faith and practice, in promoting the welfare of soul and body, and enabling one to make the best of this world while preparing fittingly for the next.

HENRY MASS.

UNDER THE SHADOW OF ARARAT

A LADY is now in England who belongs to the Nestorian race which claims to be the remnant of the "Lost Ten Tribes of Israel." Deaconess sther, the wife of Deacon Abraham, is likely to proed to America, in order to lay before the Christian eople of the United States the plea of the Nestorian hristians. These interesting people call their comunion the Syrian Church. They are altogether a nique community. They speak Syriac or Aramaic, ie same language used by Jesus and his disciples.

Esther Abraham is a noble woman of a noble race. ler life-story is a fascinating and romantic one. Living n that strange and dangerous border-land where urkey and Persia join, she and her family and people ave undergone many pathetic experiences. Once this dy was wealthy, but this was in her early childhood. ler father was a great landowner, possessing large ocks. Living in a land of lovely vineyards, olive roves, and fertile fields and gardens, the family dwelt n comfort, until Kurdish robbers burst in and swept all way. Year before this calamity some of her relatives ad been thus ruined, and three of her uncles were anged by the robbers.

A few years afterwards Esther's parents died in povrty and grief. She was taken across the frontier and as reared just within the Persian border. Her home within a short journey of Mount Ararat near Lake an. Since she married Deacon Abraham her work as been with him in his mission and orphanage for oys and girls at Gogtaba. This is a village near the ity of Urmi. The Nestorians were years ago made nown to Western people by the work of an American issionary, Dr. Asahel Grant, entitled The Nestorians; r, The Lost Tribes. These people of the Eastern Bible nds were converted to Christ by the preaching of the Apostle Thomas; therefore, the Syriac Church is the very oldest Christian communion in existence. It is sometimes called the "Thomas Christian Church." The Nestorians are in the habit of saying "St. Thomas is our own Apostle." Their name of Nestorians is taken from their famous Patriarch in the ancient church, Nestorius.

The Syrian Church of the Nestorians has come down in an unbroken line from Apostolic days. It now exists in scattered communities numbering a membership of some hundreds of thousands, in Eastern Turkey and Western Persia. This region is often styled "Noah's Vineyard," from its wonderful fertility and extreme loveliness. As it is very mountainous, the winters are often very severe and wolves roam about, making traveling very dangerous. Many children have been devoured by wild beasts in some of the most inclement seasons. It was through such tragic incidents that Deacon Abraham was led thirty years ago to establish the Gogtaba Orphanage, which has proved to be so inestimable a blessing to forlorn and homeless children, the children both of Moslems and of Christians.

This institution in the Chaldean country deserves sympathy and support, for it has not only saved many precious lives, but has trained for God hundreds of workers, and has also sent forth to honorable and useful careers, many noble men and women who have settled in various parts of the world, equipped with sufficient education to enable them to earn a livelihood. One is a doctor in America, another is doing excellent work in India. Many girls who were picked up fatherless and motherless on the mountains, are now happy wives, and excellent servants are constantly supplied to the community in Urmi, and the surrounding districts.

The enterprise was undertaken by Deacon Abraham, during a season of famine. He took into his care sixty boys who were friendless, and must have perished had he not cared for them. That was the beginning, but the buildings needed, had to be erected hurriedly with mud walls and insecure foundations. The structure is now in a dangerous condition. Part of it has collapsed, and it must be rebuilt. This is why Esther Abraham is seeking help from British and American Christians.

ESTHER ABRAHAM

One great trouble has been experienced by the Nestorian Churches of late years, which is being sharply felt. The Russians have sought to virtually annex the whole of Eastern Turkey and Western Persia, and they have made those territories really their sphere of influence. The result has been malign, for they have been, during the last few years, seeking also to deprive the Nestorians of their churches, and to convert these into a portion of the Greek Orthodox system.

London, England. (REV.) WM. DEVAN.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly, Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

The Triumph of Peace

THE last battle of the Far Eastern war has been fought out on American soil, and has resulted in a victory for peace—the most decisive triumph of its kind known to this generation. On historic ground, the chosen statesmen of Russia and Japan fought their good fight, with swords in sheath and artillery silent; yet it was marked by grander achievement than any previous encounter in that long campaign.

> A peace is of the nature of a conquest;
> For then both parties nobly are subdued,
> And neither party loser.

Peace with honor for both combatants; peace with glory for brave Japan, whose champions were so nobly magnanimous, and peace with dignity for Russia, whose representatives splendidly saved the prestige of their nation in a great crisis.

To our own Government, which was mainly instrumental in bringing this to pass, must be universally awarded much of the glory of the result. At a time when the Chancelleries of Europe stood aloof from interference, in dread of complications to follow, and when some, at least, of the crowned heads, were satisfied to permit the war to go on to the point of exhaustion, America, in the name of humanity, accepted the responsibility of intervention. By many it was regarded as a thankless task—an endeavor foredoomed to futility. But our resourceful President persisted, yet with so much tact and judgment, that his efforts gave offense to neither side. Over half a million lives had already been sacrificed, a mighty fleet had been extinguished, a continent had been overrun. The crowning glory of our peace efforts has been the saving of hundreds of thousands of human beings, who would inevitably have perished had the war gone on.

At the moment when peace was announced, two of the greatest armies ever assembled were facing each other—a million men in arms! Europe stood still awaiting the impending shock. It was our opportunity, and we thank God for the courage and statesmanship that led us to grasp it. Nothing that Theodore Roosevelt, the Peacemaker, has done, or may hereafter do, will equal in renown his act in halting the slaughter and summoning the warring Powers to settle their quarrel across the table in that building in old Portsmouth town, above which fluttered the emblem of human liberty—the Stars and Stripes.

From the first step in these negotiations, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been hopeful of a happy issue. We believed the envoys were honest men, inspired with a sincere desire to adjust the quarrel as good men should, according to the laws of enlightened civilization and the dictates of conscience. There were moments when the fate of the Conference hung in the balance, but Japan saved it from utter shipwreck by a magnanimity that will win for that nation world-wide prestige. Now that it is all over, it is seen that the dispute was by no means an irreconcilable one at any time. Within that quiet room at Portsmouth, the conferees realized the eternal truth that no principle can ever be settled by violence.

The hand of God was in the Conference at Portsmouth. He has heard the prayers of his people and has directed the deliberations. One by one, the seemingly insurmountable barriers which arose to impede the work of the Conference were broken down. Bitterness gave way to conciliation, the mists broke and dissolved, and the work was done.

God grant that the peace may be secure and lasting, and that it may mark a step forward in the world's progress toward that blessed time when "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

A Woman's Battle

WHY should women care so much that Mormon aggression in this Republic should be checked? Women do care. Women who ordinarily take very little interest in public affairs are stirred to anxiety and moved to protest, because a Mormon in Congress is a convincing proof that Mormonism and polygamy are boldly making their way over all that the country holds precious. Mormonism replaces individual liberty of thought and speech by submission to an imperious hierarchy. The existence of such a hierarchy is a menace to freedom of conscience, and to a free ballot box. Polygamy places women on a level with the brutes. It degrades women, depraves men, and destroys the sanctity of the family. A cluster of Mormon cottages, where a husband lives in turn with his several wives, and the children are the progeny of licensed lust instead of hallowed love, is no home in any high sense of the word; no home according to the pure and exalted ideal of home which obtains in this period. That young Mormon women brought up in the midst of polygamy, have less horror and shame in it than their mothers had, is only another argument for pressing on toward their deliverance.

It is a woman's battle. Realizing this, women are coming to the front, signing their names to the great Memorial, and enrolling beneath a standard that will not be lowered till the cause is gained.

> For right is right while God is God,
> And right the day must win.
> To doubt would be disloyalty,
> To falter would be sin.

In the fair territories of the West, the Mormon hierarchy has long since started movements to gain control of future political advantages. The Mormon estates are large. The Mormon treasury is full. But under the heel of Mormonism lies woman, crushed and broken, and for her sake it is a woman's battle, that must be waged to the end.

Fatal Automobiling

HARDLY a week passes that we are not startled by the report of some fatal disaster to the tourists who are whirling over the country in the swiftly rolling automobiles. No other vehicles known as yet to man so subtly tempt those who ride in them to take needless risks. The motion is so easy, the sense of being winged is so exultant, delightful, that people exceed the legal rate of speed without a thought.

Not only is there a real peril to the motorist, but to others as well. Runaways, that demolish carriages and injure the occupants, are frequent, and scarcely less so are the accounts of unfortunate pedestrians who have been killed or maimed by the reckless driving of some chauffeur. Yet it is a fact, beyond all dispute, that with reasonable care in the handling, and due respect for the rights of others on the streets and highways, the motor car is one of the very safest of vehicles.

At all times, in a country like ours, traversed in every direction by the steel rails and iron ways of railroads, there is peril to those who drive or ride, unless they are exceptionally careful. Stageloads of merrymakers have been struck by a passing train as they have dashed recklessly across a track; carriages and horses have been demolished and families annihilated before automobiles were in vogue. But the latter conveyances seem, with an ironical fate, to thrust themselves in the path of the lightning express.

Our modern luxuries multiply immensely the joys of existence. Equally and immensely do they multiply its traps and snares. We go everywhere at a rapid pace. We grow insensibly to discount danger. Daily, horrors shock us less than they ought. We do not learn moderation nor practice needful wisdom. The moral of preventible accidents should be, less recklessness in both business and pleasure.

Bibles in Hotels

STRONG testimony to the value of the Bible is given in an interview with a traveling salesman, published the other day in a daily journal. He says that in former times, when he went to the hotel after a day's business in a strange city, he found on the table of his room a Bible, in the reading of which he gained consolation and encouragement. Many a time, weary with the vexations of the day, and disgusted with the literature in the evening paper, he has taken up the Bible, finding it handy, and has derived good from the reading of it. He regrets that the thoughtful custom of putting a Bible in the rooms of the guests at hotels has of late fallen into desuetude, and that now it is rare to find the sacred volume in a hotel, either in town or country. Of course, the simple remedy for this difficulty would be that he carry his Bible with him. There are many editions which, in size and weight, would add but little to his baggage; besides, he would become attached to his own copy, and sure of always having it at hand.

We refer to his complaint, however, with a different object. Is not this an opportunity for Christian service? It would cost but a very small sum to the Christians of any city, to put a cheap copy of God's Word in every room of every hotel in their neighborhood. Who can tell how many visitors, like this man, would take up the Book if it was there, and, reading it, might get light for their souls! Perhaps it was not realized that the volume was so thoroughly appreciated. It is not necessary to tell the Christian its value. It is to him the precious possession which cheers, consoles, stimulates and nourishes him in all circumstances. What may it not do for others? Can he do for his fellowman a better service than to place it within his reach?

There are times when the reading of the Bible might do inestimable good. Away from home, the traveler is beset by temptation. Perhaps the sight of the Book, familiar to him in boyhood, would recall to his memory the warnings and entreaties of the Holy Spirit it contains, to cling to Christ and avoid sin. Or his soul may be sinking under the sordid character of the life he is obliged to lead. Within those covers are promises encouraging him to set his affections on things above, and assuring him of joys that are imparted to all who seek. Or he may be anxious and worried. There he may read of One who will keep him in perfect peace, if he stays his heart on God. The Book has a message for every weary, harassed soul. The traveler could easily go out and purchase a Bible, but he is more likely to seek other means of cheer. If the Book lay there on his table, inviting him to read it, he might take it up and find rest and peace when he most needs it. The experiment is worth making. It is for us to do our part and trust God to give his blessing.

The Universal Law

THAT the law of hospitality is about the only one that is world wide, and extends to civilizations far below our own, is well shown by the cordial reception given to the official party now visiting the Philippines in charge of our Secretary of War. One of the most interesting examples of courtesy to the "stranger within the gates," for as such it was intended, was the offer of the erratic and picturesque potentate, the Sultan of Sulu, to marry the daughter of the President. While at first it strikes one as a barbaric and presumptuous offer, it was, for a chief of Malay blood, the only thing for him to do to show pleasure at the presence of such distinguished visitors, the most courtly thing in the eastern book "of good manners."

Bowing to this same law of hospitality the robber of the Arabian deserts protects with his own life that of the man with whom he has once broken bread. In the Scottish Highlands, in the days when clan fought clan, a person who asked food and shelter was never asked his name until his wants were provided for, as otherwise the host might forget himself and break this high tradition if he found that his guest belonged to a hostile family. Throughout the Middle Ages a man was always protected in the sanctuary of a church, even by his most deadly foe. Coming to our own country and day, we find among the American Indians a somewhat self-seeking manifestation of a supposedly generous instinct. Tribes would present their whole outfit of ponies to a post commander, and expect them back the next day heavily loaded with gifts. If they were not returned so burdened, the white man was considered as the personification of greed and thievery, and laid himself open to an Indian ambush the first time he might walk abroad. Higher in the scale we find the Mexican politely declaring that "all in the house is yours," but if even so much as a rusty spur be accepted, he wears a long face.

But despite its odd manifestations, this outcropping of generosity and courtesy in the world's dark places is the main hope of bringing the lower races to the level of our own. In the past it has stopped savage feuds, and raised from barbarism people who have lacked the example and precept of our own great teachers.

The BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Japan Welcomes Americans

MAIL advices from Tokio confirm the cable reports of the ovation accorded by the Japanese to the distinguished American visitors who recently visited the country. Miss Alice oosevelt, Secretary Taft and their party arrived on ie Manchuria at Yokohama, to find the city in gala ostume in their honor. The wharves and shipping ere decorated with flags, and the streets and public uildings were gay with American and Japanese banrs. After holding a reception, they drove through ie crowded streets to the railroad station, where a ecial train was in waiting to convey them to Tokio. here, one of the Imperial palaces was placed at their sposal. On the following day, Mr. Griscom, the merican Minister at the Japanese Court, introduced ie visitors to the Emperor, who, with the royal princes d princesses, received them with graceful cordiality. special entertainment was tendered them by the merhants of the city, and a luncheon was given by the ecretary of War, at hich Marquis Ito anted an original em, composed in nor of the Amerian visitors. A spel train conveyed ie party next day to ioto, and other aces of interest, a table gathering, at hich Mrs. Togo, ife of the famous dmiral, was conlcuous, being asembled at the depot witness their dearture. It was remarkable that the ually undemonstrave Japanese cheered stily when Miss oosevelt and Secreary Taft appeared. t Nagasaki there as a still more enusiastic demonstraon. There a festial was given by the overnor, at which beautiful bouquet f Japanese flowers as presented to Miss oosevelt. Secretary aft made a graceful peech, in which he xpressed the gratide of the party for the cordial reception they had eceived from all ranks, from the Emperor to the peasntry. The party then went on board the Manchuria, ound for Manila. The Japan Daily Mail said, in summing up the events of the visit: "Not within our expeence of thirty years has Tokio ever given such an ardent eception to any foreign visitors." It was, of course, ell understood here, as in Japan, that the demonstraon was more representative than personal. In honorng the visitors, Japan was expressing its admiration of merica, and of the great man with whom two of the arty are so nearly connected. It would be well if the ame disposition to recognize representative character as always displayed. There are multitudes of poor hristians who would then be benefited for the sake of im whose representatives they are.

Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, ecause ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not se his reward (Mark 9: 41).

MISS ALICE ROOSEVELT (*), SECRETARY TAFT (x) AND PARTY, IN TOKIO, JAPAN

A Faded Flag

The disaster on the Atlantic coast line at Norfolk, a., is now accounted for by a remarkable discovery. t will be remembered that two cars of an excursion rain from Kingston, N. C., plunged into an open draw n the Elizabeth River on August 17. There was anger that all in the cars would be drowned, as they would probably be held in the car by the dislocated seats. But a farm-hand on the bank of the river realizing the danger, though more than sixty years old, climbed to the roof of one of the cars and cut a hole through the timber. Through this hole he dragged thirty-five passengers. In all, not more than eighteen lives were lost, instead of the eighty at first reported. The mystery of the accident was increased by the positive assertion of the signal man, that he had displayed his red flag in time for the engineer to stop the train before entering the open draw. Other employees corroborated his assertion. The engineer, who was severely hurt, contended that it was a white flag that was shown, and he took it as a signal that the road was clear. A demand was made that the flag be produced. Then the mystery was solved. The flag had been in use so long that it had faded, and might easily, in the distance, have been mistaken for a white flag. It is sad that the need of a new flag should have led to such a sacrifice of life. It is well for us, that when the safety of souls is involved, the old signals contained in God's Word continue to answer their purpose. The danger with regard to them is, that they are being replaced by human devices, which have not the divine authority, and do not represent sin in its true colors as heinous in God's sight. The Bible is the only safe guide:

All scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness (II Timothy 3: 16, R.V.).

Blind in a Fire

In a recent fire in South Boston, a singularly pathetic incident occurred. The fire was in a tenement house, and had gained considerable progress before it was discovered. On the second floor of the house lived an aged couple, both entirely blind. The husband heard the rush of the other tenants past his door, and going on to the landing he smelled smoke, and realized that the house must be on fire. He groped his way back to reach his wife, who was in another part of the flat. In his haste he lost his way, and was wandering around the house, while, as it became known later, his wife was trying to find him. They were guided toward each other by cries eventually, but before they came together the wife fell to the floor, overcome by smoke. In the meantime the firemen in the street had been notified that there were two blind persons on the second floor, and a ladder was put up to a window. A fireman found the woman unconscious, and her husband kneeling beside her. As he tried to raise her, the old man also became unconscious, and fell over the body of his wife. Both were removed to the hospital, where it was said they would probably recover. How typical is this incident of the efforts of awakened sinners to save their souls! The blind cannot save the blind, but when He comes who is able to save, they are delivered.

None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him (Ps. 49: 7).

The Eclipse

Two of the expeditions sent out to view the total eclipse of the sun, which occurred on Aug. 30, report complete success. That led by Prof. J. H. Hussey, of the Lick Observatory, which went to Assouan, in Egypt, had perfect weather. The sky was clear, and a splendid photograph of the coronal spectrum was secured. Eight plates were also exposed with a battery of four telescopes, to discover intermercurial planets. The second expedition, under the orders of Rear-Admiral C. M. Chester, went to Spain and the northern coast of Africa. It also reports: "Observation perfect in every respect." At Harvard, Cornell, Montreal, and Toronto, the sun was obscured by clouds during the whole time of the phenomenon. The results to science of the observation cannot be determined until the photographs have been developed and examined. The astronomers say that the characteristic streamers were seen irregularly marked around the sun's disk. They were about double the diameter of the sun in length, and were of a brilliant rose color. There was, however, one much longer, stretching to the southeast. It is suggested that this may have proceeded from the recent sun spot. More than this is not reported; but we may hope to hear that with the new instruments in use, and the ingenious apparatus made for the purpose, some progress may have been made in solving the problem of the nature of the Corona, which, at present, is believed to be the sun's atmosphere. Only at the period of a total eclipse, when the interposing body of the moon completely covers the vast bulk of the sun, can this surrounding envelope be studied. Whether it is composed of gases, or is merely air, heated to an inconceivable degree, and pierced by gigantic streamers of ardent fire, hundreds of thousands of miles long, the astronomers hoped to discover. This discovery would, it was believed, give us a clue to the composition of the body of the sun, which has always been a mystery. Though we have learned much of the constitution of the universe, and of the order that governs everywhere, and of the causes of phenomena that alarmed the ancients, we have learned no more than that these are God's methods of operation, and recognize his power over all his works.

I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark: I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light. all the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee

PEACE AT LAST DECLARED

AT the very moment that word was expected, by the majority of people, that the Conference at Portsmouth had failed of its purpose, the electric current sent humming to the world's capitals the announcement that peace was declared, and the carnage in the Far East was at an end. That this much-wished-for result was at last reached is due primarily to the untiring energy of President Roosevelt, and it will be ranked as the greatest triumph of his Administration. For the time, he is the foremost figure in "world politics," and America is regarded rightly as the leader of the nations.

Praise for the magnanimity of Japan should be unstinted, for, out of deference to the wishes of President Roosevelt and this country, as well as the nations of the Old World, she waived, for the sake of peace, her claims for an indemnity, the demand for the interned warships, and consented to the retention by Russia of one half of the island of Sakhalin. M. de Witte had been informed by his home government that Russia would not give one inch of Russian territory or one kopeck for indemnity. President Roosevelt's appeal to the Czar had been without result; but his efforts with the Emperor of Japan met with a better reception. Baron Kaneko has been the latter's personal representative at Oyster Bay, and it is doubtless through his efforts that the question of indemnity was waived.

The prestige of Russia gains little, however, by the diplomatic triumph on two of the points at issue. Her expansion toward the Pacific, south of her ice-bound port of Vladivostok, is at an end. Russian journalists feel this keenly, and many wish the war continued. Her once proud fleet lies at the bottom of the sea or is in the hands of the Japanese, with the exception of a few disabled ships that have been interned in neutral ports, and will be returned. Japan gets the Liao-Tung peninsula, "that points like a dagger at the heart of Nippon," and the mighty fortress of Port Arthur, that is now twice hers by right of sword. She acquires the suzerainty of Korea, and the Chinese railway almost to Harbin. This alone is worth more to Japan financially than the amount of the indemnity. Her right to fisheries on the Siberian coast is also conceded. Japan gains far more than she went to war for. Russia is compelled to leave Manchuria, which will be returned to China. Japan has risen from a third-rate power to one of world-wide importance. Russia, as a threatening power on the Pacific, has disappeared.

The Japanese at first wished to limit Russia's future naval power in the Pacific, but this was dropped. As Japan now has the southern and better half of Sakhalin, she can so fortify it that no fleet will ever be able to go to or from Vladivostok, if she should wish to prevent it. The acquisition of the fisheries up the northern coast of the Russian possessions means much. These fisheries are worth millions yearly and have never been developed; the population is sparse. One Russian statesman says that the result will be that the Japanese fishermen will gradually populate the coast near the great fishing grounds, until it will be Japanese territory so far as Russian power and influence are concerned. Russia spent millions on the great works at Dalny, and Japan gets all these. M. Martens and Mr. H. W. Denison will draw up the treaty, acting for Russia and Japan. It is interesting to note that Mr. Denison is an American, and was born but sixteen miles from Portsmouth. He went early to Japan and became one of the Mikado's most trusted advisers, at a time when there were few foreigners at Tokio. His opinion is regarded as of great weight on all questions of international importance. M. Martens has made a most distinguished record in European diplomacy and his selection gives satisfaction to both parties.

It is reported that the two Japanese envoys at Portsmouth feel keenly the decision reached at Tokio, that the demand for the indemnity be given up, and the report is also circulated that the Russians feel very much elated at their headquarters, and shouted "Hurrah!" when the announcement was made. But it is a small triumph for a nation that has not won a single battle on land and sea from a foe that she has despised, only to find that she was superior in the arts of war. The power of the Russian war party has been broken, and the peace party, the real hope of Russia, is now in the ascendant, and it is not at all unlikely that M. de Witte may the future premier of his country. An armistice been arranged, that will pave the way for the w drawal of the two armies.

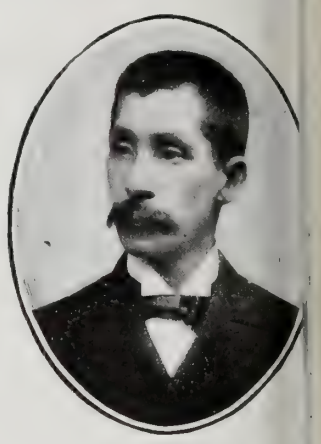
When President Roosevelt received the despa through the Associated Press that the envoys had agr on terms of peace, he was greatly elated, and went once to inform his family of the good news. M.

M. DE WITTE

H. W. DENISON

BARON KANEKO

M. MARTENS



BARON KOMURA

Witte and Baron Rosen sent the following message the President:

"We have the honor to inform you that we ha reached an agreement with the plenipotentiaries Japan. To you history will award the glory of havi taken the initiative in bringing about this conferen whose labors will probably now result in the establis ment of peace honorable to both sides."

The Czar is overjoyed at the turn affairs have tak and sent a most cordial cable to the President, in whi he said that his country would gratefully recognize t great part he has played in the Portsmouth Peace Co ference. Cablegrams from sovereigns and statesme including Kaiser William, King Edward, and M. Comb have been pouring into the office at Oyster Bay, felicitating the President on his great triumph. Fran is preparing to send the President a gold medal, and gold laurel wreath, and a huge address of congratul tion will come from England, bearing hundreds of tho sands of signatures.

THE COST OF THE WAR

MORE THAN $1,654,000,000 EXPENDED IN THE WAR; MEN ENGAGED, 1,540,000; CASUALTIES, 346,000

Cost of the War to Russia.

567 days at $1,500,000 per day (estimated),	$850,000,0
Annual interest charge at 5 per cent.,	$42,500,0
68 ships lost, estimated value,	$75,000,0
Pay for keep of prisoners,	$75,000,0
Men sent to the front,	840,0
Total dead and wounded,	192,0

Cost of the War to Japan.

567 days at $1,000,000 per day (estimated),	$567,000,0
Annual interest charge at 5 per cent.,	$28,350,0
24 ships lost,	$15,000,0
Men sent to the front,	700,0
Total dead and wounded,	154,0

PROPHETIC PRINCIPLES

By ALBERT WADHAMS

THERE is, perhaps, no subject so much discussed at the present time, as the contest now being waged between the gigantic empire of Russia, and its Liliputian opponent, Japan. Whatever may be the immediate outcome, or the way in which their material interests may be affected, there is only one view that can be taken by the student of prophecy, and this he knows to be the true one, as it involves the predestined will of God in the affairs of nations.

The origin and destinies of nations is settled by the Word of God, and when we read, as in Deut. 32: 8, 9: "When the Most High gave to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the children of men, he set the bounds of the peoples, according to the number of the children of Israel. For the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance;" we become conscious of a truth that has been bearing fruit from the time indicated, and will so continue until another time, just as surely pointed out in the inspired Word, when Jacob, "the Lord's portion," will have indeed become "the lot of his inheritance." But the question will be asked, how does this apply to Russia and Japan? From the nature of the prophecy, the answer is unmistakable, for as nations, with the rest of the nations, they are to have their inheritance, and this inheritance of blessing or judgment will be meted out to them in accordance with the principle that they have favored, or opposed Jacob, the lot of the Lord's inheritance.

This principle pervades all prophecy, and is the key to its meaning. Its vast importance consists in the fact that there is to be but one kingdom, while all other kingdoms are to become tributary to it. Jacob, called also "Israel," is a general term, and stands for the history of the twelve tribes of the whole house of Israel, including the Jews, who, while they are also of Israel, take their name from Judah, their tribal ancestor.

Two or three illustrations from the Scriptures will make the whole subject clear, and will show not only how all nations will ultimately become subject to Israel, but how God has cared for "His people," keeping faithful watch over the "lot of his inheritance,"—"For the Lord has chosen Jacob unto himself, and Israel for his peculiar treasure," and as "the gifts and the calling of God are without repentance," so it can always be said of Israel, as in Isa. 54: 17, "No weapon that is formed against thee, shall prosper."

As a first illustration, take the case of Balak and the Prophet Balaam, in chapters 22, 23 and 24, of the book of Numbers, where the magnificent destiny of Israel is shown, not only to the days in which we live, but to the end of time. As a second illustration, take God's judgment upon Turkey as narrated in the book of Obadiah, consisting of one chapter, where, under her ancient name of Edom and Esau, the reason of the punishment is given in verse 10: "For the violence done to thy brother Jacob, shame shall cover thee, and thou shall be cut off forever," and also the instrument of her punishment as in verse 18, referred to as the "house of Jacob," and the "house of Joseph," who are used of God as a means for her utter destruction, for, speaking of Israel, Jer. 51: 20, God says, "Thou art my battle ax and weapons of war, with thee will I destroy kingdoms." A third illustration is the judgment to be visited upon the Russian Empire, which has already commenced at the hands of Japan, and will be finished in a future war, as described in Ezek 38 and 39.

Staying Away from Churcl

The Rev. Joseph Hamilton, preachin lately at Wilson, N. Y., dealt with th following twenty reasons for staying awa from church:

1. Some having the idea that Sunday is a da of rest, spend the whole day in idleness.
2. Others say that Sunday is the only day whe the man can get his dinner at home, and he stay at home for that purpose.
3. Still others aver that Sunday is the only da a man has to get acquainted with his wife an children.
4. Some stay at home to read the newspaper.
5. Some stay at home to read the novel.
6. Some claim that it is better to read the Bibl at home than to go to church.
7. Others simply prefer this world to the next.
8. Many make the Sabbath a day of pleasure.
9. Not a few say they got too much church i their youth, and hence do not want it now.
10. Many have no affinity for spiritual things.
11. Many who want to appear respectable d not wish to support the church, and so stay away
12. Some want office in the church, and becaus they are not elected will not come.
13. Some have a row with others in the church, and do not wish to meet certain parties there.
14. Many think themselves quite as good, o better, than some in the church.
15. Some think the service is not entertaining and will not come.
16. Many are really afraid that the preache will warn them of their duty and danger, an they want to be let alone.
17. Some did not vote for the minister, an therefore will not go to hear him.
18. Many stay at home to entertain their visitors
19. Some carouse too late on Saturday night, t be in tune for worship on Sunday.
20. The main reason is indifference.

Woman's War on Polygamy

THAT the women of the United States are firm in their determination that no Mormon apostle shall make laws for this nation, is evidenced by the thousands of signatures to the Women's Memorial which are coming in daily from every part of the Union. That these women are in deadly earnest is shown by the letters accompanying some of the lists of signatures, being many yards in length, containing 400, 500, 600, and even upward of 1,000 names.

These letters tell how willing the women are working for the success of their crusade. Long lists, sometimes headed by signature in a trembling, old-fashioned hand, show how energetic and successful have been their labors. From women of all ages and conditions of life these letters continue to pour in, and the mails are heavy with great rolls and packages containing hundreds and thousands of names. Those in charge of the work at Memorial Headquarters in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD offices, are surrounded daily with great piles of signed Memorials, which are filed and put in order for the time when this monster petition will come before Congress.

There is no uncertain sound in the voice of these women; they have a right to be heard in a matter which bears so heavily upon the women and children of the country, and there is, from present indications, no doubt they will not only be heard, but heeded.

One correspondent in California sends in a petition with many signatures, and in an accompanying letter, says:

We have in this beautiful place a Mormon church in a flourishing condition. I have been cognizant of the horrors of Mormonism since childhood. Nauvoo was but a few miles from our home. I visited the place when the temple was a ruin. We found Joseph Smith's original wife there, caring for his aged and bedridden mother, who was full of relations of her son's wonderful "heavenly revelations." The widow served our party with dinner, and was supporting herself entertaining strangers.

Another lady writes:

I am personally acquainted with some of the Mormon work in Oklahoma. We lodged a couple of the twos who travel on foot through our land to scatter the seed of polygamy. I detest their doctrine, and trembled when I found they were going among the people around me, leading them into the awful snare. I asked these men if they believed in a plurality of wives, and their reply was, that their church practices it. This was enough for me, and while I wondered if the laws of the United States did not act, I wondered if our laws were laws. We closed our doors against the Mormons, but we heard of them being in the locality many times.

The women who send for Memorials say that not only will they work, but they ask for extra copies of the petitions, so that their neighbors may have a chance to help in soliciting their friends. Many women send in lists of names of friends in different parts of the country who may not have heard of the movement, and thus the good work spreads, and will continue to spread, until it reaches the ear of every woman in city, town and hamlet throughout the land.

At a large meeting at Clifton Springs, N. Y., recently, Mrs. Annie McKean White delivered a lecture on Mormonism. Following her address, many applications were made for printed Memorials, and a large number of guests at the resort assumed the task of securing signatures. Similar incidents are mentioned by other correspondents in many parts of the country, where the Women's campaign is making splendid headway.

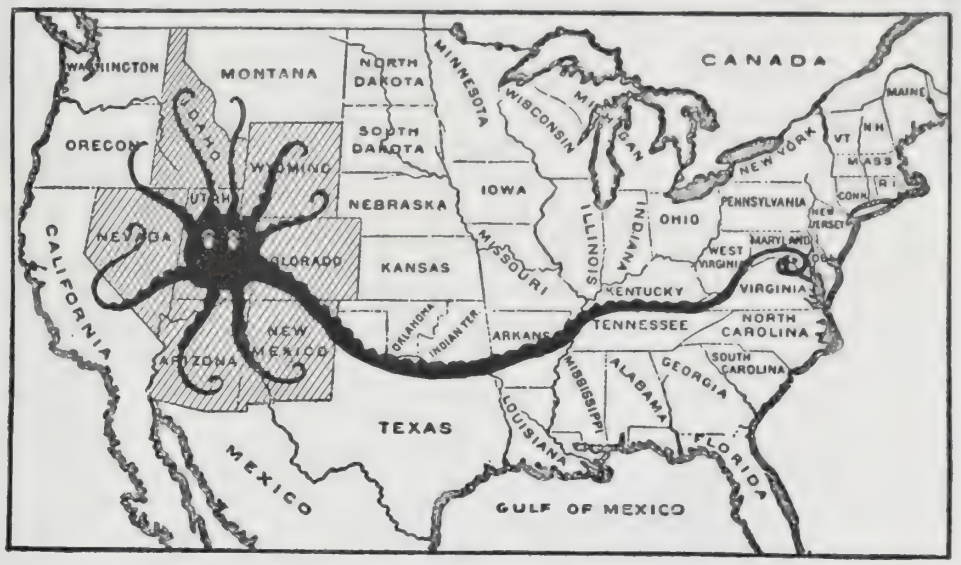
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will shortly publish some highly interesting facts concerning the efforts of those workers who have sent in the largest number of signatures to date. While signatures are pouring in by thousands, there are still many women to be reached and much work to be done.

Do not hesitate to send for more Memorials because you may have sent in one already. Renew your efforts, and get more signatures by mailing these Memorials to your friends. Send us lists of names and addresses, and we will forward the Memorials free, or will send them to you to be forwarded, if you prefer.

"No woman," writes a lady from Michigan, "who knows about this great effort which is being made to rid our Senate of a sworn representative of the polygamous Mormon hierarchy, is doing her whole duty unless she signs the protest. Your hundred thousand signatures should be a million before October.

All contributions toward defraying the actual expenses of the campaign will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The following additional contributions in aid of the Women's Anti-Mormon campaign have been received:

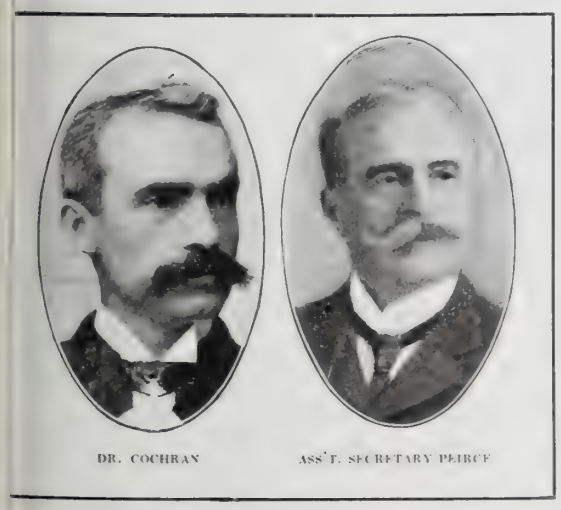
Previously acknowledged	$49 04	Frs. E. C. Ridge	2 00
G. M., Coronado, Calif.	75	Mrs. C. Olsen	25
E. M. Beattie	12	One of us, East North Yarmouth, Me.	10
Miss G. A. Snyder	1 00	Mrs. Nan Henry	25
Mrs. Eva Butler	06	—, Mansfield, Mass.	05
A Friend, Newburgh, N. Y.	1 00	Mrs. Elizabeth Kees	06
Mrs. D. Harris	50	Mrs. Martha Sweet	1 00
Mrs. Julia Scott	04	Ida Pitson, Milwaukee, Wis.	10
Mrs. Catherine K. Sadler	05	Mrs. Aug. Bode	25
W. C. T. U., Mulberry, Ind.	04	Sarah J. Booker	15
Sarah Ulrich	12	Sarah A. Carman	10
Mrs. J. C. Dumbreck	2 00	Mrs. R. S. Charles	04
—, Peekskill, N. Y.	1 00	Mrs. D. Caywood	25
Mrs. C. De Hart	2 00	Mrs. F. M. Guy	10



HOW THE MORMON OCTOPUS GROWS

The Polygamous Hierarchy has firmly fastened its tentacles on seven States, viz: Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, and Idaho. It has now reached out across the continent and secured a hold upon the nation's capital, where its Apostle-Senator is helping to make laws for the American people. The women of America are pleading with the Senate for his removal.

PROMINENT MEN OF THE PRESENT HOUR



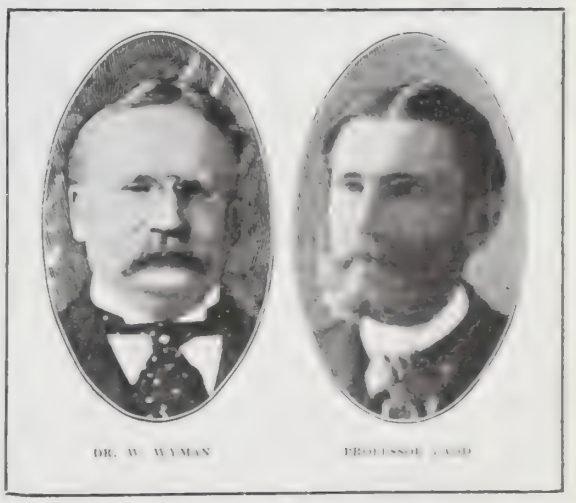
DR. COCHRAN — ASS'T. SECRETARY PEIRCE

GEORGE TRUMBULL LADD, professor of philosophy at Yale University, has been invited by Japan to come to their assistance in raising the educational methods in vogue in that country. This is sure indication that the rising power in the East intends to progress in the ways of peace as well as those of war. Yale has many Japanese students, with whom Professor Ladd is extremely popular, and on two trips to Japan he had the pleasure of being received by a large number of former pupils. He was born in 1842, and is a graduate of Western Reserve and the Andover Theological Seminary. After preaching a number of years, he became professor of philosophy in Bowdoin College. Besides teaching at Yale, he has twice served as lecturer in the University of Tokio. The Emperor has made him a member of the Order of the Rising Sun. He has published a large number of books which, by translation, are as familiar to Japanese as they are to American students.

JOSEPH P. COCHRAN, M.D., the Presbyterian missionary physician of Oroomiah, Persia, died several weeks ago, after years of labor among the Persians and Kurds. His medical practice was attended with remarkable success, and proved the entering wedge for Christian effort in a large district of Persia. His name became known throughout the country, and patients flocked to him from hundreds of miles. So impressed was the Shah Nasr i Deen, that he made him a member of the Order of the Lion and the Sun. The Kurdish robbers regarded him with great reverence, and he was admitted to their most secret retreats. There will stand as his monument the Cochran Dispensary and Orphan School.

HERBERT HENRY DAVIS PEIRCE, Third Assistant Secretary of State, has been the personal representative of President Roosevelt at the Peace Conference at Portsmouth. The task assigned to Mr. Pierce was one requiring a wide knowledge of international law and procedure, and as well as a large amount of tact. Mr Pierce has acquitted himself so well that added honors in the future seem not at all unlikely. He is a native of Cambridge, Mass., and studied to be a mining engineer, but later took up the diplomatic service. He was appointed Secretary of the Legation at St. Petersburg, and his knowledge of Russian court politics has been of inestimable value during the last few weeks. Ten times he has been United States Charge d'Affairs. He has tried arbitration cases between this country and Russia. Since 1902 he has been a Commander of the French Legion of Honor.

DR. WALTER WYMAN, Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, has taken charge of the medical forces that are fighting the yellow fever in and around New Orleans. The epidemic, it has been reported, is the most severe that has visited that region for thirty years. The local authorities have met the situation with great resolution, and their stringent measures, coupled with the aid given by the National Government, are already having effect. In the States of Mississippi, Alabama and Florida, the fever seems to have nearly disappeared. Several men of prominence have met their deaths in their efforts to alleviate suffering, among them Archbishop Chapelle of the archdiocese of New Orleans.



DR. W. WYMAN — PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT

A Scripture Contest in Prison

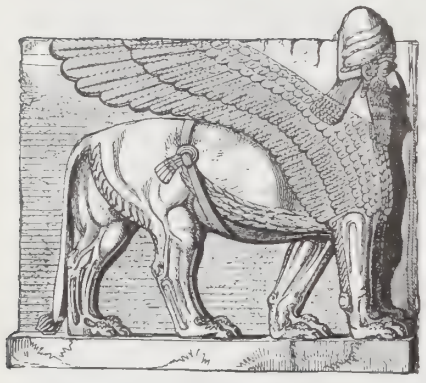
I scarcely know how to express my thanks and appreciation of the beautiful copy of Pilgrim's Progress you sent me. Your premiums are certainly elegant and well worth the effort necessary, as your paper will prove a blessing in any home. I find a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD one of the most appreciated gifts I can bestow. I sent the Pilgrim's Progress to the prisoner who memorized 1,359 verses, and eight handsome Teachers' Bibles to others. Again thanking you, I am very truly, with many thanks, M. B. R DAY.

Frankfort, Ky.

A clipping enclosed by Mr. Day states that this contest has been going on for about four months, 28 men being engaged. One young man, who recently came into the prison, and who was ignorant of God's Word, recited perfectly 1,402 verses; another, 1,359; another, 1,342; another, 1,212; another, 826, and so on down to 55. The total verses recited by the 28 men was 17,155. These verses were not all recited at once, but on Sundays during the three or four months of the contest.

The Bible and the Monuments

Sunday School Review, By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*



STONE IMAGE OF HUMAN-HEADED BULL

WE will assume that we are a traveler's club, organized for the express purpose of visiting recent excavations in Nineveh and Babylon, that we may, with our own eyes, view the confirmation of the Scripture narrative concerning the Israelites, from the time of Sennacherib, B.C. 705 to Darius, B.C. 528. By caravan ride of seven hours from Mosul (by some authorities considered to be on the site of the suburbs of Nineveh), we have come to the famous mounds of Kuyunjik, which contains the ruins of the palaces of Sennacherib and Sardanapalus.

The Kurdish mountains are in the background; between the mountains and the mounds is the plain over which we have traveled; in front of the mounds, and not a mile distant, flows the ancient river Tigris. We take our way to the larger of the two mounds, and are told that it is nearly a mile and a half in circumference, and is ninety-five feet high at the southeast corner. It covers an area of one hundred acres. The summit of the mound is said to be annually ploughed in fulfilment of prophecy.

We are permitted to enter the excavations, which we are told were begun almost sixty years ago under the direction of Mr. Austin Henry Layard. The greatest point of interest in the excavations is the stately palace of Sennacherib, with a corridor two hundred and eighteen feet long and twenty-five feet wide, which connected the public and private apartments. From this corridor immense passage-ways branched, all decorated with richly carved walls, and leading to a series of rooms varying in size. And here once lived that great Sennacherib, who came down "like a wolf on the fold," to capture God's people, the Israelites. We will examine the carvings, to find perhaps some representation of Sennacherib's warring against Israel. One of our party has in hand the translation of Sennacherib's own account, found upon a cylinder, and removed to the British Museum. It reads: "And Hezekiah the Judaite, who had not submitted to my yoke—forty-six of his fenced cities, and fortresses, and small towns in their vicinity without number . . . I besieged and took; 200,150 persons small and great, male and female, horses, mules, asses, camels, large cattle, small cattle, without number, I brought forth from the midst of them, and allotted as spoil. As for himself, like a caged bird in Jerusalem his capital city, I shut him up. Forts against him I constructed, and any who would go out of the city gate I caused to turn back . . . Fear of the lustre of my sovereignty overwhelmed him. . . . Thirty talents of gold and eight hundred talents of silver, . . . great stores of lapis-lazuli, couches of ivory, . . . an immense treasure, . . . to Nineveh my capital I made him bring; and for the rendering of the tribute and making homage, he sent his ambassador."

Another of our party has a picture of Sennacherib at Lacish, one of the forty-six captured cities, where he was seated on a throne, receiving tribute from the Israelites, sent by King Hezekiah.

We stand in the midst of great human-headed bulls and lions, and feel ourselves to be pigmies in size as we look at them.

We are told that in such a figure as this Sennacherib inscribed his subjugation of King Hezekiah, which may now be seen in the British Museum. There is no bull or any other creature on which is inscribed his defeat, when he came again two years later against Jerusalem, when he returned to Nineveh, leaving one hundred and eighty-five thousand Assyrian corpses as a monument to his defeat, because he was smitten of the Lord. Neither are there any inscriptions concerning the murder of Sennacherib by his two sons in this very palace, but history confirms the Bible record to be found in II. Chron. 32: 21. We take a lingering glance at the massive walls, so richly carved with battle scenes, triumphal processions, and landscapes. We look about us, and declare the whole scene to be a travesty on greatness. We leave the halls of Sennacherib feeling that there can be no greatness apart from God.

We pass a few hundred yards to the northwest, and come to the once magnificent palace of Asshur-boni-pal or Sardanapalus. The honor of discovering this belongs to M. Hormuzd Rassam, who is of our day and generation, so the old treasure-house is new to the world. Strangely enough we perceive the structure to be something in the form of a cross, and the western arm of the cross has a hall 155 feet long, and thirty feet wide, with which, it was supposed, were connected the private apartments of the monarch. In the eastern arm of the cross, there is another large hall opening into a spacious apartment eighty feet long, evidently this was where the king held high court. Alabaster slabs, most delicately carved, line the walls of the palace, and give to it an elegance exceeding the palace of Sennacherib. Sardanapalus was a king who delighted in sports, and he is represented on the walls of his palace as seated in his chariot hunting the stag, the gazelle, the wild ass, and the lion. He was also a king for war, and his methods of torturing his captives also appear in carvings by way of honorable mention.

We notice among the reliefs, many such scenes as this, and with them we connect the Bible narrative, that the king of Assyria "took Manasseh and bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon." We could wish there might have been a tablet commemorating the generous deed of Sardanapalus, in setting his kingly captive free after some years, to return to Jerusalem a sadder and a better man.

We visit the so-called "Royal Library" of the king, which was discovered twenty-five hundred years after the destruction of the palace. It consisted not of books, but of clay tablets, which have been removed to enrich the museums of the world. We gather a few of the fragments, and wish that we might discover some familiar name upon them, but the writing is far beyond our ken.

We return to Mosul, to take a fresh start for the ruins of ancient Babylon. Our way lies along that great peninsula between the Euphrates and Tigris Rivers. Several of the ladies of our party are to ride in tukhteravans (a sort of sedan chair, carried along by horses or mules, accompanied by drivers and guards), the others will ride on horses. We have a military protection, and an order from the Pasha to the governor of the region into which we are going, informing him that we are a company of American travelers to the ruins of Babylon, and that we are "peaceable and honorable persons." We are to lodge in khans along the way, and are to eat the food of Arabs, which consists principally of eggs, lebben (sour milk), coarse bread, pomegranates and dates.

After days of weary travel along the dried up courses of ancient canals, and over debris of bricks and brilliantly colored pottery, we arrive at our destination; Mujeliebe, an Arabic name meaning "overturned," the ruins of the once magnificent palace of Nebuchadnezzar. It is a mound, 2,111 feet in circumference, and, at the highest point, 150 feet above the surrounding plain. We wander about the mound, penetrating recesses and passages, which are now the dens of lions and other wild beasts. Isaiah said in his time, when Babylon was in its grandeur: "Wild beasts of the desert shall lie there, and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures, etc." (Isa. 13: 21). We do not see the wild beasts, but the odor is unmistakable. From the top of the mound, a wonderful panorama is spread out before us: the majestic river Euphrates, the palm groves of Hillah with its mosques and minarets, and further in the distance the town of Babel. Close at hand are the ruins of the Hanging Gardens, which Nebuchadnezzar constructed to please his queen. The great palace was also a castle, surrounded by triple walls, whose inner gates were made of the brass taken from the temple of Solomon. On the remains of these walls we see carvings, representing hunting scenes, in which both the king and queen are represented. Lying all about are fragments of bricks, and some whole ones, in size twelve inches square, and four inches thick, were shown to us, which bear on them the inscription: "Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, eldest son of Nabopollassar, King of Babylon."

Our desire is to enter the mound, which we do by a passage on the northern side, which brings us to the very centre. We wander about through passage after passage, and through apartments of varying sizes, still magnificent in decoration, though dimmed with age, and despoiled by the removal of the best to be placed in museums. We are shown the places from which inscriptions have been taken which described the overthrow of the Heb people by Nebuchadnezzar.

GIGANTIC SCULPTURES DISCOVERED IN RECENT EXCAVATIONS

FRESCO OF SENNACHERIB ON THRON

One of our company shows a carving f Nebuchadnezzar on a cameo, cut by order, and now in the Berlin Museum.

We thread our way through the passa until we come to a great banqueting h which has on it still some of the remain that plaster on which was written: "Me mene, tekel, upharsin." In imaginat we see King Belshazzar and a thous of his lords, drinking out of the gold silver vessels which his father Nebuch nezzar had taken out of the Temple of rusalem. We seem to see Daniel in midst, foretelling the doom of the king he translated the writing of his God, mysterious message written in letters fire. "In that night was Belshazzar, king of the Chaldeans, slain."

We pass out of the Mujeliebe and g mile to the south that we may visit remains of the "Hanging Gardens." Th gardens are said to have covered area of three and a half acres, a were built upon a structure of bri work four hundred feet high, wh was covered with earth, and terra and planted with rarest plants a trees. It is now a heap, over t thousand feet in length and bread and more than forty feet high. Th is a solitary tree, the last of th which adorned these gardens, cal one of the seven wonders of the wor But our guide has something m wonderful than the tree to show the veritable den into which Dan was thrown, and in it a sculptur lion, representing the miraculous liverance of Daniel.

The time of our departure is at har we must now turn to the left, a cover a distance of six hundred mi before we reach the Mediterrane at Iskenderoon, where we are to e bark for home. We cast longi glances toward the East, where a l tle less than two hundred miles aw are the ruins of palaces where Cyr and Darius, and Artaxerxes, a Queen Esther held court at Shusha

Mohammedan Converte

A chief teacher of the Mohammedan r ligion, beautifully dressed in a silk rol and turban, and followed by a man se vant, had accomplished the pilgrimage Mecca, and was returning to his own cou try, when, walking through the streets Suez, he was attracted by a sign writt over the American Book Depot, "Fo for Souls." He said to his servant, "Th is very strange," and he then read som words which were written on a card at th door, "Come unto me, all ye that lab and are heavy laden, and I will give yo rest." He was amazed, and asked h servant, "Does that man sell rest in there what does it all mean? This is what I a seeking, rest and peace." He stepped i and was given an Arabic Bible, which h eagerly read, and began to lose faith i his own religion. A few days after h said: "I want to know the truth, and if see the way of this Book to be true, I wi follow it at any cost. What I am after i the salvation of my soul, and for that I ar willing to lose everything." He continue studying the Bible, and the light dawne in his poor, troubled heart, and he foun peace in believing. Since then he ha sought to lead others into the light.

*International Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 24, 1905. Golden Text for quarter: "The Lord is thy keeper," Psalm 121: 5.

†Dr. and Mrs. Crafts would acknowledge their indebtedness to Bishop James T. Newman's book, The Thrones and Palaces of Babylon and Nineveh, for vivid detail in the preparation of this sketch, also for pictures.

IN THE GOLDEN SUMMER DAYS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

OUR GIRLS

THIS is a word for our junior girls, a word to those who are left out so often. How old are you? Twelve, just on the edge of the teens, or just over the line, really in them? Thirteen els ever so much older than twelve, doesn't it? But hen you remember that you really are the same girl -day that you were yesterday, and that you felt almost old when you were half past eleven as you do now, e difference doesn't seem to count. In your class at hool, the girls are all mixed up as to ages, the only re thing about it being that nobody is ten. he girls who are ten are away below you in idies and in everything else, unless it happens at you have younger sisters. Then, with em, you have good times, and forget about e number of birthdays you have had.

Am I writing to a little middle daughter, I onder; to a girl who has beautiful elder sisrs at college, or grown-up; who, perhaps, en has a married sister, which is delightful, cause one day she may be an an aunt to r sister's children, which is great fun? The iddle daughter is herself an elder sister to ose who are younger than she, and I always gard her as a very important member of the mily. Her father is fond of her, for she is t so absorbed by other duties and pleasures at she has not time for him, and she can take walk with him, or read to him when he is ed, or play her new pieces for him, the piano kling a soft accompaniment to his thoughts, he sits by the fire. It is the middle daughr who flies to take her mother's bonnet and at, and who makes her a cup of tea and a isp bit of toast when her head aches, who ats with the visitor who calls when every one out, and who remembers the messages sent er the telephone and reports them correctly. his little daughter is a great favorite with her andparents. They like all the children, of urse, but Kitty, not yet in the high school, t burdened with the abstruse studies that ve Mildred and Bertha so much to do, has sure to go on their errands, to write notes r them now and then, to be their comrade a trip or a journey.

"Which of the girls did grandmother take th her to the shore last summer?" I heard mebody ask.

"Oh, Kitty, of course. She is just the age at grandmother enjoys; not a baby and not young lady, just a sweet sunny-hearted girl. e never finds Kitty a bother, and so I love to ve her go everywhere with her grandmother."

The middle daughter has her little share of othering to do for the children, the boys and rls coming up from the nursery. She hears eir lessons, and shows them how to do their ms, their free-hand drawing and their maps. e is not trying to set them a good example, least she does not think about it in that way, t she is the copy they follow. The older es sometimes find fault with her, and are a tle critical if they think she is growing up o fast, but the little ones adore her, and they imitate r ways and words. If you are a middle daughter you ow all about it; you know how Eva is happiest, dear tle thing, when she can sit at your feet on a hassock, hen you let her go somewhere with you, when you ave your own affairs and tell her a story. When you ay, actually play, with the little ones, they adore u, especially as you do not order them about and nd fault with them, and scold.

As a middle daughter you have some trials. I know e girl who never had an entirely new dress in her fe till she was fourteen, and grew so tall that her elder ster's things could no longer be made for her. She id that she used to be so sorry when she heard her other speak of buying goods that had wearing qualities. She knew that Esther and Marjorie would take such good care of these finely wearing clothes that she would fall heir to them in her turn. But they were always worn out before they reached Jane, who was next to herself.

The middle daughter is often vexed that she is obliged to stay at home when the older ones go out of an evening, and that mother still insists on her early going to bed. She will not be sorry for it bye and bye, but it is rather a hardship now. Mother says, "I mean to keep this daughter a child as long as ever I can." Perhaps in her foolish little heart the girl is hoping for the day when she won't be a child any more.

But she is pretty busy. The middle daughter is in algebra and Latin and has a good deal of work in English, and is busy in laying foundations for the future. It is an interesting time, full of enjoyment.

AN ARMFUL OF HEAVEN

An armful of heaven, the sweet little king
Is of flowers the fairest; no birds that can sing
Can voice all the joy that she finds in her boy,
This mother, whose love is her heaven.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

R. B. I advise you to buy the best possible corset, and if you can afford it, have a corset made to order. That will obviate your difficulty.

—JENNY. Any good brand of tea is right for afternoon tea. Let the tea be made of freshly boiled water and steep it only three minutes. Very small bread and butter sandwiches, wafers, or small cakes are served with five o'clock tea.

THE WELCOME HOME

ERE many days, the scattered clans of the summer will all be gathered at home again; and, far and near, the trains and boats will come swiftly to their terminals, bringing back beloved wanderers to love and duty and the common ways of life. Some have been over the great ocean. Some have been contented to fish in little rivers and brooks near home. Some have visited friends; others have explored strange places. But journeys for recreation and pleasure come to an end, and in September the trunks, rather battered by rough handling, are unpacked and put away in the attic, the boys and girls go to school, the fathers and mothers settle down to the old routine, and everything is as it used to be.

We are apt to forget that sentiment sweetens life, and that romance yields reality with a golden charm. We are apt to be oblivious to the fact that a little air of festival may transform homely fare into a feast.

When somebody who has been traveling comes home, at morning or in the evening, home should wear a gala aspect. The house ought to be in spick and span order; rooms tidy, curtains crisp and clean, flowers in the vases, everything at its best and brightest. Set the table beautifully for the first meal. If Jennie likes cakes and maple syrup, or hot biscuits and honey, let them be provided for supper. If John has a preference for fricassee as his mother makes it, let fricassee be dished up, hot and steaming and savory, when he again sits in his old chair. Keep the worries in the background, and fight the demon of depression when first your dear ones return. Give the home-comers a royal welcome, love's welcome, and you will rejoice that you have done so in the days that follow.

We rather expect some gifts, souvenirs of travel, little remembrances, if only cheap and inexpensive we do not care, since we like to know that we were remembered, from those who have been absent. Why not surprise them, too, with gifts? A new bureau cover for Winnie, a brush and comb for Tom; the book Louis coveted, and a box of paper and envelopes on Mary's desk, will show that love was busy in kind planning, and make the heart thrill with pleasure. After all, life's meaning is spelled with that little word of four letters, love, and life's richest harvestings come from tiny seeds. The little things count far more largely than the big ones in life's sum total.

Baby Lore

Dr. Emelyn L. Coolidge, who is an authority on the care of infants, and whose popular book, The Mother's Manual, should be in every mother's library, has something to say about the dress of the baby who is just beginning to creep. Dr. Coolidge is visiting physician of the Out-patient Department of the Babies' Hospital in New York, and she knows so much on this subject of the wise care of infancy that she speaks with authority.

"Often an active, healthy baby of eight months will attempt to creep a little on the floor or in his 'pen.' This is good exercise, and should be allowed if the baby does it of his own accord, but do not urge him to do so. He knows better than his mother when his little limbs are strong enough for such exercise. Creeping is ruinous to white dresses, petticoats and stockings, therefore many mothers make creeping aprons for their babies to use while on the floor. These aprons are made of fine gingham, and may be put on over the dress or worn without one in very hot weather. They are usually made to button all the way down the back, and sometimes have an elastic or draw-string run into the hem at the bottom of the apron, so that the white skirts may be kept perfectly clean. One mother of twin babies who found it necessary to economize in the matter of washing, made for her children some creeping trousers. In summer they were made of thin gingham and in winter of outing flannel. They were cut after the pattern of ordinary worsted leggings, coming all the way down to the ankles, and having broad elastic to go over the feet to prevent the leggings from slipping up."

LIMPY MIKE'S GIRL

A Story of the Tenements

BY MARY SARGENT HOPKINS

WHEN Maggie Carter married James Day, seven years ago, she considered herself one of the happiest girls in New York. For James was a sturdy, steady young man, a butcher by trade, who never lost his job through inattention to business, never drank, and had always been a good son to his old father and mother. This latter trait was very effective in James' wooing of the pretty shop-girl, for she also had a father and mother to whom she was devoted, and who owed their comfortable home in the tenement in which they had lived for many years to Maggie and her sister Kate, the latter being cook in a restaurant further down-town. Kate was older than Maggie, and by no means handsome, but a better or more faithful soul never was encased in a pudgy body, and a kindlier heart never shone from a pair of eyes in the plainest of faces. A greater contrast than that in the personal appearance of these two sisters could hardly be found. If Maggie had been the daughter of a millionaire, and had lived in upper Fifth Avenue, she would have been spoken of in the society papers as "the beautiful Miss Carter," and columns would have been devoted to descriptions of her magnificent toilets. As it was, being the daughter of an old disabled Civil War veteran, she was known as "pretty Maggie Carter, old limpy Mike's girl." This same "Limpy" had never done a hard day's work since he came from the war. He was not entirely disabled, however, but managed to make a living at doing odd jobs about the markets, and being a good-natured soul, he had not much difficulty in persuading Mary O'Brien that it was her duty to make a home for him, as he was getting along in years and needed one badly.

Now, Mary had a snug little bank account, having been a prudent, saving girl, and always living in wealthy families, where she had received good wages. Mike had been a constant visitor for a number of years, and as Mary herself was "risin' of thirty," as she expressed it, she concluded that she would like a home of her own, even if she did have to furnish, and help support it. Six children were born to the couple in as many years, four of whom died in infancy. Washing and scrubbing to keep things going at home rather interfered with the good woman's maternal duties, and four succeeding summers saw the same number of visits from the small white hearse drawn up before the tenement-house door, as one after another the darlings of Michael and Mary Carter were taken to the crowded cemetery, where little children's graves lie side by side in many rows.

Kate, the oldest, and Maggie, the youngest, were all that were left. Just as soon as the former was big enough to work, she began to help in lightening the burden which grew so heavy for the mother, after Mike had rheumatism and lumbago added to his other ailments, and could no longer work. The only part of poor Mike which did not seem crippled, was his unfailing good nature and his belief that God would never forsake entirely a man who had fought for his country, and given the best years of his youth to the fight, and the remainder to trying to recover from it. Maggie, the youngest child, was the pride of his heart from the time she was born, and he became her nurse, while the mother went out to work.

Gradually, as pretty Maggie grew up, poor Mike grew down. First he gave up hobbling around, and was content to spend his days in his chair. When that became impossible, he lay down upon his bed, never to rise again, although long years of life stretched out before him. "It is the will of God," he said one morning, after ineffectual attempts to rise from the bed, "an' it's not becomin' in me to try and thwart it." Maggie left school and went to work in a shop, adding her slender wages to the family income. They were a happy family in spite of all their troubles, and Mike Carter a much-envied man by his neighbors, especially by one Jim Dugan, who was often heard to say: "There's but wan day in the week I enjoys, and that's Sunday, when I lays on me back, and takes all the comfort the day affords, while ole man Carter has all the week with the ould woman an' the girls waitin' his notion, kapin' thrack av his wants, an' thinkin' themselves proud in the doin'. Some paple do be havin' luck all their days." And out of the door the brawny son of toil would go to hang his burly form over the nearest bar, returning to his home sourer-tempered than ever.

When young Jim Day came courting Maggie, the whole family became interested in the progress of the affair, and when Maggie confessed that Jim had proposed, and desired an early wedding, no one raised any objections, for the girl was the idol of her father, and Jim was a good lad. And so they were married, as the story books say—and lived happy ever afterward, that is, until the breaking out of the Spanish War. Jim enlisted, and Maggie bade him good-by, with the pride of a brave soldier's wife; but the little home was a lonely place now, and Maggie with her baby spent a good part of her time with her beloved, old bedridden father, who cheered her heart with exciting stories of battles in which he had fought, during the great contest between the North and South so many years ago.

"Aye, Maggie, my girl," he would say, as his eyes of Irish blue lighted up with their old-time fire, "it's a great thing to be a soldier and fight for the right; an', next to that, Maggie, do ye mind, is bein' a soldier's wife an' biddin' him Godspeed." But Maggie would only hug her baby closer, and wonder what it might mean to be a soldier's widow.

At last the war was over and James Day came back—back to the little home his wife had kept so carefully for him; but he never seemed the same Jim. His air of careless, happy good-nature was gone, and his gay laugh seldom rang out, while he would look at Maggie and the little one in a way that his wife could not understand.

"What is it, Jim?" she would ask. "Tell me, man! Are ye sorry to get back to the old place? Would you rather be fightin' with the bold soldiers down in Cuba than livin' in peace in New York?"

But Jim would only shake his head, and say, "Maggie, lass, ye don't know what fightin' in Cuba means." For the fever was in Jim's blood, and the chills held a close second.

Jim Day resumed his work at his old stand in the market, and things went on in the little home much the same as before. Another child came, and Maggie was busy all day long—scrubbing, cleaning and tidying the little home. The old folks and faithful hard-working Kate were not forgotten in their tenement home, which now consisted of one room and a so-called bedroom, up five flights of dark, narrow stairs. While Maggie would visit them in the daytime, Jim spent many of his evenings sitting by the old man's bedside, listening to the stories of the wonderful battles in '64.

"Why don't ye ever tell me about your fights, lad?" old Mike would say, after recounting some glowing incident in which he had figured. A shiver would shake the younger man's stooped shoulders, and trying to suppress a cough, he would answer, "I guess I don't remember the right things to tell."

Times grew hard in the little Day household, for Jim could not work uninterruptedly. He had spells of staying at home days at a time, unable to work, and hardly able to wait upon himself. Maggie, at such times, would leave the children with him, not knowing how really sick he was, and go down to the restaurant where her sister worked, and help in washing dishes or in waiting upon table in the busy noon

CONCLUDED ON NEXT PAGE

Baby's Food
can always be uniform if you use Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. The original. Especially prepared as an infant food. Send for Baby's Diary, a valuable booklet for mothers. 108 Hudson Street, New York.

Like the Ships of Uncle Sam's Navy.

Most soaps dissolve quickly if placed in hot water.

Ivory Soap does not.

Left in bath tub or wash basin, it retains its firmness for hours. Like the ships of Uncle Sam's Navy, it floats forever and a day.

Bath; toilet; fine laundry.

There is no "free" (uncombined) alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

Ivory Soap
99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

Wholesale Prices Freight Paid

Our Oven Thermometers Make Good Baking Easy

No extra charge for our
PATENT STELLIFORM GRATE
It saves fuel and trouble.

Gold Coin Stoves have been Standard in high grade trade for nearly fifty years. In every town where they are not now on sale, we will sell direct to the user, the

Gold Coin Ranges

and Heating Stoves at their wholesale price, sent on approval, safely delivered, freight prepaid, highly polished, ready to put in your home. No stoves are better made or more highly endorsed. They allow no waste of fuel; are handsomely ornamented and guaranteed to please you. No stove offer is made anywhere equal to that of a Gold Coin, sent prepaid on and at exactly dealer's cost. Return at our expense if not satisfied. This is the first proposition of this kind ever made by a manufacturer of a Standard Trade-Marked Stove.

A YEAR'S FREE TRIAL

Illustrated Catalogue—Free

It tells what a good stove must be and describes our full line of Gold Coin Ranges and Heating Stoves. Write for it to-day.

The Gold Coin Stove Co., 11 Oak St., Troy, N. Y.
(Successors to Bussey & McLeod, Est. 1860)

RISING SUN STOVE POLISH

Gives the shine which lasts. Makes rust impossible.
Never cakes on iron. Will not burn red.
DURABLE AND ECONOMICAL.

Artloom Tapestries
TRADE MARK REGISTERED

Take Your Home Attractive

WRITE TODAY FOR OUR NEW STYLE BOOK "O" NOW READY

Every woman will find something to interest her in it. You should lose no time in writing for a copy, mailed free on request. It contains twenty-four plates showing Artloom Tapestry Curtains, Couch Covers and Table Covers in their actual colors. You will find the tapestry article in need in color effect and price range, adapted for rooms of varying size; suited for any home, whether modest or pretentious.

Artloom Curtains from $3.00 to $20.00 a pair
Artloom Couch Covers from $3.00 to $7.50
Artloom Table Covers from $1.50 to $5.00

AN INTERIOR VIEW FROM "HOME-MAKING"

Artloom Tapestries are the special boon to the woman whose originality and artistic sense are greater than her purse. Ask your dealer for them. They are woven through and through of the highest grade materials.

Insist on seeing this label.

Artloom Tapestries
TRADE MARK REGISTERED

It appears on every genuine artloom production.

"HOME-MAKING"

the cleverest book on home decorations ever printed. Appreciated by every woman who has the good taste to care about a proper arrangement of her home. Written by Miss Edith Fisher, whose articles in "The Ladies' Home Journal" have stamped her an authority on the subject. In this book she tells how to arrange all the living rooms in your home, combining economy and attractiveness. Twelve full page views showing interior arrangements illustrate the various effects. Send us this coupon with four cents in stamps (the name of your department store or dry goods dealer), and we will send you a copy of "Home-Making," of which we are the exclusive publishers. 48

PHILADELPHIA TAPESTRY MILLS
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

STRONGER THAN MEAT

A Judge's Opinion of Grape-Nuts.

A gentleman who has acquired a judicial turn of mind from experience on the bench sat in the Sunflower State, writes a carefully considered opinion as to the value of Grape-Nuts as food. He says:

"For the past five years Grape-Nuts has been a prominent feature in our bill of fare.

"The crisp food, with the delicious, nutty flavor has become an indispensable necessity in my family's everyday life.

"It has proved to be most healthful and beneficial, and has enabled us to practically abolish pastry and pies from our table, for the children prefer Grape-Nuts, and do not crave rich and unwholesome food.

"Grape-Nuts keeps us all in perfect physical condition—as a preventative of disease it is beyond value. I have been particularly impressed by the beneficial effects of Grape-Nuts when used by ladies who are troubled with face blemishes, skin eruptions, etc. It clears up the complexion wonderfully.

"As to its nutritive qualities, my experience is that one small dish of Grape-Nuts is superior to a pound of meat for breakfast, which is an important consideration for anyone. It satisfies the appetite and strengthens the power of resisting fatigue, while its use involves none of the disagreeable consequences that sometimes follow a meat breakfast." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

SILKS DIRECT FROM FACTORY. Samples Free for stamp. All grades and colors. Quality Guaranteed. Yard wide Black Taffeta, $1 per yard, a Specialty. BLUYTER, DIEPHUIS & CO., Department I, PATERSON, N. J.

LIMPY MIKE'S GIRL

Continued from Preceding Page

hour. The stoop in Jim's broad shoulders grew more perceptible, and his cough and spells of staying at home more frequent. Maggie bravely bore her added burdens, as her working hours grew longer. The rent must be paid too well do tenement dwellers know the alternative, dispossession; their poor little household effects set upon the sidewalk, until such time as a hole may be found in which to crawl for shelter.

At last came a time when Maggie's cup of trouble became full and running over. Jim came down with pneumonia, and he was having a hard time trying to live through the attack. Maggie's little hoard which she had been months accumulating, penny by penny, for her time of trial, went for doctor's fees and medicines for Jim. All were of no avail, and one night the ambulance carried him to Bellevue, where he died in a few hours, faithful Maggie holding his hand and keeping back the scalding tears, lest her sorrow disturb the last moments of her husband.

The home of her parents was only a few blocks away, and there the poor mother went scarcely knowing how she got there, for the sacred pangs of maternity were already upon her. When the gray light of morning stole in at the tenement window, there lay upon an improvised pillow of a miserable bed the Madonna-like head of Maggie Carter, and by her side nestled her little son, wrapped in a bit of white flannel, while in the inner room an old man lay helpless, his poor old wife weeping beside his couch, too weak and sick to do more.

Brave Kate stood at her post. It was she who had gone for the doctor, and she who never flinched when he said, "The shock of her husband's death has been too great; your sister cannot live." "God willin', she shall," replied faithful Kate, reverently.

And live she did, but it was many days before Maggie could lift her head from the pillow and look at the little son by her side. "Poor Jim," she would murmur, "an' he never to see the boy!" A representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who had heard of the case, looked about the room, and this is what she saw: a stove, upon which was a boiler of clothes, filling the room with the steamy odor of soapsuds; a few chairs, more or less dilapidated, a rickety table, and a miserable bed in the corner, upon which the sick woman lay, pallid and exhausted. Poor, homely Kate, with tear-streaked cheeks, was trying to "tidy up" a bit, but so small was the room and so crowded, that she was having poor success. The two older children had returned from the kind neighbor who had taken charge of them for a day or two, and were clumbing upon the bed, trying to get a peep at their baby brother. The two old people in the bedroom were striving to comfort each other; but it was all so dreadful, for they had loved Jim as a son, and he had returned their love.

"Aye, he was a good lad," sighed Mike the veteran, "and I'll never know about the fights in Cuby now."

"Don't be talkin' of fightin'," said Mary, the old wife, "sure ye fit in the wan war, an' Jim in the other, an' ye have a grandson now, that God willin', will grow up to fight for his country, if there is need. What more do ye want, man? an' poor Maggie layin' like one dead."

"Ay, poor Maggie!" mused the old man, as if speaking to himself. "Jim was a fine, handsome lad, an' what good is old Mike a layin' here, aitin' the bite the others need."

"Father," cried Kate, "we'll not suffer, for ye have plenty time to pray for us all. Sure I did not know there were such good people in the world." For kind and busy fingers had replaced Maggie's ragged bed-furnishings with spotless blankets and linen, and a check for the rent which was then due, lay on the little table. Maggie's poor little home had been broken up, and her furniture put upon the sidewalk, at the time she lay hovering between life and death, and Kate, poor girl, had been in deadly fear lest the same evil overtake her household. How they blessed THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and when told of the Mont-Lawn Home where, later, the children could go for a vacation, their gratitude knew no bounds.

"God never forsakes them that's honest," said Kate. "Nor them that fights for their country," the old man added firmly.

The old woman wiped her eyes on the corner of her apron, and the woman on the bed opened her sorrowful eyes, and whispered, "Poor Jim! He will never see his boy."

ANSWERED PRAYERS

J. E. N., Connecticut. "God has answered my prayers in the conversion of two dear brothers."

W. J. C., New York. "In answer to persistent prayer, God spared to us a child sick unto death."

L. May H., Louisiana. "Twice, when in fear, I prayed God and he delivered me. Praise his holy name."

A Reader, Brooklyn. "I know that God hears and answers prayer when we pray in earnestness of spirit."

Minnie S., Illinois. "I realize that God does answer prayers. He greatly blessed me by relieving me of a great distress."

Art M. R., New York. "I asked God to help me a great many times, and it is a great comfort to know he hears our prayers."

Mrs. M. D., Staten Island. "I was sorely afflicted and cast down. I asked God if it was his will, to remove my burden, and he did."

Old Subscriber, Pennsylvania. "I have had a great burden removed in answer to prayer. I am still praying that loved ones may be converted."

M. F. H., Maine. "In great distress, I prayed to my Father, and he heard my prayer and sent relief. My heart is full of gratitude and praise."

M. T., California. "I wish to thank the good Lord for deliverance from a threatened illness, and testify that he hears us when we call, and answers prayers."

G. H. B., Oregon. "I have recently been blessed in answer to prayer. I write that some others may be encouraged to wait upon the Lord and never grow weary."

A Sister, Pennsylvania, "We prayed for the life of a dear brother to be spared to us. He lay at death's door. He is almost recovered. God heard and answered our prayers."

Mrs. J. M. O., Minnesota. "'God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in time of trouble.' I want to acknowledge the goodness of my Saviour in answering my prayer."

Mrs. A. U., Ohio. "I promised God that if he would hear my prayer concerning my soul, I would acknowledge it. He answered in a wonderful way and I praise his holy name."

A Reader, Pennsylvania. "I have become interested in the 'Answered Prayer' column, and have been encouraged to take things to God in prayer, and I feel that my prayers have been answered many times."

Mrs. A. K., New York. "I have been much benefited and encouraged in reading the 'Answered Prayers', and wish to publicly acknowledge God's goodness and mercy to me. Many prayers have been answered."

H. S., Massachusetts. "I acknowledge God's goodness to me, and it is my humble request to those who are in doubt that they leave all with him, trusting entirely. He will not fail to help."

Mrs. E. N. G., Tennessee. "I promised the Lord that if he would save the soul of a dear brother, I would let it be known in this way. He answered my prayer, and six months ago that brother went to heaven."

A Mother, Maryland. "I was under a great cloud of sadness and troubles; I took it all to our dear God in prayer, and trusted in him. I prayed for months, and when the cloud seemed the darkest, God answered."

N. B. F., Iowa. "I have prayed for the life, the health, the welfare of those who are very dear to me and my prayers have been answered. I have also asked the Lord to help me in other ways and never yet has he failed me."

C. E. S., Indiana. "I wish to acknowledge the Lord's goodness in healing me, so I have been able to do the hard work that it seemed needful I should. I am sure he took away the pain and weakness because I asked him."

S. J. M., Massachusetts. "I wish to publicly acknowledge God's answer to prayer. A dear one's health failed and I prayed that she might recover. She has so far that I am assured that our Father does hear and answer our petitions."

L. D., Tennessee. "I have received much comfort from reading your 'Answered Prayer' column. I have had many prayers answered, and I believe when we go to God with our troubles, and ask his help and have faith in him, he will answer us."

A Firm Believer, Canada. "An old subscriber had a son who was sunk low. I prayed for him for two years almost continually. God has answered my prayer, and I ask every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to remember my son in their prayers."

Mrs. H. H., California. "I have been in a place when my heart has been faint from fear, and when I have been anguished in soul and body, also, on account of it. God so sweetly gave me this very morning, his word of promise in Isa. 40: 28-31. Oh, how it strengthened my fainting spirit and body; for my body was failing under the nervous strain. 'They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength.'"

Alice May, Connecticut. "As I was looking through 'Answered Prayers,' I read the story of a little boy who had an inherited fear of nightfall, and who, through faith in Jesus, had been cured of his fright. I was terribly frightened of thunder storms. I prayed to Jesus to take my fear of thunderstorms away. He did, and during the next thunderstorm I was not afraid. I am twelve years old, and have been frightened ever since I was a little girl."

Old Dutch Cleanser

OLD DUTCH CLEANSER
is the modern triumph, in favor of which the old line soaps, scouring brick and soap powders are set aside by practical housekeepers.
OLD DUTCH CLEANSER
Cleans
Scrubs
Scours
Polishes
OLD DUTCH CLEANSER
contains no lyes or Caustic, and being highly porous
Absorbs Dirt
—doesn't scratch or eat off dirt as well as surface of article to be cleaned.

A large "sifting top" can 10c

Ask Your Grocer For It

CUDAHY—Maker—OMAHA, U. S. A.

Learn to Knit

The Columbia Book of Yarns has always been the best work on knitting, but the new edition is better than ever. It is larger, has 96 pages and contains illustrations of all the newest articles. Every detail of knitting is explained, from the simplest stitch to the making of the finest garments. Worth $1, but sent for 15 cents. At dealers' or by mail, because it will create a larger demand for the finest, elastic, brilliantly colored Columbia Yarns.

Look for the [illegible] trade-mark on the label around every skein.

Columbia Yarns, Philadelphia

PARKER'S Arctic Socks

Healthful for bed-chamber, sick and sick-room. Warm as cashmere and absorbs perspiration. Made of [illegible] yarn, [illegible] and [illegible] parts [illegible]

Catalogue free. Look for Parker's name in every pair.
J. H. Parker, Dept. K 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

"As Different from a Ready-Made Shop Suit as Day from Night."

So wrote one of our customers concerning a suit we recently made to her order. She is one of the thousands of enthusiastic women who have found our system a relief from all dressmaking troubles. A trial order will make you an enthusiast too.

We keep no ready-made garments.

For 17 years we have made garments to order from measurements sent us by mail. We have fitted over 375,000 women in this way. That is why we say:

"We guarantee to fit you or refund your money."

FALL SUITS Made to Order . . $6 to $25
NOTHING READY-MADE.

Style Book and samples of materials sent free. ¶ Our Style Book illustrates over 150 of the latest New York fashions.

VISITING COSTUMES . .	$6.00 to $20
TAILOR-MADE SUITS . .	$7.50 to $25
SEPARATE SKIRTS . .	$3.50 to $12
RAIN COATS	$9.75 to $20
JACKETS AND COATS .	$5.75 to $25

We prepay express charges to any part of the U. S.

WE SEND FREE by return mail to any part of the U. S. our new Fall and Winter Style Book showing the latest New York Fashions, a large assortment of samples of the newest materials, and simple directions for taking measurements correctly. Write for them to-day. ¶ Kindly state whether you wish samples for a suit, skirt, cloak or rain coat, and about the colors you desire, and we will send a full line of exactly what you wish.

National Cloak and Suit Co.,
119 and 121 West 23rd Street, New York.
Mail Orders Only. No Agents or Branches. Established 17 Years.

5% Without Risk

Our investment does not interest those who wish to speculate with their money, but to the careful investor seeking a fair return on his savings it strongly commends itself.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS and LOAN CO.

has earned a reputation for reliability and prompt dealing not surpassed by any institution of its kind. Our business, established 12 years, is conducted under the supervision of the New York Banking Department, by whom it is examined each year.

Our Patrons are Protected

by assets amounting to almost two million dollars. Our loans are made upon the best class of New York and Suburban Real Estate—to home-buyers, who pay us interest and part of the principal each month, which is in turn reinvested.

WE PAY 5% PER YEAR ON YOUR SAVINGS

which bear earnings for every day in our care. Your money is always subject to your control if required for other purposes. START NOW. Earnings begin as soon as your money is received, and are mailed you by check semi-annually, or compounded, if desired.

Our clients include many prominent clergymen, professional and business men in every State of the Union—some, doubtless, in your locality—to whom we are privileged to refer you. They heartily endorse our methods.

Assets, ... $1,750,000
Surplus and Profits, $150,000
Write for Particulars.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS and LOAN CO.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, N. Y. City

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

The new heat-imparting Thermalite Bag

"Successor to the Hot-Water Bag"

Gives an even, long-continued, comforting heat at just the right degree of temperature.

It Can be Always Ready, for it stores heat to use when wanted; you simply remove and replace the stopper as directed and the bag will become hot in a minute, and stay hot for hours.

In a word, the Thermalite Bag is the Most Comforting Article that a Little Money Can Buy.

John Wanamaker says: "There will be a Thermalite Bag in every home in the land."

Made in five sizes. $1.25 to $3.00. No. 2 (2-quart size), $2.

Sold by all leading Druggists. Write for free descriptive book.

REMEMBER: Just as soon as you become acquainted with THERMALITE heat, you will never want to use a hot-water bag again.

THE THERMALITE COMPANY, 164 Elm St., New York City
308 St. James Street, Montreal.

AGENTS $20 to $50 weekly Entire or spare time Selling STANDARD SELF-Filling Fountain PENS
No ink dropper. No smeared fingers No "blow" No taking apart to clean No twisted rubber No valve or piston No awkward hump No complication FREE LESSONS in Successful Salesmanship make experience unnecessary. Write for new plan and do it NOW.
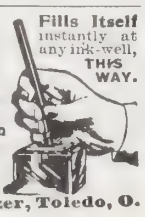
Standard Pen Co., 1506 Spitzer, Toledo, O.



THE HOSPITAL AT GUANAJUATO

Good Samaritan Work in Mexico

JUST fourteen years ago, Dr. Levi B. Salmans went to Guanajuato, Mexico, under appointment of Bishop Ninde. He was specially charged to see what effect the practice of medicine, properly conducted, might have on the popular feeling toward Protestants in that land, and to inform himself concerning the prospects of the missionary work of his church, in a region where that work was waning, owing to the intense persecution and general ostracism of Christian converts. Dr. Salmans founded the Good Samaritan Hospital at Guanajuato, and rapidly established dispensaries in several towns, which immediately found a large patronage on the part of the poor. Soon the rich also were attracted in sufficient numbers, to provide him the larger part of the means necessary for carrying on the work. A scourge of typhus broke out in 1892, and as there was no regular hospital there, certain foreigners began to urge Dr. Salmans to build one. At the same time many Mexicans, of the middle and poorer classes, made a similar petition, because of the distance from which the sick were brought to him, and the difficulty with which they were taken home, some even dying on the way.

The task of building and equipping was a very slow one, and the Institution was not opened until October, 1899. Even then it had only 7 beds for patients. It has steadily grown, until now it has 44 rooms and 35 beds in use, while 12 rooms remain to be finished, to put the whole Institution into use with 56 rooms and 55 beds.

From the opening day, difficulty was encountered through the lack of Mexican trained nurses. There was not then an institution in that country which trained for such work. Nursing in the municipal hospitals was done by ignorant servants. The Spaniard had instilled in the Mexicans the feeling that it is a disgrace to work with the hands, if you have brains, social position or pretensions. Those whom the doctor could engage to care for the sick, had neither the mental nor the social qualities required, while those who had such gifts and graces spurned such an occupation.

After a while, the several young ladies from the Protestant high schools were induced to take up the work, and the first Nursing School of Mexico has now attained a pretty firm footing. Miss Edith V. Wright, of Wesley Hospital, Chicago, is the Superintendent of Nurses, and Miss Jennie E. Jackson, formerly related with the same Chicago institution, has also become connected with the School. So rapidly did the work grow from the very start, that it has been necessary to enlist additional physicians. Dr. Cartwright, the wife of one of the missionaries, was the first recruit, and she is now conducting a very promising work in Leon, a large city. She previously spent four years in the work in Guanajuato. Six other doctors have been brought out from the United States, and two young Mexicans, educated in the United States, are busy as physicians in the hospital. Work is being carried on in three cities, the larger, however, being in Guanajuato, where five doctors devote their whole time to the sick.

Under the influence of this beneficent medical institution, fanaticism has greatly moderated, and the Protestant Churches are filled with people, and the schools with pupils. The small Protestant Church in Guanajuato has become two Churches, both wholly self-supporting. The W. F. M Society spent $30,000 (Mexican) on an edifice for a School for Girls. There is also a school for training House-to-House Visitors, or what would be called Deaconesses in the United States.

The earnings of the medical work in Guanajuato last year were about $9,000 (Mexican), the Missionary Society gave $2,000 (Mexican), and donations from the people of the city were about $6,000, thus covering the total expenditure in this one city in this branch of the work of $17,000 Mexican currency. The recent flood did not damage any property of the Mission, save a very slight damage to the Girl's School. But the effect of the flood on the income of the Hospital has been to reduce it greatly, so that new friends must be found to take the place of those who have been impoverished by the great inundation. Eight thousand dollars gold, are still needed to complete the Hospital building and furnishings. Any aid rendered to this worthy work by readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be gratefully welcomed.

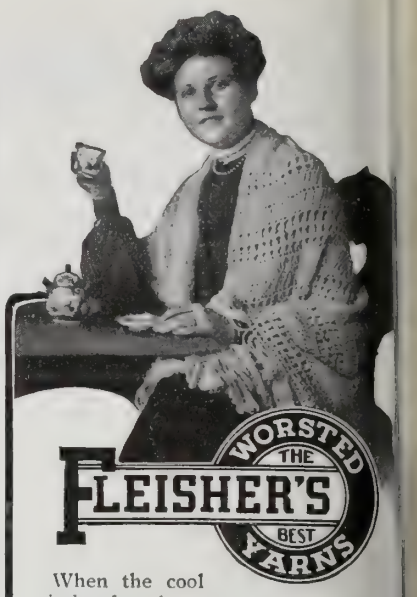
Convention of the Disciples of Christ

THE Annual National Missionary Convention of the Disciples of Christ, held at San Francisco, Aug. 17-24, was a most successful gathering. This convention is triune, including the American or Home Board, the Foreign Board, and the Women's Board, the last named of which is both home and foreign in its work. The Woman's Board occupied two days, and made splendid reports. Their consecration motto was: "To Him who hath redeemed us—our minds, our means, ourselves." Their work in Mexico, Porto Rico, Jamaica, India and this country, prospers greatly. The mountain schools of the South, the English Bible Chair work at four State Universities and the Orphanages, never did better service. The Convention this year only reports ten months of the year.

The Foreign Society doing work in twelve foreign countries, and employing over four hundred men and women, made the best showing of its history, in work done, money raised, and enlargement of the forces. The full year will round up a quarter million dollars; seventeen new missionaries sent out; one new secretary of the Board employed, and two new schools—one a ministerial training school in India, the other a college for young ladies in Japan—and some twenty-five new "Living Link" churches added to the list.

The Home Board employed 362 missionaries, who did work at 783 points, preached 25,840 sermons, and gathered 12,124 persons into the churches. Especially successful is the work in the country of Oklahoma, where eighty-six churches were assisted, and eighty-three houses of worship built. This society does work in almost every State of the Union, and in Porto Rico. One of the new boards of the Society recently formed, the National Board of Evangelization, is accomplishing great things in arousing and directing evangelistic activities in many parts of the country.

(REV.) S. T. WILLIS.



When the cool winds of early autumn are blowing, comfort and warmth are to be had in knitted and crocheted garments. The greatest pleasure, however, is in the making of these for one's self. Bitter experience has taught the expert knitter or crocheter to use only the best yarns. No matter how skilled she may be, the finished work will not be satisfactory if the yarn is not of the highest grade.

The "Fleisher" Yarns are the acknowledged standard of excellence—uniform, lofty, elastic—the colors bright and lasting. Your dealer should carry them. Every woman who uses The "Fleisher" Yarns knows that they are dependable in every way, and that a garment knitted or crocheted of them will stand the test of wear and wash.

Knitting Worsted	Germantown Zephyr
Dresden Saxony	Spanish Worsted
Shetland Floss	Ice Wool
Cashmere Yarn	Shetland Zephyr
Pamela Shetland	Spiral Yarn

When ordering ask for "FLEISHER'S." Each skein bears the trade-mark ticket.

Free booklet, "A SHORT TALK ABOUT YARNS," mailed upon request.

"FLEISHER'S KNITTING AND CROCHETING MANUAL," mailed for four tickets from The "Fleisher" Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making all the new style and staple garments.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER
Department "B," PHILADELPHIA

From 1611 to 1901

For nearly 300 years the Bible was not re-translated. The language of the 1611 or "King James" edition had all these years remained unchanged, while the English language itself changed so much that at least twenty-five different dictionaries were necessary.

For these reasons

THE AMERICAN STANDARD
Revised Bible

is welcomed by all English-speaking people. It gives the Scriptures in plain modern English, easily understood by every reader. Bible scholars worked 29 years to produce it.

All booksellers have in stock, or can quickly get from us, any style of the American Standard Revised Bible you order. Prices, 35c. to $18.00, according to size and binding. We sell direct where booksellers will not supply.

Free—"The Story of the Revised Bible" our 40-page book, which tells why the Bible was revised, how it was accomplished, and shows sample pages, bindings, etc., of the many styles issued. Your name on a postal card, with the name of your bookseller, will get you this booklet.

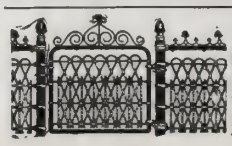
THOMAS NELSON & SONS
38 N East 18th Street, New York



LAWN FENCE
Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches. Address
COILED SPRING FENCE CO.
Box D Winchester, Ind.

A Hundredth Birthday

PASTOR ANTON WILHELM GERSDORF, who for almost half a century has been a minister of the Gospel in his native village of Wondisch-Ahlsdorf, Germany, celebrated his one hundredth birthday a few weeks ago. He was born on the 26th of July, 1806, the son of Pastor Johann Traugott Gersdorf, and his wife Elizabeth. His early days were passed in his father's snug little parsonage. From 1822 to 1829, he attended the gymnasium, and later went to study theology at the University of Halle. In 1846 he succeeded his father as minister in his native town. His father's service was a noteworthy one, as he had taken up the pastorate in 1785.

PASTOR GERSDORF

Pastor Gersdorf was knighted by the Kaiser, being made a member of the Order of the Red Eagle, and in 1894 he was pensioned by the State.

In later years, much to the regret of his old parishioners, he took up his residence with his married daughter who lived near Luebenwerda. Here, in 1899, he celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his wedding. The aged couple were presented at this time with a gold jubilee medal. On the 26th of last July, still a strong man, he rounded out his ninety-ninth year. He spent the day with his children and grandchildren, and was greatly pleased when a special letter of congratulation arrived from the German Court. Such a long life spent in the service of the Master, is indeed an example and inspiration to the people of other countries, as well as to those of the Fatherland.

A Mother's Influence

A YOUNG Scotchman, of thirty years or more, came to the New York Gospel tent meetings lately. He was a stockbroker in Wall Street, and declared he had not been to church for ten years. One night when an infidel attempted to interrupt the speaker, this young Scotchman was dragged to interest and deal with him in private conversation. An evening or so later he came to the speaker and said he would like to mention the fact that he was able to attend to the infidel all right, whereupon the speaker asked if he had led him to Christ. "Me! lead him to Christ? Why I myself am the worst sinner you ever saw. I am eternally damned. There is no hope for me." The speaker asked him not to speak so roughly; that God could and would save him. After a little while he brought forward a letter written by his good Scotch mother, in which she expressed the earnest prayer that her son might be saved, and asked him if he would kindly read John 3:16. "Speaker, what is John 3:16?" he asked. This was read to him, and when one attempted to read the 17th, he said: "Only read the 16th, for my mother said John 3:16." After some words and conversation, the light broke upon his soul, and his strong spirit, which had many nights been under conviction, was freed from the bondage of sin and self by an open declaration of purpose to accept Jesus Christ. He has since become one of the faithful workers.

A milkman was driving by the tent at Catharine Slip and heard the words of an old familiar hymn. "Sing them over again to me." He was at once carried back in memory to his home and mother. The arrow of conviction pierced his conscience. He took his horse and wagon over the ferry, to the Borough of Brooklyn, cared for them for the night, and hastened back over the ferry again to the tent, in time for the after meeting. He at once publicly confessed Christ, and told that he had been reached by hearing this old song, which his mother used to sing.—New York Examiner.

Church Workers and Church Singers

Several pages of new ideas and new material in the coming numbers of The Ladies' Home Journal.

Entertainments by Young People's Societies. Programs planned especially for amateur local talent where resources are limited.

New Church Suppers and Church Fairs. Pages of ideas on menus and management, all of the out-of-the-ordinary kind; both large and small suppers and fairs.

The Church Choir will be given several beautiful devotional songs.

"Come Unto Me," by Jessie Hilton Farrell Wilson; an invitingly restful solo, beautiful for church singing.

"Crossing the Bar," Mr. George B. Nevin's setting for Tennyson's great poem for effective quartette singing.

Two beautiful devotional songs by Kate Douglas Wiggin.

In the December issue: a Christmas Cantata, a Christmas Prayer and hints for Sunday-School entertainments. A splendid description of "The Successors of Moody and Sankey," with their famous "Glory Song" given with full music.

See the present and future numbers of

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

On sale anywhere and everywhere at 15 cents per copy, or sent to any address for one year, until Oct. 1, on receipt of $1.00; after Oct. 1, $1.25.

The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

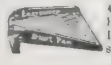
30 FLOWERING BULBS FOR 10c

Together with our Catalogue and a complete treatise on the culture of Hardy Bulbs. All by mail, 10 cts.

[illegible] Bulbs, in Crocus, 4 to each, different colors, will make 10 separate [illegible] pots of flowers for winter, or 10 clumps of [illegible] in your garden. Pot or plant them now.

Our Illustrated Catalogue of Hyacinths, Tulips, Narcissus, Crocus, Lilies and all Hardy or Holland Bulbs, and rare new [illegible], mailed free to all who apply.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N. Y.



AGENTS OUTFIT FREE. Easy-sweep Dust Pan. Rat-proof with foot; dirt emptied without litter. Large Catalog very latest household articles, rapid sellers. Richardson Mfg. Co., Dept. 6, Bath, N.Y

The "Ocularscope" Free

Get Your Glasses at Wholesale

Examine your own eyes without an oculist. Send for our "Ocularscope," the latest invention of the 20th century. Sent Free, with our beautiful Illustrated Catalogue of spectacles and eyeglasses. Mail order only. Send to-day.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS
402 Houseman Building, Grand Rapids, Mich.

COILED SPRING FENCE

That is Horse High, Bull Strong, Pig- and Chicken tight.

SOLD DIRECT TO YOU

At less than dealers' prices and we pay the Freight.

Our Catalogue tells how Wire is made, how Wire is galvanized,—why some is good and some bad. You should have this information. Write for Catalogue.

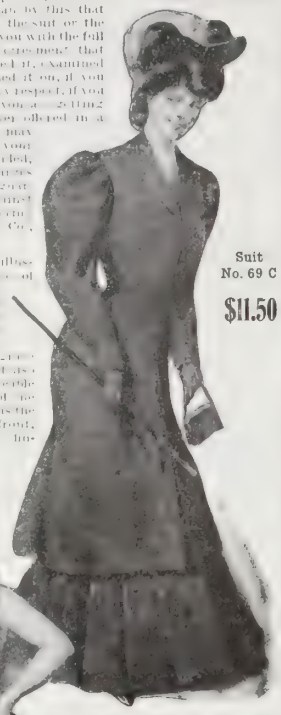
KITSELMAN BROTHERS,
Box 297, Muncie Indiana

GINSENG Culture [illegible] big [illegible] little [illegible] here [illegible] Send [illegible] one-tenth the revenue that a 2-acre [illegible] cooperative plan enables you to take [illegible] large [illegible] in a small [illegible] way. T. H. SUTTON, 530 Sherwood Avenue, LOUISVILLE, KY.

Fashion Book Free

Write to-day for our handsome illustrated Catalogue of New York's Latest Styles in Women's, Misses' and Children's Wear.

TWO SPECIAL BARGAINS. Below we illustrate two of the very newest models in a coat suit and skirt for the Fall and Winter season. The illustrations represent the garments exactly. We guarantee the quality, style and fit to give absolute satisfaction. We mean by this that you can order either the suit or the skirt—it will be sent you with the full understanding and agreement that after you have received it, examined it thoroughly and tried it on, if you are not pleased in every respect, if you are not satisfied that you are getting the greatest value ever offered in a suit or skirt, you may return it to us and your money will be refunded, including express charges both ways. The above guarantee insures you against all possible risk in dealing with Siegel Cooper Co., New York City.



Suit No. 69 C

$11.50

No. 69 C. This illustration represents one of our very newest Fall and Winter models for 1905. It is the new and extreme Directoire 32-in. COAT SUIT, possessing not alone grace and beauty of style, but extraordinary serviceable qualities. It is made of fine all-wool broadcloth, has the tight-fitting back, fly front, large sleeves, tailor turned collar and cuffs, all beautifully stitched. Lined to the waist with satin, all seams bound and finished in the best possible manner. The skirt is gored plaited, correctly cut. Colors black, navy blue or brown. Sizes 32 to 44 chest measure. Length of skirt, 39 to 43 inches. An unmatched value. Price . . $11.50

Skirt No. 79 C

$4.75

No. 79 C. This walking skirt is the correct new Fall and Winter model in the much desired sixty plaited style. The plaits are stitched in the deep yoke effect smartly flaring to hem. It is made of fine finished all-wool broadcloth, in black, navy blue or brown. Tailored in the best possible manner. Sizes 22 to 29 in. waist band, 37 to 44 inches O. Exceptional skirt in style, material and price, . $4.75

THE BIG STORE A CITY IN ITSELF

We have No Branch Houses — SIEGEL COOPER Co. — We Employ No Agents

SIXTH AVE. 18TH 19TH STS.

NEW YORK CITY, N.Y.

LUCKY MISTAKE

Grocer Sent Pkg. of Postum and Opened the Eyes of the Family.

A lady writes from Brookline, Mass.:

"A package of Postum Coffee was sent me, one day by mistake.

"I notified the grocer, but finding that there was no coffee (the old kind) for breakfast next morning, I prepared some Postum, following the directions very carefully.

"It was an immediate success in my family, and from that day we have used it constantly, parents and children too—for my three rosy youngsters are allowed to drink it freely at breakfast and luncheon. They think it delicious, and I would have a mutiny on my hands should I omit the beloved beverage. My husband used to have a very delicate stomach while we were using coffee, but to our surprise his stomach has grown strong and entirely well since we quit coffee and have been on Postum.

"Noting the good effects in my family, I wrote to my sister, who was a coffee toper, and after much persuasion, got her to try Postum. She was prejudiced against it at first, but when she presently found that all the ailments that coffee gave her left, and she got well quickly, she became and remains a thorough and enthusiastic Postum convert. Her nerves, which had become shattered by the use of coffee have grown healthy again, and to-day she is a new woman, thanks to Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich., and the "cause why" will be found in the great little book "The Road to Wellville," which comes in each pkg.

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Rekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

100 NEW SONGS IN YOUNG PEOPLE'S SONGS OF PRAISE

30 cents per copy, by mail; $25.00 per hundred.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.—Chicago-New York

THE OLDEST PROTESTANT CHURCH

AT Hill Cliffe, Cheshire, England, within less than two miles of the centre of the town of Warrington, stands what is regarded as the oldest Protestant church in the world. In it a small community of Baptists worship. For many generations a body of Christ's people have met on this sacred spot, where continuous worship is supposed to have been held for four hundred years or more. The earliest documents show that the church belonged to the Anabaptists. The date given as the origin of the church is 1552, which proves that it must have been formed very early in the Reformation period. There are, however, good grounds for believing that for a long time before the date given a company of devout people met there in worship. This supposition is supported by the ancient character of the graveyard adjoining, where, during the past sixty years, gravestones have been discovered bearing such early dates as 1357, 1414, 1511, 1521 and 1522. It is asserted by some authorities that the church was established as the result of the labors of Roger Holland, who was martyred at Smithfield in 1588. Oliver Cromwell worshiped here after he met the Royalist forces at Warrington. The present pastor is Rev. J. Samuel Hughes, under whom it has become a centre of much active and useful Christian work.

THE OLDEST BAPTIST CHAPEL AS IT IS TO-DAY

London, Eng. J. K. MACLEAN.

JERUSALEM'S DOWNFALL

By MRS. M. BAXTER

THOUGH Judah had seen the captivity of Israel, she did not learn her lesson; and as a people, went as deeply into sin as Israel, although the semblance of the worship of Jehovah still existed, and the state religion was not openly idolatrous as in Israel with Jeroboam's golden calves. The best which God could do with a people whose heart turned after their covetousness was to raise up witnesses, and give times of revival, so that those who would serve the Lord should at least have the opportunity. Thus Hezekiah and Josiah were raised up by God, and instituted reforms, and each of them celebrated a famous Passover, which would answer to a revival of preaching the Gospel in our own day. The Lamb was brought into prominence, the blood was honored. "When I see the blood, I will pass over you," called to mind the blessed truth of redemption from Egypt, and many, no doubt, in those times, were turned from idols to seek the true God.

And God raised them up prophets. Who knows how many have been brought to know God in Hezekiah's time through the ministry of Isaiah, and how many gleams of light on the suffering, as well as the reigning Messiah, may have penetrated the hearts of the faithful? Who knows how many may have recognized their national and personal sins, and have sought that, with Isaiah, through the coals of the altar their iniquity might be done away and their sin purged? Who knows how much the rugged, powerful words of Amos at this time, may have been used of God to bring men to repentance, both in Judah and Israel, by his fearless denunciations of the sin of the nations, too.

Now this man, whose presence was so intolerable to Amaziah, the high priest of the golden calf at Bethel, may have left behind in Israel some soul-saving truths which made many to rejoice? And Micah, with his visions of the terrible sin of his people, "full of power by the Spirit of the Lord to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin" (Mic. 3:8) "seeing Zion in the future ploughed as a field, Jerusalem becoming heaps, and the mountain of the house (the royal house) as high places of the forest" (Mic. 3: 12),—surely some would be convicted by his writings. And then Hosea, with his tender, yearning heart; broken with the shame, grieved with the sin of his people, and at the same time understanding the warning of the heart of God over them. Surely some must have hearkened unto God through him. And then Jeremiah and Ezekiel too, who both lived on into the days of the captivity, surely some souls must have been won by these.

In the days in which we live it might seem as though it were difficult to serve God. We, too, live in times of declension; the terrible departure from the fear of God and from respect and obedience to his Word, the failure to recognize its authority, and the unwillingness to bow to it, make it, as never before, necessary for children of God to stand to their colors. There are some who have a sense of shame when people of high repute regard them as utterly wanting in knowledge when they believe what the Bible says. But before whom do we stand — man or God? Will man or God be our judge? Did man or God redeem us at the cost of his own life? Can we, can any of us afford to cast away our confidence which hath great recompense of reward, in order that we may stand well with man whose breath is in his nostrils? What loss is it to lose the good opinion of men who are on their way to perdition? Thank God for his revival fire in these days of declension. Where the fire is burning no question is raised about the authority of Scripture. The living God, the God of the Bible asserts himself, and man must bow before him.

MELLIN'S For the Baby FOOD

You may be thinking of using an artificial food for your baby. Try Mellin's Food; it is a proper food suited to the baby's condition. It is not a medicine but a true food. Let us send you a sample to try.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

To get a warm home welcome.

Summer is swiftly passing. You cannot begin a day too soon to prepare against bleak Winter if you pay the bills and suffer the ills of old-fashioned heating.

AMERICAN RADIATORS & IDEAL BOILERS

yield enduring comfort, and last as long as the building stands.

They give even heat, healthful heat, clean heat—no mixture of dust, ashes and coal gases in the living rooms. IDEAL Boilers and AMERICAN Radiators repay their own cost in fuel and labor savings, and absence of repairs.

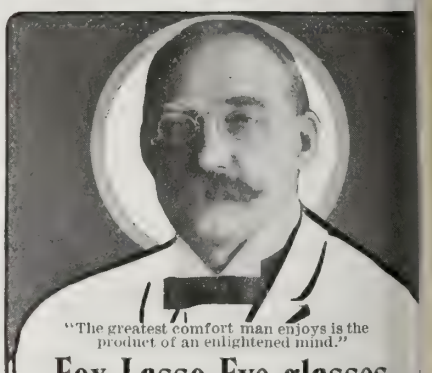
Put in OLD or new buildings, (cottage, house, store, church, school, etc.,) farm or city, and without in the least disturbing the occupants or building.

Your neighbors will tell you of their experience and satisfaction, but you will need our catalogues (free) to select from. Tell us kind of building you wish to heat. Our goods warehoused in all parts of the United States. Write us now.

AMERICAN RADIATOR COMPANY

Dept. 29. CHICAGO

IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL



"The greatest comfort man enjoys is the product of an enlightened mind."

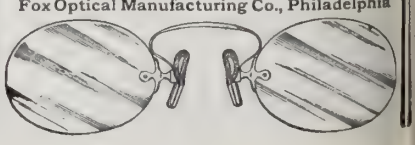
Fox Lasso Eye-glasses are wonderfully successful because back of them is a man who knows his business. Mr. Ivan Fox, the originator of Fox Lasso Eye-glasses is a practical optician. He is more. Mr. Fox is a master workman. He is more. Mr. Fox is an inventive genius of high rank. HE IS MORE. Mr. Fox is a recognized authority on eye-glasses. Every one who knows Mr. Fox's work knows that Fox glasses have got to be right.

One of the most important features of Fox Lasso Eye-glasses over all other eye-glasses is the Lasso Guard, which is extremely comfortable; holds the glasses firmly without fear of slipping or dropping, and keeps them constantly and steadily before the pupils of the eyes. The Tubular Spring with Screw-Lock ends is also a very important improvement. All are patented.

Sold by leading opticians. Go to your optician to-day and ask him for Fox Lasso Eye-glasses. If he hasn't them, write us and we'll see that you get them. Write us, anyway, for our interesting little "Book L," written by Mr. Fox, "Eyes Worth Having." It's yours for the name and address of your optician. Write for it to-day.

Fox Optical Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia



CORNISH PIANOS AND ORGANS

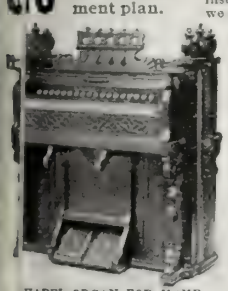
Are the most satisfactory instruments that you can buy at any price. They are magnificent examples of the absolute perfection of the builder's skill and art. Combined with beautiful and artistic cases, the productions of the leading designers, is the most exquisite tone quality that ever delighted your ear. Moreover Cornish Pianos and Organs are famous for their durability. When you purchase a Cornish instrument, you buy for a lifetime. Only the finest material that money can buy is used in Cornish instruments and only the most skilled workmen are employed. Cornish Pianos and Organs are sold to you direct from the factory. You save all the agents' profit and pay at your own convenience.

LATEST STYLE UPRIGHT CONCERT GRAND.

$25 CASH DOWN. Balance on easy installment plan.

THE CORONA.

$10 Cash Down. Balance on easy installment plan.



CHAPEL ORGAN FOR HOME, CHURCH OR HALL.

$5 Per Month only on our easy installment plan.

Artistic Cases
Newest Styles
Pure, Sweet
Tone Qualities

OUR OFFER

We will ship you any Cornish Piano or Organ you may select on 30 Days' Free Trial and guarantee safe delivery. If you are not fully satisfied with the instrument after a month's trial, return it at our expense. Even if after a year's use the instrument is not satisfactory, we will refund your money with 6 per cent interest in addition, giving you

One Year's Free Trial

Would we make this offer if Cornish instruments were not thoroughly good?

FREE

1. The Wonderful Cornish Album, a most remarkable piece of printing describing the choicest of fifty styles of Cornish Pianos and Organs ranging in price from the least expensive to the finest ever built.
2. A set of embossed miniature Pianos and Organs.
3. Names and addresses of 5,000 registered purchasers.
4. Our plan to give you a two years' musical education absolutely free.

down and write to-day for these Free aids.

CORNISH CO. Washington, N. J.

5 Per Cent

You can safely get 5 per cent interest on every dollar you save.

For eleven years we have paid 5 per cent interest on all deposits. The interest is figured for every day your money is here, and is compounded semi-annually

5% There is no risk or speculation—we loan money only on improved real estate, and your money can be immediately withdrawn at any time. Write for free booklet.

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
Dept. E, Calvert Building
Baltimore, Md.

STARK FRUIT BOOK

shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.

We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's, Louisiana, Mo.

DEATH TO HEAVES Guaranteed

NEWTON'S Heave, Cough, Distemper and Indigestion Remedy. A veterinary specific for acute and stomach troubles. Spares the nerves. $1.00 per can of dealers or Express prepaid.

THE NEWTON REMEDY CO., TOLEDO, OHIO

$18 SALARY WEEKLY $3.00 per day for expenses

Paid energetic man each county to post signs, advertise and distribute samples. No Capital required. Honesty and Solidity more essential than experience. Also a few ladies wanted to do demonstrating.

NATIONAL CO., 720 Chestnut Street, Phila., Pa.

Home Missions*

THERE is no country on earth in which the promise of success in really earnest, intelligent evangelistic effort is so great as in our own. It is shocking to think how much of the human ground is virgin soil. Men of every nationality have come among us, to till the land or to engage in business, and many of them are absolutely ignorant of the first principles of Christianity. They have come to make an honest independence or to escape the oppression of arbitrary rulers. What a blessing it would be if they also gained spiritual riches and attained the knowledge of the truth which gives real freedom! They are in a receptive condition, being imbued with admiration of the country and ready to hear what it is that makes it strong and free. To a true, earnest Christian, stirred with a desire to do effective work for Christ, there is a fine opportunity in labor among these immigrants. They are to be found in the West and South and Southwest, on all our hills and plains.

Besides these, there is our own native-born population, whose struggle for bread on the farm and in the factories of our cities has absorbed all their attention, and so exhausted their energies as to leave them incapable of giving their minds to any subject higher than the dull, weary round of daily toil. None so much as these need the elevating influence of the Gospel of Christ. If they could once be induced to cast their burdens upon him, how their lives would be transformed! They are weary and heavy laden, and do not know that it is they whom Christ invited to his peace and rest. What news that is for the Christian to carry to them! In Christ they would find a hope that increases their joys, a consolation that assuages their sorrows, a peace that tranquilizes their harassed minds. He is indeed a benefactor who brings them in contact with Him.

There are many who would be glad to engage in this delightful work, who cannot leave their own occupations to take it up. To these the opportunity comes of sending substitutes. Every denomination has its Society of Home Missions which might indefinitely extend its work if its funds were increased. The reports of these societies show how rich a harvest comes from the efforts put forth. In the Methodist sphere alone, churches and Sunday Schools have multiplied to an extraordinary degree, and that chiefly in districts remote from existing organizations. The home missionary and Sunday School worker, hard-working and poorly paid, goes among these isolated settlements with his message, and finds amid the densest ignorance a readiness to hear and receive the truth that gladdens his heart. One and another is won, and soon a Sunday School is established that develops into a church. It is astonishing what sturdy piety, what intense earnestness, what self-sacrifice, these outlying churches display. The letters that come to this office indicate that the writers in these rural districts possess the Christ-like spirit and are sincerely seeking to follow him.

All these are the results of the labors of consecrated men who, like Paul, are often the spiritual fathers of several churches. One could wish that the number of such men was multiplied, as it might easily be if the Christians in our cities contributed more freely to the support of the home missionary societies of their respective churches. The men are ready for the work, they are satisfied with the barest maintenance, but the societies cannot accept their services because their treasuries are empty. When will the churches realize their responsibility? Patriotism alone demands that these people, foreign-born and natives, be Christianized. Where the Gospel does not go vice and wickedness inevitably spring up. It depends on us whether this nation shall grow up on the foundations of righteousness laid by our fathers. How much more weighty is our responsibility to Christ, who bade his followers preach the Gospel of his kingdom to all nations, beginning with those nearest at hand, for the condition of the people under our flag. It will be at the last, a terrible reproach to the Churches if any person in this broad land should have reason to say: "No man careth for my soul."

* Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for Sept. 24th. Matt. 9: 35–38; 10: 1–15; Luke 9: 1–6.

Safely Welded To The Rock

Provision for the future of your family and protection for your home is loyalty to your sacred trust.

The Best Provision
The Safest Protection
IS LIFE INSURANCE
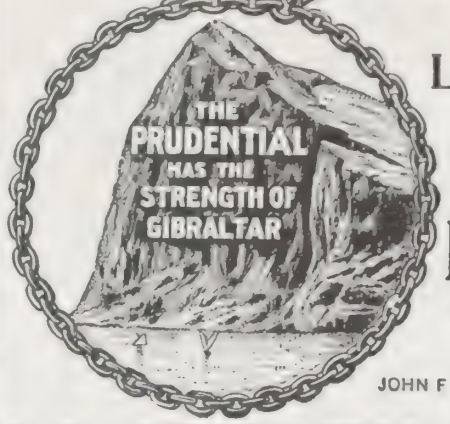
IN
The Prudential
INSURANCE CO. OF AMERICA



Incorporated as a Stock Company by the State of New Jersey

Write for Information of Policies, Dept. 79

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President. Home Office: NEWARK, N. J.

The Reasons Why

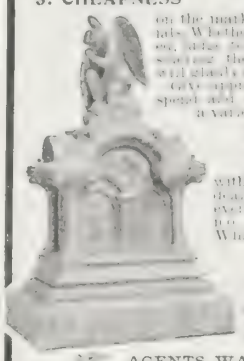
WHITE BRONZE MEMORIALS are so popular are:

1. DURABILITY
2. ARTISTIC BEAUTY
3. CHEAPNESS

If these claims are well founded, the WHITE BRONZE is the best material on the market to-day for memorials. Whether they are, is for you, after you have seen our designs, to say. This we will gladly send on application. Give approximate size of cut and special and we shall also send a variety of

BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS

with bottom prices. We shall be glad to hear from everybody. While there is no obligation to buy, White Bronze Work will



Gold and Silver Medals

at the Universal Exposition, St. Louis, 1904.

AGENTS WANTED

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

WINTER CLOTHING OFFER.

FREE SAMPLE and TRIAL PROPOSITION.

If you would have any use for a heavy weight all wool Suit, Overcoat or ulster, then DON'T BUY ELSEWHERE at any price, under any circumstances, until you cut this advertisement out and send it to us. You will then receive by return mail free, postpaid, the Grandest Clothing Offer ever heard of. You will get FREE a big book of cloth samples of Mens Clothing, FREE an extra quality cloth tape measure, FREE a booklet containing fashions, descriptions and illustrations of all kinds of clothing for men. We will explain why we can sell at prices so much lower than were ever before known, a mere fraction of what others charge. We will explain our simple rules so you can take your own measure and how we guarantee a perfect fit. You will get our Free Trial Offer, our Pay After Received Proposition. With the free cloth goes a special order blank for ordering, tape measure, tape etc. You can get a whole Suit, an extra pair of Pants and an Overcoat under our offer for about ONE-HALF what some Chicago tailors would charge for one single pair of pants. The offer you will get will astonish and please you. Prices on the best clothes made reduced to next to nothing compared with what you have been paying. DON'T BUY CLOTHES until you cut this ad. out and send to us and see what you get by return mail. FREE. POSTPAID.

Address SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., CHICAGO

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

25 designs, all steel. [illegible] Catalogue that [illegible] Special [illegible] Rates [illegible]

KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO., 445 North St., Kokomo, Indiana.

THE IDEAL SIGHT RESTORER

Is Your Sight Failing?

All refractive errors, muscular trouble and chronic diseases of the Eye successfully treated by scientific MASSAGE.

Illustrated treatise with affidavit testimonials free. Address

THE IDEAL COMPANY, 239 Broadway, New York.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label.

Wood Rollers. Tin Rollers.

LUMBER AT HALF PRICE

Send us your Lumber Bill for our estimate. We will SAVE you from 30% to 50%. We bought the great ST. LOUIS WORLD'S FAIR. Such an opportunity may never occur again. Write us today for our low prices and Free Catalog No. 373 on all kinds of Material. Address

Chicago House Wrecking Co., World's Fair Grds., St. Louis

THE "BEST" LIGHT

Made in Over 100 different styles. [illegible] Candle Power Lighting at 2c per week

More brilliant than Acetylene or Electricity. No Generator to Clean. Lighting Agents Wanted Everywhere

THE BEST LIGHT CO., 350E 5th St., Canton, O

BOMOSA COFFEE

BIG INCOMES

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK

Celebrated Teas Coffees Baking Powder Spices, Extracts. [illegible]

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO P O Box 289 31-33 Vesey St., New York

GINSENG

[illegible] NORTH AMERICAN GINSENG CO. Station C, Louisville, Ky.

$5.80 A DAY [illegible] our COOKER and [illegible] KITCHEN SPECIALTIES [illegible]

H. S. ROBINSON, 899 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, Ohio

ARE YOU DEAF?

We have [illegible]

WM. C. WILLIS & CO., 134 S. 11th St., Philadelphia

What brings release from dirt and grease? Why, Don't you know?

SAPOLIO

ROYAL BAKING-POWDER-
Absolutely Pure.

ROYAL is a cream of tartar baking powder, free from alum, phosphatic acid, and every unclean or unwholesome ingredient. It makes the bread, biscuit, cake, muffins and crusts light, delicious and wholesome.

Consumers desiring healthful food must avoid the use of alum-phosphate baking powders. They seriously interfere with digestion.

"I am very strongly of the opinion that the use of alum and salts of alumina in food should be prohibited. It is well understood that the constant use of alum compounds exerts both a deleterious effect upon the digestive organs and an irritation of the internal organs after absorption."

EDWARD S. WOOD, M.D.
Professor of Chemistry, Harvard Medical School, Boston.

DO NOT BUY OR USE ANY OTHER THAN A GUARANTEED CREAM OF TARTAR BAKING POWDER

CHRISTIAN HERALD

UBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
ublished 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 20, 1905

VOL. 28 NO. 38. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House New York

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

Drawn from Life by Farrand

SEE PAGE 782

A Tent Gospel Service in "Hell's Kitchen," New York

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

Miss M. F. J., Elm Grove, Ky. I saw a mention of brave Mollie Pitcher in your paper. Who was she? Tell me something about her in THE MAIL BAG. On what incident was the poem, "We Are Seven," founded.

Mollie Pitcher was the wife of a Revolutionary soldier, who distinguished herself by her bravery at the battle of Monmouth, in 1778. Her husband was killed while discharging a cannon. Mollie promptly took his place, vowing to avenge his death. Washington commended her bravery, and gave her a commission as Sergeant. The incident upon which the poem was founded, entitled, "We Are Seven," seems to be told in the poem. A little girl being questioned as to how many brothers and sisters she had, despite the fact that some were dead, and "in the churchyard laid," insisted that they were seven. A child's idea, and beautiful faith in immortality are strongly portrayed in the verses. The question regarding the other poem we cannot answer. Why not consult the nearest public library?

Grace Z. P., Westover, Iowa. Will you please inform me if our government has, officially, recognized any particular flower as a national flower?

Many of the States have floral emblems, but there is no representative national flower.

S. M., Carson City. What is the Lazaret, mentioned in Italian books of travel?

The Lazaret, or Lazaretto, is a building used for the reception of the poor, especially those who have some contagious disease. The name comes from St. Lazarus, the patron saint of lepers, and in the Middle Ages the lepers themselves were called the "lazzari." The buildings are usually situated in seaport towns of the Mediterranean. They are built on a hill, outside of the towns, and surrounded with a high wall. The name, many years ago, was used in the United States for buildings for the sick during epidemics.

H. K., Painesville, O. What was the name of the vessel in which Commodore Decatur recaptured the Philadelphia early in the last century?

It was the Intrepid. It was a small ketch belonging to Tripoli, and had been captured by Decatur. Taking seventy-four sailors, he sailed into the harbor of Tripoli, on the night of Feb. 4, 1804; boarded the Philadelphia, which had been captured by the pirates, and drove them into the sea.

F. F. K., Clay Centre, Kan. In the book of Nahum, second chapter, fourth verse, are these words: "The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broad ways; they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightning." Does this mean that there were something like automobiles at that time?

No, but it has been interpreted by some as a prophecy of the mechanical wonders of the future. In reality, it was only a poetic description of the swift Assyrian chariots, flashing with weapons of steel that shone like torches in the sunlight, and which ran with rapid violence. See Jer. 46: 9; Prov. 8: 26; Matt. 24: 27, and Luke 10: 18.

T. Z., Darby, Pa. In looking over your MAIL-BAG, which I enjoy very much, I see there is to be a confusion among the stars in 1931. Will you kindly tell me what is the cause of the confusion and what effect it will have on the earth?

Your question undoubtedly has reference to the great shooting-star shower expected to occur on Nov. 16, 1933, though it may possibly occur in 1932. It will be a repetition of the great showers of 1799, 1833, 1866 and 1899. I saw, in all its glory, that of Nov. 13, 1833, when the sky was filled with them for hours, which frightened people, many thinking the world was coming to an end. I also saw its repetition in 1866; though grand, it was not comparable to that of 1833. Before coming into our atmosphere and burned up by friction with it, they are called "meteoroids," being the offspring of comets' tails. We get this shower lightly every year as we pass through the meteor ring every November, but in a new place every time, and once in thirty-three years and a day we pass through a denser part and get the shower which attracts a world-wide attention. The Bible calls comets and meteors wandering stars.

LEWIS SWIFT.

Marathon, N.Y.

Old Subscriber, Alameda, Calif. In the account of the finding of the statue of the Sumerian king, David, it says: "The age of the statue is beyond doubt several centuries more than six thousand years." Now, was Adam the first created human being, according to the Bible account, or were there people living hundreds of years before? In other words, which is true, the Bible or scientists, and must we give up the old Book?

There is no discrepancy on this ground between the Bible and science. The Bible says nothing about the age of the world or the creation of Adam taking place 6,000 years ago. It says "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth" (Gen. 1: 1). The chronology on the margin of the Bible is not a part of the Sacred Book itself, but was compiled by Archbishop Ussher about 1650.

C. M., Napoleon, Mich. How high were the walls of Jerusalem, in Bible days?

The walls ranged from thirty to one hundred and seventy feet in height, according to the nature of the ground.

M. G. M., Mayflower, Ark. What are mad stones? Is it true they cure hyrophobia?

We have heard of a noted specimen which consists of white felspar. Science does not recognize the curative properties popularly ascribed to mad stones. The specimen mentioned did not have the power to absorb poison from rabies wounds.

B. W. B., Willow Brook, Va. How is it that a day is dropped in sailing eastward over the Pacific Ocean?

By traveling eastward fifteen degrees one loses one hour; by traveling twenty-four times as far, or around the world, one loses an entire day.

I. M. B., Kansas. 1. How many volumes does Werner's Universal Library contain? 2. Is there any historical foundation for the Idylls of the King? 3. What is the scientific name of the gipsy moth, how did it get to Massachusetts, and what is being done to get rid of it?

1. Thirty volumes. 2. It probably has a slight historical foundation. 3. Oceneria Dispar; Professor Leopold Trauvelet, who was experimenting with some gipsy moths or larvae, allowed some to escape into the open air, at Medford, Mass., in 1868. The State Legislature for a while spent large sums to be used in keeping the pest in check, but it has now given up the task.

E. Y., Ohio. What works should one consult in regard to the legends on which Parsifal is founded?

Rhy's Studies in the Arthurian Legends is about the best. It was first printed at Oxford in 1891. Consult your bookseller.

Inquirer, Reading, Pa. What are the latest scientific conclusions as to the effects of alcohol on body and brain?

It is a broad question, and to be answered fully would require more space than the MAIL-BAG can devote to it. Briefly stated, here are some of the latest results: Professor Aschaffenburg found men able to do fifteen per cent. less work after taking alcohol. Professor August Smith found men less able to work the second and third day after taking two and a half ounces of alcohol. Men, if abstainers, get better rates from life insurance companies because the death rate of abstainers is from eighteen to twenty-five per cent. less than that of non-abstainers. Men are dismissed from service or from consideration as applicants for employment in railroad, banking and other industries if they drink alcoholic liquors. Professor Benedict says, "The experience of the large employer of labor verifies to the smallest detail the deductions of the psychological laboratory that the moderate use of alcohol diminishes a man's efficiency," and that "by just so much as alcohol in large or small quantities diminishes mental activity, by just so much does it handicap the man whose keenness of perception and manipulative skill are absolutely essential to him in these days of the sharpest competition known in the history of the world." The foregoing is from a report just issued by the New York State Central Committee on Temperance Instruction in the Public Schools.

D. M. S. Nebraska. Where did the Bands of Hope (young people's temperance organizations) originate?

They started in England, and now have a membership of about 2,000,000 in that country.

Mrs. Dora A., Dubuque, Ia. Am I still in time to send in signatures to the Women's Memorial against Polygamy, which is designed to be presented to the Senate, requesting the expulsion of the Mormon Apostle, Smoot?

Yes; the signatures will be received right along during September and October, and possibly even later. The women are working splendidly, and the names are coming in by thousands daily. If you need Memorial blanks, write to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and they will be supplied free in any quantities desired.

M. R. B., Cleveland, O. What are the Bible passages that are most pertinent in the "tainted money" controversy. I mean those passages that describe the acceptable gift, and describe the unacceptable?

See Lev. 12: 20 and 24; Lev. 27: 11; Matt. 18: 13; Mal. 3: 3; Matt. 5: 23, 24; Psalm 50: 8-14; Deut. 23 chap.; Mal. 3: 11; Isa. 1: 13-17; Psalm 51: 17-19, and many others. These, however, are probably sufficient.

Ellen M., Newark, N. J. Is Annie Taylor, the missionary, now in Tibet?

It is not improbable, if she be still alive, that she is now across the border. For a number of years she had a mission at Yatung, on the borders of Sikkim and Tibet. When the British expeditionary force entered Tibet, she volunteered as a nurse in the Chumbi hospital, and her splendid work won her a medal.

Mrs. W. G. Strickland, Snow Hill, Md., wishes to know if any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will kindly send her the life poem, commencing,

> We should always enter softly
> The church's open door, or tell her where it may be found.

An aged reader, L. B. Y., now in the Old Ladies' Home, North Maine Street, Rutland, Vt., writes:

I used to read a poem in which these lines occur: "In the days of my youth, I remembered my God, I remembered that youth could not last." On being asked a short time ago for my record for my youthful appearance (being over eighty years of age), these words came back to my mind and rack my brain as I will, I cannot recall another sentence. Can you or any of your readers inform me where the lines can be obtained?

Perhaps some reader may be able to send the inquirer these verses.

A PRINCELY GIFT

A FEW days ago, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD received from one of its subscribers, who desires to remain unnamed, the sum of Two Thousand Dollars, with a request to appropriate the same wherever, in the judgment of the Editors, the money would be productive of the greatest good to old and young. Complying with the wishes of the donor, as far as we are able to recognize them, the following apportionment of the Two Thousand Dollars has been made:

Abigail Mission, New York	$50.00	National Temperance Soc., N. Y. City	50.00
Bowery Mission, New York	50.00	Prison-Gate Mission, New York City	50.00
Cremorne Mission, New York	50.00	Any Good Cause Fund	50.00
Door of Hope Mission	50.00	Seamen's Mission, New York City	50.00
Doyer St. Midnight Mission, New York	50.00	Society for Suppression of Vice	50.00
Elhanan Home, Marion, N.C.	50.00	Soul Winners' League, Wilmore, Ky.	50.00
Florence Crittenden Missions	50.00	Steele Orphanage, Chattanooga, Tenn.	50.00
Foreigners Mission, New York	50.00	Sunday Breakfast Mission, Philadelphia	50.00
Gospel Distribution in Philippines	50.00	Tennesseetown Mission, Topeka, Kan.	50.00
Gospel Mission among Cubans	50.00	The White Door, New York City	50.00
Havergal Mis. School, Tarrytown, N.Y.	50.00	People's Mission, New York	50.00
Home for Blind Babies, New York	50.00	Washington Sq. Home for Friendless Girls	50.00
Home for Invalid Children, New York	50.00	United Hebrew Charities, New York	50.00
Hull House Settlement, Chicago	50.00	Daisy Field's Home for Crippled Children, Englewood, N. J.	50.00
Jacob A. Riis Settlement, New York	50.00	Emanuel Sisterhood, New York	50.00
Lucy R. Meyer's Deaconesses' Home Chicago	50.00	Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago	50.00
Lincoln Univ., Cumberland Gap, Tenn.	50.00	Union Gospel Mission, New Orleans	50.00
Living Waters Mission, New York	50.00	Central Union Mission, Washington	50.00
McAuley Mission, Water St., New York	50.00	Moravian Mission, New York City	50.00
Mayesville Institute, Mayesville, S.C.	50.00	Taylor University, Upland, Ind.	50.00

Miscellaneous

Subscriber, Clarksburg, W. Va. You must consult a Kansas lawyer.

F. C., Berlin, Ont., Can. Query about Napoleon answered in recent issue.

W. A. K., Girardville, Pa. Write to Mr. Hammond, Supt. Bowery Mission, New York.

Mrs. Clara N., Washington, D. C. Don't know it. It is in none of the standard collections.

F. D. W. D., North Attleboro, Mass. Get a copy of John Tyndall's book (or lectures) on light.

Miss M. D. G., Falls Church, Va. Write to the librarian of the Baltimore Public Library, Baltimore, Md.

J. R. S. Jr., Catawba, N. C. There never was such a person. The whole series of narratives is pure fiction. Write to Collier's, New York.

Ruth E. S., Tunbridge, Vt. Promenades at "church amusement," would seem to us to be somewhat out of place, being practically in the same category with dancing.

F. C., Greenup, Ill. It is a mistake to imagine that a newspaper man must sacrifice moral principles to his profession. We advise you to begin at the foot of the ladder, on some local paper in your own section.

R. W. K., Jemison, Ala. Hypnotism is no myth, but in its present stage it is not recognized as a science. It is largely in the hands of charlatans and humbugs, who are making money out of the credulous. In many localities their practices are forbidden by law.

Anti-Polygamy Campaign

All contributions toward defraying the actual expenses of the Women's Campaign against polygamy, will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The following additional contributions in aid of the Women's Anti-Mormon campaign have been received:

Previously ack'd.	$62 58	Mrs. W. L. Rising
Cordelia Davis	10	—, Eldred, Pa.
—, Clendenin, W. Va	10	Sarah H. Rogers
Mrs. A. E. Morfey	16	Miss Edna Pea
Mrs. H. N. Pond	12	Mrs. A. A. Mathias
Mrs. Margaret Wager	26	Mrs. H. D. Newell
Rebecca Graham	25	Mrs. M. Llewelyn
—, Arlington, Tenn	50	Mrs. M. C. Byrd
Mrs. James McDermid	1 00	Anna Carrothers
Eliza Dean	1 00	Hannah Pea
Sarah Forbes	1 00	M. B. Johnson
Mrs. W. H. Booker	04	Mrs. J. Sykes

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 20, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

A CHINESE TEMPLE

MR. AND MRS. ENGLAND AND THEIR "CHRISTIAN HERALD" CHINESE ORPHANS

A LAKE PAGODA

THE AWAKENING OF CHINA

By Rev. Hunter Corbett, Forty-two Years a Missionary in that Country

ON July 3, 1863, the day of the terrible battle at Gettysburg, Revs. C. W. Mateer and Hunter Corbett, and their wives, left New York on the sailing vessel St. Paul, as missionaries for Chi. At that time there were no railroads across the on ent to the Pacific coast, nor steamers crossing the Pac c Ocean. The Suez Canal was not in existence nd here were no steamers from New York to China.

Te journey from New York to Shanghai, around he ape of Good Hope, required 167 days upon the ce . No call was made at any port. Nearly ve sailor was suffering with scurvy before the les ation was reached, so that at times the pas- en rs had to help in working the sails. After a ort ght's delay at Shanghai, a little steamer left or hefoo, 500 miles up the northern coast, and he issionaries were among the passengers. Near en" clock one stormy night, the ship was in great er and the captain said if the wind continued he would be no hope, as the ship would founder. All nelt in earnest prayer and suddenly the wind ea d. All, after much effort, succeeded in ea ing the shore.

Te remainder of the night was spent in wading hr gh snowdrifts on a barren shore, seeking he r. Near the break of day a dog was heard ar ng at a distance and all started in that direc- ion and finally reached an old village, where efe was found in a little thatch-roofed, floorless ou e. For three days all lived chiefly on sweet ot oes, when a British gunboat arrived and took he arty on to Chefoo. One year later a British wa essel, the Race Horse, under similar circum- ta es went ashore at the same place, and one nu red lives were lost.

l the country north of Shanghai had but re- en y been opened by treaty at the close of the wa between Great Britain, France and China. Th great Tai-ping rebellion kept all in fear. The Ch ese had never heard anything good of West- er people, but only evil. All outside of China we regarded as "barbarians," and were feared an hated. The idea of people from Europe and Am rica coming to teach the Chinese, and hoping to ve them accept a foreign religion, seemed too ab rd for even the most ignorant to believe.

he first work for the missionary was to under- ta to learn the Chinese language. There were no rained teachers and no text-books; nothing but lo and faithful perseverance could make a work- ing nowledge of the language possible. Journeys ex nding over months at a time were undertaken over the entire province of Shantung, having an estimated population of about 30,000,000 souls. Curiosity caused the people, old and young, to rush to get their first sight of the foreigners. They freely spoke their minds, criticising looks, clothing, etc. The missionaries had the constant opportunity of seeing themselves as others see them. The Gospel was preached at the public markets, in cities, towns and villages, and Christian tracts and portions of Scripture widely circulated.

This work continued for years, with very little visible results. Finally, a great famine came, and multitudes had to face the terrible fate of death by starvation. The Government seemed helpless to give relief. Large sums of money were sent from Europe and America. Missionaries were entrusted with the distribution of this relief. Each missionary went into the centre of some destitute district, and they were the means of saving thousands of lives and relieving untold sufferings. Many orphan children were saved, some of whom are now successful and earnest preachers and Bible women.

REV. HUNTER CORBETT

The people now saw the hated and despised foreigners in a new light. Instead of regarding them as their enemies and the emissaries of foreign governments, sent out to act as spies upon their country, they were constrained to think of them as friends. Prejudice gave way, and people listened with a new interest, and read the Christian books with a desire to understand them. By the blessing of God, hearts were opened to understand and receive the truth, and thousands were received into the church. The great majority of this number have proved faithful, and by their testimony and upright lives won others, so that now there are many organized Christian churches, with well educated Chinese pastors, supported entirely by the Chinese members. Church buildings have been erected, and generally with little or no help from outside sources.

A great change has now come over, not only the Shantung province—the birthplace of Confucius, Mencius, and other sages—but over all parts of China. Forty years ago there were less than 2,000 church members in the entire Empire; now there are probably not less than 150,000 communicants connected with the different denominations represented there. Probably there are not less than half a million of people intellectually convinced of the truth of Christianity, who have not yet made an open profession of faith in Christ. All admire the visible fruits of Christianity, such as pure and holy lives; happy Christian homes, where children are taught and trained to sincerely reverence parents and live honest and pure lives; where all the children in Christian homes, whether boys or girls, are sent to school and trained for usefulness and ability to earn a comfortable living; where hospitals and dispensaries are opened, where not only the rich, but the poorest, can receive the best of medical treatment.

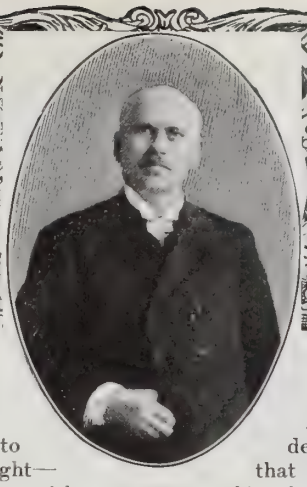
The blind, the orphans, the aged, and helpless widows, are kindly treated and aided, so that life

CONTINUED ON PAGE 778

THE
AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY

Rev. Joseph Hamilton*



The Image of God in Man

TEXT -- Genesis 1 : 27 :
"So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him ; male and female created he them."

I DO not think we have realized as we ought that we are made in the image of God. But it is a great fact. We have it here in the first chapter of Genesis. "God created man in his own image." Then it is repeated. "In the image of God created he him." What a wonderful heritage it is, to be made in the image of God. What a pity it is that we should ever lose that image, in whole or in part, by sin.

I suppose that one reason why the great fact of the divine image in man is not more pondered and appreciated is, that there is so much that is figurative in the account of creation we have in the Bible. There is certainly a great deal that is figurative; we really do not know how much; we cannot always distinguish between fact and figure.

A Sublime Reality

I remember very well the day I first saw Mount Tacoma. I was not thinking of it at all. I was on the train. Suddenly my attention was arrested by a hard, white appearance in the clouds. It seemed almost too white and too hard to be a cloud. Otherwise, it seemed a cloud amongst other darker clouds. So I kept watching it, till at length it was disentangled from the surrounding clouds, and stood out a veritable mountain, the higher part covered with white, glistening snow. So it is, I think, with some parts of revelation, especially the history of creation, and the Apocalypse of St. John. We are not sure what is mountain and what is cloud. Perhaps we shall know some day. Meantime, I think it is wise, generally speaking, to take the record just as it stands. When we actually see, we shall not be disappointed. The fact may far surpass the description; but will be along the same line; we shall realize that the half has not been told.

But whatever of figure there may be in the history of creation, there is certainly no figure here. Man was created in the image of God. There is no room for figure in that statement. There may be something in it obscure; but certainly there is nothing figurative. What it really means is well worth pondering.

You will observe that man was created male and female; and this statement is brought into close connection with the one that asserts that man was created in the divine image. In fact, both statements are in the one sentence. I take it that the male and the female are united in containing the image of God. Some of the qualities of God preponderate more in the male; some more in the female; both together, they contain something of the divine image.

A Feeble Reflection

I say, something of the divine image; for man at his best estate can never contain or reflect it all. Man can reflect a little of it; but it is a feeble reflection; yet the human can reflect the divine in some degree. The highest knowledge that man can attain in this world, or in any world, is the knowledge of God. And how is the knowledge of him to be attained? One way is to look at man. He is created in God's image. Whatever of good, or the possibility of good, you find in yourself, or in anybody else, is from God. If you take all the possibilities of goodness in the world, and increase that ten thousand times, you have some idea of what God is. In a small way the human reflects the divine.

In what way, then, is man like God? How has God impressed his image upon man? It has been thought that God impressed his own mental qualities on man, and the idea has been largely restricted to that view. One of our standards says that man was made like God in "knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness." You will observe that all these are mental or moral qualities.

But I have the idea that God impressed upon us his own bodily qualities as well. You will think that a bold assumption. You will, perhaps, question if God has any bodily qualities. I admit that in one sense he has none; but I think we shall see later on that he really has, and that he has impressed these qualities on man, no less than his mental and moral qualities.

1. The simplest idea of course is that we are made in the divine image in things mental and moral. I shall, therefore, take this idea first. Afterwards, we shall try to develop the other thought—that God has impressed us also with his physical image. In the first place, then, we have to notice some of the mental and moral qualities of the divine constitution and character that are reflected in the human.

1. You will observe then that God has made us as nearly like himself as possible, in regard to immortality. I mean, of course, so far as we can contain immortality. Of Christ it is said that he "only hath immortality." That is, he is the fountain of it. It all proceeds from him. Now we cannot be like God in the immortality of having no beginning; but we can be like him in the immortality of having no end. In that respect we are immortal. Death does not end all; it really begins all. We are to have no end. In that respect we are like God. I do not say that we cannot die; I think all created spirits need in some way to be sustained. What God created he can destroy. But he has destined us for an endless life. In so far as we can have it, we have his own immortality.

In His Attributes

2. I think, too, we have a species of God's omnipresence. In the 139th Psalm we have a wonderful picture of God's omnipresence. Indeed, the thought is too high and wide for us that God is everywhere. But we have the same faculty in a small degree ourselves. Think of these minds of ours. We can, in a moment, soar beyond the sun and stars. If we are not actually present everywhere, we may say that our thoughts are. A man may appear to be "cribbed, cabined, and confined," and so he is; but only in reference to the body; his thought soars into the infinite. In the wide universe there is no limit to his thought. He has actually a species of omnipresence; he has as much of that faculty as the human can contain.

3. In like manner, too, we have a kind of omniscience. Think of the millions and millions of ideas the human mind can contain. There really seems to be no limit to the accumulation of our knowledge. It would almost seem that everything that has ever entered the mind stays there. Marvelous instances are on record of what the mind really contains. Some there have been who could read a whole column of a newspaper and repeat it without mistake. It was said of Lord Macaulay, that if Paradise Lost were lost to the world he could restore it, word for word, from memory. In this poor brain of ours we do seem to have a reflection of the divine omniscience.

There is another way, too, in which we have in ourselves a hint of the divine omniscience. We actually think God's own thoughts. Every discovery we make in science is just a discovery of the divine thought ages and ages before worlds and men were born. Kepler felt this way when, on discovering the law of the planetary motions, he said: "I was thinking God's thoughts after him." It was a sublime and holy idea.

In Adaptation

We, as a rule, think we have done some great thing when we discover a fact in science. But we have only discovered what was in God's thought from all eternity. He had this conception, and expressed it in matter long ago, which we now alight upon and discover. The thought should make us humble; at the same time it is a dim hint in ourselves of the divine omniscience.

4. We have also a hint of the divine faculty of creation. I do not say that man can create anything in the divine sense. God created all worlds and all beings out of nothing—or out of himself. Man cannot do that of course. He can create neither matter nor force. But he can make wonderful things from matter already created. Just look at the world. Think of the wonderful things that man can make. Remember, that there was nothing in the world at first but the raw material. Then look at the world to-day. What marvels of genius it contains. It is true that man can create nothing; creation is too high for him; but he has the next best thing along that line; he has a marvelous faculty of making things. He comes as near creation as it is possible for the human to approach the divine.

5. Then there is the faculty of variety in God wh we also find in man. It is very plain that the Crea delights in variety. He might have made all wo alike in size and glory. He might have made all spi alike in capacity and attainment. He might h made all animals alike. He might have made all ins alike. He might have made all trees, and all flow and all shrubs alike. But, as a matter of fact, he made a difference in everything we know. The pri ple of variety he has introduced into everything that has made. From angels to worms then is the law difference. God seems to delight in variety, and so d man. We must make things in the best way we kn first of all; but after that, there is variety. The m craves for variety; and we produce it. We have so thing of the divine preference for variety, when cannot say that it is best; but we like it for its o sake.

The Love of the Beautiful

6. There is in God also the love of the beautiful; a we inherit that from him. How beautiful is the cr tion of God. Even this lower world is very beauti We really do not know how beautiful it is. But if were shut off from it for a number of years, and t suddenly introduced to it, we should know. And have only a glimpse of other worlds. Some of the we, believe, are far more beautiful than this. Away dim space we can discern stars of almost every col There are green stars, and blue stars, and red stars, a purple stars, and yellow stars, and violet stars, a these may be the centres of different colors in the d infinity beyond. It would seem that the Creator lo beauty, and so do we. He has implanted that insti in our breasts. Look at the beautiful things in t world that man has made. We love the beautiful. have seen a whole roomful of people drawn to t window to see the splendor of the setting sun. And have seen the ragged urchins of the street gathe round a store window to see a bit of gaily colored r bon or a flower. It is the same instinct—the love the beautiful. It came from God. We have a refl tion of it in ourselves.

7. Again: the love that has its highest perfection God is certainly reflected in man. "God is love." says John. He is the very essence of love. It is very nature to love. We would not think there is a thing in us to draw out his love. I think he loves partly because he knows, as no one else can know,

What He Can Make of Us

I was some years ago in a large garden of very bea tiful flowers. When the gardener had showed all his treasures, he said there was one flower I had n seen yet, and that he prized it above all the othe Then he took me to an obscure corner of the garde and, stooping down, he scraped away some of the s and exposed a gnarled and twisted root. That was t flower he prized so highly. It had no attraction for m but I knew not the beauty it contained. But the g dener knew. By and by, under the genial influence the sun and rain, it would take on wonderful beaut So the gardener loved it, not for what it was now, b for what he knew it would become. So I think t Lord loves us, sometimes not for what we are, but f what he knows his grace can make of us. What beau he sometimes does unfold from materials that wou seem to all others very unpromising.

So whatever we have of love is a reflection of t divine. All the love that is in the world is from Go The higher a man rises in the scale of character, t more love he has. Love is too often in eclipse now; a better world we believe it will be supreme.

8. Then, closely allied with love there is gentlene and that is a reflection of the divine. We see the ge tleness of God even in creation. He is strong enou to make the worlds, but he is gentle enough to make t tiniest flower. So gentleness is allied with strength. is so in God, and he gives to us something of his ow character. It is no wonder that David says in one the Psalms: "Thy right hand hath holden me up"- there is power. But then, allied with that, there gentleness: "Thy gentleness hath made me great."

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

*Author of Our Own and Other Worlds, etc. Delivered at the First Presbyterian Church, Wilson, New York.

New York's Vacation Bible Schools

IN the crowded tenement districts of New York, thirteen church buildings opened their doors during the past summer, in response to a call from the Rev. R. G. Boville, who had long felt that some plan should be devised to help in saving the tenement children from the discomforts of vacation season.

Half a million children between the ages of five and fourteen live in the crowded, congested districts of the great metropolis. For many of these there is absolutely nothing but heated and unwholesome streets for a playground, scarcely less unbearable than the superheated air in the crowded tenements, where whole families, in many instances, live in one room.

Much has been accomplished for many of these children by the Board of Education of the metropolis, and fresh-air charities, which provide summer education and recreation. But these agencies are inadequate to meet the demand among the almost countless throngs of children who are missing all uplifting influences during perhaps the most impressionable period of their lives. To meet the need the New York Federation of Churches and various Christian organizations instituted, at the instance of Rev. Mr. Boville, Vacation Bible Schools, fourteen church buildings being opened for this purpose five days in every week. The session ended on August 24, when nearly one thousand little ones gathered in Olivet Memorial Church, in East Third Street, in one of the crowded districts of the city. The children were gathered from every section, uptown and down-town, East and West sides, and from all the different boroughs of Greater New York.

A WELL-DRILLED VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL IN SESSION

On this occasion there was a very satisfactory summing up of the labors of the teachers and the efforts of the children. While a certain time each day had been devoted to Bible study, and the singing of carefully chosen hymns, other periods were given to industrial work for both boys and girls. The former were taught basketry and hammock-making, the latter sewing. The results of these industries were hung artistically around the walls of the church, and made an interesting showing of what busy little fingers can accomplish when rightly directed. Children, large and small, with their teachers, filled the auditorium, and it was a question who felt the proudest, the teachers or the taught. Not a single feature of the programme, which was a long one, failed to interest; everything was done in a whole-hearted manner, showing most painstaking drilling on the teachers' part, and a wonderful aptitude on that of the children.

Once every week during the summer a talk has been given upon, "What to Do Before the Doctor Comes," and when twenty-two children marched on the platform and gave an exhibition of "first aid to the injured," the audience, which filled the galleries and side seats of the church, were much interested. Half the number of children were "first aiders," and wore red badges upon their sleeves, and were provided with splints, bandages, etc., while the other half personated the "victims." The "first aiders" got to work in a jiffy, and almost before one could realize what it meant, heads, arms, hands and legs, were bandaged in the most approved manner, and when the band of boys and girls left the platform, all the bandages were used up, each "first aider" walking proudly away with the "injured" under his care.

A very pleasant feature was the "Dumb Bell Drill" by a class of girls. These were from the DeWitt Memorial School, and they went through the drill without a single hitch. The review of Bible lessons was most satisfactory, showing accurate memories and understanding of Bible stories. The singing was, perhaps, the most enjoyable feature of all. Four thousand, one hundred and thirty (4,130) children registered in these various schools, taught by fifty college men and women, whose hearts were in their work. The sessions were held in buildings of seven different denominations, and the average daily attendance was 1,034.

Mr. Boville is director of the Federation of Churches in New York City, and has been ably assisted in this Vacation School work by superintendents who were students and graduates from Princeton, Syracuse, Columbia, and Yale Universities, colleges, and theological seminaries have contributed their quota of teachers. Wellesly, Barnard, and Adelphi Colleges, Boston Conservatory of Music, and other well-known institutions, were represented among the young women teachers.

"All of these," explained Mr. Boville, "were heart as well as head workers, never sparing themselves in any way, but all striving for the best results among the children they loved and labored among."

THE IMAGE OF GOD IN MAN

Continued from preceding page

Then closely allied with gentleness there is pity, and that is a reflection of the divine. Yes, God is pitiful. He feels for the unfortunate. It is something like the pity of a father for his children, as we read in one of the Psalms; but it is far more tender, for it is divine. Were ever words like these put into human speech—"As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." There we have not only the fatherhood, but the motherhood of God. And this pity of God is reflected in us. When our hearts go out at the sight of suffering, that feeling is from God.

10. Then akin to pity there is solicitude; and that is a reflection of the divine. I recall the words of God, "How can I give thee up?" And again he says, "O that Israel had hearkened to my commandments." Again he says, "O that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end." And I think of Christ weeping over Jerusalem, and saying, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem! Thou knewest not the time of thy visitation." Ah, those are tears of pity that God only can weep. Yes, but we find that pity divinely reflected in ourselves. Whenever we feel the movement of pity for the unfortunate, we have something of the pity of God. There would be no pity in the world—and what a world it would be—but for the pity that is divine.

These, then, are some of the qualities of God that are reflected in man. I have not named them all; and I have not elaborated any of them as they deserve. But I would ask you to think of them, and to remember that all possibility of goodness in you is from God alone, in whose image you are created.

II. In the next place, we would notice some of the divine bodily qualities that are reflected in the human.

You may say that God is a spirit, and has no body. I believe that is true. I conceive of him as a spirit. Our Lord said to the woman of Samaria, "God is a spirit." And a spirit may have a body as we have; but I believe God in his true essence has none. I believe that philosophers must find room in their thought for something between matter and spirit; something that is neither, but partaking of the nature of both. I do not think the nature of man can otherwise be explained. That is a mystery profound, and I do not at present follow it further.

1. But if God is absolutely without a body, as I believe he is, it is clear that he can assume one at pleasure. We must believe this if we believe the Old Testament. Witness the fact that the Lord sojourned with Abraham in human form. Remember that there was a man, who proved to be the divine man, that wrestled with Jacob until the dawning of the day. Remember that God spoke with Moses face to face. Such incidents, and more like them, are not to be explained away. They are not to be relegated to the realm of mere poetry or rhetoric.

2. Then if God took a body at times, it was always the human form. He was so absolutely human in appearance in his interview with Abraham that the patriarch entertained him. At other times he was more glorious; but the human form was there, easily and instantly recognized. It is possible for the human form to vary much in detail, and yet preserve the main outlines of humanity.

3. Then if God took this body of man, I believe it is that this is his own proper, natural body. I know that another opinion has prevailed. It has been thought that God simply took this body that he might come into closer contact with men. But I suspect this idea is less than half of the truth. I may be wrong; it is a mystery profound. I am open to correction; but I believe God assumed the human form because that is his own form, and the one into which by a very law of his being he must transmute himself, when he transmutes himself at all. There would thus be a bond between the divine and the human far closer than men have generally supposed.

4. Then there is the further thought that the human is the one perfect form. We are so much accustomed to see the human form that we think little of it. But it is the human form divine. It is the most perfect form we know, or can conceive. Sometimes, when we see a most beautiful human form, we involuntarily sigh for the beauty of the better land. If you think you could make a more perfect form than the human, try it. You will find that you have undertaken the impossible. If you had all eternity, I do not believe you could originate so perfect a form as the human.

5. I am thus led to think that the human is the prevailing form for all worlds. When we see that God so often took this human form, and when we see that with all their adjuncts of glory, angels so persistently took this form in their appearances here, we are strongly inclined to believe that the human is the perfect, ideal, divine form for all worlds. There may be many differences of detail; there can be many; yet the form may be the same that we have now.

6. We can see, then, how that man is made in the divine image, even as to form. God may be a spirit. He may habitually wear no body; yet when he pleases, he takes form, and it is the human form. He has in himself the potential form of man, and he creates us, even as to form, in his own image.

Thus the text has a much larger meaning, and I think a true meaning. We are made like God, not only in mind but in body. What a dignity is ours! How he has honored every son and daughter of the human race!

The Awakening of China

is more worth living, and asylums are opened to help the slaves of opium to escape suffering and early death. Manifold agencies are now at work which the people cannot but see are of untold benefit.

Last summer, the Governor of Shantung invited the missionaries in his city to a feast, and requested that he might be furnished with Bibles so that all the magistrates in one hundred and ten walled cities under the Governor's jurisdiction might be able to study and understand the Christian religion. Bibles were sent as he requested. He also asked that each Mission working in the province should appoint committees of experienced men with whom he could consult freely in regard to the best way of having the Christians and non-Christians live at peace with one another. That Governor has been promoted to a Viceroy. Word has just come that the newly appointed Governor has made a visit to Chefoo, and sent word that he wished to visit the Christian schools, and learn how education was carried on, the books used, etc. Subsequently, he showed his appreciation of the work by sending $200 to be given as prizes for the best work done. At the Chefoo Street Chapel and Museum, last year, by actual count, 97,115 visitors heard the Gospel preached and received Christian tracts. Some of this number have become Christians, and others widely scattered over the province are exceedingly friendly, and often attend church services near their homes. The Chinese Government has recently opened new colleges in fifteen provinces, and in each college Western learning is to have a prominent place. There is such a demand for arithmetics, geographies, philosophies and text-books, prepared chiefly by missionaries who have charge of Christian colleges and schools, that the printing presses cannot supply the need.

THE ORPHANS AS RECEIVED

AFTER BATHING AND CLOTHING

Unquestionably, China is rapidly awakening. The great Napoleon said, "When China awakens, she will move the world." General Gordon, who assisted in putting down the great Tai-ping rebellion, testified that there were no braver or better soldiers than the Chinese, when properly drilled and officered. If China should organize her army and navy on the same basis as Germany, she would have an army of 40,000,000. If China and Japan should unite, they may in time defy the world. If the Western nations from this time forth deal justly with China, and live the Golden Rule and give able and wise men and women to assist them in the forward movement, China as a people, will appreciate it deeply, and be a power for good in the earth. No people surpass the Chinese in showing gratitude to friends and for genuine kindness shown.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 775

Now is the opportunity to send the best and ablest men and women to China, not only as missionaries and teachers, but as representatives of Western governments. The doors are now wide open. The young men and women to China, not only as missionaries and teachers, but as representatives of Western governments. The doors are now wide open. The young men and women are eager for Western education and knowledge of every kind.

Many of the missionaries living in the inland cities of China have to contend with malaria and unhealthy surroundings which enfeeble health, so that not only many valuable lives have been sacrificed, but many have been constrained to return to the homelands in the hope of prolonging life. During the late Boxer uprising, which began in Shantung province, all the missionaries living inland were called to face suffering, and not a few lives were sacrificed. Others had their houses burned, clothing and personal property destroyed, and barely escaped with their lives. The shock and strain upon the nerves have undoubtedly shortened the lives of not a few who have been lately called to their reward. All who have survived and were able, returned to their respective fields of labor as soon as the tidal wave of excitement passed, and are faithfully striving to serve the people for whom they have consecrated their lives. That the missionaries may be able to repair their health from time to time, and keep in good repair and prolong life and the power to work at their best, it is necessary to have some healthy place to which they can go, and live for a month or more at comparatively small expense. An effort is now being made to secure a Missionary Rest Home at Chefoo, North China, to meet the urgent need. Many of the missionaries have gladly sent contributions to aid in this work. Friends in Europe and America have also aided. An ideal situation has been secured on the sea-beach, where bathing, etc., under the most favorable circumstances, can be had. A fine brick building has been erected, and a few rooms finished, where the Committee on the Revision of the Mandarin Bible are now living and doing faithful work. $8,000 additional are imperatively needed to finish and furnish the Home, so that it will be fully equipped and ready to receive all requiring rest. It will be open to all missionaries requiring rest, irrespective of denomination or country. The title-deed for the property is stamped by the Chinese official and also stamped and registered at the U. S. Consulate. There is a Board of Trustees, and with the assistance and liberal support of the Hon. John Fowler, U. S. Consul-General at Chefoo, who has done so much to advance American interests in China, every precaution has been taken to safeguard the property of this Missionary Rest Home, so that all moneys given to secure it shall be used solely for the benefit of the Home.

[Readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are already familiar with the Missionary Rest Home project, which Mr. Hunter commends so highly. All contributions for that deserving work sent to this journal will be duly acknowledged and forwarded to the Board of Trustees at Chefoo.]

In a letter from Hsian, Shensi, China, Missionary W. Hagqvist writes concerning the progress of his work among the orphan children. He has now 85 orphans in all under his care, at various stations, and all are doing well. Some, when rescued, were well-nigh dead from ill-usage, by cruel people who had taken the place of relatives. A number are making good progress in Gospel training, and several are exemplary little Christians. People who at first regarded suspiciously the interest shown by the missionaries in the native orphans are now becoming convinced of the beneficent nature of the work. Concerning one little group of children Mr. Hagqvist writes:

> The photographs of the orphans in care of Mr. Ph. Nelson, show what these children looked like before they had the privilege of being cared for by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and how great a change a few days in the Orphanage made in their appearance. This is a great testimony before the heathen also, and will convince many of what Christianity really means to the people, if they only accept it.

Another missionary, Miss Flora K. Herbner, of Ta Ku, Hsien, Shansi, sends us a most interesting letter concerning the conversion and work of Li Shih Fu, a heathen carpenter of T'ungchou, who has now become one of the brightest jewels of the mission. Li was a Boxer, and shared in their depredations during the exciting times of 1900. When quiet was restored, he learned that his name was on the black list, put there by foreign and native agency alike, as one of the Boxer leaders to be punished. But his attitude toward foreigners was changed, and their religion was taking hold on him. He dared not speak his feelings even to his wife; but imagine the effect of it all upon him, when he learned that his wife too was passing through a similar secret experience. After a time Li and his wife returned to T'ungchou. They asked for admission to the church. A committee of two Chinese and a missionary were appointed to examine the case—all three thoroughly disliking the wicked Li of former days. Into an open council of the church his case was brought and every one spoke of the radical change in the man. As for himself and his wife, they knew they had found peace in Christ. It was a day of joy to himself and the church when he and his wife were admitted. The idols have been moved out of his house, and the family altar has been put in. The transforming power has changed Li the Boxer to Li the follower of the gentle Jesus.

LI, THE CONVERTED BOXER, IN HIS WORKSHOP

AN UPLIFT FOR THE FALLEN

EVER since the opening of the "Door of Hope" some fifteen years ago, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have shown a deep interest in the workings of that institution. It has been a beacon in New York City, and the light has shone so far that girls have found their way there from far distant places.

It is quite a prevalent idea that girls who have fallen, will not lead good, true lives, when they go out from the influence of a Home. This idea is erroneous. It was my privilege to be associated with the "Door of Hope" nearly all of the first eleven years of its existence, and Mrs. Whittemore and I could give many instances of girls who entered the Home during the first year, who are living Christian lives to-day.

There is another Beacon Light, one that is less widely known than the "Door of Hope," but one that is doing an equally valuable work in rescuing the fallen and unfortunate. "The Refuge," which for more than fifty years has been situated at 32 Rutland Street, Boston. The Home was organized about eighty-seven years ago. It is impossible to measure the amount of good that has been done during these years, which is known only to the Lord of the Harvest; but we have the promise we shall reap if we faint not, and the years have witnessed much unflagging devotion.

* * *

We still stand ready to welcome all who will come to us for help, and who care enough for help to conform to our rules regarding the reception of applicants.

Our Home offers unusual facilities for helping girls to a life of self-support. Each girl has certain household duties for a month, with a rotation of work, so that everyone has a chance to learn all branches of domestic service. Each girl is taught to sew. The sewing teacher is a graduate of Pratt Institute, Brooklyn. Certain hours every day are spent in the schoolroom, where we have an experienced teacher.

Our time is so limited that only the common branches are taught. We also have classes in cooking; so the girls are taught what to eat and how to prepare it properly.

We have a gymnastic class twice a week, taught by a graduate of the Normal School of Gymnastics. Lessons are also given in music. We have two large yards, one especially for flowers. Last year each girl had a flower-bed of her own. Not only was our own Home well supplied with blooms, but great pleasure was derived from sending them to another institution.

In the summer the girls frequently have their dinner under the trees, which gives a picnic flavor they enjoy much. Occasionally they are taken on a real picnic to the woods or the beach. We feel that we must not forget that young lives require something besides study and work, and we find a frequent "you may" more necessary and helpful than too many "dont's." But while we believe in the efficacy of occasional indulgence, we require strict obedience. That is the one lesson they need most of all to learn.

As in the "Door of Hope," our first object is to lead those entrusted to our care to Christ, and teach them to love and serve him.

If anyone cares to call upon us, we shall be glad to see them, and they will usually find a happy family here, and always a cordial welcome.

ABBE J. ANDERSON,
Superintendent.

THE SHAKERS' PEACE CONFERENCE

IN THE MUSIC ROOMS OF THE NORTH FAMILY, MT. LEBANON

THE SHAKER HOME, OR "FIRST HOUSE" OF THE NORTH FAMILY

THE Shakers of Mount Lebanon are a celibate religious order. Their family life is that of a religious communism, the intention being, as far as possible, to preserve and perpetuate primitive Christianity, following the injunction, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

Lately the Shakers have been holding a Peace Convention. They invited their friends and assembled their own members to unite in presenting to the world their plans for practical peace, just as they united with Noah Worcester and Benjamin Rush, more than a century ago, and with Theodore Parker, William Ellery Channing and Edwin H. Chapin at a later day. Many now see the great advantages of peace and the disastrous effects of war upon nations, as was then pointed out, and to this extent there is a turn in public opinion toward the goal upon which the Shakers first fixed their gaze.

They met in their old meeting-house, a building designed by a Shaker architect, after a style that reminds one of an old-time Shaker meeting-house. It was built by Shaker brothers in the days when their great houses were filled to overflowing. It is a building capable of seating a thousand persons, and was constructed in the most substantial way, as though it was intended to last for centuries. The floors are beautifully polished, and on them can be seen the marks where stood the ranks of the brotherhood, as they assembled by hundreds to take part in their marches, in the days of their prosperity. To-day, the gray-haired men and sweet-faced women sat by themselves in simple dignity, depleted in numbers, to be sure, but with every face serene and care-free, and imbued with the same persistence for the cause they deem the right, as in their best days.

The resolutions adopted showed the practical Shaker spirit. They recited that the Shakers were pioneers in the movement for international arbitration, and that they have lived to see this, once considered visionary, adopted by statesmen the world over. They proposed that influence be brought to bear upon our government, as the people of other countries are bringing influence to bear upon their governments, for the arbitration of international disputes, the reduction of armaments on land and sea, with a consequent diminution of the burden of taxation now borne by the producing classes, and the establishment of the great waterways of commerce as neutral zones. Their platform is broader and better and seems more practical and possible than the work of the Hague notables in their million-dollar palace.

The speakers caught the spirit of the resolutions, and their remarks were concise and to the point. There were three sessions of the Convention, and notable addresses were delivered by Walter S. Logan, an ex-president of the New York State Bar Association; Rabbi Charles Fleischer, of Cambridge, Mass.; Bolton Hall, of New York; and Eldress Anna White, head of the North family, the leader of progressive Shakerism in the United States, and others. That Shakerism is at last showing a revival in public spirit and in numbers is due to Eldress Anna, who is a woman of intellectual strength and rare executive ability, combined with the finest sensibility and tact. At the close of each speech, the Shakers sang with pleasing effect a verse from one of their old songs.

ELDRESS ANNA WHITE

The Leader of Progressive Shakerism

The audience was such a one as could be found nowhere else. It was made up of several distinct types: the Shakers, in quaint but becoming garb; the neighboring farmers, sunburned from the harvest; and a swarm of summer visitors from Lenox, Stockbridge, and neighboring resorts, with rows of grave, kindly-looking men and women, interested in universal peace, who had come from distant points.

The Shakers evidently have hosts of friends. They showed me piles of letters of sympathy and appreciation from men and women who are widely known. I saw letters from Lyman Abbott, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Rev. Edward Everett Hale, Cardinal Gibbons, Rev. R. Heber Newton, Edwin Markham, Andrew D. White, John W. Foster, Joseph H. Choate, Thomas C. Platt, W. Murray Crane, Arthur Brisbane, President Hopkins, of Williams College, President Hamilton, of Tufts, Judge William J. Gaynor, Rev. Francis E. Clark, President of the Christian Endeavor Society, Samuel Gompers, and many others.

Community life was absolutely new and strange to me when I came to the Peace Convention. I had pictured Shakers as a people of eccentric beliefs, living a life of celibacy and self-denying asceticism, with little opportunity for individual growth. But the real Shaker village is not in the least like my imaginings. The large, white buildings, in the distance bare and plain, on nearer approach took on the beauty and dignity of perfect simplicity. Built on gentle slopes, against a background of noble trees, with velvet lawns and well-kept walks, with clinging vines and flowers in gay profusion, everything bears witness to the refinement and intelligence of the inhabitants. As we passed from one point of view to another in houses and grounds, peace walked beside us; and as I thought of the poverty and privation in the world outside, I wondered why there should be one unused dwelling in the village.

The furnishings of the Shaker dwellings, like the exterior, are plain and simple, yet perfectly comfortable. Carpets and rugs woven years ago by Shaker sisters; tables and bookshelves made by Shaker brethren, with the old-fashioned splint-bottomed chairs and Shaker rockers; desks, bureaus, lounges, all hand-made, the desire of every collector, filled their rooms. The bookshelves were filled with the best of books and magazines, and I was told more than twenty periodicals come regularly to the North Family, where we stopped. There are few pictures, and none of the ornamental rubbish with which it is the fashion to fill our rooms; but there is a delightful sense of air and space, and such a radiant perfection of cleanliness as can rarely be seen outside a Shaker dwelling. As we passed through the cheerful living rooms to the library, with its piano and well-filled bookcases, to the kitchen, dairy and laundry, all furnished with the best modern appliances for lightening and perfecting the work, there appeared no signs of the hard, narrow life, the ignorance and fanaticism we had imagined. The Shakers seem always busy in the various duties of house, or garden, or field, but there is no apparent haste, or anxiety, or watchful rule. Theirs is a cheerful and intelligent industry.

Conversation often covers a wide range of subjects, from life in the Community and its concerns, to the great political and humanitarian interests of the day, and the subject of scientific investigation and experiment always calls out intelligent discussion. The Shakers are charitable in a quiet and unostentatious way, giving freely of their substance to all who make a reasonable demand upon them. The poor and destitute for miles around them are sure of help, if they can get up the hill to the kind Shaker sisters, for none are sent empty away from the Shaker door.

During the summer months, they are thronged with visitors from the whole circle of Berkshire towns, so famous as summer resorts, many coming with a sincere desire to learn something of the results of a century of communism.

But they have plenty of visitors of another sort, each with his pet project for the salvation of the world, and revelations on every conceivable and inconceivable subject, from the construction of the universe to the latest infallible prescription for leading what they are pleased to call the higher life. But the gentle, tolerant Shakers listen to every comer with patience, treat them with kind hospitality, and send them on their way with a God-speed.

Mount Lebanon, N. Y. OBSERVER.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

A. B., Illinois. "I wish to acknowledge a prayer that was answered in regard to sickness."

Mrs. W. R. Texas. "In hours of trouble I have called upon the Lord and he has helped me."

Mrs. R. M., Iowa. "The answered prayer column strengthens my faith in many answered prayers. Pray for me."

J. J. H., Louisiana. "I asked God's guidance in an important step and can see now that all turned out for the best."

Mrs. C. W. S., New York. "It is my privilege to know that God has answered my prayer in time of great trouble."

L. G., Missouri. "I was in great mental trouble. The Lord heard my prayer and removed the cause of worry."

Mrs. A. E. T., Utah. "I have found comfort and help in reading answers to prayer. I acknowledge God's great goodness in answering our prayers and sparing my life and bringing me through a trial in safety."

An Ohio Reader. "I am sure that God has answered my prayer, in healing a sick mother who is very dear to me."

M. E. B., California. "I was sorely distressed in mind over a loved one. God certainly heard and answered my prayers."

Mrs. A. A. L., Massachusetts. "I prayed earnestly for the recovery of a dear one. God has graciously answered my prayer. Only believe."

Mrs. S. R. M., New York. "My prayer was answered. I hope all will trust him, who never leaves nor forsakes us."

Mrs. I. L. C., Michigan. "God has answered my prayers, and he has brought me through a deep sorrow in a wonderful way."

C. M. B., Pa. "God has heard and answered my prayers many times. I know he will never forsake those who love and trust him."

E. A. W., Ohio. "I asked the Lord to help me and he has. I have been in great trouble, and I prayed for grace and strength to bear it."

A. M. W., New York. "I know that God does hear and answer our most simple prayers. I take everything to the Father no matter how small, and he hears and answers."

Edwin W. W., Illinois. "A loving saviour has answered many of my prayers, and by his loving kindness has brought me through many seeming impossible places."

J. N., New Jersey. "The past year has been one of great trial, bereavement and apprehension, yet peace and grace has so abounded that it seems no chance or coincidence, but the direct answer to prayer, and my faith in God's promises and care is renewed and strengthened."

An Humble Believer. "When in great distress over the serious illness of a dear mother, the Lord, in his great mercy and goodness heard my prayers and restored her to health."

Subscriber, Minn. "I took my trouble to the Lord in prayer and he soon delivered. I find the Lord is always ready to help us if we will go to him in faith."

J. M. S., Iowa. "For years the burden of my prayers and heart has been for my children. I prayed for the conversion of my eldest child as his personal Saviour. His death, after a short time spent in an agony of prayer, [illegible]. In the early part of his illness he [illegible] and gloriously [illegible] graciously answered, and I give God the glory."

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly, Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

"Let Your Light Shine"

RECENT astronomical discoveries have added immensely to our conception of the extent of the universe. It has been found that a mere blur of light in the sky that might be covered by an object no larger than a man's thumb, is really an enormous system of worlds more than ten thousand in number. Their distance is so inconceivably vast that they appear to us as a little faint cloud. Other stars, when examined through the telescope, though heretofore regarded as single, turn out to be double, their inconceivable distance having given the impression that they were one and the same. It has been a task of intense difficulty to compute these enormous distances, but with the delicate instruments now in use in our observatories, it has been done in a number of instances. These, however, are of stars comparatively near to us and they only serve as a basis for the estimate of those more distant. For example, the chief star of the constellation Centauri proves by careful computation to be, in round numbers, twenty millions of millions of miles from our earth. Thus it would appear that its light, traveling at the rate of 186,000 miles a second, would be three and a quarter years in reaching us. But this star is comparatively a neighbor. There are other stars whose light does not reach the earth for more than a hundred years after it leaves the star. It is difficult to realize that the light that strikes the eye as we lift our faces to the heavens, has really been journeying to us for a century, and that if that star were to be blotted out, it would be a century before the fact of its dissolution was known on the earth.

These facts give a new significance to the statement of Holy Writ, that men who turn others to righteousness shall shine as the stars. Their influence and the results of their labors, shall go on and on through the centuries, exerting their power to remote generations. There is nothing lost in this vast universe. The work for God that some obscure individual does, is to reach out like the light of the stars to men yet unborn, and to exert its power over their lives. It is an encouraging and a stimulating thought that should cheer some whose work seems unnoticed. They shine as the stars, with a reflected light, that is yet to bless the world in its future history. Nor will it ever end, for they are "to shine as the stars forever and ever."

Japan and the Treaty

REPORTS from Japan of the discontent of a large portion of the people with the treaty of peace are not surprising to the outside world. They are the natural reaction; but we believe they will soon pass away and normal conditions reassert themselves.

The Japanese, having won all battles by land and sea, rightly felt that they should dictate the terms to end the conflict. They wished to establish the precedent of an indemnity, and it would be well for the peace of the world if it had been so established, for nations would then count the cost of possible defeat. The Japanese people above all else desired the retention of the island of Sakhalin. It once belonged to them, and now by right of the "sacred steel of Nippon," was doubly theirs. The people have felt, as indeed did those of other nations, that through the action of the Powers, and also, it is true, by the over-generous acquiescence of Japan's own statesmen, she lost the fruits of her great victory over the Chinese. So when the recent negotiations were undertaken, they watched nervously for the issue.

In their disappointment over the loss of the indemnity, and half of Sakhalin, they forget for the moment that they have won far more than they could have foreseen in their wildest dreams. Moreover, by her generous magnanimity toward her crippled adversary, Japan has raised herself from among the heathen nations to a proud position among those who call themselves the Christian States.

Sober second thought will soon prevail in Japan, and the inborn love of the Emperor will prevent a revolution. Despite wild acts on the part of the impatient few, there will be no return to the rule of the Shogunate. The army, proud of its invincible courage, and its almost peerless leaders, it is feared, may object strenuously to the peace terms; but the effect of its magnificent discipline will make itself felt, and in a short time it will be making the country as great in the arts of peace as it has made it in those of war. Japan, great by her conquests, greater still by her knightly courtesy and generosity to a crushed foeman, will go onward to even better things than have been hers in the last two years.

"Little Japan" no longer, but great Japan, her "rising sun" has risen so far in the heavens that all nations may see the light thereof.

Good and Bad Gifts

ALL denominations of the Christian religion will be deeply interested in the discussion by the Congregational missionaries of the country, now gathered in Seattle, of the "tainted money" question. As the subject has assumed national dimensions, affecting all Christian churches, it is perhaps natural that the eyes of the multitudes should be turned to the Western city, in expectation of some pronouncement that will serve as a guide to churches and mission boards in the future. The Conference will not deal with individual cases, but will endeavor to establish a general principle regarding the question whether a church is, or is not, justified in accepting gifts indiscriminately, to be applied to the advancement of the Lord's work.

Various pastors have made this subject a theme for pulpit discussion, and in their eagerness to prove one side of the case, some have fallen into the error of strained Bible interpretation. One metropolitan preacher, taking Mark 12: 43 as his text, lately endeavored to show that our Lord's silence concerning the gifts that were cast into the treasury other than the poor widow's offering, was a tacit approval of those gifts as a whole. Heretofore, according to the opinion of some very good commentators, the lesson intended to be conveyed by the story of the widow's offering was that, coming from clean hands and simple heart, it was far more precious in the Master's sight than the gifts of the rich and those that came from less worthy sources. The others, if judged at all, were impliedly condemned by comparison. Knowing the heart of each giver and the source of every gift, Jesus held up this offering of the poor widow as the ideal gift which, in purity of motive, intrinsic generosity, and spiritual value, outweighed all the others.

This same metropolitan preacher next cited the case of a brewer who, when dying, thanked God that "he had always brewed good beer." This illustration was probably used for the purpose of justifying a church in accepting contributions to the Lord's work from saloon-keepers and others interested in the liquor trade. But the speaker must have known that there is a wide divergence of opinion on this very point, and that many good churches and worthy pastors hold the opposite view. Some years ago, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD invited the opinions of clergy and laity on the question of accepting the saloon-keeper's gift, and the preponderance of enlightened Christian opinion was decidedly against acceptance. It was held by the majority that the gift to the Lord's treasury must come through clean hands from a reasonably clean source—certainly not from a source of social and physical pollution—and that if the giver had been a flagrant offender against the laws of God or man, or both, he must at least prove his sincerity by leaving his former sins and giving due tokens of repentance.

In the course of this far-reaching discussion, a great variety of questions have come to us from interested readers. Some of these hypothetical problems are as follows: Suppose a gambler were to solace his conscience by giving part of his ill-gotten gains to the church; or a political freebooter a share of his "graft" or bribe money; or an embezzler a part of his plunder; or a dive-keeper a share of his nefarious profits; or a Wall Street magnate part of the fortune he has amassed by squeezing the simple speculators and, it may be, by depreciating values so that thousands are involved in ruin and widows and orphans are made penniless. Suppose that the character of the man and his immoral methods are known, and that the gift is made without concealment; is there any Scripture to justify the acceptance of such a gift? If there is, it would puzzle the ablest Bible scholar to find it.

Giving to the Lord's work, the Scripture tells us, a privilege that is accompanied by a double blessir To share this privilege and blessing, the motive of t giver must be a pure one. Argue as they may, the a vocates of indiscriminate acceptance cannot efface t logical fact that the character of the source and t motive stamp themselves upon the gift itself, a that money from an impure source, or which amassed unrighteously, carries with it no blessing, t the reverse. Christ's kingdom is not of this world, a it is not to be advanced in this age by gifts from evil source any more than in the day of the "Gre Temptation." All such gifts must be offered in a rigl eous spirit; those who tender them must love th fellow-men; they must come from hearts that a touched with gratitude to God; if the source is impu and the giver unrepentant, the gift is forbidden; t offering itself must be neither imperfect nor unclean; must be a pure offering, and must come with cle hands and a pure heart. Every one of those requir ments is based upon the solid rock of God's Word.

It is not meant, however, to shut out all gifts exce those that come from the saints. Human nature feeble; but if there is an earnest desire to do right a to be right with God, and if the gift be not the produ of a sinful life or a vicious calling, there can be reason for its rejection. We are not to be the judge that is the function of Deity; but when it is appare that the source, the motive, and the daily life are u questionably wrong, then, and then only, are we just fied in rejecting the offering. To accept under su conditions would lower the dignity of the church, s its spirituality, and rob it of freedom of action. would be placing the vulgar, tainted tribute which s would cast into the Lord's treasury, at a higher valu tion than the ideal gift—the widow's mite.

Keeping the Lord's Day

THE report was recently current that the Roma Catholic Archbishop of Syracuse, N. Y., ha advised his people that the honors of Christian buri would be withheld from those who died by accide when engaged in Sabbath-breaking games and contest By the honors, apparently, were meant the rites pa when a funeral takes place in a sacred edifice.

The Archbishop's act is a step in a direction whe steps should be taken. For, almost imperceptibly y with alarming swiftness, the American public is slidin down an inclined plane in the matter of Sabbath keeping.

In the reaction against a too rigid strictness, w are permitting a Pagan license to creep in, and ar endangering the most precious thing we have—ou American Sabbath. A divine institution, it is guarde by legal enactment and by the tradition of centuries, a the day when commerce must lift its imperious hand and toil cease its relentless grasp. Thousands and ten of thousands live through the week of hard day labor knowing that Sunday, the Lord's Day, will bring then rest and a breathing spell. To give the day of res wholly to the mad pursuit of pleasure, to devote it t games in which professionals play and large sums o money are taken in exchange for tickets, is hopelessl to degrade a day meant for the higher uses of th human soul.

The question is large and complex, but they are saf who observe the Fourth Commandment in the deca logue: Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

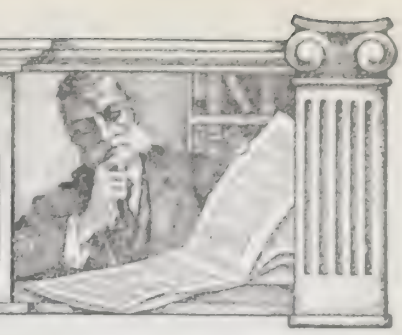
Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST MANLY, a converted Hebrew, is holding a series of successful revival meetings at Greenwoo Church, Cave, Tenn.

—EVANGELIST G. W. EICHELBERGER has just closed remarkable series of meetings at Coal Hill, Ark, whic resulted in 234 confessions of saving faith and many ac cessions to the local churches.

—THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL BIBLE CONFERENCE, at Winona Lake, was a great success. Many of the meetings had audiences numbering over 3,000. Expert workers in various lines of Christian activity from England, Canada and the United States addressed the gatherings during the conferences.

The BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER



Arbitration in the East

ANOTHER triumph of the principle of arbitration has just been achieved. It occurred in a remote corner of the world, but it evidently works just as well there, and it settles a dispute of long standing. The members of the Arbitration Commission have been twenty-nine months on the ground, personally examining the peculiarities of the land, and studying the historical evidence. They have only just returned, and the details of their work have not yet been given to the public, but it is known that it is satisfactory to all parties, and is accepted as a definite and final end to the dispute. It related to the eastern frontier of Persia, where that country abuts on Afghanistan and Beluchistan. The machinations of Russia have long led the Persians and Afghans to claim more than belonged to them. The object of course being to provoke a conflict, which would afford Russia a pretext for interfering, and acquiring new territory. Her plans have now been foiled by an agreement between the neighboring nations to submit the dispute to an Arbitration Commission. They have, it appears, not only traced the new frontier on the map, but have erected pillars of lime and stone along the boundary at varying distances, each within sight of the next, on each side. This will prevent the wild tribes in the region, who are not familiar with maps, making any mistake as to the nationality of any district near the border.

THE NEW TRADE ROUTE FROM INDIA TO PERSIA—AN ANCIENT PERSIAN TOWER, BUILT IN 1066

One of the most important results of the Commission's work is the security it gives to travelers over the trade route from India, through Persia, to the sea. This route is over six hundred miles in length, from Quetta on the east to Seistan on the west. Only a short distance of the road—that from Quetta to Nushki—is a railroad, but it is expected that as traffic increases, a track will be laid over the whole route. As will be seen by the map on this page, the termination of the road is in a triangle, at the apex of which there is a junction of three nations—British, Persian, and Afghan. The result of the arbitration is that this road is now perfectly safe for the use of all three peoples. The Commissioners passed along it to and fro, unmolested, which was an unusual experience before that time.

Strange scenes unknown to ordinary travelers were visited by the Commissioners in the course of their examination of the territory. One of these, shown in the illustration, is a Mohammedan tower built in the year 1066. It is about a hundred feet high and is built of brick, with a circular staircase in the interior. It was probably much higher at one time, but the eight centuries that have passed since it was erected have robbed it of its glory. Ancient cities, almost deserted, with ruined walls were also found. These will probably take on new life, as the traffic on the trade route now rendered safe, increases. Peace and security bring prosperity, in contrast with war, that brings death and ruin. The time is coming when, under the rule of the Prince of Peace the whole earth shall realize the fact:

I will give peace in the land and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid, neither shall the sword go through your land (Lev. 26: 6).

Seven Heroic Sailors

There is reason to fear that seven noble sailors have voluntarily perished in devotion to their high ideal of duty. The Lake Superior steamer Sevona, laden with ore, was proceeding from Alouez to Erie on September 1, when it ran ashore in the night during a fierce northeast gale, and broke in two pieces. The after part sank in a short time and the forward part pounded heavily. There were twenty-four persons on board and only two boats. When the shock came, the captain found that there was no chance for all to try to reach shore and called for volunteers to stay on the ship. More than half the crew volunteered to remain aboard. Finally the captain, the two mates, and four others, sailors, were chosen to stand by the sinking ship, risking their lives for the safety of the rest. The engineer was one of the volunteers, but the captain refused to allow him to remain on board, ordering him to take command of the ship's boat which was to take the women ashore. The two boats reached Little Sand Bay, Wis., safely, after twelve hours battling with the waves. They lost no time in sending a tug to the rescue of the captain and the intrepid party who had remained on the vessel; but when the tug reached the scene of the wreck, only a few spars were visible above the waters. It is feared that all the seven men have perished. With what gratitude will the survivors ever think of the men who died that they might live. It may lead them to think of Him through whose self-sacrifice they may inherit eternal life.

That they who live should not henceforth live unto themselves but unto Him who died for them (II Cor. 5 : 15).

Extending the Wireless

The Navy Department is erecting a wireless telegraph tower two hundred feet high at the Washington, D. C., Navy Yard, in an effort to communicate with the wireless station at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. With powerful instruments at either end, it is expected that the operators will have no difficulty in exchanging messages. The tests will begin as soon as the Washington station is completed, which will be in about three weeks. The Bureau of Equipment of the navy, in charge of the wireless work, has been informed that the operators at St. Augustine, Fla., and Cape Cod, Mass., have been enabled to exchange messages. This is a distance of nine hundred and forty miles, and is believed to be the longest land distance on record. The two stations will, of course, have the wires to fall back upon should the experiment fail; but the object is to bring the wireless system to a high degree of perfection. How it would have surprised our fathers to hear that a message could thus be sent through the air to places so far apart! But many of them knew, by happy experience, that it has always been possible to communicate with our Father in heaven.

Evening and morning and at noon will I pray and cry aloud and he shall hear my voice (Ps. 55 : 17).

Haunted by Crime

Many mysterious fires have occurred during the past year in New York and Brooklyn. They have evidently been the work of incendiaries. The police therefore have been on the watch for suspicious persons lurking in hallways. After long watching they arrested a man who was seen near a tenement house on Union Avenue, Brooklyn. He was taken to police headquarters, and questioned. Eventually he broke down and confessed that he had intended to set fire to the house. He said he had been hired by certain men, whose names he gave, to commit the crime. The prisoner was taken to the photograph gallery in the top story of the building to have his portrait taken. There, overcome by remorse and shame, he attempted suicide by leaping from the window. He was severely hurt and was taken to the hospital. There his mental suffering seemed greater than his physical agony. He would wake from his sleep, screaming "Fire! Fire!" and in his waking hours was going over the scenes of a fire. The same cry was on his lips when death at last ended his misery. How true were the warning words of the ancient teacher:

The wrecked are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest . . . . There is no peace saith my God to the wicked (Isa. 57: 20, 21).

BRIEF NOTE

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD invites the managers of missionary and charitable enterprises, who feel entitled to recognition when financial apportionments are under consideration, to send full description of their work, together with list of references and such printed matter as may be at their disposal, to "Charity Department," THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City. Communications thus addressed should be strictly confined to the information herein called for.

A Tent Service in "Hell's Kitchen"

SEE ILLUSTRATION ON FIRST COVER

ONE of the first tents to be erected by the Evangelical Committee, New York, was put up in Sixtieth Street, near Eleventh Avenue, one of the worst localities in the city, known as "Hell's Kitchen." From the very first, these meetings have been wonderfully successful. They are held under the auspices of the old Fulton Street Prayer Meeting.

If there is a place on Manhatten Island where the Gospel is needed, it certainly is in this spot. Roughs and toughs of all descriptions frequent the vacant lots and river front adjoining, and the police have always had their hands full in trying to keep order. When the Committee first started the meetings, they were prepared for almost everything in the way of annoyance and possible danger; but the unexpected happened. Some of the very worst characters of the "Kitchen" came, saw, heard, and were conquered. Good music, sensible talk, and kindly greetings won the hearts of the men and boys, many of whom had been the terror of the neighborhood. The evangelists bearded the lion in his den by throwing themselves upon the mercy of the young fellows whose reputations were the worst, and these tactics proved to be the very best for the protection of the workers.

At a recent evening meeting there gathered a motley crowd, typical of the neighborhood. Drawn by the clear notes of a cornet, with organ accompaniment, women and children gathered about the tent, one large group surrounding an earnest speaker who was giving them some interesting facts taken from the Bible, which he clearly and skilfully applied to cases in point, and which could not fail to interest and hold the attention of the crowd. Meantime, the tent was filling up. There was a surprising number of children, who came alone and in groups. These did not include the wee toddlers, who clung to their mothers' skirts, nor the babies in arms. There were all kinds of women, from the sixteen-year-old slip of a girl, who had been a "little mother" from her earliest recollection, to the sad, worn-faced mother, who held the latest born of a large brood in her arms. Gray-haired old men, with the marks of a long, hard life branded upon them, sat side by side with young toughs, who would rather fight than eat (according to the police). In the audience were boys, with countenances already showing the influence of the moral contagion all around them, with here and there a good, honest-looking workingman; a bit rough in appearance, perhaps, but with a clear eye and a steady hand. These made up the congregation, which sat quietly and listened respectfully to the men who tried to urge them to abandon their lives of sin, and accept Christ as their Saviour.

One speaker told of a recent visit to a life-saving station upon the Atlantic coast, and aptly characterized the tent in which they were gathered as "a soul-saving station." As he drew the parallel, the audience followed with the closest attention. Another speaker was very earnest, leaving the platform and walking down the aisle, as he told of the power which came with the acceptance of Christ—the "power to quit drinking and stay quit; to make and keep an orderly, happy home, no matter how humble." At this stage more than one man turned to look at his neighbor, who, in some instances was a frowzy-haired, untidy woman, with the traces, of a recent beating—administered, probably, by a drunken husband or son—upon her hopeless face. "The man who accepts Christ as his Saviour and guide," said the speaker, "will go home, wash his hands and face, and the back of his neck—I would not take any stock in his religion if he neglected the back of his neck. Then, if he has a clean collar, he will put it on, and go look for a job, which he will get, the L helping, and which he will keep, until he gets a be one, the Lord helping again."

AN EVENING SERVICE IN THE BIG CANVAS CHURCH

Men and women are attending these meetings have not entered a church for years, and they something which delights, while it astonishes th They meet other men and women, who not only from the platform, but come down among them, t them by the hand and show a real interest in their i vidual welfare. They are visited in their home those poor crowded places, where it is almost impo ble to live with any degree of comfort, so small stifling are they. The "mar the house" usually betakes h self to the nearest saloon—there is always one very nea this locality; the boys go to loaf on the corner, u something starts a fight. Th altercations are often atten with bloody results, and th together with the further f that wood alcohol is quite tensively indulged in as a b erage, along with other dea concoctions, have united to g the neighborhood the name "Hell's Kitchen" and "Wood Alcohol District."

The Evangelistic Tent Ca paign has really worked w ders here during the past seas much of its success being due the efforts made among the ch dren. Special meetings ha been held for them, and th have taken to their homes mu which, told in a childish wa has whetted the curiosity of t parents at first, and result finally, in the whole family co ing to the tent. Mr. Jacobs, t well-known Gospel singer, who is the Superintende says a great hold has been gained upon this or lawless community. The people, at least a consid able portion of them, have found that there is son thing to live for, something which will make th happier and more comfortable than drinking vile liqu ending in family rows and street brawls. They ha found that the tent is a pleasanter place than the salo for the men, and a place where the women may bri their babies, with no fear of their being in the wa The policemen in the neighborhood of Eleventh Aven and Sixtieth Street are breathing much easier and r joicing over the change, as they find that much whi formerly made their lives miserable, has been eliminat by the ministrations of the good people who gath nightly in the Prayer Meeting Tent, in "Hell's Kitchen

MISSIONARIES IN CONFERENCE

FROM all sections of our own country, and from the fields of Gospel labor in foreign lands, delegates and friends of missions are assembled this week in Seattle, Wash. The ninety-sixth annual meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions is being held in that city. Reports of the finances of the Board, of the work accomplished during the past year, the plans of labor for the ensuing year, and the outlook in the various fields, are to be presented. Eminent missionaries, long absent from their native land, will be there, to tell of the triumphs of the Gospel among the heathen, and of the opportunities of extending the knowledge of Christ.

It is a noble work that the Board has done during its long career. It has had to keep the work before the churches, to gather funds to maintain the missionaries at the front, build churches and schools, and provide Gospel literature for their use. It has, happily, had the loyal and enthusiastic service of devoted men and women, who count not their own lives dear to them, but are ready to encounter danger from deadly climates, from plague, and from hostile peoples. That these servants of Christ have done their work well there is testimony from many a land. The workers in the field and the workers at home have, therefore, a right to rejoice together, and thank God for what he has wrought through them during these ninety-six years.

Dr. Capen, the chairman of the Board, presided at the various meetings, which continued throughout the week. Among the distinguished visitors were Dr. W. J. Dawson of London, whose evangelistic services in this country have been so widely blessed of God. The preacher for the year is Rev. J. H. Twichell, of Hartford, Conn. After the meetings, there was a gathering in Chicago for further discussion and organization. As Dr. Patton, the home secretary of the Board, pointed out, the real problem of foreign missions is at home. "Things," he said, "are going splendidly abroad. Never was there such success. Formerly the missionaries worked ten years for a single convert. Now a thousand converts await baptism in a single mission. The only problem abroad is forced upon the missionaries by the inadequacy of their support."

PRESIDENT S. B. CAPEN, LL.D.

These facts will render the debate that is sure to arise on the question of "tainted money" peculiarly pertinent. The Prudential Committee of the Board accepted some time ago, as is well known, the gift of $100,000 from Mr. John D. Rockefeller. A protest against the reception of such gifts will probably be raised at the meeting, and the whole religious world is wondering whether the action of the Prudential Board will be endorsed by the Society. Among the men who insist that money acquired by methods of doubtful morality ought never to be received into Christ's treasury, are the chairman of the Congregational Union and a host of honored ministers of the denomination. On the other hand, the Prudential Committee defends its action by contending that it not a committee of scrutiny, and that has only followed the uniform custom religious and philanthropic societies accepting the offering. The fact, hov ever, that there has been a protest, show that the conscience of the churches h been aroused.

New York's Open-Air Gospe

All the leading pastors and worke composing the Evangelistic Committee Greater New York, have united in a not addressed to the Christian Churches gen erally, inviting their spiritual co-operatio in the Gospel Tent work now going on i the Metropolis. "The work," they say "has been blessed beyond all expectation Our tents have been more than fille nightly with eager souls. Many hav turned to Christ, and great crowds hav been reached through the open-air meet ings. Thousands of children are now sing ing hymns in the streets and in thei homes, as also in their special meetings i the tents. Realizing that the season o the tent work must soon close, we feel mos earnestly the need of special prayer fo even a great and more general outpouring of God's spirit, and therefore ask Christia ministers and workers to pray for us, both in their public services and private de votions."

The Battle for the Slums

What the Settlement Houses Have Accomplished in New York in 15 Years

By JACOB A. RIIS

T must have been a score of years ago that one day, passing through Monroe Street, I came upon this thing I am thinking of. The scene was photographed upon my mind with a distinctness the years have had no power to blur: a tenement mother on the top step of the high stoop, feeding her baby with beer and pickles. She had a jug in her lap from which she alternately helped herself and the baby, the latter to little sips, just enough to slake its thirst, I suppose, for it was a hot day in July. The child might have been a year and a half, and was vigorously chewing a huge green pickle when not clamoring for the jug.

The reason why I remember is that, being a reporter, I had my hands full just then with the annual epidemic of summer cholera, which, in those days, killed the tenement children in July literally like flies. In August, even if the weather was hot, the baby death-rate fell so suddenly in New York as to greatly puzzle the doctors, until they worked out the explanation: all the weak ones were already dead; they had died in July.

There were all sorts of learned explanations to account for this annual visitation. One was that the special germ worked out of the ground at a certain temperature, which came just then. I suppose a long-suffering Providence got its share of the blame. But it struck me, as I saw the scene on the stoop in passing, that here was enough to account for it: ignorant mothering. And I guess I was right. We have not such baby death-rate now in the dog days, however hot it may be.

I am made to think of that to-day, because there lies upon my table a letter from a man who wants to know. He wants to know what good is all our "fuming and fretting," as he puts it, all the reform efforts put forth to help the poor. "They won't be helped," he says. And he asks, "Are we any better off for it all? Is there less poverty? Is not the rich man getting all the time richer, and the poor man poorer, and is anybody happier than he was? Has the mortality among the poor been reduced? And why," etc., etc., through the weary register. I have heard it before; the world has heard it in all ages, the worn plea for shirking one's duty to the neighbor; the lazy man's and the selfish man's plea.

. . .

But for once there is a categoric answer. It is a lie that "they won't be helped." Not a mistake, but just a plain lie. The Tenement House Commissions have said it until there is no room for mistake — three, four of them, one after the other, that "the tenants are better than the houses." It is the landlord that has to come up to his opportunities, not they; and the opportunities are great. The Board of Health has said it, that the poor tenement house people obey the health laws far more readily than the rich who dwell in their own houses, and to that extent are better citizens, for the health laws are fundamental. Any Settlement worker will tell you that the revelation of human nature she found at her work—human nature with all the chances denied it—was an uplift to her where she had thought to do the helping.

Yes! They will not only be helped, but they help those who come to give them a hand. It may be true that the rich man is getting richer, and for a while will continue to do so, till we find a way of bringing his profits within reason, but it is not true that the poor man is getting poorer all the time. That is the merest surface view of life as it is seen in a great city. I shall not be blamed for being a defender of city tenements, and I shall not abate my indictment of them one jot while they deserve it, which is to say while I live, I suppose; but I thought last year, when going through some old castles abroad, that the kings of two or three centuries ago did not live as well, in some respects which we now consider important, as the workingman in any big city to-day. All their treasures could not buy some of the comforts the latter has as his rights.

And as for the mortality, it has indeed been reduced. In the old days I spoke of, when the Black Death came along, it killed half the populations. In my own city, within my recollection, the death-rate was thirty in a thousand of the living, and over, and then it hung for years about twenty-eight. Now it is eighteen, and if it goes up to twenty in a bad season we are all scandalized. Doctors used to reckon twenty-eight sick persons who get well to every one who dies. If the improvement extends down the line and some of the way, if not all, it is bound to go my ignorant friend can count up himself what the showing comes to in a population of four million of souls. The biggest saving of life has been effected among the poor, as was natural, for there was the greatest waste. Their babies do not die as they did, and why? The beer and the pickles have been eliminated for one thing. The mothers know better. Those who taught them were the Settlement workers, whom my uninformed correspondent identifies as among those whose "fuming and fretting" disturbs him.

To that extent, then, we are better off. There is less suffering and death. But perhaps my friend might not count that an unqualified gain. "Better die," I have heard it said by people following his train of thought to its logical end, "better die and end their misery before it has fairly begun." Certainly they had better die, if that were the best reception to be met with from those who have the opportunities, the chances to help; though I would not say the same of him while he was in that frame of mind. His one chance is to live on, and learn that in showing mercy to the neighbor, the Lord summed up the whole of his plan for raising man to the plane where he can see God and love him. But let us see how much better off they and we are, and incidentally he, than he knows of, through the "fuming and fretting" over the brother.

. . .

Sixteen years ago the first Settlement houses were opened in New York. There were two of them: the beginning of what is now the University Settlement and the College Settlement in Rivington Street. They took the children unawares, and I remember the stunned amazement with which the boys beheld club rooms thrown open to them, with a friendly invitation to come in. Practically, the only place that had been open to them before was the saloon, when "they had the price." They understood the quality of its hospitality, and no wonder they didn't believe the new way could last. I recollect the gang, already on the black books of the police, that watched four long weeks the things going on in Rivington Street, holding aloof until the news came that a club had achieved the tremendous name, "Knights of the Round Table," and then gave in, sending this message to the head worker: "If you will let us in, we will change, and have your kind of gang." And I am not likely to forget the spring house-cleaning, the year that followed, when the little patrons of the Penny Provident Bank got up a panic, thinking the Settlement was "busted," and the workers moving away; and the coming to the rescue in their dire strait, when arguments had failed altogether, of the ex-gang with pennies to deposit, until they stopped the panic. That was the result of one year's test of the plan of neighborliness. "How are we better off?" asks my angry correspondent. Sixteen years of it ought to have an answer for him.

And the answer is there, if he cares to look for it. I read it in the crowd of more than two thousand enthusiastic young men who greeted me in an East side hall last fall, when I came to tell them of the kind of man Roosevelt was. They knew, and it was speedily made clear that they were there to cheer for the man of the "square deal." But it was in a district where, ten years ago, I should not have expected or found a baker's dozen to applaud that doctrine. It began with neckties and a double allowance of soap, and this is where it had brought up. In my Settlement in Henry Street, last spring, I was picking out some photographs of our children to use for lantern slides illustrating the very point I have here in mind. I wanted some of the earner kind.

"But I cannot use these," I said, giving them back to the head worker. "You couldn't tell the difference between these Fresh-Air children and a bunch from Madison Avenue." And you couldn't, except for the glad looks that sat upon their faces.

"Oh, dear," sighed she, "I know. But it is so hard to get a dirty crowd now-a-days."

Yet I knew and she knew that in the whole company of children and mothers, so dainty and sweet, there was not one family represented the head of which made over ten or twelve dollars a week. The difference again lay in the mothering. And by the way, every mother there had been in the first girl's club we started. It was the second generation.

. . .

Let my correspondent take a walk through the tenement district anywhere, and if he knew it at all fifteen years ago, he will see a difference that will convince him that "these people would be helped" and have been. If he is a stranger there, let him ask any teacher in the public school what she thinks of it. The school has done a lot toward better days; the playground has done its share. I remember the smile of the grocer on the corner next to the recreation pier that was the first to be opened: the neighbors bought three times as much soap as they did before. Each has done its share, and the Settlement worker got the playgrounds and reform the schools.

When Hull House out in Chicago was young, I went through it one day with Jane Addams. She told me of a child from the slum who stood long in the kindergarten room considering a picture on the wall that represented a harvest scene — a woman half lying down among the sheaves, the man standing, wiping his brow.

"Well," was her comment, when she had thoroughly mastered the situation according to her understanding, "He knocked her down, didn't he!" That put the whole case of the slum. The little girl was Polish, I think. She would have fought her Irish neighbor and the little "dagoes" in the block at the drop of a hat, probably did. Half a score of years later, in New York, we saw the spectacle of the young people of the East Side—Jews, Italians, Hungarians and all—the generation brought up in the Settlements, summoning the good citizens of the metropolis to a battle royal for reform, for decency, for the protection of the people's homes. And the battle was won.

Is anybody happier than before? If anybody is not, what is the matter with him?

Jacob A. Riis.

UNIVERSITY SETTLEMENT HOUSE — RIVINGTON STREET SETTLEMENT

TWO OF THE GREAT NEW YORK SETTLEMENTS THAT ARE REDEEMING THE SLUMS

"SPORTS THAT KILL"

International Sunday School Lesson, By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

THE story of Belshazzar's feast naturally divides into four great topics: Luxury, Sin, Doom, Safety—the last relating to Daniel.

1. Luxury. Here is a young man born to wealth and power, which prompted pride when they should rather have prompted gratitude, and were used for selfish and sinful indulgence, instead of being used chiefly for the glory of God and the good of men, with self as "third ruler in the kingdom," according to God's appointment—that man should love (1) God, (2) his fellow-men, (3) himself. Self love becomes selfishness and sin only when it usurps a higher place than belongs to it, and crowds out God or our neighbor. Every office, whether in Church or State, is "a sacred trust," and should be received with a feeling of responsibility rather than pride. Luxury and pride are twin evils. It has been said: "Purple and fine linen and sumptuous fare are pleasant and desirable, but the benevolent and the conscientious cannot enjoy them when Lazarus lies at the gate."

A rich Crow Indian in Montana, named "White Arm," had some way gotten hold of the true idea of "possessions." A missionary needed some land to establish a school farm to teach the little Indians how to work as well as pray. He applied to the government agent, and found all the land thereabouts had been allotted to the Indians. "Take my land," said White Arm. He gave them one hundred and sixty acres. Another missionary on arriving in the place happened to say, "I wish I had my wife and children here?" "Why don't you?" asked White Arm. "Because I have no place to put them." "Take my house," said White Arm. In spite of the missionary's protest he moved out into a tent, and left his house empty and open so that the missionary could not refuse to take it. Afterwards he said that he did all this for the children of his tribe, that the missionary might lead them and their parents to the true God.

He built a house, time laid it in the dust;
He wrote a book, its title now forgot;
He ruled a city, but his name is not
On any tablet graven, or where rust
Can gather from disuse, or marble bust;
He took a child from out a wretched cot,
Who on the State dishonor might have brought,
And reared him to the Christian's hope and trust.
The boy to manhood grown, became a light
To many souls, preached for human need
The wondrous love of the Omnipotent.
The work has multiplied like stars at night
When darkness deepens; every noble deed
Lasts longer than a granite monument.

SARAH K. BOLTON.

Christian leaders often discuss "how to save the masses," but it is harder to save the rich classes. A thoughtful young lady of Fifth Avenue, New York, exclaimed: "Who will save us, the lost ones of selfish wealth and wasteful, wanton luxury?" "How shall we evangelize the slums?" is discussed; but the harder proposition is, "How to save the selfish suburbs."

2. Sin. Luxury, unguarded by unselfish devotion, led Belshazzar as it leads young men to-day to the following chain of sins: (1) drink, (2) lust, (3) profanity, (4) ungrateful disloyalty to God. While the very poor and the very rich have the greatest temptations, all of us need to watch and pray, lest we enter into temptation. A lady in India had a pet mina bird of beautiful plumage and sweet song, that lived in a cage in her sitting-room, and was very good company. At length she thought it so tame and so attached to her that she could trust it to come out of the cage and fly about the room. Her husband said one day, "Have you noticed an ugly bird that sits daily in a tree near the veranda? I think it must be a bird of prey watching for your mina bird." The wife replied gaily, "Then it will be disappointed." But as no harm came day after day she forgot the warning and grew careless, and one day when her door was open the mina bird saw the bright sunshine and birds outside, and ventured out, only to fall instantly a prey to the enemy that had watched so long for an opportunity to devour it. How vividly the story pictures the tragedy, worse than death, that has come to many a boy and girl—sometimes because the mother or father were too careless of the danger, but oftener because the youth boldly rushed into danger.

One of the exquisite wonders of the sea is called the opelet. It is about as large as the German aster, looking in fact very much like one. Imagine a very large double aster, with a great many long petals of a light green color, glossy as satin, and each one tipped with rose color. These lovely petals do not lie quietly in their places, but wave away in the water, while the opelet clings to the rock. How innocent and lovely it looks on its rocky bed! Who would suspect that it would eat anything grosser than dew and sunlight? But those beautiful waving arms as you call them, have use besides looking pretty. They have to provide for a large, open mouth, which is hidden down deep among them—so deep that one can scarcely find it. Well do they perform their duty, for the instant a foolish little fish touches one of the rosy tips, he is struck with poison as fatal to him as lightning. He immediately becomes numb, and in a moment stops struggling, and then the other arms wrap themselves around him, and he is drawn into the huge, greedy mouth, and is seen no more. Then the lovely arms unclose and wave again in the water to grasp another victim. The allurements of sin are to be compared with the opelets of the sea. We can keep out of their reach if we will try to do so.

"IN THE SAME HOUR CAME FORTH FINGERS OF A MAN'S HAND AND WROTE UPON THE WALL"

In DesMoines, the directors of the industrial school for fallen girls, have impressively shown what one of these perils is, in making it a condition when these girls are paroled and go back to try life once more, that they shall not go to any public dance. The police as well as the preacher, know the dance as youth's deadliest foe; and next to it is the "shows," most of them schools of robbery and vice.

Another impressive illustration of such deadly temptations as destroyed the young Belshazzar, is the rat-catcher plant, a vegetable pitcher filled with liquid that will stupefy the rat or mouse or roach that comes to it seeking to allay its thirst. Having stupefied the victim, this pitcher-plant closes about his neck, pressing two spines or spikes into his neck. And so, even if he revives from the knock-out drops, he is held fast, and in time is drawn fully into the plant, to be absorbed by it. The parallel between this "pitcher" and those which capture foolish and wicked youth is so manifest, that it need not be further explained.

Let us not forget that Belshazzar's profanity and ingratitude are represented in the Bible as even greater sins than drink and lust. His profanity was in deed rather than word, using the sacred vessels of the Lord at his impious feast. Some who would not swear are guilty of the worse sacrilege of profaning the fifty-two sacred vessels God has given us in the Sabbaths of the year. While Belshazzar's sins of lust and appetite and profanity were great, his supreme sin was his ungrateful pride. "The God in whose hand thy breath is, thou hast not glorified." Not to glorify God is high treason—the greatest sin because a violation of the "great commandment" to make God supreme in our lives.

3. Doom. God saw everything that was done in Belshazzar's feast of pride and sin, and he sees all we do to-day. The young king was standing all the while, as we are, on God's invisible scales, where all are weighed by One who sees all secret acts and thoughts. "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." "Every man shall give account of himself to God." Let us not think that because we have not been guilty of Belshazzar's grosser sins, we shall escape. If you are not a Christian, you are guilty of that which Daniel most condemned in him, not glorifying God. Shall a husband say, "I have done no one a wrong save my wife?" Shall a son say, "I have been faithful to all but my father?" If we have disregarded the command to love God, we [illegible] guilty of the supreme crime. The D[illegible] Jesus pictured in hell is not represente[illegible] guilty of anything but living selfishly, [illegible] loving either God or man.

The mills of God do not always g[illegible] "exceeding slow," for the record is: [illegible] that night (of the very day when Da[illegible] had read the writing of doom on the [illegible] of the palace) was Belshazzar, the Kin[illegible] the Chaldeans slain." History tells [illegible] Babylon was taken by Cyrus, King of [illegible] Persians, in the dead of night, by turn[illegible] the river from its course, and entering [illegible] der the walls by the way of the river-[illegible] laid bare. In recent excavations, a cy[illegible] der has been found inscribed by the fa[illegible] of Belshazzar, which reads: "In the h[illegible] of Belshazzar, my first-born son. [illegible] Let the fear of thine exalted godhead [illegible] that he may commit no sin, and tha[illegible] may be satisfied with the fullness of li[illegible]

And why, in vain the prayer of [illegible] father? It was addressed to idol gods [illegible] no power to answer prayer, and the fa[illegible] was himself an idol worshiper. It is o[illegible] the prayer of the godly man that can a[illegible] doom. The prayers of godly parents [illegible] behalf of their godless children have b[illegible] most mercifully answered by the true [illegible] living God.

It is a great distinction among [illegible] Egyptians to have been a pyramid build[illegible] as Khufu (Cheops), Ratatef, Menkau[illegible] Teta, etc. Daniel was a pyramid buil[illegible] of another sort. He built not in stone, [illegible] in character. When Belshazzar, frig[illegible] ened by the mysterious handwriting [illegible] the wall, had called in his wise men [illegible] astrologers to interpret the meaning, [illegible] they had failed to do so, he sent for Dan[illegible] at the suggestion of the queen moth[illegible] The King paid only the tribute due [illegible] Daniel when he said: "I have even he[illegible] of thee, that the spirit of the gods is [illegible] thee, and that light and understandi[illegible] and excellent wisdom is found in thee."

4. Safety. In contrast to the hope[illegible] death and doom of Belshazzar, beh[illegible] Daniel, who had met like temptations [illegible] youth, and vanquished them, standing [illegible] his ripe old age on the safety of fixed [illegible] tegrity.

A young man came from the country [illegible] the city and fell in with two companic[illegible] They tried to induce him to go to [illegible] races. He said, "I will go, but I will [illegible] drink or gamble." On the train a l[illegible] sitting just behind them overheard th[illegible] conversation. One of them with a drunk[illegible] swagger said to him, "You are a milks[illegible] you are tied to your mother's apron-strin[illegible] it is pitiful to see one so narrow and Pu[illegible] tanical in his views." That young m[illegible] about eighteen years of age, with [illegible] freshness of a pure country home on [illegible] face replied, "Yes, boys, I admit all y[illegible] say, and somehow I feel as if were I at [illegible] mother's apron-strings now, I would b[illegible] trifle safer, and I am not going to [illegible] races, but will get off at the next statior[illegible] When the station was reached, he got [illegible] and quickly moved out, while they f[illegible] lowed laughing and jesting. He said aft[illegible] wards, "As I stood on the platform th[illegible] came before me a scene that took pl[illegible] two years ago. The open Bible was [illegible] the plain country dining-room table, a[illegible] sitting by the side of it a form dearer [illegible] me than life. She bowed her gray ha[illegible] and read from the Old Book, then kn[illegible] down and commended her boy to God [illegible] he was about to go to the great city. A[illegible] I said, 'God helping me, I will try to be[illegible] narrow as my mother's virtue and [illegible] father's honesty.'"

Those who fight such battles through [illegible] youth, usually hold the fort in age wi[illegible] assured peace.

'Tis yet high day, thy staff resume,
And fight fresh battles for the truth;
For what is age but youth's full bloom,
A riper more transcendent youth?
A weight of gold
Is never old.
Streams broader grow as downward rolled.

At sixty-two life has begun;
At seventy-three begins once more;
Fly swifter as thou near'st the sun,
And brighter shine at eighty-four.
At ninety-five
Shouldst thou arrive,
Still wait on God and work and thrive.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES

*International Sunday School Lesson for Oct. 1, 1905. Daniel and Belshazzar, Daniel 5, 17-30. GOLDEN TEXT: "The face of the Lord is against them that do evil." Ps. 34: 16.

Our Household Circle

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Co-operative Housekeeping

ON a more extensive scale than anything hitherto attempted, co-operative housekeeping is to be carried on in New York City. Seven families of wealth, uniting in a home corporation, have purhased a good building site, and will soon erect a comodious and beautiful apartment house. In each luxrious flat there will be a living-room, dining-room, library, bed-rooms, and bath-rooms, but no kitchen. Tht will be a central affair, at the bottom of the hole, where also there will be a large general dining-roo and a series of drawing-rooms. The kitchen will be fitted out as hotel kitchens are, with every modern apliance and convenience, and, while those who prer, may take their meals in the large ding-room, by means of dumb-waiters, thse who desire may have theirs served in heir own private dining-rooms.

o-operative housekeeping in a smaller wy than this, and carried on by fewer peple, would probably assist in solving soe present-day problems of city resides. Rent is a fearful burden on the mds of salaried people who never get awy from the growl of the wolf in the dance. It might be diminish could it be shared equally by ive or six families, other expees, as of heating, lighting, baing, washing and ironing, pded and divided, and one kichen made to do the work no done in a half-dozen.

here are many rural communies now where groups of hoses are heated from a centr plant, as whole towns and cis receive water and light in th same way. By bringing sence and common sense to bear on he situation, labor and cost-liss might be diminished, yet noing sacrificed of the real privay and sacredness of home life.

The Order of Service

utside of liturgical churches, th church may be a law unto itse, and have a service differing fm others of its creed in order of arrangement. When the pastis absent and there is a visiting minister, some one should gi him the order of service and se that he understands it, or else mister and organist may become confused and embarrassing blunders take place. Not long ag, a strange clergyman occupied the pulpit of a brother whose gd custom it was to offer a prayer over the collection. The dcons who had taken it up, stod reverently with bowed heads before the pulpit, their bskets on the table, but the minister took no notice and announced his text, so they were obliged to turn and march to their seats, looking a bit annoyed. In church management as everywhere else, it is well to arrange matters clearly before an occasion.

Worn to Shreds

Why is nervous prostration increasing so rapidly? Why is it no longer singular to hear of men and women in their prime, breaking under the spell of life's cares and trials? Perhaps it is the pace. We are all in a tremndous hurry to get somewhere; we cannot take the road in a leisurely fashion; haste possesses us and drives us like fury incarnate. Perhaps it is the dominance of worry. Not all the philosophy in the world can keep from worry a man who has a note in bank and not any money to pay it, or who has a mortgage on his farm and fears it will be foreclosed. And if a boy or a girl is set on a course that maturity sees can lead only to disaster, parental hearts cannot avoid worry. And worry kills joy and ages people fast.

Perhaps it is lack of faith in God. Accepting his plan for one's life, one cannot but be sure He will bring order out of chaos and light out of darkness.

But, to very many, nervous exhaustion would not come if they held up in time and took a short rest. When long rests cannot be had, short rests give nature a chance. Nature rebels like an overdriven steed when she never is considered; but her powers of recuperation are wonderful, and if men only relax she will give them a helping hand.

Our stout forefathers had hard times, but they did not have nervous exhaustion. We have easier times, and break sooner than we ought. There must be a reason. If we can find it we can also find a remedy.

A Beautiful Revelation

Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, President of Wellesley College, and a favorite writer and lecturer, left the world bereaved when she passed away. Her splendid personality, her rare sympathy, her intuitive knowledge of girls, made her foremost among successful educators. She had retired from Wellesley some years before her death, but she never lost her deep interest in that institution, nor in colleges for women. The Congregationalist

A BUTTERFLY PARADER

QUEEN TITANIA REVIEWING THE ASBURY PARK BABY PARADE

THE annual triumphal march of the toddlers took place at Asbury Park, N. J., on August 31st. Five hundred youngsters walked, were wheeled, or carried in review before Titania, Queen of the Carnival. Fifty thousand spectators gathered on Ocean Avenue, expressing the greatest delight as the wee ones, proud as little peacocks, and almost as dazzling in their raiment, marched or rode past. The Queen sat in a pavilion in an elaborately decorated Court of Honor, to which she came in a golden sea shell chariot. Her majesty wore a white embroidered robe and court mantle, trimmed with silver and ermine. The pageant started from the auditorium, the line of march being covered with burlap. Children with doll coaches formed the first section. The second was composed of decorated express wagons. A little fellow two years' old, riding in a wagon bearing a huge head of lettuce made of tissue paper, got the first prize of his division. A twenty-two months' old baby was the blue-ribbon winner in the baby coach section. The grand prize—a silver loving cup—went to Doris Lindsay, of Newark, N. J. She rode a huge butterfly made of 5,000 pink and white flowers. Lawrence Steinhardt of New York, was a diminutive Roosevelt, dressed as a Rough Rider.

The Vacant Chair

PASSING a quiet house on a village street, set back from the road, behind sheltering trees, we sometimes catch a glimpse of that emblem of sorrow—a garland of flowers hanging from the door bell. The same sign of grief attracts our attention many times a week as we walk through the crowded quarters of the town, and wherever we see it, gives us pause.

In foreign cities one often observes the reverence paid to death and bereavement in the lifted hats and bared heads that testify respect, when a funeral procession has the right of way. Something like this, though there may be no visible demonstration, instinctively tugs at our hearts when we see the symbol of mourning at any door. Little is the difference whether the home be a spacious mansion replete with luxury, or a humble room in a tenement, if the great invader whom no man can stop have crossed the threshold. The mother's tears over an empty cradle fall as bitterly in one home as in another. The queen and the washerwoman are on the same level when Death strides over the sill. The desolation of widowhood is as sweeping in one state of life as in another. We talk glibly about classes and conditions, and in the superficial strata of life they exist, but when one gets below the surface, at bottom human nature is the same. Loss is loss let it come where it may, and a vacant chair anywhere means heartache and loneliness.

Our poet Longfellow touched the minor chord, to which all hearts vibrate, when in his household verse he wrote of the universal experience that, sooner or later, is the portion of humanity, none escaping it.

There is a reaper whose name is Death,
And, with his sickle keen,
He reaps the bearded grain at a breath
And the flowers that grow between.

Whatever else we may be prepared for we are seldom prepared for the vacant chair. Whether death comes suddenly or after a long illness, there is seldom lacking the element of surprise and dismay when a soul leaves the body and Love stands bereaved of its own. Sometimes a vacant chair casts a shadow over a wide circle of kindred, and not only makes forlorn the hearth which misses its occupant, but many hearts besides.

When one summer day the tidings was flashed across the continent and over the sea and around the globe, that John Hay had breathed his last in a little mountain hamlet in New Hampshire, the world felt the pang of an unspeakable loss. A great man had fallen, it seemed, at the moment when vast interests most needed him, when his wise counsel and his genius for diplomacy made the vacancy almost irreparable. As his coffin was borne to its final resting-place thousands mingled their honest lamentations with the tears of those who were nearest him by family ties. On certain occasions the bond of brotherhood makes itself felt and a thrill of sympathy goes from heart to heart, from land to land, and from nation to nation.

In a partial sense vacant chairs are soon filled. The world's work can never stand still. It must go on. It moves onward, so far as outsiders see, without much interruption. Life at its longest is so brief, and there is always so much to be done that there is not time to spend in sighs. As we turn away from the mound which has been covered with funeral flowers, we again set our hands, alike in the nation or the home, to doing what waits to be done. Some one has said:

If I were told that I must die to-morrow,
That the next sun
Which sets should bear me past all fear and sorrow
For any one;
All the night long, and all the [illegible]
What should I do?

How shall one answer this? Surely the answer is not far to seek. The only thing to do is to accept the appointment of the divine will and to go on doing our duty, whether we are to live one day or many years. So to live that we may be missed and remembered by what we have done, should be the desire of every one.

quotes from her husband an incident of her last illness, which is touchingly suggestive and comforting.

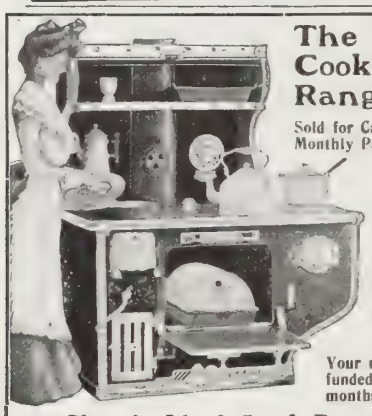
As she lay ill in Boxford, lightning struck the house and destroyed the chamber adjoining her own. She seemed much interested in the novel event, as if it were something contrived for her entertainment. It did not, apparently, disturb her. No one knew that she had written about it, or indeed that she was in the practice of writing verse. After her death this hymn was found:

"He shall give his angels charge
Over thee in all thy ways."
Though the thunders roam at large,
Though the lightning round me plays,
Like a child I lay my head
In sweet sleep upon my bed.

Though the terror come so close,
It shall have no power to smite;
It shall deepen my repose,
Turn the darkness into light
Touch of angels' hands is sweet:
Not a stone shall hurt my feet.

All thy waves and billows go
Over me to press me down
Into arms so strong I know
They will never let me drown.
Ah! my God, how good thy will!
I will nestle and be still.

ROYAL
BAKING POWDER
IS THE BEST.
A pure, cream of tartar powder.
Greatest in Leavening Strength.
It makes lightest, sweetest, most wholesome food.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.



The Best Cooking Range
Sold for Cash or on Monthly Payments.
$10 to $20 saved
Freight Paid
Your money refunded after six months' trial if Clapp's Ideal Steel Range
is not 50 per cent. better than others. My superior location on Lake Erie, where iron, steel, coal, freights and skilled labor are cheaper and best, enables me to furnish a TOP NOTCH Steel Range at a clean saving of $10 to $20. Send for free catalogue of five distinct lines, over 50 styles and sizes, with or without reservoir, for city, town or country use.
CHESTER D. CLAPP, 620 Summit Street, Toledo, Ohio.
(PRACTICAL STEEL RANGE MAN.)

WOODBURY'S
SOAP CREAM POWDER DENTAL CR
FOR FACE
THE
"A soothing lotion invaluable in the home for dispersing chaps, rough skin or any local irritation"—exactly describes Woodbury's Facial Cream.
Send 10 cts. for samples of all four preparations.
The Andrew Jergens Co. Sole Licensee, Cin. O

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER
TRADE MARK
A Positive Relief For PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.
Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.
GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

LE PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE
IN JARS AND TUBES.
For photo or general use. Dries quickly—never discolors print. Very strong—corners will not curl. Largest bottle now sold for 5c. (by mail, 10c.) In bulk for large users, carton work, etc.
LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE
2 oz. size retails 5c.; by mail, 10c.
LE PAGE'S GLUE—1 oz., 10c.; by mail, 12c., bot. or tube. RUSSIA CEMENT CO., 154 Essex Avenue, Gloucester, Mass.

WANTED Representatives to take orders for staple and novelty Dress Goods, White Goods, Silks, etc. Qualities guaranteed. Unlimited variety. Mill Prices. Liberal remuneration. Write for particulars, giving responsible references, to A. M. MOSELY, Mill Agent, 373-375 Broadway, New York City.

OUTFIT FREE TO AGENTS
Best selling line of Handkerchiefs and Dress Goods on the market. Quick sellers, big profits. Deal direct with a large manufacturer. Send for illus. catalogue and full particulars.
FREEPORT MFG. CO., 391 Broadway, New York, Dept. 56

NEARLY 700,000 SOLD
CHURCH HYMNS AND GOSPEL SONGS
New Edition—30 cents, by mail; $25 per hundred.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO. Chicago-New York.

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Rekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

IMPORTANT that every reader of this magazine should write at once for particulars of vital importance to every one.
The New Jersey Mfg. Co., Jersey City, N. J.

JAPAN-RUSSIA WAR. Complete official history. Bonanza for Canvassers. Extra terms. Outfit free. General agents wanted on salary. Ziegler Co., Philadelphia.

ONE TOUCH OF NATURE

"'REASON thus with life, if I do lose thee I do lose a thing that only fools would keep.' So wrote the poet, and he never wrote truer lines."

Thus soliloquized Richard Mallock as he leaned against the parapet of the Thames Embankment and looked down upon the black gulf of waters here and there wrinkled with light.

His thoughts were wandering over the past of a brief, wasted life; fortune squandered, opportunities lost; and at eight-and-twenty, ruin, beggary, hopeless indebtedness, from which there was seemingly no escape except by a plunge into the river. He thought he would wait and hear Big Ben sound midnight, and then—for the leap in the dark.

Presently out of the deep silence there rose a low sob, quite close to him; Mallock turned his eyes in the direction of the sound, and saw a shadowy form move through the darkness and then climb up on to the parapet a little below the place where he was standing. Divining its purpose, and forgetting all his pessimistic philosophy, he ran forward and clutched it just in time, and drew it down upon the roadway.

It was a young girl, little more than a child, thinly, raggedly clad, with a white, worn, hunger-pinched face begrimed by tears and dirt, and half-hidden by a mass of tangled dark hair.

"Child, child," he said in a shocked voice, as he placed her on a seat beside him, "what were you going to do?"

"Drown meself," was the sobbed answer.

"Drown yourself! Why do you want to drown yourself—at your age?"

"Because I don't want to live—I'm so mis'ble—I want to die, and then I shan't be 'ungry no more, and shan't have to beg and be beat."

"Poor little wretch!" muttered Mallock. "And who is it ill-uses you?"

"Bill Hughes and mother, both on 'em; Bill told me if I didn't bring 'ome two bob to-night, he'd skin me alive, and wouldn't give me a bit to eat for a week. I 'ate beggin', I'm sick of it all."

Then, turning spitefully upon her deliverer, she cried: "Why couldn't you 'a let me alone; only for you I should be dead now at the bottom of the river, and never want vittals no more."

The words struck home to Mallock, bringing with them a flavor of mortification.

"But, my poor child," he said soothingly, "you are not obliged to put up with ill usage; the magistrates will protect you from that."

"I s'pose you mean the beaks—yes, they'd send me to prison; 'tain't good enough," said the girl, with monkey-like cynicism.

"No, they would send you to some institution, where you would be fed and clothed, and properly treated."

"Never 'eard of them places, and they sort o' beaks ain't our way," she broke in.

It would have been curiously interesting to a psychologist to have studied these two pessimists, seated side by side; the ragged waif of the gutters and the beggared gentleman of the Temple chorusing together—Life is not worth living. The one had exhausted all its pleasures, the other had never known ought but misery, yet each was equally weary of the sun. Mallock was uneasily conscious of the irony of the situation.

"Don't your mother send you to school?" he asked.

"Not much; they're always havin' her up about it, but Bill won't let me go—he won't work, he only drinks and wallops mother and me, and when she's mops and brooms she's as bad as him. I tell you I'm bloomin' sick of it all."

Then, looking up at him with a queer look upon her weazened face, she said: "Do you like sittin' out 'ere in the cold? I don't. But I s'pose it ud be a blessed sight colder under the water. But when you're dead you don't feel nothin'. Wish I was dead. I s'pose you've got a bed, and as much toke as you can tuck in and plenty o' clothes? I wish I was you, I wouldn't want to drown meself then, not me."

And she chuckled at the thought.

"Perhaps in my way I've as much cause to be tired of living as you have," he said, smiling.

She stared at him for a moment, then uttered a contemptuous "g'orn, I ain't such a green 'un as you thinks me. Why, if you was hungry," she went on, passing her hand over his coat, "you could put your clothes up the spout for enough to keep you in meat and puddin' for ever so long. My, don't I wish I was you? but some people ain't never satisfied with what they've got."

"What are you going to do now?" he asked, after a pause.

"I dunno; stop here till the crusher moves me on, I s'pose. I dusn't go home."

"How much have you got towards your 'two bob?' "

"Oh, I got a bob in bronzes."

"You have got all that money and yet you thought of drowning yourself. Why it would have been better to have spent it upon toke," said Mallock.

"Blessed if I ever thought o' that," said the girl, "and all the shops is shut now."

Mallock bethought him that he had a few stray coins about him, and turning out his pockets, found two sixpences and some halfpence.

The small fingers greedily closed upon the coins, then opened again to gloat over them.

"Is all this for me?" she gasped.

"Yes, and if you've got anythiug over the two bob, keep it for yourself to get something to eat with."

"Well, you are a bloomin' good sort," she said, "you are. There ain't many o' you about our way."

"Where do you live?" he asked.

"White Horse Court, Drury Lane."

"What is your name?"

"Peggy."

"What else."

"Nothing else as I knows on."

"Well then, Peggy, I shall try and do something for you to get you out of your wretchedness, put you somewhere where you will be properly looked after. But you musn't say anything about this to your people at home."

"I'm fly," she said with a grin, laying a tiny finger against her nose.

During this conversation the strange companions, linked for a few moments by such a strange bond of sympathy, had walked from the Embankment up Arundel Street. Mallock stopped beneath a gas-lamp, and, looking down kindly upon the little waif, held out his hand, and said, "Good-night, Peggy, I shall not forget you."

The child gazed at the white, ungloved hand, and then rubbed her own dirty palm against her frock before she put it in his.

"You are a good sort and no error," she said, with a little shake in her voice.

"Poor little wretch," muttered Mallock to himself, as he watched her shuffle up Wych Street, "I'll set the Children's Protection Society on to Mr. Bill Hughes and get you out of his clutches."

St. Clement Danes chimed the quarter past twelve.

"By jove, I thought that by this time I should be lying quietly in Father Thames' bed."

He burst into a cynical laugh. "What poor, irresolute fools we all are," he muttered; "mere straws blown hither and thither by the wind of circumstance. What have I saved that wretched child for?"

Nevertheless, Richard Mallock went home to his chambers in the Temple and slept soundly. And next morning the postman brought him a letter from a lawyer, announcing that he had inherited a considerable sum of money from an aunt who had died intestate.

Mallock sat for some time holding the letter in his hand. For a while it was a shock to him rather than a joy. How narrowly he had escaped being the victim of one of Fate's little ironies.

You need scarcely be told that he was not ungrateful to Peggy for the strange part she had played in his destiny. He had her taken away from her vile surroundings, respectably educated and trained, and she is now the wife of a well-to-do tradesman. While Mallock himself, having renounced his old mode of life, is a barrister of repute and large practice.

H. BARTON BOKER, in Good Words.

EVERY woman's figure has I of excellence.
From simple measurements se by mail our experts can discove good points of any figure and cu ments so as to make the most of
That is why our garments not only fit pe but also become the figure for which, th designed.
You take no risk in giving our wonderful a trial, for we will positively refund your if we fail to fit you.
Fall Suits MADE TO ORDER $6 to
NOTHING READY-MADE.
Style Book, samples of materials and simple measurement directions sent free.
Your choice of cloth from over 400 materials. Ask for as many samples as you like.
Our Style Book shows over 160 of the most popular fashions in New York, and tells you how we can fit you from measurements sent us by mail.

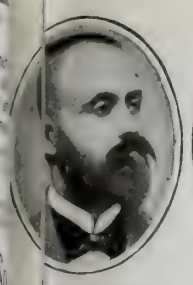
Visiting Costumes, $6.00 to $20.
Tailor-Made Suits, $7.50 to $25.
Separate Skirts, $3.50 to $12.
Rain Coats, $9.75 to $20.
Jackets and Coats, $5.75 to $25.
We prepay express charges to any part of the U. S.
We Send FREE to any part of the United Stat new Fall and Winter Book, showing the latest New York Fashions, a assortment of Samples of the Newest Mate and simple directions for taking measurements cor
Kindly state whether you wish samples for a suit cloak or rain coat, and about the colors you desi we will send a full line of exactly what you wish.
NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT
119 and 121 West 23d Street, New Y
Mail Orders Only. No Agents or Branches. Est. 17 Ye

HONEST PHYSICIA
Works with Himself First
It is a mistake to assume that physi are always skeptical as to the curative p erties of anything else than drugs.
Indeed, the best doctors are those o seek to heal with as little use of drugs as sible and by the use of correct food drink. A physician writes from Calif. t how he made a well man of himself Nature's remedy:
"Before I came from Europe, where I born," he says, "it was my custom to coffee with milk (cafe au lait) with my m ing meal, a small cup (cafe noir) after dinner, and two or three additional s cups at my club during the evening.
"In time nervous symptoms develo with pains in the cardiac region, and acc panied by great depression of spirits, des dency—in brief, 'the blues!' I at first t medicines, but got no relief and at last ized that all my troubles were caused by fee. I thereupon quit its use forthw substituting English Breakfast Tea.
"The tea seemed to help me at first, bu time the old distressing symptoms retur and I quit it also, and tried to use milk my table beverage. This I was compel however, to abandon speedily, for while it lieved the nervousness somewhat, it brou on constipation. Then by a happy inspira I was led to try the Postum Food Cof This was some months ago and I still us I am no longer nervous, nor do I suffer fr the pains about the heart, while my 'bl have left me and life is bright to me o more. I know that leaving off coffee using Postum healed me, and I make i rule to advise my patients to use it." Na given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.
There's a reason.

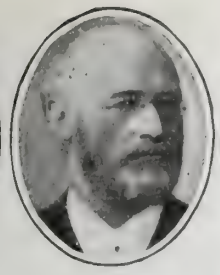
Wheel Chair

We make a complete line of mo Rolling Chairs for adults infants, and sell direct at WHO SALE PRICES. 75 styles to se from. We pay freight and sel
30 DAYS TRIAL.
Liberal discounts allowed to sending for FREE Catalogue N
GORDON MFG. CO. 526 Madison Ave., Toled

MONEY For Your Tim
Trustworthy men and women in community can make $5 a day or more explaining taking orders for Dr. Day's Comfort Sp No investment of money required. The Co Spring makes a perfect bed for ordinary use and the anced lifting head piece makes it invaluable for inv asthmatics or aged persons. Every one says: "Just I've been looking for," and wants it. This is your portunity to make a good income and besides doi real service to many in your community. Write t COMFORT SPRING CO., 481 Benton St., Joliet

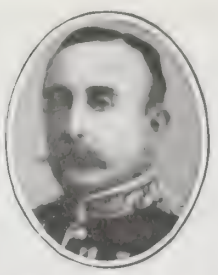


PRESIDENT CASTRO



PRESIDENT BERNER

HON. FRANK PLUMLEY



THE EARL OF MINTO

PROMINENT MEN OF THE HOUR

PRESIDENT CASTRO, of Venezuela, has again shot into public view in his usual dramatic style. He is doing his best to get his country in such a position that she will have to be brought around sharply by this or some other nation. The claims against Venezuela made by France and others were undoubtedly just. One rumor states that if he fails in his high-handed plans, he will move to Paris. A good move, perhaps, for the interest of the country over which he at present rests.

. . .

PRESIDENT BERNER is the head of the Norwegian storting, that voted some time ago to separate from Sweden. M. Berner has had a long career in Norwegian politics, and is well-known throughout Europe although his name is a new one to most Americans.

. . .

HON. FRANK PLUMLEY, of Northfield, Vt., has been the referee in adjudicating the claims against Venezuela. France claimed eight millions, and Mr. Plumley allowed between six and seven hundred thousand. The Venezuelan courts rejected the claims at once. Mr. Plumley refereed the claims of several nations against Venezuela, notably Great Britain and Holland. He is lecturer on international law at Norwich University, and Judge of the Court of Claims for Vermont.

. . .

THE EARL OF MINTO has been appointed to the exalted office of Viceroy of India, and will sail soon from England to take up his duties as successor to Lord Curzon. Earl Minto has been Governor-General of Canada, and his experience acquired there will stand him in good stead in his new position. What disposition he will make of the military question, over which Lord Curzon and Lord Kitchener disagreed, is not yet known. Lady Minto, the new vice-queen, is the daughter of General Grey, and made herself exceedingly popular with the Canadians during her residence among them.

Concerning Longevity

SOME months ago, a lady having business at a bank, desired to speak with the president. He happened to be absent, and some one who represented him said, "Mr.—— is generally here during business hours. To-day is an exception. For a man considerably over ninety, he keeps his business wonderfully well." Since the spring grasses have grown green, a grave beneath them has been hollowed for a good physician who passed away in his ninety-second year, having practiced until almost his latest day of life, and having attended medical conventions in Europe and America precisely as in the days of his youth up to his ninetieth year. If a roll-roll of the readers of this paper could be made, there would be found on earth many men and women who are hale and hearty in their eighties. The limit of life is extending beyond the three-score and ten of the Psalmist. People grow old more slowly than formerly, and retain their grasp upon life's activities much longer than they did when the country was newer, and its hardships were greater. If a man or a woman wishes to retain a second influence in the active world, it may best be done by presenting a face of indifference to Time.

In this connection, an extract from John Wesley's journal, dated June 28, 1788, may be pleasing:

"I this day enter on my eighty-fifth year, and what cause have I to praise God, as for a thousand spiritual blessings. So for bodily blessings also. How little have I suffered yet by the rush of numerous years. It is true I am not so agile as I was in times past. I do not run or walk so fast as I did. My sight is a little decayed. I do not find any decay in my hearing, smell, taste or appetite, nor do I feel any such thing as weariness either in traveling or preaching, of any decay in writing sermons, which I do as readily and I believe as correctly as ever. To what cause can I impute this that I am as I am? First, doubtless, to the power of God fitting me for the work to which I am called, as long as he pleases to continue me therein, and next, subordinately to this, to the prayers of his children. Even now, though I find pain daily in my eye, or temple, or arm, yet it is never violent.

. . .

"Whether or not this is sent to give me warning that I am shortly to quit this tabernacle, I do not know; but be it one way or the other, I have only to say:

My remnant of days
I spend to His praise,
Who died the whole world to redeem:
Be they many or few,
My days are His due,
And they all are devoted to Him.

The First Missionary to Bettoo

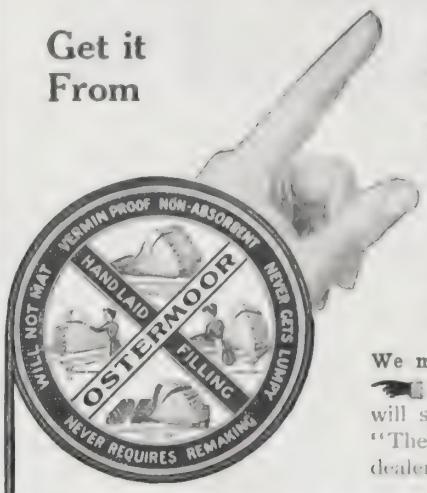
JOHN A. RUSSELL

AMONG modern knights of the Cross who have left home and country to fight for Christ in a foreign land, may well be numbered John A. Russell, the first missionary to Bettoo, Liberia. Mr. Russell was born in Sweden, in 1867, but came early to this country. It was his desire, since the day of his conversion, to preach the Gospel. He spent some time in Bible training, but could find no board that would send him to the new field in Liberia, West Africa, where he wished to go. Through an account published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of the work of Mary L. Allen, he was filled with new zeal, and determined to earn himself the money necessary for the journey to Africa. He arrived in Bettoo in 1904, and began missionary work at once, and though racked by the fearful African fever, and hampered by the lack of supplies, he toiled steadily for the Master, and his work has already borne fruit.

The people, despite the fact that they were demon worshipers, received him kindly, and many came to his meetings. He carried on a very active work among the children, and it was his hope to bring up about twenty of them to be missionaries to their people. The fever and the strain of overwork was too much for his impaired constitution, and to the great sorrow of his people, this gallant soldier of the faith, on the 7th of last April, passed on to his well-earned reward.

The Ostermoor Dealer

Get it From



No argument is needed now on the Ostermoor Mattress. It has the largest sale of any mattress in the world. Its popularity is due to its cleanliness and sleep-producing qualities—not to its low price. To protect the public from worthless substitutes, exclusive agencies are being established with high-grade merchants in every town and city—so far about 2,000 local firms sell the "Ostermoor." Our name and trade-mark label are sewn on the end so that you cannot be deceived.

We make no mattress that does not bear this trade-mark. Send us your name and we will send you our handsome 136-page book, "The Test of Time," and the name of the dealer in your place who sells the genuine

OSTERMOOR MATTRESS $15.

WHERE WE HAVE NO AGENT WE SELL BY MAIL UNDER THIS GUARANTEE:

Sleep on it Thirty Nights, and if it is not even all you have hoped for, if you don't believe it to be the equal in cleanliness, durability and comfort of any $50. hair mattress ever made, you can get your money back by return mail—"no questions asked." Mattress sent by express, prepaid, same day check is received. To learn the Ostermoor story, send for our

Beautiful 136-page Book, FREE

Regular Sizes and Prices
2 feet 6 inches wide, 25 lbs.	$8.35
3 feet wide, 30 lbs.	10.00
3 feet 6 inches wide, 35 lbs.	11.70
4 feet wide, 40 lbs.	13.35
4 feet 6 inches wide, 45 lbs.	15.00

All 6 feet 3 inches long.
Express Charges Prepaid.
In two parts, 50 cents extra.
Special sizes at special prices.

It is a handsome, beautifully illustrated volume, entitled "The Test of Time"—136 pages of interesting information and valuable suggestions for the sake of comfort, health and success—with over 200 fine illustrations. Write for it now while it is in mind.

Look Out! Dealers who are not our exclusive agents are trying to sell the "just as good" kind. Ask to see the name "OSTERMOOR" and our trade-mark label sewn on the end. Show them you can't and won't be fooled.

or From

Ostermoor & Co., 115 ELIZABETH STREET New York

Canadian Agency: The Ideal Bedding Co., Ltd., Montreal.

MAKES GOOD COOKING A PLEASURE
BY USING THE
$2 and Up Easy to Clean O-HI-O Combination Steam Cooker—Baker

Guaranteed to save 40 per cent. in fuel, labor, time and provisions. A whole meal, from soup to dessert, cooked over one burner on any style stove. No intermingling of odors or tastes. Dishes can be cleanly cooked, easily digested, never spoiled, steaming hot meals. Thirty days' trial. Fine for summer cottages. Grand for Camping Trips.

Handsomely Illustrated Catalogue FREE.

It Whistles. $1 Cook Book for 4 cts. Postage.

WE WANT GOOD AGENTS.

OHIO COOKER CO., 727 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, O.

5% INTEREST

We invite conservative investors having $5 to a million to invest, seeking a safe and satisfactory investment combining the well known safe and sterling features of both Municipal Bonds and Real Estate Mortgages, to write us for our special offerings. Semi-annual interest and principal when due collected without charge.

DUKE M. FARSON & CO.
MUNICIPAL BONDS
115 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

"No crooked legs for this baby."

Straight Legs

and a strong, flat back developed if the baby learns to walk with

Glascock's Baby-Walker

Endorsed by physicians as the best physical developer. In at chest carry at, stand, jump or walk. Cushioned spring supported. Adjustable. Keeps clothing safe. Insist upon having the standard. Special sizes for cripples.

Write to-day for catalogue and FREE sample of Baby's Food.

Glascock Bros. Mfg. Co., 668 West Street, Muncie, Ind.

Blizzard Proof

Outside proof so closely woven it resists wind and snow alike. Lined with wool that protects from the cold. Snap fasteners, inverted pockets.

PARKER'S Arctic Jacket

"Arctic" Trade Mark Registered. Better than an overcoat for it keeps cool and work together. Warm, durable, comfortable. Ask your dealer, or sent postpaid on receipt of $5.

JOHN H. PARKER, Dept. K, 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

Near-Brussels Art-Rugs, $3.25

Sent to your home by Express, Prepaid.

Sizes and Prices
9x 6 ft..	$3 25
9x 7½ ft..	3 75
9x 9 ft..	4 25
9x10½ ft..	4 75
9x12 ft..	5.25
9x15 ft..	6.25

Sold to you direct at one profit. Money refunded if not satisfactory

ORIENTAL IMPORTING CO., 687-D Bourse, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE HYGIENIC COOLING PAD

HEADACHE, INSOMNIA, NEURALGIC PAIN AND NERVOUSNESS are INSTANTLY RELIEVED by the HYGIENIC COOLING PAD. Simply lay the pad on the head and the pain disappears. Ask your druggist for it, or send $1 to

THE HYGIENIC COOLING PAD CO.
38 East 21st Street - - - New York.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The Slavs*

WHEN a Slovak priest was asked, "What is the meaning of the word Slav?" he instantly replied, "Glory," and added, "In all churches wherein the Slavs worship, Slava Bogu (glory to God) is chanted, and Slava is the same word as Slav."

This is the interpretation commonly accepted by the majority of the race. Scholars support this view by affirming that the root from which the word is derived signifies "intelligence" and that Slav means "the intelligible people." Others, however, derive the word from a root signifying "to call," and affirm that Slav means the "called ones"—those who are commanded; that is, serfs and slaves. The former interpretation represents the pride and expectation of the Slavophiles, who believe that their race is providentially destined to lead the world in civilization, by preserving and perpetuating the Christian faith, by establishing law and order, by enforcing obedience to authority, and by realizing the full fruition of forces of progress which are now arrested by the senility of European nations, who stand at an open grave wherein the glory of extinct kingdoms is buried. The latter interpretation represents the sentiments of the Slavophobs, who believe that no good has ever come or ever will come from the Slav, because its sons are the arch-corruptionists of the Christian faith; the uncompromising foes of democratic institutions; the destroyers of the inalienable rights to freedom of thought and of conscience; and the greatest hindrance to the onward progress of that civilization which has done so much for the peoples of Europe. Both positions are those of extremists, and each is wide of the mark chalked out by the judgment of history.

The emigrant Slav in an American police court considers the most barefaced and patent falsehood as a fair means of self-defense, and many of them have very lax ideas as to the rights of persons and property. These specks and blemishes are visible, but the student will patiently study the phenomena and seek the deep-rooted causes by which these specks and blemishes are produced rather than make sweeping generalizations. Catherine said of Riviere, the French physiocrat, "He supposed we walked on all fours, and very politely he took the trouble to come from La Martinique to teach us how to stand on the hind legs." Teutons and Kelts have manifested the same proud contempt for the Slav in modern times, giving little thought to the fact that he is the child of a different civilization from our own.

There are, in the United States, about a million and a quarter Slav immigrants, who represent the peasant class. Whoever has studied them in the mines and on the farms, in the mills and on the wharfs, in the forests and on the rivers, must bear testimony to their daring courage, constant industry, prompt obedience, and patient endurance. Men believed a generation ago that the mining industry of Pennsylvania could not be carried on if the English and Welsh, Irish and Scotch, Germans and Americans were withdrawn. To-day, in eight shafts in the Mahanoy Valley, employing about 2,500 contract miners, less than five per cent. of them are Kelts and Teutons. The Poles, Ruthenians, and Slovaks get out the coal, and the per capita production is to-day greater than it was twenty-five years ago, notwithstanding the fact that the operation requires three times the muscular effort which it then required.

Practical common sense sways the vast majority of this people. Sentimental considerations and loud-sounding phrases have very little if any place in their life. What they want is a house to live in, food to eat, raiment wherewith to be clothed. Neo-Malthusianism is not in the Slav's creed; both men and women believe that children are "an heritage of the Lord" and are "as arrows in the hand of a mighty man." Bachelors and spinsters are not found among them. In no country in Europe is the birth-rate so high as among Slavs, and medical science, in recent years, has beneficently checked infant mortality among the peasants.

Let another Peter the Great arise to lead these 100,000,000 Slavs, strong in their youthful vigor, confident that they have a mission to fulfil, and what obstacles can stand before their onward march? If they arm themselves for battle their armies will shake two continents, and the Slavophobs' worst fears will be realized. If they seek a higher victory—"the victory of science, art, and faith"—the dream of the Slavophiles in part may be realized, viz., that the Slav will restore the world, demoralized by atheism in religion and anarchy in government, to sanity, faith and order.

*From The Case of Russia, a Composite View, by Alfred Rambaud, Vladimir G. Simkovitch, J. Novicow, Peter Roberts, and Isaac A. Hourwich. A timely and instructive work of 387 pp., cloth binding. Price $1.25. Fox, Duffield & Co., New York, publishers.

BOOKS RECEIVED

Sandy, by Alice Hegan Rice, author of Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch. A clever and brightly told story of the adventures of a poor little Irish stowaway. "Sandy" is just as odd and lovable a character as any in the author's other books, and his career makes a capital story. 312 pages. Cloth covers. Illustrated. Price $1. The Century Co., New York, publishers.

Woodmyth and Fable, by Ernest Thompson Seton, illustrated. This is a charming little book by an author who is never tiresome and always instructive. Mr. Seton has gathered together many odd bits, partly from Indian legend, partly from Nature's own lore, and has illustrated them very quaintly and happily. 181 pages. Cloth covers. Price $1.25. The Century Co., New York. publishers.

Scripture Selections to Memorize, suggested by Miss Helen Miller Gould. These are chosen from both the Old and the New Testament, and include many of the most beautiful aud striking passages of Scripture. They are printed on large sheets as a wall-roll, with cord for hanging, and a finely illuminated cover. Published by Fleming H. Revell Co., New York. Chicago and Toronto. Price $1.

Bethel-El-Bethel, A New Old Story, is a poem of about one hundred pages, by Mattie Sanford Bull. "This little book attempts to find in a section of Biblical history, the desires, deeds and sins of the human heart of to-day; and by voicing Bible characters, it aims to express through them, the wants, longings, conflicts, and triumphs of the soul in all ages." The above is taken from the author's introduction, and well illustrates the aim and character of the book. It is worth reading. Price $1. Eastern Publishing Co., Boston.

From Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York: Esarhaddon, and Other Tales, by Leo Tolstoy. This is a collection of short stories by the Russian novelist. They were written and translated for the benefit of the Jews impoverished by the riots at Kishinef. Each tale is used by the author to teach a lesson in Christian ethics. Price 40 cents. A Peculiar People, by Aylmer Moode. This is an interesting account of the Russian Doukhobors. The author lived for some time among these people in their new home in Canada, and in addition to a graphic description of their present condition, gives several chapters to their peculiar history. Price $1.50. The Buccaneers, A Story of the Black Flag in Business, by Henry M. Hyde. This is an up-to-date novel dealing with modern methods of business. Although a pretty love story runs through the book, its main interest lies in the plots and counterplots of two rival corporations. Price $1.40. The Marquise's Millions, by Frances Aymer Mathews. People who have read the author's Billy Duane, and especially My Peggy Goes to Town, will welcome this sprightly story. It deals with the fortunes of a family of French royalists that remain loyal to the house of Bourbon, and live on in their chateau regardless of changes that come with empire and republic. Price $1.

From the Macmillan Company, London and New York, publishers: The Spirit of the Service, a novel by Edith Elmer Wood. A stirring story of the Spanish-American War; 334 pp., paper covers. Price 25 cents. Mass and Class, a Survey of Social Divisions, by W. J. Ghent; 260 pp., paper covers. Price 25 cents. Poverty, a comprehensive and thoughtful view of its extent, character and influence in this country at the present time, by Robert Hunter; paper covers, 382 pp. Price 25 cents. The Two Captains, by Cyrus Townsend Brady. A delightful romance of Bonaparte and Nelson. This is one of the finest stories from Chaplain Brady's facile pen. It will be remembered as having appeared in serial form in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some time ago; 413 pp., cloth covers. Price $1.50. The Master-Word, a Story of the South to-day, by L. H. Hammond. The interest and action of this really fine novel are laid in what is known as the "phosphate region" of Tennessee. It is a capital tale, and will hold the reader throughout; 334 pp., cloth covers. Price $1.60. How to Write, a Hand-book based on the English Bible, by Charles S. Baldwin, Professor of Rhetoric in Yale. It shows the Old Book as a model of literary style, from which modern students may draw to advantage; 202 pp., cloth. Price 50 cents. The Secret Woman, by Eden Phillpotts. A story of dramatic interest, much of the action of which takes place in Devon; 385 pp., cloth covers. Price $1.50.

Their First Love
The sunshine of childhood and the happiness of future years depend upon good health. = =
Quaker Oats
for the children lays the foundation of a strong body and a sound brain, and its use throughout the year is decidedly in a helpful and healthy direction
Quaker Oats

THE LARKIN CHURCH-AID PLAN HELPS CHURCHES

A simple and popular co-operative method, providing a regular source of income without extra expense to anyone. Adopted with success by hundreds of societies.

Through an appointed Committee each member regularly buys his Laundry and Toilet Soaps, Toilet Articles, Coffee, Teas, Spices, Extracts, other Food Products, etc.—daily needs—at usual retail prices.

ONE HALF PROFIT FOR CHURCH

Direct Factory-to-Family dealing saves middlemen's expenses and profits, enabling us to sell $20.00 worth of Larkin Products for $10.00.

Any society adopting the Larkin Church-Aid plan makes a profit of fifty cents on each dollar's worth of goods sold through the Committee. $500 or more can easily be raised.

Larkin Products are of the highest quality; well known everywhere. Adopt the plan at once—we help.

Write for Application-blank No. 104-C and complete information.

Church Aid Dept. Larkin Co. Buffalo, N. Y.

A KALAMAZOO DIRECT TO YOU

At Lowest Factory Prices.

We will sell you, freight prepaid, direct from our factory any Kalamazoo Stove or Range on a 360 Days Approval Test.

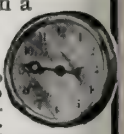
WE PAY THE FREIGHT



Oven Thermometer

We guarantee, under a $20,000 bank bond, that there is no better stove or range made, and we save you from $5 to $40 on every purchase, because we save you all middlemen's, jobbers' and dealers' profits. We're manufacturers, not "mail-order dealers;" we own and operate one of the largest and best equipped stove factories in the world; we guarantee the high quality of our product and ship on trial.

SEND A POSTAL CARD FOR CATALOGUE No. 103.

Examine our complete line of ranges, stoves and heaters, note the high quality and low price and save from 20% to 40%. All Kalamazoos are shipped Freight Prepaid, blacked, polished and ready for use. All our cook stoves and ranges are equipped with patent Oven Thermometer which makes baking easy.

KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., Manufacturers, KALAMAZOO, MICH.

We probably can refer you to pleased customers in your own neighborhood.

Bead-making in the East

By PROF. EDWARD JAMES BANKS

BREAD-MAKING in the East is one of the institutions which time and outside influence have been unable to change. The Babylonians, several thousand years ago used the same kind of oven, and called it by the same name as does the modern Bedawin or the settled Arab in cities like Bagdad and Damascus. The old Babylonian called his stove tinuru. One of the ancient Babylonian proverbs which has survived, says that an old tinuru is like the changing of one's clothes; it is dangerous to the health. The modern Arab has dropped the final vowel and calls it tinur.

The first duty of an Arab wife, whenever her husband settles or encamps, is to build an oven. Mixing with water a little of the clay that is found in most parts of the desert, she builds up from the ground a round, pot-shaped structure, curving slightly inward toward the top. When completed, it is about eighteen inches in diameter and two feet in height. Near the bottom she cuts a small hole for draught, and the oven, after drying a few hours, is ready for use. When bread is to be made, a fire of brushwood or of dried dung is built in the oven, and kept burning until the walls are thoroughly heated. When only the embers remain, the dough (usually consisting of nothing but coarse barley meal stirred up with water), is plastered thinly over the inside walls of the oven, a cover is placed over the opening at the top, and in a moment, the loaf of hot, crisp, barley bread, resembling a huge pancake a foot in diameter, is ready to be eaten. This is undoubtedly like the bread with which Jesus fed the multitude by the seaside; it is now the only food of most people in the East. It has always been the common food of the Semitic peoples.

AN ARAB CLAY OVEN

While excavating the oldest of the Babylonian ruins, the hard-baked clay of the ovens is constantly appearing. So closely do they resemble the ovens of the modern Arabs, that were it not for the evident antiquity of the surrounding walls and the ruins which cover them, they might be mistaken as belonging to an Arab encampment but recently deserted.

The Peace Treaty Signed

CLOSELY following the dramatic declaration of peace, there occurred a scene at the Navy Yard that, in the histories of the future, will be declared to have been one of the great turning points in the destinies of nations. It was the signing of the Treaty of Portsmouth, by which the greatest war in the last forty years was ended. As it set the official seal on the rank of Japan as the War Lord of the Far East, so above the signatures of her envoys is announced in black and white that the claws of the Russian Bear had been clipped of their march over China to the Pacific.

The officers of the Navy Yard did their best to make the closing scenes as imposing as possible, and no element that would add spectacular effect was missing. The marines, in full dress uniforms of blue, were drawn up on the west side of the brick edifice that now goes by the name of the "Peace Building." The gunners of the battery stood watching for the signal to fire the salute, to announce to the waiting crowds the signing of the treaty. A few minutes past three in the afternoon the rifles of the marines clashed forward to the "present"; drums rolled, the band played a march, and the automobile of the Russian envoys drew up at the steps. Five minutes later the Japanese arrived.

In the reception room on the second floor the French and English texts of the convention were hurriedly read. The party then adjourned to the conference room, where the memorable meetings have been held. The room is quite large, and the few invited guests seemed quite lost in it as they took their stations at one end. Among them were Governor McLane of New Hampshire; Rear-Admiral Mead, Commandant of the Navy Yard, who appeared in the glittering full dress uniform of his rank; Assistant Secretary of State Pierce, Mayor Marvin of Portsmouth, officers of the Yard, attaches of the envoys, etc.

The envoys bowed low to the assembly, and the latter bowed back as one man. The envoys took their seats at the table, and the secretaries presented the four copies of the treaty, two in French and two in English. The parchment on which they were written was given by our Department of State, and was bordered with a red line. This bit of red was objectionable to M. de Witte, but he was persuaded that it was the custom in America to have legal documents so decorated, and he withdrew his protest. The French copies were spread before M. de Witte and the English before Baron Komura. They signed at once. M. de Witte used a gold pen, and Komura one of Japanese steel. After Baron Rosen and Mr. Takahira had affixed their signatures, the Japanese signed the French articles, and the Russians those in English. The envoys then placed upon the papers their private seals.

For a few moments the envoys sat motionless, and not a sound was heard in the room, but through the windows, from time to time, came the distant murmur of the waiting multitude. Suddenly, Baron Rosen reached across the table and grasped the hand of Mr. Takahira.

"I shake hands," he said, in English, "with an old friend and now a new one."

Almost at the same instant crashing reports from the battery announced to the people that the Treaty of Portsmouth was a fact, and the nations at peace.

"THERE'S A REASON"

That's All Right, But What Is It.

A lady teacher in South Dakota says:

"I was compelled to give up teaching for nearly 4 years because of what the physicians called 'nervous dyspepsia.' Nor was I of any use in the household economy. I was in many respects a wreck.

"I had numerous physicians, one after another, and took many different kinds of medicine, but they did me no good.

"Finally, 5 years ago, I began to use Grape-Nuts food. I grew stronger in a very short time on the new diet, and was soon able to resume and am still teaching. I no longer use drugs of any kind, my dyspepsia has disappeared and I am a hearty woman—thanks to Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. There's a reason. Brain work and worry take strength from the stomach and bowels. They become too weak to handle the fried meat, eggs, bacon, coffee and white bread, so, partly digested, they decay and cause all sorts of trouble which will become chronic if continued. Then the nerves and brain grow weary, for they are deprived of the rebuilding elements the food must furnish to replace the soft gray filling of nerve centres and brain which is partly used up each day.

Now comes the mission of Grape-Nuts to supply the "Reason." Made in a peculiar and scientific way of the selected parts of Wheat and Barley this famous food contains natural phosphate of potash with albumen, which combines with water in the body and makes that gray matter quickly and surely. Then when nerves and brain feel the power of new made and properly made cells, the strength returns to stomach as well as other parts. "There's a reason." Anyone can prove it.

See the little book "The Road to Wellville" in each pkg.

Why you should try

Because

Fels-Naptha Soap is different from any other soap and you will never know the truth about it until you give it a fair trial.

Because

Its peculiar nature makes it loosen and dissolve all dirt, stains and grease; completely and easily but without ever affecting the material. It contains no harsh chemicals to rot away the fabric.

Because

It cleanses dainty laces and fine goods perfectly without injury. The easy directions on the wrapper show you just how to clean everything.

Because

It needs no hot water; no boiling or scalding of the clothes—which destroys their fibre. It makes no bad-smelling suds-steam through the house.

Because

Fels-Naptha Soap washes badly-stained white goods whiter; colored wear brighter, and greasy, grimy, heavy things, cleaner, sweeter and purer than you can get them in any other way.

Because

It requires less than half the usual rubbing—which wears and tears clothes to pieces and makes needless hard labor and backache.

Because:—It saves clothes, money, strength, and time; and, in fact, cuts wash-day in half.

You are the loser by every day's delay.

Ask your grocer and if he will not supply you, write us for free sample today.

Address, Fels-Naptha Philadelphia

St. Paul Minneapolis Duluth

There are four magnificent fast daily trains via the Chicago & North-Western Railway from Chicago to St. Paul and Minneapolis and two to Superior and Duluth, including the famous electric-lighted North-Western Limited to St. Paul and Minneapolis, and the electric-lighted Duluth-Superior Limited to the Head-of-the-Lakes.

$16.00

Round-trip summer tourist tickets on sale daily from Chicago at the rate of $16.00 round trip to St. Paul and Minneapolis, and $20.00 round trip to Superior and Duluth, with correspondingly low rates from all points.

All agents sell tickets via this line.

W. B. KNISKERN,
Passenger Traffic Manager,
CHICAGO.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

NW546

Church Membership*

FROM every Christian, the confession of his standing is demanded by Christ. It is his due, and ought to be cheerfully rendered. We owe it to Christ to let it be known to the world that we belong to him. Gratitude to him requires it, and it is the least return we can make for all he has done for us. Our duty to the world also requires a confession of Christ, so that whatever of good there may be in us shall be attributed to the right source. It is also a preservative. When a man has declared himself on Christ's side, he will be more careful of his conduct lest it bring a reproach on him and his people. It is also a benefit. Association with Christ's people must stimulate right feeling and keep alive the graces of the Christian character. On all accounts, therefore, a public confession of Christ ought to be made.

It is a well known fact that comradeship helps in any cause. One of the most trying things is to stand alone. Even one brother feeling as we do, having the same principles, the same hope and joys, strengthens and cheers. He becomes nearer than those of our own kin, and his society develops the principles of our lives. How much more when we become members of a Society, parts of an organized company, each one having the same aims. The meetings of such a society produce an atmosphere of their own that conduces to spiritual health and vigor. It is really the brotherhood that Christ intended his church to be; there is love and sympathy there that can be found nowhere else, and sincere affection that is stronger from the knowledge that it will be eternal.

The excuse most commonly made for not identifying ourselves with Christ's church is, that its members are so often inconsistent. But that is really no reason at all. It is indeed a strong reason in its favor, if a man is himself leading a consistent life. By joining the church he may set an example of Christian conduct that will be beneficial to the others. He will at least add one to the number of those who are following Christ, and so help to strengthen his brethren. He will find, in any case, that in obedience to Christ, he will gain a reward, and be better equipped for Christian service.

The Christian and his Bible†

MANY people in these days neglect the Bible. Time was, when a reference in a public meeting to a Biblical incident or a phrase from its pages was at once understood and appreciated; now it is received in blank ignorance. Even Christians do not realize its full value. Its reading is perfunctory, and without interest or understanding. A short psalm, or a chapter hurriedly read, as a matter of duty, satisfies the conscience. This is not as our fathers used the Bible, nor as men go to it for the sustenance of their spiritual life.

Probably much of this decrease of interest in the sacred volume is due to the spirit of criticism that has been abroad during the past thirty years. That the criticism has done good, few will deny. We know more about the Book than we did before, and see the real meaning of passages once incomprehensible. We know the kind of people for whom Isaiah and Jeremiah and Ezekiel wrote, and their works in that knowledge become luminous. But the mischief has come from the emphasis criticism has placed on the human side of the Bible. People who have followed it, are apt to forget that the writers were inspired of God and that it is his message to mankind that is incorporated in their works. We have the treasure in earthen vessels and we ought not to pay more attention to the vessel than we give to the treasure.

The Bible should be read for guidance in duty and for inspiration in feeling and conduct. It is a mistake to read it for the discovery of inconsistencies or contradictions, or to read it to find hard passages that perplex the most scholarly minds. There is so much that is plain and simple, so much that is pertinent to our daily life, that we may well give ourselves to absorbing and applying that, without puzzling over difficulties. The marvel is that in a Book written so many centuries ago, under such different circumstances, there should be so much that has a direct application to our own time. That fact alone proves its divine origin and should commend it to our most diligent study.

* Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society for October 1. I. Thess. 5 : 5-15 ; Luke 12 : 8.

†Topic of the Epworth League for October 1. Ps. 119 : 11; Jer. 15 : 16.

Youth's Respect for Old Age

In the Times of recent date there appeared an account of young Kermit Roosevelt giving up his berth on the cars to an old couple, who could not climb to the higher one, and he took the higher one himself. Since then, there has been some unkind remarks about its being placed in too conspicuous a place in the paper. I would like to say that I do not think it could be placed in too conspicuous a place. It showed that young Roosevelt had been well brought up by his parents. I say, all honor to Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt for teaching their children to respect old age! When young Kermit is grown a man, and when some day he may send in to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD his letter to a symposium on "When I Was a Boy," he may be able to say, as did Gen. Charles King, U.S.V.: "I was taught to show respect to elders." Boys of the present time show reverence and respect, as a rule, neither to God nor man.

MISS E. READ.

New York.

THE MORMON'S CHILD

INTO a happy household,
Where one wife's loving sway
Over the heart of her husband,
Made sunshine all the day;
Came the sweetest expectation,
That can thrill a woman's life,
The holy pain of the mother
To crown the joy of the wife.

But a serpent was creeping, creeping,
Ready with deadly fangs,
To sting the soul of the mother
With worse than child-birth pangs;
For the lecherous faith of the Mormon,
Was wrapping its poisonous fold,
Round the heart she had trusted fully,
And counted as pure as gold.
Her fountain of tears seem frozen,
Her power of feeling dead;
And the winter of woe soon whitened
The gold on the girlish head.

At length came her hour of travail,
And the wan lips faintly smiled,
On the gift from heaven so precious,
Her innocent little child.
But strangely old its visage,
And strangely sad its eyes,
Beneath whose beautiful fringes,
The shadow of suffering lies.

While ever, and ever, and ever,
Tears silently fall o'er their brim,
Upbraiding the father's desertion,
Pleading for love from him.
The mother bends over the cradle,
To watch her babe as it sleeps,
But even in infant slumber,
The little one constantly weeps.

Not with moaning or outcry,
But gentle as summer rain,
Trickle, sleeping or waking,
Those pitiful drops of pain;
Till its life is dissolved in weeping,
And the soul of the mother is torn
With a second travail of sorrow,
As her child to the grave is borne.
Oh! Mothers with babes in your bosoms;
Oh! maidens whose lives are a song!
How long will ye suffer your sisters,
To faint 'neath this burden of wrong?

Author Unknown.

Delicate Skins and Dainty Fabrics are most easily—quickly washed with Pearline
The more DAINTY—the more DELICATE—the greater the need of PEARLINE'S help. SAVES your labor—SAVES your fabrics—ELSE millions would not have been convinced simply by the use of a trial package.
Pearline gives 100%
SERVICE QUALITY EFFICIENCY

A Swell Affair
DENT'S
Toothache Gum
Stops toothache instantly—as soon as you apply it. Stays where you put it and does not spread in the mouth. Stops decay.
There are imitations. Don't take them. See that you get Dent's Toothache Gum, Yellow Label, at all druggists or by mail, 15c.
DENT'S CORN GUM removes corns and bunions, 15c.
C. S. DENT & CO., 47 Larned Street, Detroit, Mich.

BUY FURS OF THE MAKER

Albrecht, St. Paul, has made furs for 50 years in the center of America's Fur Region. Send for our catalog, the world's authority on fur fashions; it contains 100 illustrations. Describes and gives prices of every thing in furs. Costs us 50c., yours for 4c. in stamps.

E. ALBRECHT & SON, BOX M, 20 E. 7TH ST. ST. PAUL, MINN.
America's Great Fur Shop

STAMMERING CANNOT BE REMEDIED

Save ONLY at ONE PLACE, for we correct the CAUSE, unknown to all others. The failures from these come to us, and get what they pay for. After one lesson you stammer no more. Come and investigate at our expense. The FON-LIN METHOD—the only one not like the rest. Show this to others and send us their addresses to this one place.
THE CARSWELL INSTITUTE, 2315-H North 7th Street, Phila.

BOMOSA COFFEE
BEST GROWN

BIG INCOMES
$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK
to getting orders for our Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. For full particulars and Special Terms address at once Mr. P. B., care of
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289. 31-33 Vesey St., New York

GINSENG Culture is the "Only Way" to make big money on little capital. One acre is worth $25,000 and yields more revenue than a 25-acre farm, with one-tenth the work. My method of culture and co-operative plan enables you to take life easy and live in comfort on the large income from a small garden. Write to-day.
T. H. SUTTON, 530 Sherwood Avenue, LOUISVILLE, KY.

Southern Colony NOW FORMING. Farmers, Merchants, Mechanics, all lines. Free sites for Factories. No Saloons. Send 2c. stamp for full particulars.
Southern Land & Dev. Co., Box F, 140 Nassau St., New York

STARK FRUIT BOOK
shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's, Louisiana, Mo.

FREE TO AGENTS
Flat thin knife cuts loose a perfect cake. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T.
HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS
Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

SILKS DIRECT FROM FACTORY. Samples Free for stamp. All grades and colors. Quality Guaranteed.
Yard wide Black Taffeta, $1 per yard, a Specialty.
SLUYTER, DIEPHUIS & CO., Department I, PATERSON, N. J.

MELLIN'S
For the Baby
FOOD

Mellin's Food is endorsed by the physicians. Hundreds of doctors are using Mellin's Food in their own families for their own children. If Mellin's Food is good for the doctor's baby it ought to be good for your baby. Let us know if you would like to try Mellin's Food and we will send you a sample bottle free of charge.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

RHEUMATISM
Absorbed From the Blood

The Capillaries now reached throug the large foot pores and forced t yield down their acid impuritie New treatment discovered which sent to anyone

FREE TO TRY

If you have rheumatism send us your nan to-day. You will get by return mail a pair Magic Foot Drafts, the celebrated discove which is accomplishing such marvelous resul in all the rheumatic countries of the worl Try the Drafts thoroughly, then if you a fully satisfied with the benefit received, ser us One Dollar. If not, keep your money. Yo are the sole judge. We can afford to mak this offer only because the Drafts do relieve and people a willing and glad t pay for them.

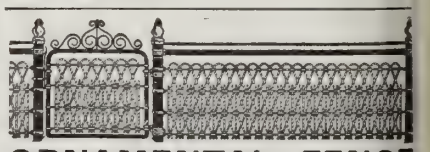
Magic Foo Drafts are worn a shown and operat by reaching th capillaries through the large foot pores an absorbing acid impurities directly from th blood, without which purification rheumatis cannot be overcome. Thousands all over th world are already rejoicing over their safe an inexpensive treatment without medicine, an we have their grateful letters to show. Don you want to try this treatment free? Writ to-day to Magic Foot Draft Co., R A 16 Olive Bldg., Jackson, Mich. Our valuable book (i colors) on rheumatism comes free with th trial Drafts. Send no money—only you name and address.



ORNAMENTAL FENCE
Cleverly combining Grace, Strength, and Durability. Moderate in cost. Sold direct to you. Catalogue Free.
Box 302 KITSELMAN BROS., Muncie, Ind.

MAKE MONEY EASY
We want agents to represent us in every county selling the popular Novelty Knives, with name, address, photo, lodge emblem, etc., on handle. The very latest fad.
AGENTS EARN $75—$300 A MONTH.
Big profits—quick sales—exclusive territory. Great sellers for Xmas Gifts. Write quick for our liberal money making special offer to agents. Don't delay. Our new self-sharpening scissors are the quickest sellers for lady agents. No experience required. We show you how.
Novelty Cutlery Co., 62 Bar St., Canton, Ohio.

WIRE-$1.40 Per 100 Lbs.

Smooth galvanized wire, put up 10 lbs. to a bale, lengths running up t 250 ft. No. 14 guage, per 100 lbs. $1.40. Write for prices on other gauges. Fence staples, per 100 lbs., $2.00. Wire nails, mixed in a keg, per 100 lbs., $1.60. Barbed wire, per 100 lbs., $2.35. Poultry netting, steel fence, etc., at low prices. Ask for Catalogue No. E, 373 on merchandise of all kinds from Sheriffs' and Receivers' sales.
CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO., West 35th & Iron Sts., Chicago

GINSENG Detailed advice and special instructions regarding its culture. It will pay you to investigate our practical and common sense methods. We supply choicest American Roots and Seeds, at most reasonable prices, help you towards successful cultivation, and pay you highest market price for your Dry Roots. Send stamp for illustrated booklet "E."
NORTH AMERICAN GINSENG CO., Station C, Louisville, Ky.

A Demented King

By Mrs. M. Baxter

HOW much frivolous conversation would be stopped if we told more about what God has wrought toward us! We know the story—how Nebuchadnezzar had a dream, and Daniel came to interpret it, of the judgment of God which would come upon him. "They shall drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field, and they shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, till thou know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of Men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will." Daniel at this time gave him good advice, to break off his sins and give gifts to the poor; and Nebuchadnezzar may have done it for a time, but evidently he did not continue to live righteously, for at the end of a year the thing predicted came upon him, for his heart was lifted up.

He walked in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon, and said, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty?" I—I—I. What was Nebuchadnezzar doing? He was usurping God's place—lifting himself up as the most important person in the world, not recognizing God at all, who had put him in the place of honor. At that time, I suppose, Nebuchadnezzar was the greatest man in the world, but that was all the more reason why he should be humble. He had had Daniel to teach him, and he had learnt much about God; so that there was the greater condemnation to him in accepting such an attitude.

"And in the same hour was the thing fulfilled upon Nebuchadnezzar." His reason fled; he became like the beast of the field; he was not fit to remain in the palace, the only place fit for him was the open air, and the grass where the beasts were. This great man had to come so low as to dwell with the beasts.

Now, in the 34th verse we have his own testimony about his healing: "And at the end of the days I, Nebuchadnezzar, lifted up mine eyes unto heaven." This was before his reason returned. There is just a point before their reason returns to them that the insane have the power to lift up their hearts to God. This was just what Nebuchadnezzar did. It was like a little light coming through the shutter, and Nebuchadnezzar looked up in his disgrace, and lifted up his eyes to God. And then he continues, "Mine understanding returned unto me, and I blessed the Most High, and I praised and honored Him that liveth forever." In an instant God had heard.

The superintendent of an asylum recently said of those under his care: "Almost all the cases of lunacy that have not been the result of drunkenness have been the result of pride. They have thought themselves something more than they were, and had dwelt upon the idea till it had turned their brain; or they have lost their fortune, and are mortified because unable to keep up the position they were accustomed to, and so their pride is injured, and it preys upon them, and sends them mad."

It was a beautiful change that had come over him. When he prided himself upon his building of Babylon, he took God's place; but now, when his understanding returns, he has learnt to give God his rightful place. Nebuchadnezzar has become a mere unit, and God is the great One now. Under the cloud of his insanity he has learnt his lesson.

"At the same time," said Nebuchadnezzar, "my reason returned unto me." Then he tells of the faithfulness of God: "And for the glory of my kingdom, mine honor and brightness returned unto me; and my counsellors and lords sought unto me, and I was established in my kingdom, and excellent majesty was added unto me."

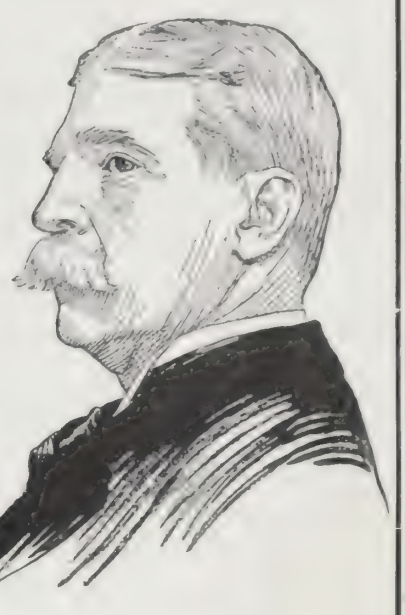
On Monday, October 2 Next the price of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL will be raised to $1.25 per year. Until that date a subscription for one year (but for no longer period) will be accepted at the present price of One Dollar ($1.00).

The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith in an Entirely New Departure



A series of powerful stories, in which Mr. Smith fearlessly puts his finger on some of the social dangers of the day that threaten our girls, women and young men, and calls a spade a spade. "I have written without mitts," says Mr. Smith.

The Ladies' Home Journal Enlarged—improved very materially—new departments—new covers in four colors—it's a new JOURNAL this year. Send a dollar now—after October 1 we must ask more.

The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

HOW TO RAISE MONEY EASILY & QUICKLY FOR YOUR CHURCH or SOCIETY, SCHOOL, any other purpose. AID NO RISK

Send us photographs (any size) of church and pastor, or other subjects and we will reproduce together, in beautiful half-tone, on 200 SATIN ALUMINUM TRAYS, WALL PLAQUES, DESK BLOTTERS or CALENDARS, all of one or assorted; names etc., lettered as directed. Make beautiful, salable souvenirs. Yourself and fellow workers can quickly sell at 25c each.

KEEP $30.00, SEND US $20.00 any time within a month. We send Express Prepaid.

NO MONEY REQUIRED IN ADVANCE, but $10.00 accepted cash with order. Satisfaction guaranteed. One sample and booklet "How to Raise Money" 10c to $100 free. Additional samples 10c each. Above articles as advertising souvenirs for merchants, etc., same prices.

Size, 6½x4½. Plus postage.

WISCONSIN MFG. CO., Dept. 100, MANITOWOC, WIS.

DON'T SHOUT!

"The Morley"

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A genuine Telephone for the Ear [illegible] easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Our 20th Century sold, giving instant relief from deafness and Head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write [illegible]

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E,
34 South 16th St. [illegible]

MUSIC LESSONS FREE at your home. For a limited time we will give free, for advertising purposes, 8 music lessons on either Piano, Organ, Banjo, Guitar, Cornet, Violin or Mandolin (your expense will only be the cost of postage and the music you use, to be paid for as needed). We teach by mail only and guarantee success or money refunded. Hundreds write: "Wish I had heard of you before." Write to-day. Address: U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 7 G, 19 Union Square, New York, N. Y.

FENCE Strongest Made

See how [illegible] direct to the [illegible] prices, on 30 Days Free Trial. Your money back if not satisfied. Write today for free Catalogue.

COILED SPRING FENCE COMPANY
Box 47, Winchester, Indiana.

BRIDAL GIFTS, Wedding Invitations, Wedding Rings, Groomsmen's and Bridesmaids' Gifts, in exquisite and exclusive designs. Write to the "World's Grandest Jewelry Establishment" for catalogue (free) illustrating these and thousands of articles of jewelry, diamonds, watches and silverwares. Goods sent on approval. Address:

MERMOD, JACCARD & KING, 401 B'way, St. Louis, or 400 5th Ave., New York.

When you leave the breakfast table, it is worth everything to feel ready for the day. Ready for duty or pleasure. The appetite satisfied—the mind alert. The secret of being ready is eating right.

Pettijohn

ALL WHEAT GOOD TO EAT

The food that makes you ready. Combines energy and strength-giving qualities with a luscious breakfast dish that will please the most fastidious appetite.

TRY IT AND BE CONVINCED

.50 A YEAR—5c. A COPY
ublished 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK = MAGAZINE NUMBER = SEPT. 27, 1905

VOL. 28—NO. 39
Offices: Bible House, N. Y.

Copyright, 1905, by Louis Klopsch

CHRISTIAN HERALD

Taking Out the Dead and Injured in the New York Elevated Road Disaster

RAG DOLL FREE

May We Send You One of Our Famous RAG DOLLS With Our Compliments?

EVERY little child loves a Doll. A Rag Doll can be played with. It can't be broken. Its eyes won't fall in. This Doll is done in oil-colors on fine, strong cloth. The colors are fast—they will not crock—Sanitary. Dolly has golden hair, rosy cheeks, brown eyes, kid-color body, black shoes and red stockings, intended to be stuffed with cotton or suitable material.

There is no catch to this; the Doll will be sent on receipt of your name and address. We ask that you show it to your friends, and that you read our circular of Sanitary Cloth Toys that we send with it.

SEND your name and address plainly written. We will send you the Doll post-paid—free of expense. We want to know how many CHRISTIAN HERALD readers answer advertisements. We have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in advertising our Cloth Toys, and we want to know just how many readers would respond to the most forceful ad. ever written.

It is expected that this ad. will bring over a half-million replies. Each and every one will be filled. If you don't get yours, write us and we will send another. But please don't ask for two dolls to one address. We can't afford it.

Pat. Jul. 5 & Oct 4, '93.

ART FABRIC MILLS

48 WHITE STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y.

Makers of the Life-Size Doll

IF YOU SEND 10 CENTS IN STAMPS WE WILL SEND POSTPAID WITH THE DOLL A PAIR OF GOOD LUCK KITTENS PRINTED ON DURABLE CLOTH

Pat. Jul. 5 & Oct. 4, '92.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 27, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

THE HEART OF THE JEWISH QUARTER | AN EAST SIDE ITALIAN FAMILY | ON CROWDED LUDLOW STREET

The Golden Rule in Poverty Row

By JACOB A. RIIS

I SPOKE last week of some of the things we owe the Settlement movement, and ought to be grateful for. I am quite well aware that we have not made port yet. I know that child labor stalks roud in the land—alas! it does not merely burrow in te slums of our cities—and is putting a mortgage on te to-morrow which we must lift if we would be safe. lit I know also that we are trying to lift it, and largely der the inspiration of these men and women, who lve come among us to preach with their lives social jtice for social wrong. I know the home is handicpped in the tenements of the poor; surely I ought to low if anybody. But the fact that we know it at last, is the best proof that we are getting in sight of port. There us a time, not so long ago, when it emed to me that nobody else knew, or d much care. When any one said in r hearing that the State was built on the people's homes, which were in ril, we nodded with a yawn. We do t yawn now over the woes of the poor, r we have made out that they are ost closely connected with certain dangrs to ourselves. When Roosevelt says lat as men, as citizens, we go up or wn together, he speaks out of the oused consciousness of the people—of eir awakened conscience. And it was e Settlement movement that awoke it. shall not quarrel with you if you say lat the Settlement was itself the child this awakened conscience. Put it lat way if you like. In turn, then, it s quickened the impulse of neighborliss until we all feel it.

For it struck a rich lead. You have ard men and women say that their ith had been strengthened, their lives ade fuller by what they found while rking among the poor. That which ey found was this neighborliness at takes no account of creed, or ste, or condition, other than your ighbor needs you; that he is starvg, and miserable, and in want. Fourteen of the milies to whom our Christmas dinners went last year, nt them further to those "that needed them more." ot that they didn't. We knew where their shoe nched, and how hard. But they knew those whom it nched harder still. I have in mind a tenement in atavia Street, one of the blackest, the kind fashionle slummers would instinctively give a wide berth, for l the signs were against it. You would put the tenits down as a rough lot at first sight, and even upon oser acquaintance; and so did I, until I got on the ack of their dealings with Mrs. H——, one of their llow-tenants in the third floor back. Mrs. H—— id a drunken husband, to put it plainly, and herself was in ill-health, largely from that cause. She had once been a "lady" in worldly station, and if that had told the whole story, the slum very likely would have scorned her for setting up to be better than her fellows. But she had been a real lady, that is to say a real woman, than which there is nothing better in God's world, and there was that in the tenement that hailed and honored her claim by right of kinship, despite dirt and rough speech. The by-ways it went, the white lies it told to help the family in the third floor back without betraying the fact that it was depriving itself, that it went half hungry in order that they should not, would have filled a big ledger in the recording angel's office; and I guess they do, on the credit side, where that sort of entries belong. For five weeks, until the turn came that put the family on their feet, there was no meal hour that someone did not knock with food that had been sent "too much by mistake," and was going to waste, or "brought in by a friend when they had just cooked their own dinner," etc. etc. And when Mrs. H—— found out at last, and protested with tears, those rough, motherly women gathered around her and soothed her after their fashion:

AMONG THE HESTER STREET TENEMENTS

"Oh, never mind We can stand it. You are not used to it, and we don't want to see you come down," meaning to have to accept aid from strangers. For they were not strangers; they were neighbors.

That was the Fourth Ward. I was going to ask Fifth Avenue to show me a leaf in the ledger to match it, but I don't have to. It is not necessary to live in a palace to make you forget your brother in contemplation of it. I read only the other day of a little railroad town in Minnesota where the lines of social distinction are drawn very tight indeed. The wives of the engineers, the firemen and the brakemen find it necessary to have three separate women's clubs, since they cannot possibly mingle in one on terms of equality. It would be the irony of fate if one of them were to send for me to lecture to them about the slum problem, and I hereby give warning that they had better not. I think I should hardly resist the temptation to recommend a course of Batavia Street as the proper thing. That would be reversing things, truly; but the more I know of Poverty Row, the clearer I make out that it has something to tell us that is good for us to hear.

"The poor cannot save up because their friends need their pennies," writes one to me who knows, Dr. Jane Elizabeth Robbins, who is to New York what Jane Addams is to Chicago. I mind the McGinty family I came across in Mott Street. There were two sisters when I first knew them, Mary Ann and Ellen, middle-aged spinsters. Mary Ann was not strong, and kept the flat, while Ellen, who was a book-folder, earned enough by her work to feed them. There was not much to spare while they were alone; but then James' wife died and he went to pieces. James was their brother, and his boy must not go to waste. So he came. Then there were Mary Ellen Humble and her young husband, kin of the sisters, who were unfortunate. He couldn't get work, nohow, and the Mc Ginty home was stretched, as it were, to give them shelter. Ellen could do an extra turn at night to make out, and did, with never a word of complaint. But the limit was reached. The rent was not paid. It was the eviction that brought me over. I found it stayed by a funeral, for Mary Ann had died of heartbreak and the McGinty's had three days' grace for the burial. But Ellen was there, planning with unabated energy for what was left of the household, and she would have carried it along unaided, had not other shoulders been put to the wheel.

They were Irish. As true a lady as I ever knew was

CONTINUED ON PAGE 797

THE
AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY
Rev. F. DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

THE HOME-COMERS

TEXT: Ephesians 5:20:
"Giving thanks always for all things unto God"

SOME people are "weeping Jeremiahs." They are always seeing ominous visions, and dreaming portentous dreams, and prophesying evil. Their prophesies are never like the chirps of the red-breasted robins, harbingers of the spring. They are like the autumnal frosts, forerunners of winter's storms. They prophesy pains, and miseries, and wars, and massacres, and tomahawks, and tortures at the stake, amid a chorus of blood-curdling yells and Indian whoops. They are not like the ancient astrologers, who used to foretell a glorious career for the new-born babe, from the relative position of the stars of the Solar System hovering over the cradle on the night of the babe's nativity. They never see stellar letters of gold. They only see eclipses, and tornadoes, and absence of all light. In the black pages of the night they read the histories of the troubles that are past, and the forecasts of the troubles that are to come.

The Cry of the Pessimists

These pessimists are always droning a dirge. They never make an inventory of their blessings. They are never happy for what they have. They are always dwelling on the things which they have not, and which they would like to have. These modern pessimists are like the farmer who, when it rains, grumbles and says: "This rain is killing my corn. Corn needs sunshine." And when the sun shines, then he complains that the drought is killing his hay. "Grass," he says, "needs rain, not sunshine." These pessimists are always grumbling, always complaining. Every Monday is for them a blue Monday, and every Sunday a blue Sunday. They think they live in the poorest country, surrounded by the meanest people, at the most unfortunate of all times. The country is for them always rushing towards hopeless smash up. They are never happy unless they are miserable. If they ever reach heaven, unless their natures are completely changed before they get there, they will complain about the architecture of the white mansions, and complain about the glare of the streets of gold, and complain about the weakness of the gates of pearl, and complain about the style of the celestial music. These pessimists were not born under "a lucky star." They were born, according to the teachings of ancient astrology, amid the absence of all light, unless that light was the flashing light of the lightnings. These pessimists derive the motive of their music from the growlings of a tempest, and not from the notes of a sweet-throated, happy nightingale.

The Brighter Side

Paul, in the words of my text, hurls his anathema against the chronic grumblers. He bids us look upon the bright side and not the dark side of life. We should find a sweet nectar in every flower, and a blessing in every moment. We should be like a bee gathering honey, and not like a wasp thrusting a sting. We should have that beautiful spirit of contentment and thankfulness to God as had an aged octogenarian. Some one said to him: "Grandpa, when is the happiest time of life?" He answered. "When spring comes, and under the influence of the gentle warmth of the atmosphere the buds commence to turn into flowers, I think to myself, 'Oh, what a beautiful season is spring!' Then, when summer comes and covers the trees with thick foliage, when the birds are so happy in singing their pretty songs, I say to myself, 'Oh, summer is a fine thing!' Then when autumn comes, and I see the same trees loaded with the most tempting fruits, I cry out, 'Oh, how magnificent is autumn!' And finally, when the rude, hard winter makes its appearance, and there are neither leaves nor fruits on the trees, then, through their naked branches I look upward, and perceive better than I could ever do before, the stars that glitter in the sky." Aye, like the aged Christian, and like Paul of my text, amid all things we should learn to give thanks unto God.

Give thanks unto God for all things. Yes, we ought to be ready to do that. But in order to bring our spiritual lesson a little nearer home, let us make an inventory of the blessings which naturally have come to those of us who have just returned home from our summer vacations. Many of us during the past summer have been away to the mountains or down to the seashore, seeking rest and physical and mental strength and recreation. We are now back to the old treadmills of city life. Some of us, when boarding the train for home, did so with a sigh. "Well," we said. "Fun is over for one year. Now for another twelve months of hard grind." We sighed thus, as though all the pleasures of life were found in vacations. Are they? Let us see. Let us study for a little while the blessed resuscitation which should come to every healthy man and healthy woman from a summer vacation. Let us make a short summary of the blessings of our city lives, and see how much there is in them for which we ought to thank God.

We should, in the first place, thank God for our homes. I do not here use the word home in the broad, but in the narrow, sense. It may be but a humble cottage with poor, worn furniture; but it is home, and every article in it has its tender associations. Perhaps it is more affluent; then there is the more cause for gratitude to God. Then we should humbly thank God for our beds and carpets and pictures upon the walls; our dining-room tables and kitchens, and for the four walls of our own libraries. I want you to thank God to-day for your city house, which a few weeks ago you looked upon as a prison, but now, with its rooms and its closets and its familiar entrance, you consider the most blessed place in all the world.

Lost Blessings Appreciated

It is a strange fact, that, in order to appreciate our city homes as well as our other blessings, most of us have to be deprived of them for awhile. We are a great deal like that quaint laborer, who was a hod-carrier. A friend was commiserating with him because he had to carry his heavy load of bricks up the ladders to the top of a high wall. "Oh," he said, "I do not mind the going up much. For when I reach the top I always feel so contented when I put me load down." Most of us, once in a while, have to carry a heavy load in order to be happy when we do not have any loads to carry. We must be separated for a time from our blessings in order to appreciate them when they come back to us. We are like some people living in the climate of Southern California, one of the most glorious climates in all the world. Here people sometimes grow absolutely tired of the sunshine. "Oh," said a man to me some time ago, "I wish I could get rid of the sun. I am so tired of looking at it. It is beautiful day after beautiful day for week in and week out, and for month in and month out. I would that I could see just one old-fashioned New England storm or Illinois blizzard." "Yes," I answered my friend. "You wish you could see a Chicago blizzard again. But as soon as it began to howl about your ears and send its chills running up and down your backbone and make you hug the fire, you would mighty quick wish you could feel again the glowing warmth of the California sun." It does seem strange that perpetual blessings can pall upon us. We must be deprived of blessings for a little while, to appreciate them when we get them back. This fact is especially true of the comforts of our city homes.

Disappointed Holiday-Makers

When the summer months drew near last spring the city house did not look as attractive to us as it is to-day. We longed for that little cottage by the seashore. Or we longed to give up housekeeping and have a change of cooking and go and board at the summer hotels. We pictured the beautiful visions of sitting under the trees and hearing the bees hum. Our mouths watered at the idea of eating the fresh laid eggs and drinking the rich milk, thicker than our city cream. The trunks were packed; the tickets were bought; the city house was deserted. For what? Instead of the beautiful cottage by the sea, some of us exchanged our comfortable city homes for a little bandbox of a house. It was so small that we had to go out into the front yard to turn around, or else we might have done ourselves a physical injury. Or instead of the great wide parlors of our city home, we were shut up in two or three little rooms of a hotel, where it was so hot that, like the chickens on a sultry day, we had to keep our mouths open most of the time to catch our breath. Then the food. Rich milk? Fresh laid eggs? Delicious vegetables? Oh no. The best of the farm products are sent to the city markets, not to the country. We were crowded and jostled. We had to read our books in stiff-backed, uncomfortable chairs, or sit down under the trees, where we were always afraid of being stung by the "yellow jackets." Instead of our great big city closets, we had to live for the most part in trunks. And the beds! Oh my. The mattresses must have been made out of shavings. And everywhere you turned, you kept longing for the comforts of your city home. Now my friends, we are back to our city homes. Let us thank God for them. Let us thank God for the simple, wholesome meals we have. Let us thank him for the sitting-rooms, with their big comfortable chairs, and for the bed-rooms, where we have a place for everything and everything in its place. Do not talk to me of the sublime blessings of a summer watering-place, but of the sublime blessings and comforts of our own city homes.

Thank God for Home

We should also thank God for our city homes in a broad sense. What the gold setting is to the precious stone, the halls, the walls, the fireplaces, the bed-rooms, the sitting and dining-rooms and the parlors, are to the family jewels we call our wives, our husbands, our fathers and mothers and children and brothers and sisters. There is an old motto which we often hear upon the street, "What is home without a mother?" We sometimes hear it flippantly spoken. But I not only ask this question in a reverential sense, but I ask the same kind of a question in a broader sense. I ask, "What would home be without all the children and the parents being gathered together under the same roof?" In truth it would not be a home. Thus to-day, amid the blessings of our vacation compensations, I thank God that our families are reunited. I thank God that father sits at one end of the table and that mother sits at the other end of the table, and that all the children, from the biggest to the youngest, are lined up between, with the two places of honor next to the mother reserved for the two youngest in the family.

No, there is not one missing. As you look about the long table at your Sunday dinner to-day, you will find them all there. Many a day has passed since the first day of last July that you would have given a good deal to have the whole family about you as you have this Sabbath morning. In the first place, no sooner did the schools close last summer than the children went every whither. One of your boys went camping. One of your daughters went to visit a school friend in the East or on the ranch. Your wife had to take the sick child down to the seashore. You, as the husband and father, were away for some time on a business trip. And when you returned, you had to spend most of your time in the city. You snatched your Sundays off and a few days here and there to go to the country, but for the most part you were alone. Now the family is reunited. Schools have opened. The boys and girls have to come back to their books. The many dangers of travel are past. Say what you will, you worried a great deal about that boy of yours using that gun. Yes, you are all home again, safe and well. Thank God to-day for your reunited families. "Amen, amen," I can hear from dozens of grateful lips, as a great climax to this domestic thanksgiving.

The Blessing of Work

Then, again, I want you to thank God that you have returned to the work of the store, or the factory, or the office. Let me see, how long were you out in the country? Two weeks? Three weeks? Ten days? Oh, it does not matter much how long. I know one fact about you, and that is, you were away long enough to know that the hardest work a strong, healthy man ever has to do, is to learn how to do nothing. When you left the city some months ago, you went off in high hopes. "Nothing to do, nothing to do," was your congratulatory cry. The first night you went to bed in the country, you said to yourself: "I am not going to get up until eleven o'clock if I do not desire." Did you stay in bed until eleven o'clock? Oh, no. You arose at your regular time.

Then, after a few fishing trips and a few mountain imbs, you began to grow restless. You wanted to get ack to work. Then, if I mistake not, it has been our good fortune during this vacation to be thrown ith a few chronically unhappy men. Unhappy, beause they have nothing to do. Perhaps, on account f inherited wealth, or from the fact that they have ade money, they retired from business to have a good me. What a miserable mistake they have made. Inead of being happy with nothing to do, you have und that they are the most unhappy of men. They end most of their time in playing nurse girl, or pickg up pins, or in finding fault with their children, or making the lives of their wives as miserable as their vn. The simple fact is, a full-blooded man like you as no business loafing around the house with nothing do. If you loiter about the house thus, you will denerate into nothing but a first-class "fusser," and a enuine masculine nuisance. You know that you never lt happier than when you boarded the street car the her day and started for the store. In my time, I ave met hundreds of healthy men, who had retired om business because they had amassed a competency. never envied one of them. I have always thanked od, first, that he has given me health; secondly, that has compelled me to work. Thank God to-day that ou have been able to cast off the inactivities of a vacaon, and have been compelled to go back to the daily eadmills of manual and mental toil. The financial ruggles of life not only earn bread for our children, t also unlimited joys for our own healthful, physical, d mental existence.

Back to the Church

But as I welcome you back to the store and to the omestic firesides and to your reunited families, I also elcome you back to your church home and to your mily pew. I welcome you home to the "household faith." I welcome you back from this pulpit and this altar.

What do I mean by making such a statement as this? ou may have sat in finer churches than your own while ou have been away; you may have heard more eloent preachers than your own; you may have had your uls lifted by grander music, more exquisitely rendered, an you hear in your own church; but has that given ou a distaste for the home services? Oh, no. As the st place for a man to grow and live in a domestic nse, is by the fireside of his own home, so the best ace in which he is to be built up spiritually is in his vn church. In spite of yourself, when you go to other urches you go in a critical spirit. But here in your vn church home, you come to worship. There is an atmosphere about your accustomed church which ought to be more sacred to you than that of any other building. That is your church home. There you have so often commingled your prayers that they have a different meaning there than when you pray among strangers. The pastor is in a gospel sense part of you and you are part of him. He welcomes you back to your place of worship, to your "household of faith."

The Home Atmosphere

Then there is another reason why I so gladly welcome you back as worshipers to your own church pew. You know as well as I know, that most of the good we get from a Gospel sermon, is due not so much to the intrinsic worth and to the brilliancy of the sermon as to the spiritual preparations we make at home for the reception of the "Bread of life." This Sabbath day, in a Christian home, you awoke in a spiritual atmosphere. You did not see any fishing-poles. You did not see the carriages being driven up for the long mountain rides. You did not see the pleasure parties starting out for a yachting trip. You arose in the spirit of prayer. After breakfast you gathered the children about the family altar. Then before you started for Sunday School you all knelt. Then you uttered a prayer like this: "Oh, God, like Enoch, may we walk with thee this day. Be with our Sunday School. Give the teachers power to expound thy Word. Give the scholars receptive hearts to listen to thy lessons. And O, Father, thou great and omnipotent King, be with our pastor. He is one of us. May we lift up his arms. May he to-day be a man with mighty power for God. May just the right word be spoken which will bring down a shower of blessings to our hearts." Are not those prayers having any results? Why, friends, as I speak this morning I feel a strange influence lifting me up. That influence, O, my people, comes from the prayers of the family altars of my church. It is hard, awfully hard, to make the necessary spiritual preparations for a Sunday service when we are out in the country in a worldly summer hotel. I congratulate you that you have been able to start this holy Sabbath in the right way upon your knees before your family altars.

Then I also congratulate the home-comers because you have come back to your opportunities of religious work as well as to your temporal work and to your church worship. A vacation from the store invariably means a vacation from church labors and church work. Thomas Guthrie, the great Scotch preacher, once wrote a book, entitled, Out of Harness. In it he described himself as away from his pulpit, amid the Alpine hills seeking health and relaxation from toil. In one chapter he described himself worshiping with a couple of prominent English divines in a little Swiss village church. As the service went on, led by the village pastor, he looked across the aisle at the noble brow of a great London preacher sitting there. Then he compared this silent preacher to a mighty engine with its fires drawn. The screws, the boiler, the mighty driving wheel, the smokestack, were all there. But there was no water in the boiler, and no coal in the furnace, and no steam was being generated. The great throbbing life of the engine was stilled. So with you during your past vacation. You may have attended the church services, but you went to church simply as worshipers and not as workers. And, my friends, true Christianity is not developed simply by bending the knee in prayer, but in laboring in God's vineyard.

The vineyards of Christ's great city are now ripe for the plucking. Your Sunday School class is ready to welcome you back. The boys and the girls ought all to be brought into the Christian life this winter. The missionary society needs building up as never before; you must go to work there this winter; you only gave half-hearted service last year; you must do better this year. The young people's meetings need reinforcement as never before. All these opportunities of Gospel work are opening to you. Oh, I welcome you back, not simply to worship, but to consecrated labor in God's vineyards and in God's great harvest fields.

Blessed Vacation Results

Thus, wherever I look, I find the results of our vacations are blessed. Home, store, church, all surround us with their mercies. Now, my friends, with these mighty opportunities of Christian usefulness and Christian growth surrounding us, we are standing upon the threshold of a new church year. What are we going to do with it? Shall the church year of 1905 and 1906 be a mighty year for spiritual results in our lives? The year is now here; the year will soon be gone. Let us consecrate ourselves and our church and our Sunday Schools and our prayer meetings and our missionary societies to his dear service as never before. Let us bow our heads as we say: "Lord, take this pulpit and take these pews and take us all into thy keeping, and for the work of thy grace may this church year be the best year of our lives. When the vacations of next year come around, may we go forth into the mountains or down by the seashore, feeling that we have not worked in vain. And all these results we ask in the power of the Holy Spirit, who alone can make our Gospel consecration and triumphs possible. For Jesus' sake, we again make the earnest request. Amen and amen."

THE GOLDEN RULE IN POVERTY ROW

Continued from page 795

MRS. JANE E. ROBBINS

old Mrs. Hart, our washerwoman for years, poor and ignorant, but with the motherheart of gold that belongs to the best in her people. She was a devoted Catholic, my wife a Protestant; but they loved one another for they had the heart in common. And when they bore my darling to her last earthly resting-place and jostled the flowering shrub at the garden-wall which her old friend had planted there in the happy long ago, I saw in the shower of white petals that fell like a pure and shining shroud upon her coffin, the benediction of one loving art upon another, come home at last. My mother made e a Christian, but it is my work among the poor that as kept me one. There is no accounting for the real oodness of human nature under such disadvantages, cept by the belief that we are children of God. ne of the veriest martyrs I have known was called a ief, and came of a family of toughs in Battle Row. e served eleven years of a thirty years' sentence in ng Sing for a crime which his brother had committed, d would have stayed the rest, had not the brother's ath-bed confession freed him. The year before, hen it was clear he was dying of consumption, he ould have told the truth, but the prisoner, with his ged mother in mind as well as the sick boy, would not ear of it.

"No," he said to those who brought him his brother's essage, "Jimmy hasn't long to live anyhow. Let him die in peace. I can stand it here until he is gone." And he stayed.

In a West Side rookery, a nurse was needed for a sick woman, but the other tenants objected stoutly. It was not necessary to send a night nurse while six strong women slept under that roof, they argued, and the nurse could be spared "for such as had no neighbors." It is always the same story. "I am so used to neighborliness," says my friend, the slum doctor, "that I would never think of providing food for a patient in a tenement. I should expect the neighbors to look after that and the nursing, as a matter of course. I have found a good-hearted neighbor ready to sit up all night with a patient she had never known." This in the neighborhood whence hailed the little girl who recited the May song, "Over the Bare Hills Far Away," "Over the Barrels Far Away"; and when asked what she thought the barrels were, said promptly "ash-barrels." Corrupt environment has a lot to do with shaping character and destiny, as we see it with our mortal eyes, and that is why we fight it. But, after all, there is a sound bottom which it cannot reach to hurt, and it is upon that I build my faith in man and in God who made him.

Perhaps these things may aid in discovering the true plane of social relationship and intercourse in the tenements. Men and women are not so different, after all, in silks and in rags; and as for the children, I think they have a heap better time of it, sailing sticks and chips in the gutter, than the groomed little darlings who are paraded in the parks by nurses in immaculate caps and aprons. It is the things the gutters stand for in the growing years that we cannot allow. In days of prosperity, indeed, the distance between the second floor front and the second floor back, though hardly a dozen feet, may seem longer than an evil year, even after the fashion of the Minnesota railroad town; but misfortune quickly closes that gap. The visiting list may be restricted where Jews and Italians, Bohemians and Irish, live elbow to elbow; but that also is passing away. The new playgrounds and the public school athletics have had something to do with that. When the slender Jewish lads from Ludlow and Hester Streets go across to Hell's Kitchen and wallop their burly Irish competitors there at their own games, as they have done, it is impossible to laugh at the "sheeny" as a weakling, and that much has been achieved toward the day of mutual understanding. In our Settlement, the working-girls who last year raised $500 for the endowment of a bed for consumptives worked together, Jews and Christians, Italians and Russians, in entire harmony. "You cannot," says my wise friend, "dislike people when you are doing them kindnesses every day at school and at work. We learn to pull along together. We put some things into the lives of the poor that were sadly needed there, and the neighbors help us to become democratic."

It is all to her a great democratic movement in which we play each our part. And she is right; but that which she calls by that name, to me is the great religious revival of our day that is casting men over again in the mould of the brotherhood, to be made fit for the kingdom. And as I have seen them mix ore from far distant mountains in the great blast-furnaces of Pennsylvania, in order that the product may get just the right kind of strength and quality, so it may be that to this recasting of the race to make a people fit for the great destiny which we must believe the Almighty has marked out for the great American Republic, there need go men of all peoples and all lands, of the old and of the new dispensations, just as of old the tree of freedom which we water here was grafted and regrafted upon the stout old Saxon stock, until the storms of the centuries could not lay it low. It is for this reason, in the last showing, that I have small sympathy with the cry to "shut the door on the immigrants, too many are coming in." But that is another story of which I shall have more to say presently.

JACOB A. RIIS.

Who Likes to Plough?

BY REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D.
Dean of the Moody Bible Institute

DR. JOSEPH P. CALHOUN, who planned the great Pittsburg revival two years ago, tells this story on himself: When he was a boy on the farm, his father sometimes ordered him to plough, a task for which, remarkable to relate, he had no great fondness, and often on his way to the barn he would cast his eyes to the sky in the hope of seeing an approaching cloud, the forerunner of a shower. This would prevent his ploughing for the time being at least. He had sometimes fallen on his knees on the barn floor and implored God to send rain that he might not have to plough.

When he humorously related the incident, I said: "What an illustration of the value of a spiritual drought!" Here we are, so many of us, praying for a revival:

> There shall be showers of blessing—
> Oh that to-day they might fall!

Is it pride, or prejudice, or selfishness that sometimes raises this cry? Do we want showers to keep us from putting our hands to the plough? It is no insinuation against my brethren that suggests the query, but the scrutiny of my own heart. Why sneer at organization and committees for bringing about a revival? Why decry the expenditure of money incident to a modern evangelistic campaign? Why oppose newspaper advertising and bulletins, and the raising of hands, and the signing of cards, and after-meetings and all that? Why find fault with these things, and after they are over say that the result was not worth the effort? Are we unwittingly deceiving ourselves? Are we wanting showers because we are not wanting to plough?

Here is a common state of feeling just now: We are all talking about Wales—the great Welsh revival. It used to be Pentecost, but we have passed that by for the present. It is now a revival "like that in Wales," we all want. It was so easy and simple there. Man eliminated. No plans, no announcements, no preachers, no choirs, no money, and yet crowded auditories, thousands saved, great reformations brought about and the whole country moved. "This is the revival we believe in," says the world, and the worldly-minded Christian very often. "We go in for this," as said the dweller on the plains, when a cyclone swept him into the cellar. Who could not help going in for this, when it puts him in whether he wants to go in or not? It is the man who goes in for the other kind of a revival who often has the greater courage and faith.

We recall the old aphorism, "Strike while the iron is hot," but D. L. Moody, the greatest evangelist of his age, said, "Strike the iron till you make it hot." God is sovereign. He sends a Pentecost or a Welsh revival when and where it pleases him to do so. Every true Christian desires this and keeps praying for it; but it is one thing to pray for it as a means of refreshing, and another as an excuse to avoid ploughing.

When Torry and Alexander started on their world-wide evangelistic tour nearly four years ago, they met a Welsh revival in Australia, but it has not followed them everywhere. Committees have been formed in advance in other places, money raised, newspapers used, the best evangelistic singing in the world employed; there have been cards, the raising of hands, the coming forward of men and women, public confessions, everything conceivable, within proper limits, to bring souls to Christ. The great work of Dr. Chapman in this country has not often been characterized by the Welsh atmosphere, it has necessitated hard ploughing; but the results have paid, discount them as the critics may. The same is true of Dr. Calhoun's work in Louisville

Continued on last column

Limited to 5,000 Christian Herald Readers

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT $1.50 PER ANNUM
CHRISTIAN HERALD
52 TIMES A YEAR
PUBLISHED MONTHLY AT $1.00 PER YEAR
WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION
ISSUED EVERY MONTH AT $3.00 PER YEAR
AUGUST THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS 1905
EDITED BY ALBERT SHAW
We Cut the Price in TWO
THREE MAGAZINES
PRICE $5.50, for Only $2.75
Greatest Value Ever Offered for the Money
A MAY-DAY FLOWER MARKET.
THE

Crowning Combination Offer

CONDITIONS OF THIS EXTRAORDINARY BARGAIN

This marvelous offer is good only for the month of October, 1905. It will positively Never be Repeated to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

FIRST—Subscriptions, whether new or renewals, may commence with any desired date. SECOND—Each magazine may be sent to a separate address without extra charge, Foreign postage extra. THIRD—The exquisite "Home Coming of the Bride" Calendar for 1906, covering three hundred square inches, goes Free with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. FOURTH—Your order must be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City. FIFTH—While you may fix upon any date within a year for the commencement of any or all of the subscriptions, your order must be positively mailed—that is, must be in the post-office on or before OCTOBER 31, 1905.

Orders posted later than October 31, will be immediately returned unfilled.

Do not Lose this Golden Opportunity

Embrace it NOW, even if you wish the subscriptions to begin on Christmas Day, for Christmas Gifts.

1. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the brightest and best paper in the world, published every Wednesday, fifty-two times a year, aggregating fourteen hundred large pages (equal to 2,800 magazine pages) of the choicest, purest and most fascinating literature, embellished with many hundreds of beautiful pictures.

2. THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS, Edited by Dr. Albert Shaw, The "Necessary Magazine." Gives the world's progress from month to month: Has over a hundred valuable pictures in every issue; Contains the gist of the best articles in all the other important magazines and reviews of the world; Keeps the reader right up to date in politics, literature, and great public movements

President Roosevelt says of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS: "I know that through its columns views have been presented to me that I could not otherwise have had access to; because all earnest and thoughtful men, no matter how widely their ideas diverge, are given free utterance in its columns."

Regular Price $1.50 per year

$3.00 per year

3. Any ONE of the Following Magazines:
Woman's Home Companion, World To-day, Record of Christian Work, Pearson's, Little Folks, Harper's Bazar, Cosmopolitan, Success. Any one of these eight magazines

$1.00 per year

Three Great Magazines; Regular Price, $5.50 per year

Cut the price in two, and send us ONLY $2.75 for All Three

FORM OF ORDER BLANK

To THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.
Enclosed find $2.75, for which send the 3 following Magazines for the term of One Year:

1. Send THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every week, beginning.....190..
State date and month.

To .....
Name. Street. Town. State.

2. Send REVIEW OF REVIEWS every month, beginning.....190..
State month.

To .....
Name. Street. Town. State.

3. Send.....every month, beginning.....190..
Here name the Magazine selected from above List. State month.

To .....
Name. Street. Town. State.

and send prompt acknowledgment of this order and remittance to Sender .....

Address .....

This Order Must be Mailed On or Before October 31, 1905.

This is Pre-eminently a "NOW or NEVER" Proposition

LIMITED TO 5,000 READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Remember, your subscription must be in the post office on or before October 31, 1905. Old and new subscribers are alike eligible. Bear in mind, that this Combination Offer is lower than the regular subscription price to the Review of Reviews. What a surpassing feast for mind and soul for an entire year, at the absurdly small outlay of only $2.75!!! Send in your order to-day, lest you forget and thus miss this exceptional opportunity. DO IT TO-DAY.

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

REMEMBER, LAST MAILING DAY, OCTOBER 31.

Who Likes to Plough

Continued from first column

last year, which he regards as even gr... than that in Pittsburg the year befor...

"If a man will not work, neithe... him eat." This principle applies in ... spiritual as in the physical realm. ... that we would substitute the energy o... flesh for that of the Holy Spirit, but ... we would comply with certain divi... instituted laws or conditions when we ... ordinarily expect the energy of the H... Spirit. The locomotive and the track ... useless without the steam, but they ... a field of operation for the steam.

It is a good thing for God to withh... the showers sometimes, just because ... a good thing for Christians to plou... More prayer, more activity, more ... denial, more heart-searching, more ... cumspection, more separation, these ... the results of a spiritual drought and ... forerunners of a revival at the s... time. God himself tells us how to w... up a revival, when in Joel 2: 15-18 ... says: "Blow the trumpet in Zion, s... tify a fast, call a solemn assembly: gat... the people, sanctify the congregati..., assemble the old men, gather the c... dren and those that suck the brea... let the bridegroom go forth of his ch... ber, and the bride out of her closet. ... the priests, the ministers of the Lo..., weep between the porch and the alt..., and let them say, 'Spare thy people, ... Lord, and give not thine heritage to ... proach.' Then will the Lord be jeal... for his land, and pity his people."

Let us act upon the suggestion. ... us gather our churches together, imm... diately and without delay, for pray..., confession and conference. Let us ... range our committees and plan our ca... paigns. Let us go ahead and plou... whether we like it or not, and the va... of it will be seen when the harvest com... which, by God's blessing, will certainly ... the case.

"At the Eleventh Hour"

Mrs. Blank and her daughters were members ... a church in Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Blank was no ... church-going man, and sometimes sought to p... vent his people from attending. In the summ... of 1902, he was stricken with what proved to ... his last illness. Knowing his condition, I call... upon him, and before leaving suggested that ... pray together.

"I don't believe in prayer," was the reply.

Still, I offered a brief petition, and took my ... parture.

Some days after this, in the last days of the l... of June, I learned that Mr. Blank was dying. Ha... ening to his home, I found him with his head ... ice, and surrounded by his family and friends, w... were ministering to his every want. But what ... restless patient he was! What vile words a... what profanity fell from his pale lips! It was, ... we thought for a time, the death-scene of a l... soul. But it was, in the goodness of God, not ... be such.

As I sat beside his bed, the man suddenly turn... to his wife sitting by and cried out so pitifull... "Jessie, can't you help me? They tell me I've g... to connect, but I don't know how to connect."

This was my opportunity, and, bending over, ... whispered into his ear, "Brother Blank, pray th... prayer, 'Lord help me, for Jesus' sake.'"

And he did pray, out of the very depths of h... soul. Together we repeated the 23rd Psalm, the ... "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," and some Scriptur... passages. Then I left him. Mrs. Blank told m... afterward, "he became quiet after the praye... there was no more profanity; and he just fe... asleep in Jesus."

Can we not hope that even this poor soul, wa... dering in darkness, was led into the light at las... and "saved by grace" at the eleventh hour.

To Aid Clean Living

In La Crosse, Wisconsin, on October 24-5-6, wil... be held the National Purity Conference. Presen... conditions in this country as regards social purit... will be considered, and plans made for an activ... campaign in all the States. The various organiza... tions that will have representatives at the Con... ference, feel greatly elated over the success of th... remarkable movement against dens of vice i... Southern California. It is expected that the fa... meeting will be one of the most important of th... kind ever held. La Crosse, the headquarters, i... one of the most beautiful of the smaller cities o... the Middle West located on the Mississippi River ... It is convenient to reach, being situated on th... main lines of railway between Chicago and Min... neapolis. Pamphlets, giving further information ... concerning speakers, railroad rates, and other de... tails of the Conference, will be sent later in the ... season, free of charge, to such persons as desire ... them. Additional inquiries should be addressed ... to B. S. Steadwell at La Crosse, or to any member ... of the Committee.

THE ACCIDENT ON THE ELEVATED

RESCUING PARTY SEARCHING THE WRECKAGE

WHERE THE CAR FELL TO THE STREET

ONE of the worst accidents on record in the history of rapid transit occurred recently in New York City. At one moment a train was speeding safely along the trestle work, hundreds of passengers were reading, or chatting gaily, the next instant the train derailed, a car fell to the street, and twelve people passed to render their last account, while many more were doomed to endure years of suffering from injuries.

People have often wondered why it was, unless by the grace of Providence, that during all these years no fearful accident has occurred, or some train plunged headlong to the streets below.

At the corner of Fifty-third Street and Ninth Avenue is an important junction. The towerman or switchman at this point claims that the train was not displaying the proper signals, and the switch being turned, the train was run on to the wrong track; the trucks of some of the cars taking the Ninth Avenue rails, while those of others took those of the Sixth Avenue line. One car toppled over, and shot end foremost to the street. The passengers were thrown into a struggling mass at the bottom, and, the ironwork of the rear trucks following, the victims were ground into an unrecognizable mass of flesh and bone.

Meanwhile, those passengers fortunate enough to be left on the elevated trestlework were wild with terror, and running aimlessly about. Fifty or more broke the windows of the second floor of a nearby house, and streamed through the sleeping apartments before the family was up. On their stormy passage to the street they did, it was reported, about $400 worth of damage, turning over things right and left.

Ambulances and doctors were soon on the scene, and extra carts were brought into service to carry the wounded to the hospitals. Heroic service was done by hundreds of volunteer workers, and many lives, by their prompt attention, were saved. The motorman claimed, before he disappeared, that the fault lay with the towerman, who threw the switch after the forward trucks were on the wrong line, and, in consequence, the accident, on his part, was unavoidable. An investigation will be held, in order to fix the responsibility for the disaster, and until its results are known, the general public is withholding its judgment.

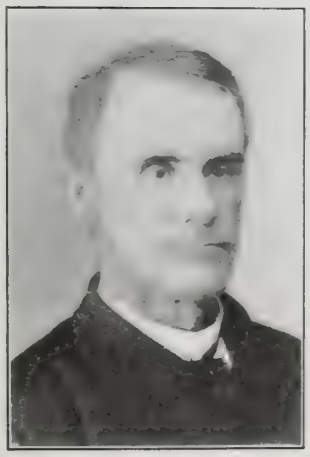
The Largest Bible Class in the World

IN speaking of the Ocean Grove Bible Class, for years an integral part of the summer services at this famous Methodist resort, one must needs use the superlative. It is believed to be the largest Bible class in the world. The attendance on a recent Sunday, I am told by the present leader, Rev. Dr. L. W. Munhall, was 3,500. Sometimes it is even more than that.

Besides being the largest class, it also is the most unique, because although instituted and fostered by an institution of the Methodist Episcopal Church (the Ocean Grove Camp-Meeting Association), it is entirely interdenominational. A showing of hands recently made disclosed that although a majority of those present were Methodists, there were a large number of Presbyterians in attendance. Then in point of number came the Baptists, followed in order by the Episcopalians and Lutherans; next came representatives of the Congregational, the Reformed, and the United Brethren churches, and then a few Quakers, with a sprinkling of Catholics and a few Jews.

The class is also international and cosmopolitan. At the session to which reference has been made, there were people from almost every State in the Union—from Canada, from the United Kingdom, and from a number of other foreign countries.

With a shifting summer population in Ocean Grove, every fortnight at least, about one-half of the audience is new to the leader. The attendance is made up in large part of Sunday School teachers, educators, preachers, and the leaders of denominational schools, distinguished men and women, too, who are seeking to know more about the vital truths of the scriptures, and come to Ocean Grove to gain new views.



DR. THOMAS HANLON

The first half of the session is devoted to the lesson, read and expounded by the leader. The Berean Intermediate lesson is used. In presenting the lesson, Dr. Munhall adopts an easy, personal style of address, as witness:

> Zedekiah was one and twenty years old when he began to reign . . . and he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord. Well, Zedekiah was old enough to have better sense. It's easy to be good at Ocean Grove. Lots of people are very good while they are at Ocean Grove, but when they get home, they are as mean as Zedekiah.

